Senator FERGUSON. But if that is a fact and our records show that, this official record of the committee shows that, that would lead the people to believe, who were Communists, that you were a Communist, would it not? Or, at least, the man writing the letter was a Communist?

Mr. BISSON. No; I do not see that.

Senator FERGUSON. You do not think that is true? Here is an official name on the record, Frederick Vanderbilt Field. Frederick Vanderbilt Field is on the official Communist records as Frederick Spencer.

Now, you knew Field, and you were writing under the name of Frederick Spencer. Would not that lead people who were Communists reading the article to believe that it was written by Field the Communist?

Mr. BISSON. Let me get this clear. I think when you say it is on the official record, what you are saying is that one of the witnesses before this committee has identified Frederick Vanderbilt Field——

Senator FERGUSON. And it has not been denied by Mr. Field.

Mr. BISSON. As Frederick Spencer.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. I am now saying that that particular attribution by Mr. Budenz was mistaken.

Senator FERGUSON. Why? Why do you contradict Mr. Budenz on that, unless you know something about it?

Mr. BISSON. I do know something about it.

Senator FERGUSON. Tell us about it.

Mr. Bisson. I know that I was writing under the name Frederick Spencer. I know also that Frederick Field, to the best of my knowledge, at the same time, was writing in the same magazine under the name of Lawrence Hearn. I, therefore, think that Mr. Budenz was mistaken when he says that Mr. Field was writing under the name of Frederick Spencer.

Senator Ferguson. I was not saying he was writing under the name of Frederick Spencer. His official name on the Communist records was Frederick Spencer.

Mr. Bisson. I have no knowledge of what his official name on the Communists' records are.

Senator Ferguson. That is what our records show now—that Frederick Vanderbilt Field's Communist name was Frederick Spencer.

Mr. Bisson. I am saying what I know from my knowledge of China Today. I do not know——

Senator Ferguson. Why do you contradict Mr. Budenz when he says that the official Communist name of Frederick Vanderbilt Field was Frederick Spencer? Why do you contradict that?

Mr. Bisson. I am not contradicting that. I am saying that in terms of the writers on China Today I do not think that Frederick Vanderbilt Field was Frederick Spencer.

Senator Ferguson. Coming back to my other question, which you apparently misunderstood, if he was carried on the official Communist records as Frederick Spencer, and then you wrote articles under that name, would not that lead the Communists to believe that that was Fred Field, the Communist, writing?

Mr. Bisson. Yes; but what I want to say here is that I have no knowledge that Frederick Spencer appeared as Frederick Vanderbilt Field on the Communist records.

Senator Ferguson. But Frederick Vanderbilt Field knew that you were using the pen name of Frederick Spencer?

Mr. Morris. He was associated with China Today; was he not?

Mr. Bisson. He was.

Mr. Morris. And he knew that you were using the name Frederick Spencer?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. I would like to offer you, Mr. Bisson, a copy of China Today, February 1935, which contains a statement to the American people, and you will note that this statement is signed, among others, by Mr. T. A. Bisson and by Mr. Frederick Spencer.

Now, you did not sign that twice, did you?

I mean, obviously, there are two people, are there not?

Mr. Bisson. I assume so.

Mr. Morris. So would it not indicate to you that certainly in this instance some other person was using the pseudonym Frederick Spencer?

Mr. Bisson. It would seem to so indicate.

Mr. Morris. And you notice that Mr. Field's name does not appear in this list of people to whom this statement was addressed.

I will let you examine it.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Morris, may I suggest that that statement and the list of names appended as signators be offered for the record at this time?

Senator Ferguson. The whole list will be received in evidence.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 713" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 713

[Source: China Today, vol. 1, October 1934–September 1935. February 1935, p. 90]

TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Today 450 million Chinese people are struggling for national liberation—for the simple right to be a free people, masters of their own destiny. The greatest obstacle to the success of this heroic struggle is the active interference of the foreign imperialist powers. The United States is one of those powers, the very country that was itself engaged in a great struggle to free itself from British colonial oppression a little more than a hundred and fifty years ago.

It is in China that we are at this moment specifically interested because there we are witnessing a drama of tremendous power and significance—the breath-taking struggle of a great people to free itself from oppression and to establish its independence.

And what has been the role of the United States in this struggle? Is it giving to an oppressed nation the same moral and material support that it received in its own revolutionary war? On the contrary, the United States, under the deceptive guise of the "open door policy," is playing a ruthless part in suppressing the Chinese masses and fomenting civil wars among them. It was American gunboats in March 1927 that took the lead in shelling Nanking and set the stage for Chiang Kai-shek's treacherous turn against the Chinese revolution. Today America is still staking its fortunes in China on Chiang Kai-shek and his Nanking terroristic government. Only recently the United States Senate investigation into the munitions industry revealed the fact that at least ten million dollars of the wheat and cotton loan from the U. S. to the Nanking government was used to buy munitions for war against the 90 million Chinese people who are living under the flag of the Chinese Soviets. Not only has the American government provided the funds for munitions to be used in this civil war, but it has also permitted the sale of hundreds of aeroplanes to the Nanking government by American aviation companies—a transaction that could not have been completed without specific permission from the State Department. From these aeroplanes have fallen thousands of death dealing bombs on innocent non-combatants—bombs spreading terror, destruction, and devastation over thousands of villages and millions of inhabitants. It has also supplied the funds for the building of aeroplane factories at Hangchow, Shaokwan, and other places. And furthermore, the American government goes even so far as to supply army and navy aviators who are released from active service in order to be sent to China as demonstrators, advisors, and pilots actually participating in bombing. We find among these instructors such outstanding names as Captain Frank Hawks. Major Doolittle, and the late Lieut. Dorsey who recently lost his life in this service. Thus, as someone has so aptly stated, we are permitting our own American soldiers to become the Hessian troops of the Chinese Revolution. Without this support, according to many competent observers, the reactionary Nanking government could not retain its power for any length of time.

This direct interference by America in the internal affairs of China has but one purpose—the furthering of its imperialist designs at the expense of the Chinese people. The profit-mad munition makers, aeroplane manufacturers, industrialists, and bankers, seeking new fields of exploitation for their surplus capital, are turning greedy eyes towards war-torn China. They look to American troops to protect their newly won fields. Major General Smedley D. Butler in his recent Armistice Day address summed up briefly but completely this condition when he said: "For thirty-three years and four months I was an active agent in the greatest debt-collecting agency in the world, the U. S. Marine Corps."

General Butler ought to know—he was for many years Commander of the U. S. Marines in China.

Thousands upon thousands of American people deeply resent this interference by the United States in the internal affairs of China. In the name of these thousands, we demand:

1. That the American government stop the sale of aeroplanes to China;
2. That the American government stop the release of army and navy pilots for military use by the reactionary militarists in China;
3. That America withdraw all gunboats, marines, and other armed forces in China;

4. That America stop the shipment of munitions and financial assistance to Chinese militarists.

Signed: Roger Baldwin, T. A. Bisson, Earl Browder, Winifred Chappel, George S. Counts, Malcolm Cowley, Edward Dahlberg, Ethel L. Dewey, Theodore Dreiser, Waldo Frank, Joseph Freeman, Beals E. L. French, Myrtle M. French, Mike Gold, Katherine Graham, Mary H. Gleason, R. M. Gyles, Granville Hicks, Josephine Jack, Orrick Johns, Corliss Lamont, Robert Morss, Lovett, Thora Lund, Edith de Nancrede, J. W. Phillips, Isidor Schneider, Frederick Spencer, Maxwell S. Stewart, Katharine Terrell, Harry F. Ward, Victor A. Yakhontoff.

Senator FERGUSON. The question is: Do you find Frederick Field's name on there?

Mr. BISSON. May I ask this?

Mr. FANELLI. I have no objection.

Senator FERGUSON. Frederick Fields' name is not on there, is it?

Mr. BISSON. No, it is not.

Senator FERGUSON. Is Earl Browder's?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Earl Browder's is?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Was Earl Browder a Communist at that time?

Mr. BISSON. I assume that he was; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. You know he was, do you not?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Why did you sign with Earl Browder?

"To the American people," it is headed.

Mr. FANELLI. May I examine this, Senator?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. I see no reason why I could not on occasion have been associated in that way with Mr. Earl Browder.

Senator FERGUSON. That was your privilege and I want to know why you did it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Bisson, the Senator asked you why. Why did you sign with Browder? He did not challenge your right to do so? He simply asked you why.

Senator FERGUSON. Why?

Mr. BISSON. I presumably agreed with the positions being taken in that case by Mr. Browder.

Senator FERGUSON. You must have read this thing before you signed it.

Mr. BISSON. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you sign under both names, or did Fred Field sign under Spencer's name, signing his Communist name?

Mr. BISSON. I would not know.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not sign both ways, did you?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. What?

Mr. BISSON. I do not think so.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you tell us under oath that you did or did not sign under the name of Bisson and the name of Spencer?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know another Fred Spencer?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. This was a group of people. Will you tell us how many you were acquainted with?

Mr. MORRIS. Let the witness see the list.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; the list of names. Tell us how many. Tell us first how many are on it, and then how many you were acquainted with or knew.

Mr. BISSON. Roger Baldwin; yes.

My own name.

Mr. Browder, yes.

Winifred Chappel, no.

George S. Counts, yes——

Mr. SOURWINE. By yes, you mean you knew the person and by no you mean you did not?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Malcolm Cowley, yes.

Edward Dahlberg, no.

Ethel Dewey—I am not sure whether this is the wife of Dr. Dewey. After all, this is a list of names I have not seen for many years.

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, we understand that, Mr. Bisson.

Mr. BISSON. If this is the wife of Dr. Dewey, I would know her; otherwise not.

Senator FERGUSON. Speak a little louder.

Mr. BISSON. Theodore Dreiser, no.

Waldo Frank, no.

Joseph Freeman, no.

Beals E. L. French, no.

Myrtle M. French, no.

Mike Gold, no.

Kathering Graham, no.

Mary H. Gleason, no.

R. M. Gyles, no.

Granville Hicks, no.

Josephine Jack, no.

Orrick Johns, no.

Corliss Lamont, yes.

Robert Morss Lovett, yes.

Thora Lund, no.

Edith de Nancrede, no.

J. W. Phillips, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Was J. W. Phillips known to you by another name?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was J. W. Phillips?

Mr. BISSON. Philip Jaffe.

Mr. MORRIS. He was associated with you in this publication China Today?

Mr. BISSON. He was.

Isidor Schneider, no.

Frederick Spencer—I knew no other by the name of Frederick Spencer.

Senator FERGUSON. Except your own?

Mr. BISSON. I thought that this was my own assumed name.

Katherine Terrell, no.

Harry F. Ward, yes.

Victor A. Yakhontoff, yes.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Bisson, do you know, or do you have any reason to believe that any of those persons whose names you have just read were under Communist discipline or had voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. Bisson. I assume that Earl Browder was in that category.

Mr. Sourwine You stated earlier that you knew Earl Browder was a communist; is that correct?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Sourwine. Anyone else?

Mr. Bisson. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Sourwine. You are stating that there is no one else on this list that you just read whom you either knew or had reason to believe was either under Communist discipline or had voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives; is that your statement, sir?

Mr. Bisson. I would have to divide that question. I would not know any of these persons as Communist Party members.

Mr. Sourwine. I did not ask you that. All right, I will divide the question.

Do you know, or have you any reason to believe, that any of these persons was at any time under Communist Party discipline or Communist discipline?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Mr. Sourwine. Other than Mr. Browder?

Mr. Bisson. I do not.

Mr. Sourwine. Do you know, or have you any reason to believe that any of these persons at any time voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. Bisson. I assume that Mr. Phillips may have done so.

Mr. Sourwine. You mean Mr. Jaffe?

Mr. Bisson. Mr. Jaffe, yes.

Mr. Sourwine. You say you assume. On what basis do you assume?

Mr. Bisson. I assume that because on later occasions it was indicated that he was connected with Earl Browder, or associated with Earl Browder.

Mr. Sourwine. As a matter of fact, you do not assume that about anybody under a question like that. Do you know, or do you have reason to believe? You either do or do not. You do not assume that anybody is a Communist, do you?

Mr. Bisson. The distinction that I am trying to make here, however, is a time distinction. Some of these people at the present time under later conditions have clearly become known under that category as associating with Communist activities.

Mr. Sourwine. What we want you to do, Mr. Bisson, is to name those persons on this list whom you either know or have reason to believe voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives, and then tell us what you know about them and then tell us what you know that gives you reason to believe that.

Mr. Bisson. And I am saying that a time distinction is necessary in that question because if I simply say "Yes"——

Mr. Fanelli. Go ahead and make your time distinction and answer his question.

Mr. Bisson. The time distinction is that in later years it has become obvious that Mr. Phillips was associated with Earl Browder.

Senator Ferguson. You mean Philip Jaffe?

Mr. Morris. Was associated with Earl Browder, did you say?

Senator Ferguson. Philip Jaffe.

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Was the end of your statement that he was associated with Earl Browder? Was that the end of your statement just now?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Senator Ferguson. This man Phillips is Jaffe?

Mr. Bisson. Yes, sir.

Senator Ferguson. Do you not think also that Spencer in this particular list is Field, because they were both using fictitious or alias names?

Mr. Bisson. The questioning thus far has led me to believe——

Senator Ferguson. If you will just not try to find out what we are trying to put in this record by the questions. We are trying to get out of your mind by questions what you know.

Mr. Fanelli. For the record, I do not believe there has been any indication that he has been trying to do that.

Senator Ferguson. He indicates by this last thing that he does——

Mr. Fanelli. He does not have any knowledge on this subject, and you are asking for an opinion.

Mr. Sourwine. The counsel is testifying as to what the witness has knowledge of and I hope the Chair will——

Mr. Fanelli. He has already testified that he does not know about that.

Senator Ferguson. We have not cross-examined at all on this; whether or not he knows. We might be able to refresh his memory by a few questions.

I know that Mr. Sourwine wants to ask him some questions because this thing does bring out in one's mind a lot of questions.

Do you know Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. Bisson. I do.

Senator Ferguson. Did you read his name on there?

Mr. Bisson. I don't think I did.

Senator Ferguson. It is on there, is it not?

Mr. Fanelli. I don't believe it is, Senator.

Mr. Bisson. I may have skipped that as I was reading.

Senator Ferguson. Yes, his name is on there, is it not?

Did you read Mike Gold?

Mr. Bisson. I did read that name.

Senator Ferguson. You knew he was a Communist writer, did you not, for the Daily Worker?

Mr. Bisson. I did not.

Senator Ferguson. You did not know that? You did not know that?

Mr. Bisson. I did not.

Mr. Morris. Did you know his brother, Max Granich?

Mr. Bisson. I did later.

Mr. MORRIS. Granich was the editor of that paper, was he not, China Today?

Mr. BISSON. I think he was in a later period.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, would it be permitted to go through this list of names now and make the question very clear so there will be no possibility of the witness misunderstanding?

Mr. BISSON. I assure you that if I missed any name on that list it was done inadvertently.

Mr. FANELLI. Let them go ahead and ask the question.

Mr. SOURWINE. The question, Mr. Bisson, is this; First, did you know the person?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. I want you to say whether you did or did not know when I name the name.

Then, I want you to state whether you knew, or had any reason to believe, that this person had at any time been under Communist discipline.

And, third, I want you to state whether you knew or had any reason to believe that this person had at any time voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with members of the Communist Party in furtherance of Communist Party objectives.

Now, if your answers are "no," we need go no further on a person whom you identify as one with respect to whom you had no such knowledge.

If you have such knowledge or belief, then we will ask additional questions.

The first name here is Roger Baldwin.

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew him?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that Bene Baldwin? That is not; is it?

Mr. BISSON. I would not know Bene Baldwin.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you any reason to believe he was either under Communist discipline or had voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. The next name is your own, T. A. Bisson. Were you ever under Communist discipline?

Mr. BISSON. I was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever voluntarily and knowingly cooperate or collaborate with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Just on that, do you know what this article is? Was this not a Communist objective sponsored by the Communist Party under Browder? Is it not clear that that is what that was?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest you read some of that.

Senator FERGUSON. I want the witness to answer that. You just answered the question by Mr. Sourwine. Now, what was this article about in reference to the question Mr. Sourwine just asked you?

Mr. BISSON. I do not think it was necessarily a document that was under Communist authorization.

Senator FERGUSON. Not necessarily, but was it not under the domination of the Communists because Earl Browder is on it? You do not think Earl Browder was advocating something that was not a party line in 1935, do you?

You were an educated man at that time, an intelligent man. You do not think that he was advocating something that was not the party line at that time, do you?

Mr. BISSON. Presumably not.

Senator FERGUSON. It is correct that it is presumably not. Then you were voluntarily and willingly on that particular article advocating the party line, were you not?

Mr. BISSON. On that particular article my views coincided with the views——

Senator FERGUSON. But you were advocating it. You say now that the reason was that your views coincided?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. However, you were actually advocating the party line there and knowingly doing it with a Communist, Earl Browder; is that not a fact?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Your answer was yes on the record.

Mr. SOURWINE. I think it will speed this up a little if we may have an understanding with the witness that a single no will mean that he does not know the person and that the answer to the other two questions is no if he does not know the person, as to the other two questions.

If he did know the person, but the answer is "No," on the other two questions, he will simply say "I knew him, but the answer is 'No.'"

Is that agreeable, Mr. Bisson?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Earl Browder?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew him?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew him to be a person under Communist discipline?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you knew him to be a person who had knowingly and voluntarily cooperated and collaborated with other Communists necessarily?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Winifred Chappell?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. George S. Counts?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Malcolm Cowley?

Mr. BISSON. No. Now, wait. The first question here is do I know them?

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right.

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You know Mr. Malcolm Cowley?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that your answer to the other two questions, "No"?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Edward Dahlberg?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Ethel L. Dewey?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Theodore Dreiser?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Waldo Frank?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Joseph Freeman?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Beals E. L. French?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Myrtle M. French?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mike Gold?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. You did not know Mike Gold?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know him now?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Katharine Graham?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mary H. Gleason?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. R. M. Gyles?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Granville Hicks?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Josephine Jack?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Orrick Johns?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Corliss Lamont?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. That is, you knew him?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. And your answer to the other two questions?
Mr. BISSON. Are "No."
Mr. SOURWINE. Robert Morss Lovett?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. And your answer to the other two questions?
Mr. BISSON. Are "No."
Mr. SOURWINE. Thora Lund?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Edith de Nancrede?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. J. W. Phillips?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. You knew him as Philip M. Jaffe?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know him to be under Communist discipline?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have any reason to believe him as such?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know, or have any reason to believe that he had voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. BISSON. Not at this time. Later I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you come to know that later?

Mr. BISSON. Later there were evidences of association with Earl Browder, of activities involved in the Amerasia case.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are those two separate things, or are they one thing in your mind?

Mr. BISSON. They are separate things.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did it come to your attention that he was associating with Earl Browder?

Mr. BISSON. To my knowledge, I just learned it from conversation, or——

Mr. SOURWINE. Conversation with whom, with Jaffe?

Mr. BISSON. Could have been.

Mr. SOURWINE. With Browder?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. It could have been with Jaffe?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who else could it have been with?

Mr. BISSON. No one that I know of.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then was it with Jaffe?

Mr. BISSON. It may have been; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. If it could have been with Jaffe, it could not have been with anyone else? It was with Jaffe, was it not?

Mr. BISSON. At a later period, yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You learned of Browder's association with Jaffe, from Jaffe?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Isidore Schneider?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Frederick Spencer?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that Frederick Spencer who signed this?

Mr. BISSON. That's in terms—I say "Yes."

Mr. SOURWINE. You know the name Frederick Spencer?

Mr. BISSON. I know the name Frederick Spencer.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you do not know the man who signed the same Frederick Spencer on here; is that right?

Mr. BISSON. I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Maxwell S. Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. I know him, and the other answer is "No."

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no reason to believe, or any knowledge that he was ever under Communist discipline or ever had voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Katharine Terrell?
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Harry F. Ward?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Sourwine. And the other two answers to the two questions?
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Victor A. Yakhontoff?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Sourwine. And the answers to the other two questions?
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. How was this article prepared? Did you prepare it?
Mr. Bisson. I do not remember that I had any connection with it.
Mr. Sourwine. Was it presented to you for signature?
Mr. Bisson. I assume so.
Mr. Sourwine. Was it in a long sheet of paper with a place at the bottom for the names to be signed?
Mr. Bisson. I cannot recall.
Mr. Sourwine. You did not sign your name on a piece of paper that did not have this writing at the top; did you?
Mr. Bisson. I assume not.
Mr. Sourwine. Did you, in fact, sign your name to this article?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Sourwine. How many names were on it when you signed it?
Mr. Bisson. I do not recall.
Mr. Sourwine. Were the names signed one below the other?
Mr. Bisson. I do not recall.
Mr. Sourwine. All right, Mr. Chairman. This has been admitted—has it not—for the record?
Senator Ferguson. Yes.
Mr. Bisson. May I state that this is what year?
Senator Ferguson. 1935.
Mr. Bisson. This is, after all, 17 years ago, and I think I should perhaps be pardoned for not knowing every detail.
Mr. Sourwine. The committee has not criticized you for not remembering. We are only trying to find out what you do remember.
Mr. Fanelli. You do not have to apologize.
Mr. Sourwine. You are not being asked to testify to anything here that you do not remember. We want your best recollection and belief; what you know.
Mr. Bisson. I was trying to answer an assumption.
Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, may I call attention to this one paragraph in this article?
Senator Ferguson. Yes.
Mr. Morris (reading):

> This direct interference by America in the internal affairs of China has but one purpose: the furthering of its imperialist designs at the expense of the Chinese people. The profit-mad munition makers, aeroplane manufacturers, industrialists, and bankers, seeking new fields of exploitation for their surplus capital, are turning greedy eyes toward war-torn China.

Mr. Bisson, did you ever speak on a platform with known members of the Communist Party?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Morris. Will you tell us the circumstances?

Mr. Bisson. I spoke at a meeting in connection with the organization, American Friends of the Chinese People.

Mr. Morris. When was that? Can you recall?

Mr. Bisson. I do not; presumably sometime in the midthirties.

Mr. Morris. I offer you this issue, November 1934, of China Today, Mr. Bisson, and ask you if you can recall whether or not that advertisement of a meeting is the correct one?

Mr. Bisson. I assume that that is correct.

Mr. Morris. They mentioned that the following speakers would speak: Mr. T. A. Bisson, Mr. Earl Browder, Mr. Malcolm Cowley, General Yakhontoff, Frederick V. Field, and Hansu Chan.

Did you speak on that occasion?

Mr. Bisson. I assume that I did.

Mr. Morris. You notice that the tickets were sold in two places there, at the New Masses and at the Workers' Bookshop, the Workers' Bookshop being the official bookshop of the Communist Party.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you at the time know that any of those persons were members of the Communist Party?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Senator Ferguson. What is that?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Sourwine. What was the objective of the meeting that you were speaking at?

Mr. Bisson. I think it was to raise funds for the magazine China Today.

Mr. Sourwine. Is that a Communist publication?

Mr. Bisson. I would not call that a Communist publication.

Mr. Sourwine. Was it Communist-controlled at all?

Mr. Bisson. Not to my knowledge.

Senator Ferguson. Was it a front?

Mr. Bisson. I am not sure of the distinction between Communist-controlled and front.

Senator Ferguson. Do you know what a Communist-front paper is?

Mr. Bisson. I am not certain in terms of your question at this point.

Senator Ferguson. You cannot answer my question if you do not know what it means, if you do not know what a front means.

Mr. Bisson. I presume you mean an organization which Communists control.

Senator Ferguson. Yes, and are using.

Mr. Bisson. I am not clear on the distinction between front and the organization that he spoke of.

Mr. Sourwine. Was China Today a publication that was in any measure controlled or used by the Communist Party?

Mr. Bisson. It could have been; yes.

Mr. Sourwine. Was it?

Mr. Bisson. I am not sure.

Mr. Sourwine. You were associated with the magazine?

Mr. Bisson. I was associated with it.

Mr. Sourwine. Yes. Was it?

Mr. Bisson. I am not prepared to say that it was fully controlled by the Communists.

Mr. SOURWINE. I asked you if it was controlled or used in any way by the Communist Party?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was not?

Senator FERGUSON. What do you think Earl Browder was doing in there if he was not using it? Do you think Earl Browder was advocating a capitalist front, speaking to the capitalist movement at this meeting and raising the funds? Is that your opinion now?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Then it was a front; was it not?

Mr. MORRIS. The tickets were sold by the New Masses and the Daily Worker.

Mr. FANELLI. Let him answer one question.

Either he knows, or he doesn't know.

Senator FERGUSON. It was a front; was it not?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

I might say that under these circumstances one could consider it a front organization.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you say that these Communists were there to help this meeting for the raising of funds for China Today because they wanted to see funds raised for China Today?

Mr. FANELLI. I object to that. The only evidence I have heard so far was that there was one Communist at that meeting, Earl Browder.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was Hansu Chan?

Mr. BISSON. He was one of the editors of China Today.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that a pseudonym?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the real name of Hansu Chan?

Mr. BISSON. Chi.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Chi?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. He is an official of Communist China today; is he not?

Mr. BISSON. I am not certain whether he is an official today. He has been reported as such in the last 2 or 3 years.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you say that he is a Communist?

Mr. BISSON. He is a Communist; yes, today.

Mr. MORRIS. So, there we do know that Mr. Browder and Mr. Hansu Chan are Communists.

How about Frederick V. Field? Would you consider that he is a Communist today?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; he would be.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, just so the record could speak freely, counsel objected, and I do not know to what extent the Chair is going to permit objections by counsel——

Mr. FANELLI. Mr. Sourwine——

Mr. SOURWINE. If you please. I should like to point out that this question has been asked before, the question in the plural, if he spoke with Communists, and he said "Yes"; and this witness was asked if he knew at that time that they were Communists, plural, and he said "Yes," which seems to me to be adequate foundation for the question which I asked.

Senator FERGUSON. I will take the objection merely as a suggestion to the Chair to see whether or not in the opinion of the Chair it is objectionable.

Will you repeat or read the question?

Mr. FANELLI. Senator, I withdraw my comment.

Senator FERGUSON. I am afraid that the witness does not remember.

Do you know what the question is?

Mr. BISSON. I am afraid not.

Senator FERGUSON. Then, we had better have it read.

Mr. SOURWINE. In order to lay the necessary foundation——

Mr. FANELLI. I withdraw my comment.

Senator FERGUSON. Let us go right ahead.

Repeat the question.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Bisson, is it your understanding that any Communists who were on the platform with you at that meeting were there because they wanted to see funds raised for China Today?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that was why you were there?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Doesn't that mean you were cooperating or collaborating with them?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that you were cooperating or collaborating with them in furtherance of their objective?

Mr. BISSON. Objectives which I associated myself with at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. And at that time was that not a Communist Party objective: to raise funds for China Today? They would not have been there if that had not been; would they?

Mr. BISSON. I assume it was; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Bisson, do you know what was at 50 East Thirteenth Street, New York?

Mr. BISSON. 50 East Thirteenth Street?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. That was the Communist headquarters at that time; was it?

Mr. BISSON. I do not know.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether the Workers Bookshop was a Communist shop?

Mr. BISSON. I assume that it was. I do not know that shop.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know what the New Masses was? Was that a Communist front?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. So, the tickets for sale were sold at a Communist front, the New Masses, 31 East Twenty-seventh Street, and the other place was at the Workers Bookshop, 50 East Thirteenth Street?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. At least one of the places was a Communist-front place?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. We will put the whole ad in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 714" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 714

[Advertisement in China Today, November 1934, p. 39]

BANQUET AND DANCE

Celebrate the appearance of

CHINA TODAY

and hear the following speakers

T. A. BISSON
EARL BROWDER
MALCOLM COWLEY
GEN. YAKHONTOFF
FREDERICK V. FIELD
HANSU CHAN

and enjoy

NATIVE CHINESE FOOD (SERVED CHINESE STYLE)

Dance to the music of the well-known

CLUB VALHALLA ORCHESTRA

Saturday, November 10th—Irving Plaza, 15th Street & Irving Place, New York
$1.25 for Banquet and Dance Reservations in advance only. Service at 6:30 sharp.
50¢ Dance ticket entitles you to hear speakers at 8:30—65¢ at the door.
Tickets for sale at NEW MASSES, 31 East 27th Street; WORKER BOOKSHOP, 50 E. 13 Street, or at our Headquarters

Auspices

FRIENDS OF THE CHINESE PEOPLE

168 West 23rd St. Chelsea 2-9096

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bisson, when you were working in General MacArthur's headquarters, and when you were working for the United States strategic bomb survey, did you make disclosure to your authorities that you had these Communist associations in the past?

Mr. SOURWINE. By "authorities," you mean superiors, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right. Your superiors and the people with whom you made application for employment?

Mr. FANELLI. The answer is "yes" or "no" to them. Tell them you did or didn't.

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you mention that you had written for this Communist publication, China Today, under a pseudonym?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you mention that you had spoken on the same platform with Frederick V. Field, Hansu Chan, and Earl Browder?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you think that they would have reposed confidence in you if you had?

Mr. BISSON. I do not know.

Mr. MORRIS. While you were in Tokyo, Mr. Bisson, did you ever meet with Mr. Philip Keeney?

Mr. FANELLI. In connection with the last question just asked, he has some documents he would like to introduce. Do you want them now?

Senator FERGUSON. Answer the question. Then we will get to the documents.

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. Morris. How often did you meet with Mr. Keeney in Tokyo?

Mr. Bisson. Mr. Keeney was a member of occupation headquarters. He was living in the same hotel with me. I saw him a number of times a week.

Mr. Morris. Would you say that you were on very close terms with Philip O. Keeney?

Mr. Bisson. I would not.

Mr. Morris. You did, however, meet him two or three times a week?

Mr. Bisson. We were working in different sections. He was in the educational work.

Mr. Morris. But even though you were working in different kinds of work, you did meet him two or three times a week, did you not?

Mr. Bisson. We were living in the same hotel and dining in the same hotel. Therefore, I met him several times a week. I would not know whether they were twice a week or six times a week.

Mr. Morris. He was a friend of yours, was he not, Mr. Bisson?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. And you had known him before he went out to Japan, had you not?

Mr. Bisson. No. I met him first in Japan.

Mr. Morris. You were then subsequently associated with him in the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy; were you not?

Mr. Bisson. I was.

Mr. Morris. Did you know that he was disqualified from service in the Far East command?

Mr. Bisson. I did.

Mr. Morris. Did you know the reason for his disqualification?

Mr. Bisson. To the best of my knowledge he could not find out when he was there.

Mr. Sourwine. The question was: Did you know?

Mr. Morris. Did you know why he was disqualified?

Mr. Bisson. I did not.

Mr. Morris. And that did not interfere with your decision of becoming associated with him—he was treasurer, was he not, of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy—and that did not interfere with your becoming associated with him in the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy when you returned to the United States?

Mr. Bisson. It did not.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you ever know or have reason to believe that he was under Communist discipline or had voluntarily and knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communist Party members in furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. Bisson. I did not.

Mr. Morris. Did you ever meet Mr. Susumo Okano? Did you ever meet Mr. Susumo Okano in Japan?

Mr. Bisson. Yes; I think I did.

Mr. Morris. He was an official of the Japanese Communist Party, was he not?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. In fact, he was the leader of the Japanese Communist Party?

Mr. Bisson. He is.

Mr. Morris. Did you choose to describe him as a Japanese liberal who should be included in the Japanese Government?

Mr. Bisson. I do not remember of describing him as a liberal. I may well have described him as one who could enter the Japanese Government.

Mr. Morris. I have now your article, which appears in Pacific Affairs of 1944, September 1944, in which you say, among other things, here:

> There are many such liberals, including Takao Saito, expelled from the House of Representatives for denouncing the war against China; Kanju Kato, jailed for his aggressive and uncompromising trade-union leadership; Daikichiro Togawa, member imprisoned for suspected opposition to the war in China; Wataru Kaji, who has for years aided the Chinese armies in propaganda work; Tatsukichi Minobe, eminent constitutional lawyer driven from the House of Peers for his liberal views on the Emperor; Susumo Okano, Communist leader of the Japanese Peoples' Liberation Alliance, organized February 1944 in Yenan, China; Baroness Ishimoto—and so forth.

Did you advocate that Susumo Okano listed among those other people as liberal by you be included in the Japanese Government?

Mr. Bisson. I did.

Many I make a comment on that?

Mr. Morris. Yes. You wanted to introduce something into the record at this time?

Mr. Bisson. Yes. We have been discussing my Government connections in Japan and I should like to speak both to——

Senator Ferguson. Before you go into that, I would just like to inquire from Mr. Morris how long he thinks this hearing will take.

Mr. Bisson. I think I can finish this in 2 or 3 minutes.

Senator Ferguson. It appears that we cannot finish today and we can finish in about an hour and a half, so we have a full meeting on Monday at 10:30, and, therefore, we will start this hearing sharply at 9 o'clock Monday morning.

We will recess now until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

If you do not finish at 10:30 when the committee comes in as a whole, you have another meeting at 2, do you not? We have another meeting at 2?

Mr. Morris. We have another meeting and another witness subpenaed.

Senator Ferguson. If there is any question we could start this one at 1 o'clock to finish it, so we would have 2½ hours.

Mr. Sourwine. Do you want to get this material in he is offering?

Mr. Fanelli. It won't take a minute, Senator.

Senator Ferguson. All right.

Mr. Bisson. I want to note that Major General Willoughby, former head of G–2 in occupation headquarters at Tokyo, has charged before the committee that I was among certain people "unloaded" on headquarters from the States in the spring of 1946.

The fact is that the Deputy Chief of Government Section, Col. Charles L. Kades, invited me to join that section in the fall of 1945, when I was in Japan with the strategic bombing survey.

My commitments with the survey did not permit me to accept the offer at that time. By the spring of 1946 I had fulfilled these commitments, including the writing of one of the chapters in the official survey volume prepared by the Over-all Economic Effects Division, to which I was attached.

From the War Department I received later an official scroll of commendation for my contribution to the work of the strategic bombing survey.

Having completed my work with the survey, I took up the offer previously made by Government Section in Tokyo, stipulating that I stay only 4 months, and that my status be raised from the grade of P–7 to P–8, the highest professional category.

These matters are all subject of record and can be easily verified by investigation. It was under these conditions, which do not take on the character of being "unloaded" on occupation headquarters, that I assumed my duties with Government Section in April 1946.

With regard to my period of official service with occupation headquarters in 1946–47, the appropriate source to consult is my immediate superior, Brig. Gen. (later Maj. Gen.) Courtney Whitney, Chief of Government Section. He gave me a letter of commendation when I left the field.

Under the urgings of my official superiors in Government Section, I extended the stipulated term of 4 months to 13 months.

The letter he gave me reads as follows——

Senator FERGUSON. Just offer it and we will put it in the record.

Mr. FANELLI. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you disclose to any of these people that you mentioned, Mr. Bisson, your past Communist associations?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. I will receive that commendation letter in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit 715" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 715

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS,
SUPREME COMMANDER FOR THE ALLIED POWERS,
Tokyo, Japan, May 8, 1947.

Mr. T. A. BISSON,
Tokyo, Japan

DEAR MR. BISSON: It is with a sense of sincere regret that I note your departure from your post here for the United States. I have, however, realized for some time that your personal affairs required your presence at home, and that you were staying during the national and local elections at my request only at considerable personal sacrifice.

As special assistant to the Chief, Government Section, since early in 1946, you have devoted yourself indefatigably to the democratization of Japan. The advice and untiring assistance which you gave in the preparation of legislative programs during the several sessions of the National Diet contributed materially to the successful formulation and adoption of laws of a progressive and enlightened character fully in keeping with the liberal spirit of the new Constitution of Japan.

Nor can I commend too highly the vision and judgment which you exhibited in the development of plans for the deconcentration of political and economic power in Japan and the establishment of a social pattern in which a system of private enterprise may function free from monopolistic influences and totalitarian controls. In fact, the zeal, patience, and initiative with which you performed your manifold day-to-day duties have won the deep respect and admiration of all your colleagues in this headquarters, as well as my own gratitude and appreciation. We will all miss you.

With best wishes for your continued success, I am,

Very sincerely,

(Signed) COURTNEY WHITNEY,
Brigadier General, United States Army,
Chief, Government Section.

Senator FERGUSON. We will recess now, until 9 o'clock on Monday morning.

(Thereupon, at 12:15 p. m., the hearing was recessed, to reconvene at 9 a. m. Monday, March 31, 1952.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to recess, at 9 a. m., in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Homer Ferguson, presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Eastland, and Ferguson.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director or research.

Senator FERGUSON. Come to order.

You may proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you put into the record the citation of the American Friends of the Chinese People?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a correction of the previous statement.

The American Friends of the Chinese People, which was the organization that sponsored China Today, was cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representatives in its report of March 29, 1944, pages 40 and 147. It was not in existence at the time the Attorney General's list was promulgated. That is why it is not on his list.

Senator FERGUSON. You mean it had passed out of existence?

Mr. MANDEL. It had ceased existing at the time the Attorney General's list was put out.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't actually know why it wasn't on the Attorney General's list; do you?

Mr. MANDEL. I know only that the organization did not exist at the time the first Attorney General's list was put out.

Mr. FANELLI. I think it ought to be noted the Attorney General's list has many organizations that are out of existence such as the American League for Peace and Democracy. That is just for your information, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. You may proceed.

TESTIMONY OF THOMAS ARTHUR BISSON, BERKELEY, CALIF. ACCOMPANIED BY JOSEPH A. FANELLI, ESQ.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bisson, have you written in justification of the Soviet-German Pact?

Mr. BISSON. I have not, so far as I know.

Mr. FANELLI. He has one correction in his testimony of Saturday at any point where it is convenient.

Senator FERGUSON. Do it now.

Mr. BISSON. My position of mascot of Pacific Affairs was associate editor, not acting editor. The same is true for Michael Greenberg. In these years, Mr. Holland or Mr. Carter was the editor. What I wanted to indicate here is that I did not have editorial responsibility at the time, as this masthead shows.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did the masthead read, "associate editor?"

Mr. BISSON. Associate editor; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you perform the duties that an editor would normally perform?

Mr. BISSON. I performed on occasion routine editorial administration. I did not have editorial responsibility.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who decided what was going into the magazine?

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Carter when he was editor or Mr. Holland.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Carter, himself, personally submitted manuscripts and decided what to reject and accept?

Mr. BISSON. Sometimes we had editorial sessions in which the whole group of editors would meet. There would be discussions there. The final decision in those discussions always lay with Mr. Carter.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you make recommendations to him?

Mr. BISSON. We all made recommendations, depending on what we felt about all of this.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you the top man on the publication except for Mr. Carter?

Mr. BISSON. May I see the masthead of the Pacific Affairs?

Mr. SOURWINE. From your memory, not from the masthead.

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Belshaw was there.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was there someone over you except Mr. Carter?

Mr. BISSON. I would like to see the masthead.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you remember?

Mr. BISSON. My memory is "No."

Mr. MORRIS. I want to refresh the witness' recollection by referring to our exhibit No. 71, which appears on page 307 of the public transcript. This is a letter from Wilma Fairbank to you dated October 19, 1943. Wilma Fairbanks writes:

> DEAR ART: Harriet writes me that Chien Tuan-Sheng's article on local government is going to be published in the December issue of Pacific Affairs. I understand that you are now acting editor.

Mr. BISSON. "I understand"—she wasn't certain. I think that is quite clear and what she is saying is that she thinks I am the editor and would like me to take this into consideration. She wasn't certain. That would be my interpretation of it.

I assure you the point here is whether an article should go in or not and that was up to Mr. Carter.

Mr. FANELLI. You have answered the question.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the question put to the witness, "Did you support the Hitler-Stalin Pact?" I would like to introduce into the record an article that appeared in Amerasia of September 1938, signed "TAB," which is entitled "Japan Picks Up the Pieces."

Senator FERGUSON. Is that your article?

Mr. BISSON. That is my article.

Mr. FANELLI. Let me see it, please.

Mr. MORRIS. I will show you this next article in order to save time.

Senator FERGUSON. What do you say about that article?

Mr. BISSON. I have not had a chance to complete reading it yet.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why haven't you had a chance to complete reading it?

Mr. BISSON. I would like to have my counsel read this.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does Mr. Fanelli know whether you wrote this?

Mr. FANELLI. I would like to know what he has been asked and is being asked.

Senator FERGUSON. We are trying to find his knowledge.

Mr. BISSON. I have said I wrote it.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is the answer we are waiting for.

Mr. MORRIS. I now offer you this article from Soviet Russia Today.

Mr. FANELLI. Senator, I have no objection to its being in the record, but it doesn't show any support of the Russian-China Pact.

Senator FERGUSON. It will speak for itself.

Mr. MORRIS. I offer you the May 1941 issue of China Today and on page 5 is an article entitled "The Soviet-Japanese Pact in Historical Perspective," by T. A. Bisson. I ask you if you wrote that.

Mr. BISSON. I wrote that article.

May I look at it in more detail?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. FANELLI. Would you mind waiting a minute while I read it, if you are going to ask him about this?

Mr. MORRIS. Counsel has asked permission to read the article, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. How long is the article?

Mr. FANELLI. Two pages. It will take me 2 minutes. I have not previously seen this article. I take it he is going to ask about its contents.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you plan to ask Mr. Fanelli any questions?

Mr. MORRIS. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Why should counsel read it?

Mr. MORRIS. I have no reason.

Senator FERGUSON. It is what the witness knows about it, not counsel, unless there is some constitutional question in it, or legal questions that you do not want to answer on the ground that it would tend to incriminate you.

Mr. BISSON. May I consult with counsel? If so, I think it would be necessary for him to read it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you identify it as an article you have written?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. How long have you known counsel?

Mr. BISSON. About a week.

Senator FERGUSON. Who introduced you to your counsel?

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Maxwell Stewart.

Senator FERGUSON. How long have you been in Washington now?

Mr. BISSON. Since Friday night?

Senator FERGUSON. Last Friday night?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you first meet your counsel? You said about a week.

Mr. BISSON. Half a week.

Senator FERGUSON. A half a week?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Senator Ferguson. When did you meet your counsel?

Mr. Bisson. I first met my counsel Friday night.

Senator Ferguson. Who took you to meet your counsel?

Mr. Bisson. I went by myself.

Senator Ferguson. Nobody with you?

Mr. Bisson. Nobody was with me.

Senator Ferguson. Was he in his office or in his home?

Mr. Bisson. He was at his office.

Senator Ferguson. You said that Maxwell Stewart introduced you to your counsel.

Mr. Bisson. By introduced, I took to mean, got me in touch with him.

Senator Ferguson. When did you contact Mr. Maxwell Stewart about counsel?

Mr. Bisson. Mr. Stewart telephoned me in Berkeley, Calif.

Senator Ferguson. He telephoned you, or did you telephone him?

Mr. Bisson. He telephoned to me.

Senator Ferguson. Had you been in contact with Maxwell Stewart before?

Mr. Bisson. I had not.

Senator Ferguson. Who is Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. Bisson. You mean in terms of his business position?

Senator Ferguson. What is his business?

Mr. Bisson. I think he is head of a public affairs committee, puts out some pamphlets.

Senator Ferguson. He is the head of a public affairs committee that puts out pamphlets. What kind of pamphlets?

Mr. Bisson. I am not sufficiently aware of the type of pamphlets.

Senator Ferguson. How long have you known Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. Bisson. I have known Maxwell Stewart 15—20 years, a long time.

Senator Ferguson. Was he ever on the Institute of Pacific Relations with you?

Mr. Bisson. He was not, not that I know of.

Senator Ferguson. Did he ever work in Government?

Mr. Bisson. I do not think so.

Senator Ferguson. When did Maxwell Stewart get in touch with you?

Mr. Bisson. You mean the telephone call to which I referred?

Senator Ferguson. Yes. When was that?

Mr. Bisson. To the best of my knowledge it was Wednesday.

Senator Ferguson. Last Wednesday, Maxwell Stewart called you in California?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Senator Ferguson. When were you subpenaed?

Mr. Bisson. The telegram arrived on Tuesday, I think.

Senator Ferguson. The telegram arrived on Tuesday of last week saying that you were to come here?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Senator Ferguson. And Maxwell Stewart called you on Wednesday?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. What was your conversation with Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. Maxwell Stewart said that he understood I was to testify here in Washington.

Senator FERGUSON. He understood you were going to testify here in Washington, and what else?

Mr. BISSON. And suggested if I needed a lawyer he could recommend one.

Senator FERGUSON. What else?

Mr. BISSON. Then he gave me his telephone number.

Senator FERGUSON. Maxwell Stewart's telephone number?

Mr. BISSON. No; Mr. Fanelli's telephone number.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you tell him you wanted a lawyer?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator FERGUSON. You realize that many witnesses have appeared without lawyers?

Mr. BISSON. I did not so realize.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever know a witness in a court case to have a lawyer? Have you ever appeared as a witness in a court case?

Mr. BISSON. I have not. I am rather inexperienced in legal matters.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you ever attended a court trial?

Mr. BISSON. I don't know as I actually have.

Senator FERGUSON. You don't think you have?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you ever known a witness to have a lawyer before?

Mr. BISSON. I just wouldn't know the answer to that question.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that the only conversation you had with Maxwell Stewart? You are under oath, you understand.

Mr. BISSON. No; that is not the only conversation.

Senator FERGUSON. Tell us what the conversation was that you had with Maxwell Stewart. I have been trying to get it.

Mr. BISSON. I also had a conversation with Maxwell Stewart in New York.

Senator FERGUSON. When?

Mr. BISSON. Friday.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you go to New York and meet Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator FERGUSON. Where did you meet him in New York?

Mr. BISSON. I met him at his offices.

Senator FERGUSON. He has an office in New York?

Mr. BISSON. He has.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he telephone you from Washington or telephone you from New York?

Mr. BISSON. He did not telephone me.

Senator FERGUSON. What?

Mr. BISSON. Oh, you mean on the day that we are now speaking of, or earlier?

Senator FERGUSON. Now you told me that he telephoned you last Wednesday.

Mr. BISSON. But we are now speaking about Friday, and I am asking you whether you are speaking of Friday or Wednesday.

Senator FERGUSON. I am talking about your first telephone call from Maxwell Stewart.

Mr. BISSON. That is exactly what I was not clear about. Now I am clear about it.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you have your first call from Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. On Wednesday afternoon.

Senator FERGUSON. From where?

Mr. BISSON. I don't know as he exactly stated. I presume he was in New York City.

Senator FERGUSON. You presume he was. You were where?

Mr. BISSON. In Berkeley.

Senator FERGUSON. How long did the telephone call take?

Mr. BISSON. I suppose 3 or 4 minutes.

Senator FERGUSON. What did you say to him? What did he say to you?

Mr. BISSON. I have told you what we said.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that the only conversation? He said: "You are going to be subpenaed?"

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. "You are going to be subpenaed?"

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. "Do you want a lawyer?"

Mr. BISSON. He asked me whether I needed a lawyer.

Senator FERGUSON. What did you say?

Mr. BISSON. I said I did not have one and I would like to have one.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he name the lawyer?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you who would pay for the lawyer?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ask him?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Was there anything said about paying the lawyer?

Mr. BISSON. There was not.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you a contract now to pay your lawyer?

Mr. BISSON. I have.

Senator FERGUSON. How much?

Mr. BISSON. $250.

Senator FERGUSON. For what, for a day?

Mr. BISSON. For a day.

Senator FERGUSON. A day?

Mr. BISSON. No, $250.

Senator FERGUSON. For the whole appearance?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. This was originally understood to be only a day's appearance.

Senator FERGUSON. It was to be $250. Were you to pay it personally?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you pay any down?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you make an appointment with Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. How did you get to New York to see him if you did not make an appointment?

Mr. BISSON. I went down to New York City to see him.

Senator FERGUSON. You told us the conversation on Wednesday and there is nothing in it about you going to New York.

Mr. BISSON. There is nothing to prevent me from going to New York when I got here in Washington, is there?

Senator FERGUSON. Not a thing.

Mr. BISSON. That is exactly what I did.

Senator FERGUSON. You came to Washington when?

Mr. BISSON. I came to Washington on Friday morning.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you go to see your counsel?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Where did you go in Washington?

Mr. BISSON. I did not go anywhere in Washington.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you get off the train or plane?

Mr. BISSON. I was on a plane.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you get off the plane?

Mr. BISSON. I got off the plane, asked whether I could purchase an extension to New York, and returned to the plane.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you do that?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you contact anybody while you were here in Washington?

Mr. BISSON. I did not. I merely had time to make the shift.

Senator FERGUSON. Why did you change your mind about going on to New York?

Mr. BISSON. I didn't change my mind. The Government TR called for a San Francisco to Washington trip. I could not change that. What I could do was to extend it on my own funds.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you have another conversation on the telephone with Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. No; I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Where were you to meet Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. I was not. We made no arrangements to meet.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you went on to New York?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know where Maxwell Stewart's office was in New York?

Mr. BISSON. I did not know the exact address.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you go on to New York?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you see Maxwell Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator FERGUSON. Who else did you see in New York?

Mr. BISSON. I saw Mr. Holland.

Senator FERGUSON. You saw Mr. Holland?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you see anybody else?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Is Maxwell Stewart a lawyer?

Mr. BISSON. No; not as far as I know.

Senator FERGUSON. He is a public-relations man?

Mr. BISSON. I would not call him a public-relations man.

Senator FERGUSON. What is on his office door?
Mr. BISSON. Public Affairs Committee.
Senator FERGUSON. Committee for what?
Mr. BISSON. The committee publishes pamphlets. It does not necessarily mean—I do not think he operates for any person as a public relations expert in terms of his business.
Senator FERGUSON. What kind of pamphlets does he publish? What are the pamphlets?
Mr. BISSON. I have not seen them for many years. They are small pamphlets, something of this size, a little larger, various subjects, most of which I think are domestic.
Senator FERGUSON. Did you go to see Stewart before you went to see Holland?
Mr. BISSON. I did.
Senator FERGUSON. You went to see Stewart first?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.
Senator FERGUSON. You didn't have an appointment with him?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Senator FERGUSON. You are sure about that?
Mr. BISSON. That is right. He is my friend.
Senator FERGUSON. What was your conversation with Stewart about?
Mr. BISSON. It resolved generally around the procedures in a committee hearing of this kind with hints to help me out in conducting myself.
Senator FERGUSON. How to conduct yourself?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.
Senator FERGUSON. What did he tell you about that?
Mr. BISSON. Well, there are a number of points we discussed. I suppose I can remember some of them.
One was to try to keep cool. Another was to make sure you knew the question before you attempted to answer it. Another was to look at a document that was read to you.
Senator FERGUSON. Look at it when it was read to you?
Mr. BISSON. If I am not familiar with its contents.
Senator FERGUSON. To have your counsel read the document also?
Mr. BISSON. No.
Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you that?
Mr. BISSON. No, he did not say that. Just to make sure that I had the content of a document on which I was being questioned if my memory was not complete about it.
I do not remember any other details. He thought we should—it was almost lunch time then—go out for lunch.
Senator FERGUSON. How long did you talk with Maxwell Stewart?
Mr. BISSON. I suppose it was 15 or 20 minutes. We then telephoned Mr. Holland and made a luncheon appointment with him.
Senator FERGUSON. You and Stewart went to Holland?
Mr. BISSON. Yes.
Senator FERGUSON. And had luncheon with Holland?
Mr. BISSON. That is right.
Senator FERGUSON. What did you talk about there?
Mr. BISSON. In general, the same problems.
Senator FERGUSON. How to conduct yourself before a committee?
Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you talk about Owen Lattimore's testimony?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Was his name mentioned?

Mr. BISSON. I don't believe it was.

Senator FERGUSON. Think a minute.

Mr. BISSON. To the best of my knowledge, his name was not even mentioned.

Senator FERGUSON. Did Mr. Stewart say that he had talked to counsel, that the counsel would take your case?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. I think he said that he had talked to Mr. Fanelli.

Senator FERGUSON. And Mr. Fanelli would take your case?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you that Mr. Fanelli had any experience in this particular case?

Mr. BISSON. That is, my case?

Senator FERGUSON. No, in the IPR case.

Mr. BISSON. No; I don't think so, except that he told me he had been his lawyer here when he was here.

Senator FERGUSON. And Mr. Fanelli had represented Mr. Maxwell Stewart as a witness before the committee?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you knew Maxwell Stewart had been a witness here?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you as to whether Mr. Fanelli had represented anybody else before the committee?

Mr. BISSON. He did not.

Senator FERGUSON. That he had gotten other people to go to Mr. Fanelli to have Mr. Fanelli as a lawyer before this committee?

Mr. BISSON. He did not. We did not discuss any of that.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you discuss Mr. Budenz?

Mr. BISSON. We did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Was he mentioned?

Mr. BISSON. Not that I remember.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you that Mr. Fanelli was the man who had given certain evidence to the attorney for Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BISSON. He did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Didn't he tell you that?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you that Mr. Fanelli had given evidence to Mr. Fortas, Abe Fortas?

Mr. BISSON. He did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Was the name of Abe Fortas mentioned?

Mr. BISSON. It was not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you talk about any deportation cases?

Mr. BISSON. We did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Have we got about your conversation with Holland?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Were any of these documents mentioned?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator FERGUSON. How long was your conversation with Holland?

Mr. Bisson. There was no separate conversation with Holland. It was a general conversation in the office and then we had lunch. As a matter of fact, as I remember, finally only Mr. Stewart and I went to lunch.

Senator Ferguson. Holland did not go with you?

Mr. Bisson. Holland finally did not go to lunch.

Senator Ferguson. Then you and Stewart went over to Holland's office?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Senator Ferguson. How long a time did you spend there?

Mr. Bisson. I would estimate a half or three-quarters of an hour.

Senator Ferguson. You were about three-quarters of an hour at Holland's office?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Senator Ferguson. Who suggested getting Holland?

Mr. Bisson. I expect I said that, since Mr. Holland is acting as head of the IPR it would probably be well if I saw him.

Senator Ferguson. Who called Holland?

Mr. Bisson. Maxwell Stewart did.

Senator Ferguson. Then you went to lunch with Stewart?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Senator Ferguson. Could you give us the conversation?

Mr. Bisson. I am afraid I don't recall any of the details. We passed on to general subjects then. We were discussing family matters, my son's position, and so on.

Senator Ferguson. What is that?

Mr. Bisson. We had certain matters to deal with with reference to my son, and I asked him about his family. We were discussing mainly family matters over lunch.

Senator Ferguson. Did you call the lawyer—he was not your lawyer then, because you had not talked to him——

Mr. Bisson. No.

Senator Ferguson. Did Stewart call him?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Senator Ferguson. Did anybody call him?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Senator Ferguson. How did you know you were going to meet him Friday?

Mr. Bisson. I did not know I was going to meet him Friday.

Senator Ferguson. When did you leave New York?

Mr. Bisson. I left New York right after lunch.

Senator Ferguson. What time?

Mr. Bisson. On the 1:30 train.

Senator Ferguson. You arrived here at what time?

Mr. Bisson. I think it was around 5 o'clock.

Senator Ferguson. Where did you go then?

Mr. Bisson. I went to my hotel.

Senator Ferguson. Where?

Mr. Bisson. Hotel Stratford.

Senator Ferguson. Then where?

Mr. Bisson. I then telephoned Mr. Haaser.

Senator Ferguson. Who is Mr. Haaser?

Mr. Bisson. I was directed to telephone him when I arrived.

Senator Ferguson. By whom?

Mr. Bisson. Who directed me to do that?
Senator Ferguson. Yes.
Mr. Bisson. The telegram here.
Senator Ferguson. Did you get him on the phone?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Senator Ferguson. Then what?
Mr. Bisson. I reported I had arrived. He said the hearing was scheduled for——
Senator Ferguson. About what time was that?
Mr. Bisson. I suppose that must have been about 5:30, a quarter of 6.
Senator Ferguson. Then you had not contacted the lawyer yet?
Mr. Bisson. No.
Senator Ferguson. When did you contact him?
Mr. Bisson. I made a telephone call to him after that.
Senator Ferguson. You had his number because Maxwell Stewart gave it to you?
Mr. Bisson. That is right.
Senator Ferguson. Was he at his office?
Mr. Bisson. Yes; he was at his office.
Senator Ferguson. You went to the office?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Senator Ferguson. Then you appeared Saturday morning?
Mr. Bisson. That is right.
Senator Ferguson. Did you have some questions, Mr. Sourwine.
Mr. Sourwine. Just one or two.
What time did your plane get into Washington Friday morning?
Mr. Bisson. I think it was about 9 o'clock. I am not exactly certain.
Mr. Sourwine. What time did you take off for New York?
Mr. Bisson. I think it was about a half an hour.
Mr. Sourwine. That would be about 9:30 that the plane took off for New York?
Mr. Bisson. That is right.
Mr. Sourwine. What time did you get to New York?
Mr. Bisson. As I remember, the flight took about an hour or a little over.
Mr. Sourwine. You got into LaGuardia Field?
Mr. Bisson. That is right.
Mr. Sourwine. That would be about 10:30 or a little later?
Mr. Bisson. 10:30 or a quarter to 11.
Mr. Sourwine. What time did you get into Manhattan?
Mr. Bisson. I had to wait for the bags. I went in the limousine. I suppose it was 11 o'clock or 11:15.
Mr. Sourwine. Where did you get off? Where did the limousine leave you?
Mr. Bisson. As I remember, I got off at the uptown stop.
Mr. Sourwine. Where was that?
Mr. Bisson. I wouldn't remember the exact street. It was around Fifty-seventh Street, something like that.
Mr. Sourwine. Fifty-seventh and what?
Mr. Bisson. Lexington.
Mr. Sourwine. Then what did you do?
Mr. Bisson. My problem was I did not know where to get off the limousine because I did not know the address of Mr. Stewart's office.

Mr. SOURWINE. This is around a quarter to 12?

Mr. BISSON. No; this is a quarter after 11.

So I went into a drug store or something, and looked at a telephone book, and found his address and got a taxicab and went to his office.

Mr. SOURWINE. How is he listed in the telephone book?

Mr. BISSON. I think I looked up Public Affairs Committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the Manhattan telephone directory?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where is the office?

Mr. BISSON. The office—I am not exactly certain. It is down——

Mr. SOURWINE. Where did you go?

Mr. BISSON. It was about 20 blocks downtown, I think, a little below Forty-second Street, around Fortieth Street.

Mr. SOURWINE. Fortieth and what?

Mr. BISSON. That is what I was trying to remember. I think it is on the east side of Fifth Avenue a couple of blocks.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is all you can remember about it?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know the name of the building?

Mr. BISSON. I don't.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does it have a name?

Mr. BISSON. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. You went there in a cab?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. You got there when? About 11:30?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. You just walked in on him unannounced?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. And he was there?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. You talked with him for a while?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Mr SOURWINE. Then one of you suggested calling Mr. Holland?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. You think it was you?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then Mr. Stewart did call Mr. Holland?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. He found him in?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether Mr. Stewart had talked to Mr. Holland before about your coming?

Mr. BISSON. I do not think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know?

Mr. BISSON. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Had you made any contact with Mr. Holland by mail or otherwise to let him know you were coming?

Mr. BISSON. I had not.

Mr. SOURWINE. So you went over to Mr. Holland's, you and Mr. Stewart?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. In a cab?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. What time did you leave to go to Mr. Holland's office?

Mr. BISSON. I think we must have got to Mr. Holland's office about 12 o'clock. It may have been a little before or after.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you get right in to see him?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You talked with him for about how long?

Mr. BISSON. Well, our talk was interrupted. Mr. Shannon McCune came in. Maybe we talked for 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. who?

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Shannon McCune.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know him?

Mr. BISSON. I know him to some extent.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he with IPR?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. What does he do?

Mr. BISSON. I think he is a university teacher up in New York State somewhere, Syracuse, or something.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was he doing there? Do you know?

Mr. BISSON. He just happened to come into the office at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You talked with him for about 15 minutes in the group?

Mr. BISSON. No; he came in, he talked to Mr. Holland. Maxwell Stewart and I were on the side.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was an interruption?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then you talked with Mr. Holland altogether about 15 minutes?

Mr. BISSON. I would say about that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then you went to lunch?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ask Mr. Holland to go to lunch with you?

Mr. BISSON. I think he said he had another engagement.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ask him to go with you?

Mr. BISSON. No. We were going out to lunch, but he had another engagement.

Mr. SOURWINE. So it was then about 12:15; is that right?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. You went out to lunch?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you eat near the office building there?

Mr. BISSON. No. We decided we didn't have too much time and we went down to the Pennsylvania Station eating house, I think one of the Savarin's there.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you take a cab down there?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were taking your bags with you?

Mr. BISSON. We went down in the subway.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were taking your bags with you from place to place?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. The reason we did that was that it was quicker and very convenient from 1 East Fifty-fourth Street. You get on the subway there.

Mr. Sourwine. Were you at 1 East Fifty-fourth Street?

Mr. Fanelli. I didn't hear the question.

Mr. Sourwine. Nobody asked you what you heard.

Mr. Fanelli. I am entitled to know the questions. I just didn't hear that. He had his hand over his mouth.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Fanelli has repeatedly interrupted here. This time he has interrupted at a very important point in the examination.

Were you at 1 East Fifty-fourth Street?

Mr. Bisson. We were at Mr. Holland's office. That is the address.

Mr. Fanelli. I will object to "repeated interruptions." I have not made repeated interruptions.

Senator Ferguson. The record will speak for itself.

Mr. Fanelli. I know. He need not describe it that way. It is not true.

Senator Ferguson. You may proceed.

Mr. Sourwine. You took the subway down to the Pennsylvania Station?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Mr. Sourwine. You ate at the Savarin?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Mr. Sourwine. Just the two of you?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Mr. Sourwine. Then you got on the 1 o'clock train for Washington?

Mr. Bisson. 1:30.

Mr. Sourwine. All right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fanelli. May I read this document? I am awaiting your ruling on it. I understood there was an objection to my reading it.

Senator Ferguson. No; there is no objection to you reading it, but we do not want to delay the examination.

Mr. Sourwine. Neither of those two items identified previously by the witness has been offered for the record. The purpose for waiting has been to give you an opportunity to read it.

Mr. Fanelli. I have been listening to your questions. I cannot do two things at once.

Mr. Sourwine. Is it your thought that you have the right or privilege to object to the offer of any of these for the record?

Mr. Fanelli. I have not objected to the offer. I understand this committee does not permit me to object.

I may make a suggestion. I have not objected to the offer. I would merely like to understand what is going on. I may have to confer with my witness about it.

Senator Ferguson. Those two documents will be filed for the record. You may proceed now with the questioning.

(The documents referred to were marked Exhibits No. 716 and No. 717 and are as follows:)

Exhibit No. 716

[Source: Amerasia, vol. III, September–February 1939–40]

Topics In Brief

JAPAN PICKS UP THE PIECES

Somewhere in Europe, possibly in Switzerland, a Japanese mission is cooling its heels. Responding to Mr. Hitler's personal invitation, it had left Tokyo late in July to attend the Nazi Congress at Nuremberg. The Party consisted of General

Terauchi, Admiral Osumi, and two distinguished Japanese businessmen. Its announced purpose was the strengthening of Japan's ties with Berlin and Rome under the "anti-Comintern" pact. Some reports indicated that the long-deferred military alliance with the Axis powers was about to be concluded, and that the Japanese mission was to touch up the final details. The group landed in Europe at the moment when the Soviet-German nonaggression pact was announced. Since then the Nuremberg Congress has been called off, thus completing the discomfiture of Japan's envoys.

The plight of this mission reflects in miniature the larger predicament into which Japan has been plunged by the Soviet-German pact. Throughout the first week, Japan's militarists and politicians fumbled for an answer to the acute dilemma. At Berlin they presented a feeble protest against violation of the "spirit" of the "anti-Comintern" pact, while privately they seethed at the lack of "advance information" on a move which affected their international position so profoundly. In China some of the acts of the Japanese military exhibited a childish exasperation; the slappings administered to German nationals obviously provided no answer to their problem.

Japan's difficulties were serious enough before conclusion of the nonaggression pact, which has greatly strengthened the possibility of effective intervention on behalf of China by the Soviet Union. For several months the Japanese leaders, counting on the European crisis to immobilize all opponents, had been pursuing a recklessly provocative policy in the Far East. Hostilities on the Manchurian-Mongolian frontier were permitted to reach serious proportions, apparently in the belief that they might discourage the formation of an Anglo-French-Soviet alliance. At the same time, the Japanese were carrying on a bitter campaign against foreign rights and interests in China. The effort to single out Britain for special attack at Tientsin was too transparent to go down; it was obvious that American and French interests stood or fell with those of Britain. From the beginning of Japan's campaign in the spring, in fact, there had been definite collaboration by London, Paris, and Washington in defense of their position in China. Secretary Hull's denunciation of the Japanese-American commercial treaty must have made this point clear in Tokyo, if it had not been realized earlier. But by this time Japan had gone too far to retreat. It was carrying the fight directly to Great Britain and the Soviet Union, and indirectly to the United States and France. For international support, it was relying on its "anti-Comintern" partners—Germany and Italy.

On the eve of the current European crisis, Japan's campaign had been temporarily checkmated. The essential issue revolved around the scope of the concessions which Japan could milk from the Craigie-Arita "formula" of July 24. In the beginning, the prospects appeared hopeful to Tokyo. The Japanese leaders were gambling for big stakes. Beyond the immediate policing issues affecting the British Concession at Tientsin, they looked for Britain's cooperation in consolidating their economic domination of "occupied" China, particularly in currency matters. And still further, they aimed to secure Britain's aid in coercing China into a "peace" maker, Japan hoped to gain a victory in China which it had proved unable to win by force of arms.

In the beginning of the Craigie-Arita negotiations, all went well. Secretary Hull's denunciation of the trade treaty, however, had considerably strengthened Britain's hand at Tokyo. After making the expected compromise on the policing of the Tientsin Concession, the British negotiators balked. Japan's demands on currency and other economic issues in North China were given lengthy consideration, involving consultation with Washington and Paris officials. On August 18th Britain essentially rejected these demands by stating that they could only be dealt with in multilateral conversations involving all interested powers. The stage was set for another turn of the Japanese screw. Ominous signs of renewed army pressure on British centers in China were evident as the European crisis entered its rising curve. At Shanghai a shooting affray, in which a British sergeant killed two China policemen of the local puppet regime in self-defense, was taken as the point of departure. Japanese military and naval officials met and conferred, demands were made by the local Japanese-dominated authorities, and a force of 6,000 Japanese troops was landed near Shanghai. At Hongkong, meanwhile, Japanese military forces had occupied the mainland areas along the Crown Colony's border, and extensive military-naval precautions were taken by the Hongkong authorities.

Announcement of the Soviet-German non-aggression pact occurred as Japan's preparations for renewed pressure on Britain were reaching a climax. The blow struck Tokyo with crushing force. Only a month before it had suffered the shock of an action which registered the disapproval of the United States. Now it suddenly found itself deserted by Germany. It had nothing but its own strength—or lack of strength—to undergird the reckless moves which it engaged upon. An unfinished war with China, hostilities with Russia on Outer Mongolia's border, a serious conflict with Britain, latent tension with France, and the undisguised hostility of the United States—all these to carry on its own shoulders, plus the unpredictable effects on the sudden access of strength to the Soviet Union in the Far East. It was high time to reconsider and take stock of the new situation.

The first reactions were evident in China. A sudden damper was put on the anti-British campaign. No more was heard of the demands on the Shanghai Municipal Council, or of the 6,000 Japanese troops landed in the neighboring area. At Hongkong the Japanese troops were withdrawn from the borders of the Colony, and local Japanese officials discounted any talk of aggressive moves.

A more significant reaction appeared in Tokyo on August 28th, when the Hiranuma Cabinet resigned en bloc. The military-fascist extremists in Japan, who had been clamorously demanding an outright alliance with the Berlin-Rome axis, appear to have suffered their most decisive political set back of the past three years. Preliminary reports with regard to the composition of the new Cabinet indicate a decided falling off in the influence of army extremists. General Nobuyki Abe, the new Japanese premier, is not a member of the extremist clique; his past associations and record tend to place him among the more moderate of the army elements. Even the new War Minister, General Shunroku Hata, comes from a wing of the army that cannot be classified as extremist. Most significant of all is the consideration being given to the appointment of Mamoru Shigemitsu, now Ambassador to London, as Foreign Minister. Prior to his service in London, Shigemitsu held the post of Ambassador at Moscow for a period of several years. An old career diplomat of the civilian school, Shigemitsu will undoubtedly be called upon to play a conciliatory role in relation to the Western powers. Another sign of discomfiture of Japan's military-fascist exponents may be seen in the projected recall from Rome and Berlin of Toshio Shiratori and Lieutenant-General Hiroshi Oshima. These two Ambassadors participated in the original formation of the "anti-Comintern" pact in November 1936, and during recent months had actively campaigned to convert the pact into an outright military alliance.

After the events of recent months in China, the new Japanese leadership may expect to find some difficulty in convincing the Western powers that it comes honestly bearing an olive branch. The real test is whether Japan is willing to give up its brutal attempt to subjugate the Chinese people. Of this there is as yet no sign. The Abe Cabinet reaffirms its intention of establishing the "new order in East Asia"—an "order" which involves not only the conquest of China but the eventual elimination of all Western interests in the Far East. The scenes at Tientsin are of too recent memory to be erased by a sudden shift of tactics dictated by temporary necessity. If cleverly applied, conciliatory tactics hold out more danger to China's efforts to maintain its independence than the recklessly arrogant policy of the Japanese extremists. To Britain, in particular, they would appeal with especial force at the present time. A bribe may often be more effective than a blow. In order to conclude a "deal" that would sacrifice China, Britain would have to receive a quid pro quo. Is the present Japanese Cabinet able to make such an offer? And would it be garnished with the plea that Japan must be conserved as a makeweight against the increased strength and influence which the Soviet Union can exert in the Far East? It is to be hoped that any such offers, if tendered, will be recognized for what they are worth.

In the ultimate disposition of Far Eastern affairs, moreover, reckoning must be had with another power—the United States. Editorial reaction to Secretary Hull's denunciation of the Japanese-American trade treaty, as shown in a representative selection of newspapers from coast to coast, is indicative of what the American people have come to believe on the current issues of Far Eastern policy. Approval of Secretary Hull's move is virtually unanimous, while a surprisingly large majority favors implementation of this act by severance of America's trade in war materials with Japan. The result of a nationwide Gallup poll, announced on August 30th, shows that 81 percent of Americans approve the abrogation of the American-Japanese trade treaty, while 82 percent believe that the United States should refuse to sell war materials at the end of six months when the treaty expires. There can be little doubt that, short of a complete reversal of its attempt to dominate China, Japan can expect no aid or support from the United States. This country, as a result of our misnamed Neutrality Act, has already rendered—and is still rendering—far too much assistance to Japan's undeclared war on the Chinese people. Today popular opinion overwhelmingly approves the adoption of measures which will bring to an end America's partnership with Japan's war makers. It would be unfortunate if small but powerful groups representing the vested interests of minorities should bring to bear sufficient influence to thwart this expressed will of the American people.

T. A. B.

EXHIBIT No. 717

[Source: China Today, May 1941]

THE SOVIET-JAPANESE PACT IN HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

(By T. A. Bisson)

Interpretations of the Soviet-Japanese pact have about equally the number of its interpreters. All sorts of motivations have been ascribed to it, some of which obviously cancel each other out. Hitlerian diplomacy may be very clever, but even the Nazis cannot square the circle. Germany cannot be at once the father of the pact and the object against which it is directed.

The plain fact seems to be that the pact was greeted with considerable reserve in Berlin and Rome. For this, the reasons are fairly obvious. Germany had hoped to induct the U. S. S. R. into the Axis-Japan alliance via a Soviet-Japanese agreement. It did not achieve this aim. The neutrality pact signed at Moscow on April 13 was clearly an independent transaction, which cuts two ways. If it bars Soviet aid to the United States and Britain in a war against Japan, it also bars Japanese aid to Germany in the event of a Soviet-German collision.

In concluding this agreement with Japan, as in its earlier pact with Germany, the Soviet Union joins neither of the opposing coalitions into which the world has been divided. Rather is the independence of its position strikingly demonstrated. To recognize this fact, it is only necessary to look at the course of Axis diplomacy during the war.

Last September Tokyo adhered to the Axis by signing the military alliance drafted by Hitler in Berlin. But the full scope of the Hitlerian project was still unrealized. It required the Soviet Union as a full-fledged member in order to be completed. Adherence of the U. S. S. R. would have rounded out the Axis-Japan alliance on a grand scale—Eurasian, two-continental. But the Soviet Union has not entered this projected military combination, any more than it entered the original Berlin-Rome Axis in August 1939. It has, instead, signed a separate nonaggression pact with Germany and a separate neutrallty pact with Japan, thus fending off both these powers and retaining the maximum degree of diplomatic independence for itself. There is nothing to prevent the Soviet Union from concluding neutrality or nonaggression pacts with Britain and the United States tomorrow, if these powers seriously desired such agreements. The major restriction on the Soviet Union's freedom of action comes in this respect—that it will not join the Anglo-American front in war against either Germany or Japan. This result, of course, is not especially welcome to those British or American circles which would like to see the U. S. S. R. come into the war on their side. They have merely the negative satisfaction that the Soviet Union is also pledged not to join the Axis-Japan alliance in war against the Anglo-American coalition.

What have been the historical factors which have led to the evolution of Soviet policy along these lines? For to those who are willing to look facts in the face, there is nothing mysterious or enigmatic about the development of Soviet policy during recent years. The Soviet-German pact of August 1939 was a logical result of the course taken by British diplomacy in Europe during the immediately preceding years. Similarly, the Soviet-Japanese pact of April 1941 is the logical outcome of British and American policy in the Far East since 1937.

At this time it is instructive to look back for a moment upon the Anglo-French diplomacy of appeasement in 1933–1939, to which the United States—by its embargo on the Spanish Loyalists and its failure to embargo the Japanese militarists—was also a party. In all three countries—Britain, France, and the United States—a large body of opinion condemned appeasement as suicidal for the democracies, argued that it served to strengthen Germany, Japan, and Italy and encourage the spread of their aggressions, and advocated a policy of collective restraint of the Fascist aggressors. At Geneva, through Maxim

Litvinov, the Soviet Union championed this policy of collective security and fought for its application by a united front of all powers opposed to Fascist aggression. The ruling groups in London, Paris, and Washington thought otherwise, and translated their belief into a series of actions which demonstrated their essential unity of outlook with the Fascist powers. Britain, France, and the United States stubbornly persisted in "building up" the aggressors by one surrender after another—the Anglo-German naval agreement, the Ethiopian fiasco, the rearmament of Germany, the Rhineland remilitarization, "nonintervention" in Spain, the Austrian occupation, and, finally, the Munich pact by which Czechoslovakia was sacrificed.

In the Far East, Britain, France, and the United States failed to extend effective help to China, but continued to arm Japan liberally. Official Washington, it must be reemphasized, did not oppose the diplomacy of appeasement but pursued a policy of "parallel action" which supported Chamberlain to the hilt. We twisted our neutrality laws in such a way as to ban the shipment of American arms to the Loyalists in Spain, even while we permitted an enormous flow of war supplies to Japan. American statutes were twisted and distorted, but there was no contradiction in the intent and effects of the policy which these distortions allowed us to pursue. It enabled the Fascist troops of Mussolini and Hitler to win in Spain, and it helped the Japanese armies to overrun China.

The betrayal of democracy by the democracies during the appeasement era is the factor mainly responsible for the difficulties in which we find ourselves today. It defeated the program of collective resistance to Fascist aggression, which could alone have maintained peace, and crushed the League of Nations. It started the train of "little nation" casualties—numbering Manchuria, Ethiopia, Austria, Czechoslovakia and Spain before the European war broke out in September 1939. It built up Germany's strength to the point at which Hitler could openly launch his drive for conquest and hegemony.

It also accomplished one further result. It drove the Soviet Union out of the concert of the democracies. The Munich Pact enforced a temporary international isolation of the U. S. S. R. Although Soviet interests were vitally affected by the decisions reached at Munich, Chamberlain and Daladier did not see fit to include the Soviet Union in the negotiations which decided Czechoslovakia's fate. The Munich Pact reduced to a travesty the mutual assistance treaties which the U. S. S. R. had concluded with Czechoslovakia and France. By breaking Czechoslovakia, moreover, Britain and France opened up a path for Hitler toward the Soviet Ukraine. Did they hope that Munich would usher in a German-Soviet war? Only nine months later these powers were seeking a military alliance with the U. S. S. R. at Moscow. The latter chose to reject this alliance, to sign a non-aggression pact with Germany, and to remain neutral in the ensuing war—a war, be it noted, caused not by the Soviet-German pact but by the Anglo-French-American policy of appeasement in the 1933–1939 era. In order to ensure peace, Britain, France and the United States would have been obliged to oppose Fascist aggression rather earlier, by some five years at least, than 1939. The Soviet Union chose to stay out of what it considered an imperialist war, which the Anglo-French-American rejection of a collective security program, designed to restrain the aggressors and keep the peace, had made possible.

When we turn to the Far East, we are struck by an amazing coincidence. The same broad pattern of events as occurred in Europe has been repeated there. The Anglo-American failure to restrain Japan's occupation of Manchuria in 1931–1933, indeed, marked the opening phase of the appeasement era, encouraging Hitler and Mussolini to follow Japan's example. After the Japanese wholesale assault on China began in 1937, the diplomatic parallel between European and Far Eastern appeasement becomes even more striking. Washington officials issued a continuous series of statements condemning Japan's activities, but the United States consistently supplied more than half of Japan's imports of war materials; if the British and Dutch empires are added in, the democracies have supplied more than three-quarters of such imports. In 1940, despite sharp declines in November and December, we still shipped Japan goods valued at $227 million, only $5 million less than the 1939 total. Nor have we ever given adequate aid to China—in munitions, which China needed most, support by either the United States or Britain has been negligible.

Our continued refusal to embargo Japan (even at the current rate we are still supplying more than $100,000,000 worth of goods annually to Japan, including the bulk of its petroleum imports) and to give adequate aid to China (plane shipments are just beginning on a very limited scale) has had the same results in the Far East as the policy of appeasing Hitler and Mussolini had in Europe. It has kept Japan's military machine in good running gear, spread Japanese aggression from Manchuria to Indo-China, and raised the spectre of a Japanese onslaught against Singapore, the Dutch East Indies and the Philippines. And once again the Soviet Union, this time by a neutrality pact with Japan, has sharply dissociated itself from the logical outcome of Anglo-American policy in the Far East. The pact signifies quite clearly that the U. S. S. R. will take no part in a Japanese-American conflict, if such a conflict occurs. It means that the United States cannot expect Soviet assistance in a war against Japan, any more than Britain has received Soviet assistance it its war with Germany. The Soviet Union obviously feels that such conflicts have been made possible as much by British and American support of the German and Japanese aggressors, as by the aggressiveness of the Nazis and the Japanese militarists themselves. So far as lies in its power, it is evidently determined not to engage in them.

For Americans, therefore, the Soviet-Japanese pact constitutes a sharp challenge—a challenge to think through the implications of our Far Eastern policy. Some have been quick to say that the pact has freed Japan's hands for an attack in the south Pacific, and that it thus encourages a Japanese-American conflict. But if Japan's hands are really free for such an attack, which may be the subject of some doubt, what has actually freed them? What has spread Japan's aggression from Manchuria to Indo-China? It is not the neutrality pact signed at Moscow. It is rather the consistent unwillingness of the United States and Britain to oppose the spread of that aggression, either by effective embargoes against Japan or effective aid to China. If Britain and the United States must now prepare to fight Japan in the Far East, it is because of their own failure to oppose Japanese aggression in the past—first in 1931, but more especially since 1937.

This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that the U. S. S. R. has been the single power that has consistently supported China's struggle against the Japanese invasion since 1937, not only by diplomatic notes but in actual deeds. Its loans to China, considerably larger than ours, have been translated into finished munitions for the Chinese armies; we have been satisfied to send trucks and petroleum. While our war trade with Japan boomed, the Soviet-Japanese trade turn-over rapidly dwindled from over 50 million yen in 1936 to a few hundred thousand yen in 1939–1940. Throughout the period since 1937, the Soviet Union was making it less possible for Japanese aggression to spread by offering real and consistent opposition to it. This opposition was not wholly without risk—it involved severe military conflicts with Japan on the borders of Manchoukuo in 1938 and 1939. Had we joined hands firmly with the Soviet Union after 1937 in opposing Japanese aggression, we could have long since brought it to a halt. We have not assumed the lesser risks of firm and unequivocal opposition to Japanese aggression, but we have accepted the greater risk of permitting it to spread and offering it aid and comfort in the process. We were loath to see the threat when Japan merely devastated China; today we see the threat of our tin and rubber supplies in southeast Asia quite clearly. The threat exists because of our policy—American, British and French policy—and not because of a Soviet-Japanese neutrality pact.

Nor has the Soviet Union, in signing this pact, agreed to give up its policy of extending aid and support to China. It has notified Chungking that it will continue to send military supplies to the Chinese armies. This aspect of the neutrality pact has, in fact, been sharply attacked by some of the more aggressive Japanese circles. The recognize the sharp distinction which Moscow has drawn—a distinction between maintenance of peaceful relations with Japan and its people, and continued opposition to Japanese aggression in China.

It is this distinction which many supporters of China's struggle in this country would like to see drawn by the American Government. The American people have no quarrel with the Japanese people. But they are distinctly opposed to Japanese aggression in China, and are anxious to see that adequate American aid is given to the Chinese people's struggle for freedom. They are not satisfied that Washington is applying this program with sufficient vigor. Concrete measures of support for China continue to lag. Complete and unequivocal denial of American aid to Japanese aggression has yet to be effected. Such a policy is still the best insurance against a Japanese-American war in the Pacific. Signs of hesitation on Washington's part, or any remnants of the old feeling that a "deal" might be arranged with Tokyo at China's expense, would be the surest invitation to catastrophe.

Mr. Bisson. Mr. Chairman, may I consult with my counsel on this question?

Senator Ferguson. Yes.

Mr. Bisson. I would like to consult with him as soon as he reads the article.

Senator Ferguson. You want to consult with him about that article?

Mr. Bisson. I want to consult with him about the problem that has arisen at this point in the hearing.

Senator Ferguson. What is the problem?

Mr. Bisson. The material that has just been submitted and the questions that are presumably to be asked.

Senator Ferguson. If you want to confer with your counsel you may.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions to ask after that point. They are on a different matter. Perhaps we can save time and get them in while counsel is reading that. The witness can interrupt counsel if he feels at any point he needs to consult him. These are other matters entirely.

What does the phrase "Corbett group" mean to you?

Mr. Bisson. How would you spell that?

Mr. Sourwine. C-o-r-b-e-t-t—Corbett group.

Mr. Bisson. I have never heard of it.

Oh! Corbett group.

Mr. Sourwine. That is what I said.

Mr. Bisson. Is that in terms of a Mr. Corbett who wrote a study of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. Sourwine. I asked you what the phrase meant to you.

Mr. Bisson. It means nothing to me.

Mr. Sourwine. Were you in Peking, China, in the winter of 1937–38?

Mr. Bisson. Up to nearly or about the beginning of December. Maybe I was there the first week in December.

Mr. Sourwine. Was Mr. John K. Fairbank there at the time you were there? The winter of 1937?

Mr. Bisson. I do not think so.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you see him there in Peking at that time?

Mr. Bisson. I do not remember.

Mr. Sourwine. Was Mrs. Fairbank there, Wilma Fairbank?

Mr. Bisson. I don't remember.

Mr. Sourwine. Was Mr. Owen Lattimore there?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Sourwine. Was Mrs. Lattimore there?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you see him?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Sourwine. Frequently?

Mr. Bisson. I would not say frequently; occasionally.

Mr. Sourwine. Socially?

Mr. Bisson. Socially.

Mr. Sourwine. Was Mr. Reischauer there at that time?

Mr. Bisson. Yes; he was.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you see him?

Mr. Bisson. I think I saw him once or twice.

Mr. SOURWINE. Socially?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever attend a meeting of the World Affairs Council of Northern California?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you attend such a meeting in December of 1949?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. At that meeting, did you do anything indicating that you favored reorganizing Communist China?

Mr. BISSON. I would suppose that in a discussion group in the course of the conference I may have so indicated; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any memory as to whether you did?

Mr. BISSON. I think I probably did.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you in favor of it at that time?

Mr. BISSON. I was. May I extend my answer to that question, please?

Mr. SOURWINE. Surely.

Senator FERGUSON. Could I ask one question? What part of November was it?

Mr. SOURWINE. It was December.

Mr. BISSON. December.

Senator FERGUSON. Then we were at war.

Mr. BISSON. No; that is exactly the point. We were not at war with Korea at that time, and at that time there was considerable sentiment in favor of a recognition of the Peking government. It was by no means a limited group that so felt that way about the situation at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. The entire World Affairs Council, or the majority of it at this meeting was in favor of recognizing Communist China; wasn't it?

Mr. BISSON. I have here a statement of the world trade department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. This appeared, I suppose, about 2 months before the conference, October 18, 1949. Under a heading, "Realistic policy in China recommended by chamber," there are these statements:

Adoption of a realistic and positive policy by the United States toward the Far East, particularly China, in place of the present watchful waiting by the State Department has been strongly urged by the chamber's board of directors. Recommendations of the board include first, continued American private business and trade with the Chinese as far as possible without dangerously increasing that country's war potential.

(2) Give all possible aid to and continue financial support of American privately endowed enterprises, educational, medical, and missionary.

(3) Keep open our Embassy and consular offices in China, staffing them with the ablest personnel available so that we may meet with our best capacities the serious problems still ahead.

(4) Accept the fact that we may soon have to recognize in such areas as they control the Communist Government as the de facto government, whether we like it or not.

This established policy is crystallized in our new recommendations into a strong, clear position now necessary in the face of indecision of crises.

Recognition of the Chinese Government as the de facto government is essential. It is thoroughly realistic and necessary. Nothing could be gained by declaring an embargo against the Communists.

I merely want to indicate I was not adopting a unique position at that time.

As you have indicated, most of the conference which is now under reference seemed to favor that policy. The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce also did.

Mr. SOURWINE. You recall the question I asked you a few minutes ago about Corbett?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. I direct you attention to page 253 of our printed hearings, part 1, where appears the text of a letter dated May 29 from Edward C. Carter to W. L. Holland, the last paragraph of which reads:

> Last week we had a special meeting on Soviet policy in the Pacific made up of some members of Corbett's group, but it was an ad hoc meeting. Those present were: Kathleen Barnes, Lockwood, Grajdanzev, Corbett, Muhle, Bisson, Moore, Field, James Allen, Bill Carter, E. C. Carter, and Owen Lattimore, and Leaning.

Mr. BISSON. I had completely forgotten that particular meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does this refresh your memory?

Mr. BISSON. It does.

Mr. SOURWINE. Tell us about that meeting.

Mr. BISSON. I remember nothing at all about it. If I had remembered anything about it, I think I would have recalled when you first mentioned it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what is meant by "Corbett's group"?

Mr. BISSON. It is still very vague to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. What can you remember about it?

Mr. BISSON. Apparently I can only recall what you just stated, that this seems to be a group that is studying Soviet policy problems.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember any of the members whose names I read there?

Mr. BISSON. I do know—remember as attending that meeting?

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Kathleen Barnes?

Mr. BISSON. You are asking do I know these members?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know a Lockwood? Would that have been William Lockwood?

Mr. BISSON. Probably; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know a Grajdanzev?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would that have been Andrew Grajdanvev?

Mr. BISSON. Probably.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Corbett?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. That is why I originally asked you whether this was Charles Corbett.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it Percy Corbett?

Mr. BISSON. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know both a Charles and a Percy Corbett?

Mr. BISSON. Not to my knowledge; no.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know a Corbett connected with the IPR?

Mr. BISSON. Yes, it must have been Percy Corbett.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was his connection with the IPR?

Mr. BISSON. I remember him as doing a study on international peace problems. Is there any indication he published a book on international paths to peace, or something of that kind?

Mr. SOURWINE. There is no indication right here as to what he may have published, Mr. Bisson.

Do you know a Mr. Muhle?

Mr. BISSON. I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know anyone with that name?

Mr. BISSON. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You appeared to have attended a meeting with him for the purpose of studying Soviet policy.

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember that person.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Mr. Moore?

Mr. BISSON. I would have to know his first name. There are lots of Moores.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could it have been a Miss or Mrs. Moore?

Mr. BISSON. It could have been.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could it have been Harriet Moore?

Mr. BISSON. It might have been.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any memory as to whether it was?

Mr. BISSON. I have no memory as to whether it was at that particular meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know a Mr. Field?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would that be Frederick Vanderbilt Field?

Mr. BISSON. I would not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no memory of a meeting?

Mr. BISSON. Not of this meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know a James Allen?

Mr. BISSON. Would you spell that?

Mr. SOURWINE. A-l-l-e-n.

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know a James Allen?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Apparently you attended a meeting with him.

Mr. BISSON. That meeting has completely passed from my memory.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know a Bill Carter?

Mr. BISSON. I do; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who is he?

Mr. BISSON. I think he is the son of E. C. Carter.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Mr. E. C. Carter?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You know Mr. Owen Lattimore?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You know a Mr. Leaning?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. To the best of your knowledge, sir, do you know, or did you ever have any reason to believe, that any of these persons who have been named as attending this meeting were under Communist discipline or had voluntarily, knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Community Party members in the furtherance of Communist Party objectives?

Mr. BISSON. Would you read the list?

Mr. SOURWINE. Kathleen Barnes.

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Lockwood.

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. Sourwine. Grajdanzev.
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Corbett.
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Muhle.
Mr. Bisson. I don't think I know him.
Mr. Sourwine. Moore.
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Field.
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Sourwine. Bill Carter.
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. E. C. Carter?
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Owen Lattimore?
Mr. Bisson. No.
Mr. Sourwine. Leaning?
Mr. Bisson. I don't know.

Mr. Sourwine. Do you know how many times you met with Mr. Corbett's group for the study of Soviet policy?

Mr. Bisson. Would you give me the date of this again?

Mr. Sourwine. No; my question is: Do you know how many times you met?

Mr. Bisson. This will help me to answer that question.

Mr. Sourwine. Do you remember whether you met as many as 10 times?

Mr. Bisson. Could you give me the date of the meeting?

Mr. Sourwine. This was in May 1940.

Mr. Bisson. May 1940?

Mr. Sourwine. Yes.

Mr. Bisson. To the best of my knowledge, I never attended that meeting again, that group. If I was at that particular group at that time, I have no remembrance of being at any other meeting of that group.

Mr. Sourwine. Do you think you might have attended a meeting of that group at some other time?

Mr. Bisson. I doubt it very much.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you attend other meetings for the purpose of studying Soviet policy?

Mr. Bisson. I did not. You are speaking of this group?

Mr. Sourwine. No.

Mr. Bisson. No; I did not.

Mr. Sourwine. I am trying to find out what could have confused you in your mind if you did not do it elsewhere and did not do it here except once, so there should not be any problem for you.

Mr. Bisson. The problem here is very simply this: You have given me an indication that I attended one meeting of this group. When you gave me that indication, the group meant nothing to me and it still does not as far as my memory is concerned, and I have no memory ever meeting with that group again. At that time I was not in the IPR. I may have been invited on that particular occasion and may not have been invited to that group again.

I am inclined to think that is the situation, because my memory is so defective.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have nothing further on that point.

Mr. FANELLI. Could we take a 2-minute recess at this point?

Senator EASTLAND (presiding). We will take a 2-minute recess.

(Short recess.)

Senator EASTLAND. Proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bisson, have you read this article: The Soviet-Japanse Pact in Historical Perspective?

Mr. BISSON. I have looked it over.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you the author of that article?

Mr. BISSON. I am.

Mr. MORRIS. May I read this one sentence here?

For to those who are willing to look facts in the face, there is nothing mysterious or enigmatic about the development of Soviet policy during recent years. The Soviet-German pact of August 1939 was a logical result of the course taken by British diplomacy in Europe during the immediately preceding years. Similarly, the Soviet-Japanese pact of April 1941 is the logical outcome of British and American policy in the Far East since 1937.

I introduce that and the whole article, and suggest that the whole article be placed in the record bearing on the questions addressed to the witness that he did not support the Hitler-Stalin Pact of 1939.

Senator EASTLAND. How long were you with the IPR?

Mr. BISSON. I was with the IPR for 2 years, a little over 2 years?

Senator EASTLAND. Were you associated with Mr. Field?

Mr. BISSON. May I make a correction to a statement he just summarized there?

Mr. FANELLI. Answer the question first.

Mr. BISSON. I think in the summary of his concluding sentence to which my mind was paying attention, he said that I said that I had not supported this pact. I think my original statement was to the best of my knowledge, which you did not add.

Mr. FANELLI. Answer the Senator's question.

Senator EASTLAND. Were you associated with Mr. Field?

Mr. BISSON. I was.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know the officials of the institute?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator EASTLAND. I want you to be perfectly frank. You considered the institute—and I want you to think before you answer the question—you considered and so said that the institute was a Communist-dominated organization, did you not?

Mr. BISSON. I never said anything of that kind.

Senator EASTLAND. You deny that?

Mr. BISSON. The Institute of Pacific Relations?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes. I want you to think now. Think before you answer. Before you place yourself in the position that you never made a statement, think.

Mr. BISSON. Have you completed your statement?

Senator EASTLAND. I want you to answer my question.

Mr. BISSON. To the best of my knowledge in the slightly over 2 years that I was connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations, I saw no evidence that it was an organization that was controlled by Communist influence.

Senator EASTLAND. You say, "to the best of my knowledge," you saw no evidence. Is that what you said?

Mr. BISSON. I am prepared to say I saw no evidence.

Senator EASTLAND. You also state flatly that you never made the statement that it was Communist-controlled?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you go to Yenan in 1937?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Were there any prearangements made on that trip, prearrangements with Communist authorities?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What arrangements were made?

Mr. BISSON. May I begin at the beginning?

Senator EASTLAND. No, sir; I want you to answer that question.

Mr. MORRIS. Just tell us about the prearrangements.

Mr. BISSON. Lattimore and I decided we wanted to go to Yenan. Mr. Snow, who had been in the area and had come out, was in Peking. We therefore naturally contacted him to see whether there was any possibility of making contacts that would enable us to get into the area.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say "we," you mean you and Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Lattimore and me.

Mr. MORRIS. Did Mr. Snow arrange for you to get permission to go into Yenan?

Mr. BISSON. I know nothing about the details of what Mr. Snow did. All I know is that he apparently, through persons that he knew, received assurances that we could enter the area and so notified us some 3 or 4 weeks later.

Mr. MORRIS. He notified you arrangements had already been made and you did have permission to go into the area?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. He notified you and Mr. Lattimore of that fact?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. How did he notify you?

Mr. BISSON. He just told us.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bisson, did you meet Mao Tse-tung in your trip to Yenan?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have an interview with him?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you write up that interview in Amerasia of October 1937?

Mr. SOURWINE. What Mr. Morris wants to know is whether this article in the named issue is one written by you.

Mr. BISSON. Yes; that is what I am trying to decide at this moment. Yes, apparently I wrote this interview. But apparently, as it indicates in the foreword there was an interview given to all of us.

Mr. MORRIS. Did anyone help you in writing this article?

Mr. BISSON. No; not to my knowledge.

Mr. MORRIS. Are the facts stated here true, to the best of your recollection?

Mr. BISSON. They are.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be introduced?

Mr. EASTLAND. It will be entered in the record.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 719," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 719

[Source: Amerasia, vol. 1, September–February 1937–38, pp. 360–365]

MAO TSE-TUNG ANALYZES NANKING IN INTERVIEW

(By T. A. Bisson)

EDITORS' NOTE.—During the latter part of June, three members of the editorial board of AMERASIA, T. A. Bisson, Phil'ip J. Jaffe, and Owen Lattimore made a trip together into the Chinese Soviet area in Shensi Province. During a stay of several days in the capital, Yenanfu (Fushin), they interviewed extensively most of the important political and military leaders. Much of the material gathered is not yet in sufficiently organized fashion for publication, but the following interview with Mao Tse-Tung, at the time Chairman of the Revolutionary Military Council, is here presented in the hope that our readers will be the better able to follow the future developments in the now accomplished united front between the Communist and Kuomintang Parties. The following interview was written by T. A. Bisson, though all three of the editors were present during the interview. Since this interview was given 2 months before the completion of the united front, its significance becomes more apparent in the light of such consummation. A discussion of the Communist-Kuomintang rapprochment is given in another article in this issue, THE FAR EAST AT THE CROSSROADS, by P. J. Jaffe.

QUESTION: What has been the evolution of Nanking's policy toward Japan since 1931? Is it possible to distinguish several phases in this development?

ANSWER: Two periods may be distinguished. The first period began with September 18, 1931, and ended with the Kuomintang Second Plenary Session in July 1936. In this period the Kuomintang continued the policy which it had really initiated in 1927; it depended on imperialism, made concessions to imperialism, and suppressed the people.

After September 18 it gave up Manchuria unconditionally. Due to the Shanghai War the Chinese bourgeoisie were afraid of Japanese imperialism. They had prepared no defense works at all in the coastal provinces and were ready to give up these provinces to Japan. During the Shanghai War they prepared to move to Loyang as the provisional capital, and then to Sian if necessary. Only after Nanking saw that Japan began the Shanghai War as a means to legalize the seizure of Manchuria, and that the Japanese troops had no intention of occupying the coastal provinces, and that Great Britain and the United States made some efforts against Japan—only then did Nanking decide not to move the capital. So they returned to Nanking, but they were still afraid of Japan and continued so until after the North China developments in November-December 1935.

In 1935 Japan wanted to occupy North China at once and so frightened Nanking that it signed the Ho-Umetsu compromise agreement. This attitude prevailed until the Fifth Congress, in November–December 1935. At that time Nanking continued to say that if peace was still possible it didn't want to fight, i. e., it was prepared to surrender further.

Only in July 1936, at the Second Plenary Session, did Nanking begin to change its tone toward Japan. At this session it declared that if Japan would not further violate Chinese sovereignty, would not take more territory, it would not fight. Thus it explained the limit of sacrifice it was prepared to make, defining this as the maintenance of the status quo. The actual steps to represent this change of line were the negotiations between Chang Ch'un and Kawagoe, when Nanking rejected the Japanese demands. From 1931 to 1936 this was the first time that Nanking showed any evidence of a change in its capitulation policy.

QUESTION: Are these periods related to an inner political struggle at Nanking? If so, what are the main groups involved in this struggle? What social-economic forces do these groups represent?

ANSWER: Now we shall consider the reasons for Nanking's change of policy. Three main factors were responsible for the change:

(1) The anti-Japanese struggle waged by the Chinese people, the patriotic troops, the Communist Party, and the Red Army. This includes the Manchurian volunteers, the Nineteenth Route Army, Chi Hung-chang's army which fought the Japanese in Chahar in 1933, the actions of the Red Army, the student movement, and the National Salvation movement of wide masses of the people.

The Kuomintang thought that Japanese aggression could not be resisted. We know that the Manchurian volunteers have resisted and are still resisting. The Kuomintang thought that the anti-Japanese movements of the people would give Japan a pretext to carry its aggressions further. Actually, these actions gave such serious blows to Japanese imperialism that they dared not easily occupy more territory; they discouraged and disheartened the Japanese. The Kuomintang thought of the Communists as the eternal, irreconcilable enemy, but did not look upon Japan as the enemy. So the Kuomintang sought to exterminate the Communists, but the Communist united-front policy acquired such a great influence in the country that it forced the Kuomintang to take stock of the success of this policy. This was the first cause leading to a change in Nanking's policy toward Japan. From this point the Kuomintang began to realize that in the people lay the real and whole national strength. Thus it began to feel a little more bold and courageous, and its fear of Japan was lessened by this movement.

(2) The second factor was the international situation. The sympathy of the Soviet Union with China in its struggle against Japanese aggression may be taken for granted. Also the capitalist world is divided into two rival sectors: the one in favor of peace and the status quo; the other the Fascist aggressors and provokers of a new world war. The relative change in British policy in the Far East also had much influence on Nanking. From these two factors came the third factor conducive to Nanking's change.

(3) The differentiation in the ruling class and party at Nanking. There are several groups and cliques, but fundamentally there are two blocs—the pro-Japanese and the anti-Japanese. This differentiation had already begun in September 1931. But only with the North China autonomy movement of 1935 did a kind of public opinion form within Kuomintang areas that China must and could resist Japanese aggression. Formerly this opinion was shared by only a few persons; now it became more general. At this time this opinion became so widespread that it exerted an influence on Nanking politics and policy, having a real effect for the first time.

These three factors, taken together, made the Kuomintang reconsider its former policy, and obliged Nanking to change from compromise and concession to resistance.

QUESTION: What groups or individuals at Nanking favor or oppose the united front? What evidence is there of progress toward the democratization of the Nanking government? Do you expect further progress along this line in the near future?

ANSWER: We come now to the next phase, that of the present and the future. The change in Nanking's policy, which began during the Chang Ch'un-Kawagoe negotiations, continued and was clearly expressed in the Third Plenary Session in February. In this session Kuomintang policy really began to change in various fields. After this session the Kuomintang's attitude to Japan became stronger, and a policy of internal peace was formally adopted by Nanking, i. e., no civil war. This development was closely related to the policy of the Communist Party, which had long propagated the necessity of centralizing all Chinese forces to fight Japan.

The most needed thing, however, is a change of Kuomintang policy in relation to democracy. On this question, Nanking did not resolutely give up its military policy, its dictatorship; this change has not been made by the Kuomintang. This is now the most important task—the realization of democratic reform. In order to consolidate internal peace and unite the country, democracy is the most important requisite. Without it the task of resisting Japanese aggression cannot be achieved. So in this period the mass slogans of the movement are these: (1) Internal peace; (2) Democracy; (3) Anti-Japanese war—all under the general slogan of the national united front and a democratic country. In this second period, the three factors noted above as influencing the Kuomintang's policy will have an increasing influence on the Chinese people. With the help of these three factors, we can realize the three slogans. As to the groups opposing the united front, these may be considered under three heads:

(1) On the international side, chiefly Japanese imperialism. But Japan does not stand alone. Germany is in this Fascist bloc, and also Italy. They want to induce the Chinese ruling class to join their front. They want China not only as a colony but also as a force to fight against the peace front. This is the first menacing factor.

(2) The pro-Japanese clique within the Chinese ruling class, and Trotskyism in the social sphere. They fought and are fighting against the united front policy and the three main slogans. This is the second factor of danger.

(3) The danger of irresolute, wavering elements. These exist in the ruling class and in society; they agree with the principle of fighting Japan, but not with giving democratic rights to the people. Their difficulty is that they have a foot on two different boats; in the end they will either be drowned or else will stand with both feet on the Japanese boat. This is the element which provoked the students to fight at Shih Ta in Peiping on May 4, and which keeps the National Salvation leaders in prison. Yang Li-K'uei of Shih Ta (Peiping Normal University) is one of these elements.

These three groups occupy virtually the same standpoint. They are opposed to the united front policy of the Chinese people. Whether the tasks or slogans can be realized depends on whether the anti-Japanese elements, the democrats and liberals, all those who are for consolidation can overcome these three kinds of opponents. If so the slogans can be realized, if not. * * * The outcome will be decided by the struggle between these two forces.

As to how the struggle between these two is proceeding, it should be observed that the anti-Japanese front has taken the first steps toward success. The main feature is that China was prevented from entering the Fascist front, and turned to the anti-Fascist front. On this point Japan has been defeated. The Communist Party has done all in its power to prevent China from entering the Fascist front. This was expressed in the long period of its work before the Sian coup, in its efforts for the concentration and centralization of all Chinese forces in the united front. It was also expressed in the peaceful solution of the Sian incident, instead of exploiting it on the lower plane of trying to create an advantage for ourselves in the civil war. It was further expressed in the actions taken by the Communist Party after Sian, directed toward the uniting of all Chinese forces to fight Japan.

QUESTION: What political advantages were gained by foregoing the possibility of forming a united Northwestern Army during the Sian incident and after?

ANSWER: In the first place, China did not enter the Fascist front. Secondly, the work of unification of all patriotic forces in China to fight Japan achieved the first step toward success. Only by such a policy can China be saved.

QUESTION: Does not acceptance of Nanking as leader of the national forces tend to confuse the students and other mass organizations? What lines of action can be laid down to avoid this difficulty?

ANSWER: We are convinced that the students and masses will see clearly the whole situation and will have no doubt of the success of the Communist policy. The masses will have no doubt about the question of leadership. The leader depends not on the weight of forces, but by the program and the efforts which will be made by this leader. The Communist Party does not have its own partial interest to serve. It only has the interests of the majority of the people, of the nation, the toiling masses. If the fight will succeed, if Japan is turned back, if events move in this direction it means that the movement is under the leadership of the Communist Party. The way pointed out by the Communist Party cannot be obstructed by any kind of force. If the whole nation goes the way of the Communist Party program, then the iron wall of the enemy front will be broken. Whether it be Japanese influence, the pro-Japanese groups, or the wavering elements—one and all will be destroyed by the struggle of the people led by the Communist Party. The life of these elements will not be long. We, not they, will have the long life. Our American friends will see the result.

QUESTION: In the student elections at Yenching after the Sian incident, the left forces seemed in doubt as to what course to pursue. They did not strongly contest the election and as a result the reactionary students obtained control of the higher offices in the union. More recently, a meeting of Yenching student union delegates, called by the new leadership, voted to withdraw from the Peiping Student Union.

ANSWER: Such conditions were the result of one side of the Sian incident. In the beginning this was an anti-Chiang-Kai-shek uprising—a feature that changed only after the efforts made by us. Later it was converted into general union, under the acknowledged authority of Chiang Kai-shek; and it was the Red Army which thus converted mutiny into consolidation. By this move the Communists did not capitulate, but on the contrary Communist influence and strength have greatly enlarged over the bigger part of China. At first sight, it may seem that Red influence at Yenching has diminished; but this is not really true. In point of fact, Red influence and authority are not decreasing but are increasing in many other cities, places, and universities throughout the country.

QUESTION: May not Britain be strengthening China as against Japan to prevent war and protect her interests, and by balancing one against the other utilize them both against the Soviet Union? Could not this also envisage a Fascist military dictatorship at Nanking that might later attempt to crush the Chinese Communists?

ANSWER: The strengthening of British influence in China is a contradictory phenomenon of today. In the fight against Japan, because of China's colonial position, it is possible for a third Power to strengthen its position in China. Can it then be said that this is pushing the tiger out the front door and letting the wolf in the back door? No; that would not be correct. This question must be treated differently.

Japan cannot be considered as the same imperialist Power as Britain. One is tied up with the aggressive front, the other is not. To treat them equally would not be right. If we treated them as equal imperialist Powers, we would in the end have to fight them both, or have to fight all imperialism at once. This would be wrong and dangerous. It is a conclusion drawn only by Trotskyists, that we must fight against all imperialists. On its face it seems very revolutionary, but it really drives Britain to the side of Japan; it is making a net to catch yourself with.

The policy of the Communist Party is just the opposite. We must get help to fight Japan from any country which opposes it. We know from experience that if China is subjugated by the Fascist Powers, as in the case of Manchuria, there is little value to be gained from Trotsky's beautiful phrases. As to the help extended by other imperialist Powers to China, this must be different from that of the Japanese. The policy of such Powers must be different from that of Japan. Principally it must differ on this point, that China's sovereignty must be preserved.

Formerly Great Britain was the leader in the crusade against the Soviet Union, the holy task of the British Empire was to fight against Bolshevism. Now Germany and Japan are taking over this task, and Britain is changing its attitude toward the Soviet Union. England now adopts a conservative policy of maintaining its own position. Although Britain does not like the Soviet Union, yet this situation means Britain cannot like Germany and Japan very much. Of course, the Anglo-Saxon people have always prided themselves on their freedom of thought. They can have any kind of thought they like, but in the end they must come to the conclusion that it it better to preserve their privileges with the help of the Soviet Union. Thinking is not always the same as acting.

It is impossible for Britain to establish the kind of Far Eastern balance of power which you have outlined. It is true that Britain long ago adopted the balance of power policy and has traditionally followed it. But if two sides of the balance are unequal, it is necessary to add here and subtract there in order to achieve a balance. Under contemporary world conditions, any such balance can only be temporary. In Europe, Britain also wants to establish a balance, but the Fascist Powers may be depended upon to destroy any balance that is set up. To help itself, Britain is obliged to help the democratic forces. In some cases, because of the rapid advance of the Fascist Powers, Britain must utilize anti-Fascist forces. So it cannot obstruct the growth of the revolutionary anti-Fascist forces. The policy of compromise, of balance of power, allows the revolutionary forces to grow. The example of France and Spain well illustrates this process. In these two countries there exist certain pro-Fascist forces, but it is too dangerous for Britain to permit these elements to get power. Although England does not like the united-front governments, it must somehow cooperate with them. There are many contradictions in British policy. Its compromise procedure also helps the Fascists rise, but the flood of Fascism carries the revolutionary wave up with it and thereby the Soviet boat floats higher.

The same reasoning holds true in the case of China. Britain may wish to set up a balance in the Far East, but Japan wants to dismember China. To establish a balance, Britain must adopt the policy of uniting China. If it helps to unite China, that is good. With the realization of the united front, the uniting of the country, the cessation of civil war, there is a great opportunity for China's free development. How can you prevent the growth of the Chinese revolutionary movement under these circumstances?

The situation has some analogy to the position of France in Spain. The Huangp'u clique faces two enemies—the Communist Party and Japan. If it forms an alliance with Japan to fight the Communists, then it plays the part of Franco. As in Spain, there would be a civil war of the revolutionary forces against the Huangp'u clique, i. e., Franco. If the Huangp'u clique wants to fight Japan determinedly, then it must use the unified strength of the Chinese nation. Then it must unite with the Communist Party. So it cannot obstruct the growth of the Communist Party. Either way, the influence of the Communist Party will increase.

As to a Kuomintang military dictatorship, it is very clear that from September 18, 1931, to now Nanking has always been a military dictatorship. In the first period, there was dictatorship plus a pro-Japanese policy. Now that it has changed its foreign policy, it must also change its internal policy. It is impossible for the Kuomintang at one and the same time to suppress the people and fight against Japan. It may be true that Nanking is not deeply and permanently committed to an anti-Japanese policy. There is not yet the anti-Japanese war, not yet democracy. This can only be a temporary situation. The present period bears a transitional character: it is passing from one situation to another. We are now in the midst of this transitional period.

The same holds true in the world at large. So it is possible to observe many unhealthy phenomena. In China we see the arrest and trial of the National Salvation leaders, the suppression of the mass movement, the remnants of the old policy not yet fully given up. On the other side is the struggle of the healthy trend against the evil remnants. It is not necessary to be over-anxious because we can see the other side. Look at the struggle that is going on objectively; this struggle is the specific character of this period. If some Kuomintang members maintain the old policy and don't want to change, they are free to adopt this attitude. But the new anti-Japanese, democratic forces are growing up, and will call a halt to the activities of these people.

Mr. Bisson. May I extend my remarks on this question of the trip to Yenan?

Senator Eastland. Yes.

Mr. Bisson. The trip to Yenan was part of a general study of far-eastern political conditions, I was making that year.

Senator Eastland. Are you reading that?

Mr. Bisson. I am referring to a paper that I have in front of me.

Senator Eastland. Who wrote that?

Mr. Bisson. I did.

It was part of a general field of study of far-eastern political conditions that I was making that year. I was making it under the auspices of a Rockfeller Research grant given to me as a member of the research staff of the Foreign Policy Association.

The importance of Yenan in the international and the political picture of the Far East at that time was very great. The major political issue at that time concerned relations between the Nationalists and the Chinese Communists.

In Japan where I went first, the Japanese were very interested in this relationship. I was in Japan for 2 or 3 months until the first part of the year studying political conditions there. I then went on into Korea for a week or so, then into Manchuria for another week or two and came into north China at sometime toward the end of March 1937.

I visited the Nationalist capital of Nanking in March to April 1937, and then wanted also to visit the Chinese Communist capital to complete my study of political conditions in the Far East.

By undertaking this trip to Yenan I was carrying through the purpose for which the Rockefeller Foundation made the research grant. This was one of the vital areas of the far-eastern political developments at that time and it was necessary for me to visit it if my research trip was to be complete. As a matter of fact, at these interviews we were told by the Chinese Communist leaders that negotiations were going on for the conclusion of a truce between the two sides in fear of a Japanese attack. So that when we came out of Yenan we were able to confirm reports that up to that time had only been reports and rumors. In other words, I was more sure of my data on one of the more crucial issues in the Far East at this time.

Mr. Sourwine. Does that complete your statement?

Mr. Bisson. Except to say that as a result of this year's field study I published a book, Japan in China. This is a whole volume. I suggest that the committee should indicate that there was not just a trip to Yenan. This was a general study of the Far East resulting in a book published 6 or 8 months later.

Mr. Sourwine. Will you leave a copy of that book with the committee for study?

Mr. Bisson. It is my only copy. It is an out-of-print book now.

Mr. Sourwine. We will return it. I know it is out of print.

Mr. Bisson. Yes; certainly.

May I say the war in China broke out during the middle of this year. It interrupted my trip to South China which I was intending to make that year. The Japanese occupied North China.

Most of this book was written in manuscript while the Japanese were occupying Peking. I had to smuggle the manuscript out of Peking under the eyes of the Japanese and through Japan in order to bring it home.

Mr. Sourwine. I have a few questions, Mr. Chairman.

While you were in Yenan, did you address a mass meeting?

Mr. Bisson. I did.

Mr. Sourwine. Who else spoke at that mass meeting?

Mr. Bisson. My remembrance is that Mr. Jaffe and Mr. Lattimore also spoke.

Mr. Sourwine. Philip Jaffe and Owen Lattimore?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Senator Eastland. What was the object of the mass meeting?

Mr. Bisson. The object of the mass meeting was to meet the western guests and to let the Chinese Army see us and become aware of the fact that we were among them.

Senator Eastland. You mean the Communist army see you?

Mr. Bisson. The troops in command is what I am saying.

Senator Eastland. It was a Communist army, was it not?

Mr. Bisson. The Chinese Communist troops; yes.

Senator Eastland. Say that then. Go ahead.

Mr. Sourwine. Was Chu Teh one of the speakers?

Mr. Bisson. He was.

Mr. Sourwine. Do you recall anyone else who spoke there?

Mr. Bisson. I do not.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you speak in Chinese?

Mr. Bisson. I did not.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you speak in English?

Mr. Bisson. I did.

Mr. Sourwine. Who translated it for you?

Mr. Bisson. I do not remember. It was one of our local interpreters.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you see any of the other Caucasians out of the four who composed your party while you were in Yenan?

Mr. Bisson. Yes; there were two other persons there, Mrs. Edgar Snow—and one reason why Mr. Snow wanted us to go in was because he wanted us to bring his wife up. She was there. That was one reason why we cooperated in making the contacts.

The other person there was Agnes Smedley.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were there many foreigners, foreign to Yenan, non-Communists?

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember any others.

Mr. SOURWINE. Wasn't the place full of tourists?

Mr. BISSON. The place was not full of tourists.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you see any missionaries while you were there?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Mr. Lattimore had testified before this committee under oath that there were a lot of tourists around when you were there?

Mr. BISSON. A lot of tourists?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. There were a lot of tourists in——

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know he so testified?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. I just wondered if you had known it. You did not see any missionaries while you were there?

Mr. BISSON. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. When you left, did anyone give you or any members of your party messages to be taken to other persons in other places?

Mr. BISSON. I think probably there were messages we took back to people in Peking.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, communications were very bad and they crowded around you to try to get you to take messages, did they not?

Don't accept my word for that. Tell me what happened.

Mr. BISSON. I am not certain of that. I don't remember any crowding around us. I am willing to say we probably took some messages.

Senator EASTLAND. Regardless of whether they crowded around you or not, did a number of people attempt to ask you to carry messages out for them?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is all.

Senator EASTLAND. About how many?

Mr. BISSON. I suppose two.

Senator EASTLAND. Then other people contacted other members of the party, did they not?

Mr. BISSON. Other people? I am not sure who you mean.

Senator EASTLAND. Other Chinese contacted other members of your party to take messages out?

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember the Chinese——

Senator EASTLAND. What did you say at that mass meeting?

Mr. BISSON. As I remember, I said the same thing I had said in a meeting at——

Senator EASTLAND. I did not ask you what you said at a meeting before. Just tell me what you said at that mass meeting.

Mr. BISSON. I indicated that the lull in Japanese-Chinese relations at that time was, in my opinion, false; that the Japanese were very likely preparing an active invasion of China. Therefore, I advocated that this group and other groups in China should attempt to settle their differences in order to present a firm and effective defense against possible Japanese attack.

May I extend my remarks? May I amplify what I said?

Senator EASTLAND. Wait just a minute. I will let you extend your remarks.

That was the line that the Communists were using then, was it not, for the Nationalists?

Mr. BISSON. That was the line most Chinese were using.

Senator EASTLAND. Answer my question. That was the Communist line?

Mr. BISSON. That was the line that almost all Chinese were using.

Senator EASTLAND. Was it the Communist line? Answer the question "Yes" or "No."

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. FANELLI. Answer the question.

Senator EASTLAND. Now, you desire to extend your remarks. Do so.

Mr. BISSON. I want to extend my remarks on two points here.

The political issue that was paramount at that period was the issue "Could China defend herself against Japanese attack if it came?"

Therefore, in my talks in China, wherever it was, that was the crucial problem that I was dealing with. I remember a talk that I gave in Peking maybe a month or 2 before, before this Peking group. I think you can verify this to some extent, at least through recollection in regard to Col. David Barrett, who was the American military attaché there, who I remember attended that meeting. He was an old friend of mine, and we had been in school together.

At that meeting I said, "There is a lull at present. I think it is deceptive. I think the necessities are that all groups in China get together."

On that occasion I emphasized particularly the southwestern groups because there were a couple of groups involved here.

I have one other point; that is, that while it is true that the Communists were trying to get China united at that time, it is also true that sentiment all over China was in favor of unity at that time. It was growing very strong in Nanking. Official policy there was veering toward——

Senator EASTLAND. I want you to be fair with the committee. Arrangements for you to go into Communist areas were made by Communists. You were one of the few people who got to go into Yenan, were you not?

Mr. BISSON. There were——

Senator EASTLAND. You were one of the few Caucasians that got to go there, were you not?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; although I would not say they were few. There was a considerable group that went.

Senator EASTLAND. You testified you only saw two there.

Mr. BISSON. Others went later.

Senator EASTLAND. Agnes Smedley is one of them. She is buried in Communist China, is she not?

Mr. BISSON. I don't know.

Senator EASTLAND. You know she is a Communist. You saw a Communist there. You met the chief or the head of the Communist Party in China who is now the dictator of China. They entertained you and they gave a mass meeting, had a big mass meeting for you to speak to. To be perfectly frank, you were considered a pro-Communist, were you not, by the Chinese?

Mr. Bisson. By no means. We were considered as people who had come in and were visiting that area. They had not seen western people for many years.

Senator Eastland. They could not get in. Why was it you could get in?

Mr. Bisson. Other people could get it if they wanted to get in. It was not an impossible feat.

Senator Eastland. It was practically an impossible feat, as you well know, and if you wanted to be entirely frank, sir, you would admit it, because you know that is true. It was an impossible feat except for fellow travelers, those who were considered sympathetic to communism, whether they were Communists or not.

I am not accusing you of being a member of the Communist Party. I do not know whether you were or not, but isn't a fact now, that they considered you sympathetic to their objectives in China and let you in, entertained you and gave a mass meeting for you to speak to?

Mr. Bisson. I am not prepared to say that——

Senator Eastland. Why?

Mr. Bisson. That they considered us sympathizers.

Senator Eastland. Do you think they would have called a mass meeting for somebody to make a speech to take issue with the policies of their government?

Mr. Bisson. I stand by my original statement.

Senator Eastland. I want you to answer that question, though.

Mr. Bisson. What is the question?

Senator Eastland. In dictatorships, do they call mass meetings at which people speak and take issue with the government?

Mr. Bisson. No. The answer is "No."

Senator Eastland. Of course they do not. Then, if you were not considered pro-Communist, why did they call a mass meeting for you to address it?

Mr. Bisson. We were considered guests, western guests who had arrived.

Senator Eastland. They do not call mass meetings for guests to take issue with their policies. If they called that for you, it was their impression that you were sympathetic with those objectives; is that right?

Mr. Bisson. I see no reason to accept that statement. I was there as a political observer and so were the others which were entertained as one might expect outsiders would be entertained.

Senator Eastland. But you certainly do not ask me to believe that they called mass meetings for foreigners to address and by so doing vouch for those foreigners unless they think those foreigners are sympathetic with their objectives. In fact, that was the object of the mass meeting, was it not, to help solidify sentiment behind the policies of the Communist government?

Mr. Bisson. I do not see that that was the object. The object was just as much to show the western guests that were in the city at that time.

Senator Eastland. You have just testified that no dictatorship, Communist dictatorship would call a mass meeting to be addressed by a foreigner who would take issue with their government. How do you square that statement that you made a minute ago with your statements now?

Mr. Bisson. I see no real contradiction. We were not there—I did not intend to take issue with their policy.

Senator Eastland. Of course you did not intend to take issue with their policy.

Mr. Bisson. I was willing to be a friendly guest. I was interested in observing what I could see. I was not interested in disputing their policies. What I was anxious to do was to talk to them, to have them——

Senator Eastland. You made a speech at the mass meeting and you are 100 percent right when you say you were not there to take issue with their policies.

Mr. Bisson. I was there to find facts.

Senator Eastland. Wait a minute. Is it not true that mass meeting was called because you were sympathetic with those policies?

Mr. Bisson. No; I would not accept that.

Senator Eastland. You may proceed.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Bisson, did you ever make any protests when China was attacked by the Communists in the period of 1946 and following?

Mr. Bisson. When China was attacked?

Mr. Morris. When the Chinese Government was attacked by the Chinese armies from the north, did you protest on behalf of China on that occasion?

Mr. Bisson. I don't understand the idea of the Nationalists——

Mr. Fanelli. If you understand the question, answer it.

Mr. Morris. The Nationalist Government was attacked by the Chinese Communists, was it not?

Mr. Bisson. The Communists were perhaps attacked by the Nationalists.

Mr. Morris. You defended your action, your previous association with Communists, on the grounds that you were interested in the integrity and the defense of the Chinese Government.

Hasn't that been your defense to your Communist associations all along?

Mr. Bisson. I don't understand that question. I am very sorry about this.

Mr. Morris. You do know, however, there was a war between the Chinese Government and the Communist armies?

Mr. Bisson. There was a civil war going on.

Mr. Morris. Did you express any support for the Chinese Nationalist Government for the period of 1946 to 1950?

Mr. Bisson. I do not think so.

Mr. Morris. You expressed no concern whatever for the Chinese Government under those circumstances?

Mr. Bisson. I do not think so.

Senator Eastland. Why?

Mr. Bisson. For much of this period, I was in Government service and could not express an opinion.

Senator Eastland. When you were in Government service, what about that?

Mr. Bisson. I do not understand.

Senator EASTLAND. You say "for much of the period I was in Government service and could not express an opinion."

Now, the time you were not in Government service——

Mr. BISSON. I was in Government service in 1946 and 1947.

Senator EASTLAND. The time you were not in Government service now.

Mr. BISSON. I was engaged in writing a book in 1947–48 and wrote no articles at all at that time, either on Japan or China.

Senator EASTLAND. You were never hesitant to express an opinion at any other time, were you?

Mr. BISSON. Senator, what I am trying to say is that on some of these other occasions, I was regularly writing for periodicals when I was with the Institute of Pacific Relations and when I was with the Foreign Policy Association.

In these later years I was not in that position. I wrote virtually no articles. I was either in Government service or writing a book.

Senator EASTLAND. When is it that a Government official cannot express an opinion? I thought we had a bunch of pro-Communist statements coming out of the State Department during that time, pro-Chinese Communists.

Mr. BISSON. I assure you I could not write articles on the Chinese political situation from the Government section in occupation headquarters. I was not permitted so to write.

The CHAIRMAN. From where? You say you were not permitted, from where?

Mr. BISSON. I was on duty as an official in General MacArthur's headquarters in Tokyo in the first part of the period referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. You were not permitted to write?

Mr. BISSON. I was doing official duty, and as a Government official I was not engaged in writing articles. If I wanted to write an article——

The CHAIRMAN. Your answer, which I caught, was you were not permitted to write. Is that true? What is the fact?

Mr. BISSON. Well, put it this way: That a Government official——

The CHAIRMAN. You are under oath: are you not?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. A Government official in that capacity would not normally be writing articles for periodicals. If you say "could he never write an article?" the answer would be that, if he went through channels and they got special permission and his article was read properly, that article might be published.

I did not go through any such effort to get an article published at that time. I was busy with my official duties.

The CHAIRMAN. You departed from your first answer. You said in your first answer: "I was not permitted to write."

Mr. BISSON. I do not consider that a departure.

The CHAIRMAN. You have left that entirely and you have smudged that over with another statement.

Mr. BISSON. I do not consider that a departure.

The CHAIRMAN. I do consider it a departure. Not being permitted to write is one thing and not writing is another.

Mr. BISSON. A Government official——

The CHAIRMAN. I am not asking for any answer except to clarify your first answer.

Do you want to stand on your first answer, or on the rest that you have stated?

Mr. BISSON. Let me state it this way: A Government official did not normally engage in articles for periodicals. On special occasions he might receive permission. That is the testimony I should like to make to that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you want to recede from your first answer you were "not permitted to write"?

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell the committee what your job was at Tokyo in the period terminating in 1947?

Mr. BISSON. I was acting as Special Assistant to the Chief of Government Section.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bisson, did you negotiate with Mr. Holland in connection with the possibility of your taking up IPR work when you terminated your Government contract at Tokyo?

Mr. BISSON. I do not so remember. I may have.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this letter?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of a document from the files of the IPR dated August 21, 1946, addressed to Mr. T. A. Bisson, with the typed signature of William L. Holland, secretary general. It is a photostat of a carbon copy of a letter.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you recall having received that letter? Will you read the first paragraph, please?

Mr. BISSON (reading):

This is just a note to say hello and to ask whether you have now had enough of MacArthur and are in a mood to think of IPR work again. I have been wondering whether you have made any definite plans yet about returning and about working on any particular project for the IPR. Though there's no great rush I would be interested to hear your ideas regarding this, so that I can make preliminary arrangements about finances. As you know, I am ready to request a grant that will enable you to work for 6 months on a project coming within the general scope of our international research program.

Mr. MORRIS. Does reading this rather refresh your recollection as to whether Mr. Holland did write this?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will that be received, Mr. Chairman?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 720" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 720

AUGUST 21, 1946.

Mr. T. A. BISSON,
c/o Mrs. T. A. Bisson, 40 Richards Rd.,
Port Washington, L. I., New York.

DEAR ART: This is just a note to say hello and to ask whether you have now had enough of MacArthur and are in a mood to think of IPR work again. I have been wondering whether you have made any definite plans yet about returning and about working on any particular project for the IPR. Though there's no great rush, I would be interested to hear your ideas regarding this, so that I can make preliminary arrangements about finances. As you know, I am ready to request a grant that will enable you to work for six months on a project coming within the general scope of our International Research Program. I assume you will want to write on some aspect of Japanese politics or economics, but it would be a good idea if you could submit a brief outline of two alternative studies which I could present to Sansom and the research advisers. I would hope to have the project done under the nominal auspices of the American Council even though it is financed by the International Research Fund.

If you preferred to work part-time on some other job, I don't believe there would be any objections, although we would still hope that you could finish your report within nine months, and could also make some part of it available in the form of a Conference paper by April 30, 1947.

Will you let me have your reactions on this?

I wrote Harold Quigley recently suggesting that he with Miriam Farley, Herbert Norman and yourself might organize an informal study group in Tokyo to meet occasionally with some of the Japanese who might take the lead in a new Japanese Council of the IPR. I know you don't have much time for these extra-curricular activities but I do hope you can lend a hand.

We greatly miss not having more news from you and I wish you could take the time to write a general newsletter which you could share with your family and the IPR staff. How about it?

With best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM L. HOLLAND, Secretary-General.

P. S.—Under separate cover I am sending you a copy of the announcement.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know Mr. H. H. Fisher, of the Hoover Research Library?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you had any negotiations with him for employment?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this?

Mr. MANDEL. It is a photostat of a carbon copy of a letter, the carbon being taken from the files of the IPR. It is dated May 20, 1947, addressed to Mr. T. A. Bisson, with the typed signature of William L. Holland, secretary general.

Mr. MORRIS. I offer you this letter and ask you if you will read the first paragraph and answer whether or not you can recall having received this letter. Read that aloud, please.

Mr. BISSON (reading):

Welcome back to the land of the loyalty tests! We are all looking forward to seeing you, and I hope that you can spare us a day or two at the office before you go on your vacation. I hope you will also take a couple of days to visit some of the university people at Berkeley and Stanford. I have written H. H. Fisher, director of the Hoover Library at Stanford, asking him to see you and tell you something of his Far East research program. It is possible that you may see some suitable opening for work there next year. At Stanford, you might also try to see Claude Buss if he is still around.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you recall if Mr. Holland wrote that letter?

Mr. BISSON. I never said I do not recall.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you recall?

Mr. BISSON. I do.

Mr. MORRIS. Will that be received?

Senator EASTLAND. It will be admitted.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 721," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 721

MAY 20, 1947.

Mr. T. A. BISSON,
% San Francisco Institute of Pacific Relations,
417 Market Street, San Francisco, California.

DEAR ART: Welcome back to the land of the loyalty tests! We are all looking forward to seeing you and I hope that you can spare us a day or two at the office before you go on your vacation. I hope you will also take a couple of days to visit some of the university people at Berkeley and Stanford. I have written H. H. Fisher, Director of the Hoover Library at Stanford, asking him to see you and tell you something of his Far Eastern research program. It is possible that you may see some suitable opening for work there next year. At Stanford, you might also try to see Claude Buss, if he is still around. At Berkeley, I hope you will see Woodbridge Bingham and George McCune in the History Department. George is writing a conference paper for us on political developments in Korea. If you get time, you might also see Conliffe and Kerner.

Staley may want you to talk to the IPR group in San Francisco and I hope you can do so. You may not have heard that the IPR in San Francisco is being amalgamated into a San Francisco World Affairs Council and, as a result, there is a good deal of bad feeling between the San Francisco and New York offices. Carter and I will be interested to know what you hear about all this. The main point of disagreement at present is the recent move by the San Francisco people pressing for a national merger of the American IPR and the FPA plus, possibly, some other organizations. As you can imagine, there is a good deal of resistance to the idea from many quarters.

All the best,

Yours,

WILLIAM L. HOLLAND, Secretary-General.

Mr. MORRIS. You worked for the Board of Economic Warfare; did you not?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Mr. MORRIS. For what period of time?

Mr. BISSON. For the period from January 1942 to May 1943.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your assignment there?

Mr. BISSON. My assignment there was to analyze the economic weakness and vulnerability of Japan in order to enable advantage to be taken of such weaknesses as we could detect in conducting the war against Japan.

Mr. MORRIS. While you worked in the Board of Economic Warfare, did you supply material to the IPR which you have obtained in your work for that Board?

Mr. BISSON. While I was working at the Board——

Mr. MORRIS. Did you supply the IPR with information and material from the Board of Economic Warfare?

Mr. BISSON. I might have; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us about it?

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember any specific details.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this letter?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of a memorandum from the files of the IPR dated September 14, 1942, headed "MF, WWL from RB, and WLH."

Mr. BISSON. May I see that?

Mr. MORRIS. You may see the letter.

Mr. BISSON. This is the photostat that you have just mentioned?

Mr. MORRIS. I have the photostat. Will you read the first paragraph?

Mr. BISSON. (reading):

> Bisson has returned Miriam's interesting draft on recent developments in Japanese-occupied southeast Asia. Obviously reflecting the line taken in his own BEW job, he thinks current studies are less valuable than fundamental anlysis of the prototypes of recent Japanese activity—Manchuria, Inner Mongolia, north and central China. Such studies, he maintains, would imply current practices. He and Peake predicted a month ago the Greater East Asia Ministry.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know who MF is?

Mr. BISSON. I should think that would be Miriam Farley.

Mr. MORRIS. And WWL?

Mr. BISSON. William Lockwood.

Mr. MORRIS. WLH?

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Holland.

Mr. MORRIS. And RB?

Mr. BISSON. Robert Barnett, I should suspect.

Mr. MORRIS. It was the common practice that you know of the IPR staff to use initials in exchanging memoranda?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

May I make a comment on this, Mr. Chairman?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. As I read that first paragraph, and so far as my memory goes, this was not a case of my sending Government material to Miss Farley. This was a case of Miss Farley writing a draft about Japanese developments in southeast Asia.

Mr. MORRIS. You do recall this particular incident?

Mr. BISSON. Let me continue.

Mr. MORRIS. I am not going to direct a line of questions to that, and it is not related to the previous question.

I do want you to recall the fact that Miss Farley did send a draft to you.

Mr. BISSON. You have her private memoranda?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Mr. BISSON. May I say——

Mr. MORRIS. It has nothing to do with Government, and there is no indication it has anything to do with BEW material.

Mr. BISSON. I see.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you send BEW material to Miss Farley?

Mr. BISSON. I did not. That is what startled me.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read the last two paragraphs?

Mr. BISSON (reading):

> They have supplied no new information, which is a disappointment, but not one which should surprise us.

Who is "they"?

Mr. MORRIS. The first two preceding paragraphs deal with "Peake and Bisson."

Then the other one says: "On page 14, Peake and Bisson suggest." The next one reads: "On page 16, the terms 'rigid' and later 'wholesale' seem too extreme to Peake and Bisson."

The last or next to the last paragraph reads:

> They have supplied no new information which is a disappointment—but not one which should surprise us.

Read the last paragraph, please.

Mr. BISSON (reading):

> Bisson says that Jessup has fought through red tape and succeeded in getting a whole file of BEW Pattern of Occupation Reports for use at Columbia. Bisson sees no reason why the IPR should not have the stuff, too. The approach should be made through Jessup who now knows the ropes.

Mr. MORRIS. I am asking you if that refreshes your recollection, or whether or not you did supply IPR with BEW material.

Mr. BISSON. I did, but I would like to make a comment.

The CHAIRMAN. Let's straighten that out, Senator Eastland.

This does refresh your recollection? That is the question.

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You did furnish the material?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Do you have any comment to make?

Mr. Bisson. Yes. The comment is that this was not material that referred to policy matters. This happened to be a study that I was making myself. It was merely a collection of Japanese techniques in regard to occupation documents of all kinds.

When the Japanese were in Manchuria, what kind of documents came out in terms of their methods of occupying and controlling that area. The same for other parts of China, for southeast Asia, a technical series of documents with no comment, no policy recommendations, no policy treatment here at all.

So, under those circumstances, it would be quite possible for a Government arrangement to be made with a private organization that the documents go to.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, will this document be received in the record as the document that refreshed the witness' recollection on that series of questions?

Senator Eastland. Yes.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 722" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 722

(Handwritten:) Barnett
W. Holland

700 Jackson Place NW.,
Washington, D. C., September 14, 1942.

MF
WWL from RB
WLH

Bisson has returned from Miriam's interesting draft on recent developments in Japanese-occupied Southeast Asia. Obviously reflecting the line taken in his own BEW job, he thinks current studies are less valuable than fundamental analyses of the prototypes of recent Japanese activity—Manchuria, Inner Mongolia, North and Central China. Such studies, he maintains, would imply current practices. He and Peake predicted a month ago the Greater East Asia Ministry.

From our point of view, his suggestion helps little. We've done most of the descriptive job. Comprehensive reanalysis calls for staff which even BEW with its bulging expense accounts cannot snag.

Peake and Bisson made several comments on points of fact. On page 2, they suggest that the Japanese are less intransigent than they sound and really hope for a negotiated peace. This is a Gripsholm opinion of considerable generality. The Japs treated Sassoon tough, but held out sweet hopes to other businessmen.

On page 14, Peake and Bisson suggest that properties are not confiscated outright but expropiated legally and held in trust in accordance with The Hague rules of war. This is a question of fact upon which they are informed and we are not. However, as other cases of similar Japanese practices, they cite Japanese dealings with Chinese owners in China. I cannot agree in the importance which they attach to pro forma practices of the Japanese. The test of their importance would appear when the Japs began to retire for good. Where this has happened in China, property has been ruthlessly destroyed.

On page 16, the terms "rigid" and later "wholesale" seem too extreme to Peake and Bisson.

They have supplied no new information which is a disappointment—but not one which should surprise us.

Bisson says that Jessup has fought through red tape succeeded in getting a whole file of BEW Pattern of Occupation Reports for use at Columbia. Bisson sees no reason why the IPR should not have the stuff, too. The approach should be made through Jessup who now knows the ropes.

Mr. Bisson. May I be excused for a few minutes?

Senator Eastland. Yes.

(Short recess.)

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bisson, while you were in Tokyo, did you meet with other members of the IPR in furtherance of the work of the institute?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How often did you do that?

Mr. BISSON. Well, I would say maybe three or four times.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were the people you met with?

Mr. BISSON. When Mr. Holland came through, I would meet with him. I think he came through once or twice—probably twice while I was there.

Mr. MORRIS. Who else?

Mr. BISSON. There were also efforts being made to reorganize the old Japanese Council that had been dissolved by the Japanese militarists when the war broke out. I remember, it seems to me, attending one or two meetings where they were trying to get a group together that would not be an official Japanese Council because they could not, under the existing circumstances, but they might become an embryo for development of a new Japanese Council.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet with Miriam Farley for that purpose?

Mr. BISSON. Miriam Farley was also in occupation headquarters. We probably met.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet with Herbert Norman for that purpose?

Mr. BISSON. We might have, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How about Harold Quigley?

Mr. BISSON. Yes, I should think so.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read the fourth paragraph in the letter of August 21, 1946, that has already been introduced in the record?

Mr. BISSON (reading):

> I wrote Harold Quigley recently suggesting that he with Miriam Farley, Herbert Norman, and yourself might organize an informal study group in Tokyo to meet occasionally with some of the Japanese who might take the lead in a new Japanese Council of the IPR. I know you don't have much time for these extracurricular activities but I do hope you can lend a hand.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet with members of the Japanese Council?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about that?

Mr. BISSON. The only thing I remember about it is that this group and some Japanese scholars whose names I am sure you will ask and I do not think I can recall——

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet with Yanaibara?

Mr. BISSON. I might have been there.

Mr. MORRIS. How about Yokota?

Mr. BISSON. Possibly, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Matsukata?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You knew him well?

Mr. BISSON. He was one of the members of the old Japanese Council of the IPR.

Mr. MORRIS. You knew Matsukata?

Mr. BISSON. Matsukata.

Mr. MORRIS. And Saionji?

Mr. BISSON. No, I do not remember him.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever remember meeting him?

Mr. Bisson. I don't remember meeting him in Tokyo. I think he was at the 1936 Yosemite conference.

Mr. Morris. Will you identify this letter, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. Mandel. This is a photostat of a carbon copy of a letter from the files of the IPR dated October 8, 1946, addressed to Mr. T. A. Bisson, Government Section, SCAP, APO 500, care of Postmaster, San Francisco, Calif., with the typed signature of William L. Holland, secretary general.

Mr. Morris. I offer you this letter and ask you if you will read aloud the first paragraph of this letter?

Mr. Bisson. I was trying to take a look at the letter.

Mr. Morris. If you read it aloud, it may refresh your recollection and we will not lose time.

Mr. Bisson (reading):

I am most grateful to you for your letter of September 22 containing the very interesting report on recent developments in the Japanese IPR. On the whole the group strikes me as a very able and progressive one and I hope very much that you can unofficially convey my warmest good wishes to them (particularly to Yanaibara, Yokota, Matsukata, and Saionji). Will you also please tell Matsuo that I hope he can write me more frequently and let me know if there is any way we can assist the new group; e. g., by supplying more IPR publications.

Mr. Morris. Does that letter refresh your recollection as to the fact you did meet with these Japanese in the formation of a Japanese Council of the IPR?

Mr. Bisson. I think I indicated in every case, except Mr. Saionji, whom I did not remember, that I had met with them. Obviously I did.

Mr. Morris. You did that work regularly for the IPR?

Mr. Bisson. Regularly.

Mr. Morris. Tell us how frequently you did it.

Mr. Bisson. This was one operation to get this group restarted. We may have had one or two meetings about it. It was not a regular thing. That is why I objected to the term "regular."

Mr. Sourwine. There was not anything irregular about it?

Mr. Bisson. It was irregular rather than regular. So far as the meetings were concerned on this project, that is.

Mr. Morris. Was the purpose of the committee to determine the extent to which you did need these people because very often the files do not show?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Will this be received?

Senator Eastland. It will be received.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 723" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 723

October 8, 1946.

Mr. T. A. Bisson,
Government Section, S. C. A. P.,
APO 500, c/o Postmaster, San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Art: I am most grateful to you for your letter of September 22 containing the very interesting report on recent developments in the Japanese IPR. On the whole the group strikes me as a very able and progressive one and I hope very much that you can unofficially convey my warmest good wishes to them (particularly to Yanaibara, Yokota, Matsukata, and Saionji). Will you also please tell Matsuo that I hope he can write me more frequently and let me know if there is any way we can assist the new group, e. g., by supply more IPR publications.

I am interested to hear of the symposium on current problems and hope you can arrange to supply me with two or three copies of the various chapters as they are completed. Are they to be in Japanese or in English, and if the latter, will any arrangements be made to publish them in Japan?

I would like you to convey to the new group my earnest hope that they will make an early start on one or two projects of fundamental scholarly research, preferably not too closely related to immediate political issues. You might point out that the chances of readmittance to the IPR will be greatly improved if they can demonstrate that they are conducting a scholarly research program by well-qualified people. Though I can make no promises at this moment, it is conceivable that we might be able to give some financial assistance next year for an important piece of research subject, of course, to the necessary approval of SCAP. You will know better than I what subjects are feasible after discussing the matter with the group—but you and Herb Norman and Andrew might keep in mind the standing economic history of Japan (or, alternatively, of Japan since 1868). There may be other noteworthy studies in Japanese sociology, economics, or give some consideration to the possibility of completing, perhaps in modified form, one or two of the older Japanese Council projects in the International Research Program. For instance, Nasu's studies on Japanese agriculture and on rural standards of living were never really completed to a point where he felt justified in printing it in English, though we did put out a mimeographed edition. I fully realize that Nasu may not be the right man now to continue the study, but it should be possible to make some arrangement to bring it more up to date by including a few chapters on the principal agriculture developments during the war years, and also by revising the existing study (parts of which were censored by the authorities in 1941). This is something which you might discuss with Andrew so that there would be a minimum of overlapping with his own study of Japan's agriculture. Another possibility that strikes me as promising would be a book of writings on Japanese agrarian problems during the past decade, somewhat along the lines of Agrarian China, prepared by Chen Han-seng some years ago.

Another unfinished project which could be considered was one on the Japanese family system; in view of the fact that we have recently published Olga Lang's book on the Chinese family, it would be interesting to have a corresponding study from Japan based either on the original project or on some other outstanding Japanese book in this field.

Quigley may also have some suggestions for work in the field of political science and diplomatic history, but this may get too much into the field of political controversy.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM L. HOLLAND,
Secretary General.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bisson, did you ever meet with Tung Pi-wu?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us the circumstances? Who was Tung Pi-wu?

Mr. BISSON. He was one of the older members of the Chinese Communist group at Yenan. He was there when we were in Yenan.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he come to the United States later on?

Mr. BISSON. He did.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet him at that time?

Mr. BISSON. I probably met him in New York; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What was he doing in New York?

Mr. BISSON. He was attending the founding conference of the United Nations as the Chinese Communist delegate officially recognized.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us the circumstances of your meeting with Tung Pi-wu in New York?

Mr. BISSON. As well as I remember, he came along with a couple of other Chinese who were with him, his aides or something, to the IPR, and we had a chat with them. We may even have had lunch with the group. I am not sure as to whether we went to lunch.

Mr. Morris. Did you discuss the interest of China with him?

Mr. Bisson. I have no recollection as to what was actually discussed at that time. It probably concerned his operations at the United Nations Conference and what he thought of the founding conference.

Mr. Morris. What did he think of it?

Mr. Bisson. His aspects of his trip to the United States, and so on.

Mr. Morris. What did he think of it?

Mr. Bisson. I say it probably concerned that. I wouldn't remember the details.

Mr. Morris. Are they the only times you met Tung Pi-wu in New York?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Did you ever give an expression of support to Ernst Thaelmann?

Mr. Bisson. I did.

Mr. Morris. Will you tell us the circumstances?

Senator Eastland. Repeat that, please.

Mr. Morris. Did you ever give an expression of support to Ernst Thaelmann? Who was he?

Mr. Bisson. He was an imprisoned German Communist leader.

Senator Eastland. He was the head of the Communist Party in Germany, was he not?

Mr. Bisson. He was imprisoned.

Senator Eastland. But before he was imprisoned he was the head of the Communist Party in Germany?

Mr. Bisson. Before he was imprisoned he was.

Senator Eastland. He had been a candidate for president of the Communist Party in Germany, had he not?

Mr. Bisson. He had.

Senator Eastland. Proceed to answer the question.

Mr. Morris. Did you join in an expression of support to him?

Mr. Bisson. I would not answer "Yes" to the question as so expressed.

Senator Eastland. What did you do?

Mr. Bisson. On that occasion, as I remember the details, the daughter of the Socialist Prime Minister of Norway was coming to this country to conduct a general campaign to gain popular support for freeing a political prisoner held by Hitler. I went as a member of a group to receive her when she came to this country.

Senator Eastland. Who was the political prisoner?

Mr. Bisson. The political prisoner was Mr. Thaelmann. He was one of the victims of Hitler's tyranny.

Senator Eastland. He locked up a Communist agitator who was attempting, by revolution, to overthrow his government and set up a Communist dictatorship that was subservient to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Fanelli. There is no quesion there.

Senator Eastland. Yes, there is.

And you expressed your support of him; is that right?

Mr. Bisson. Not quite in that way.

Senator Eastland. You know you expressed your support of him, regardless of "not quite that way"?

Mr. Bisson. I expressed my support of a campaign to get him out of jail under the Hitler regime.

Senator EASTLAND. So he could set up a Communist government in Germany?

Mr. BISSON. That is your interpretation, Mr. Senator.

Senator EASTLAND. Is it not yours? Was that not what you wanted?

Mr. BISSON. I was primarily concerned that this was a symbol of political oppression by the Nazis in Germany.

Senator EASTLAND. Who else did you intercede for? Hitler had thousands of political and racial persecutees in jail in Germany. Did you intercede for any of the others?

Mr. BISSON. I was generally opposed, yes, to all of them.

Senator EASTLAND. Answer my question. Did you intercede for any of the others?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. Who?

Mr. BISSON. So far as I remember I was——

Senator EASTLAND. Who was it you interceded for?

Mr. BISSON. I do not know a specific name.

Senator EASTLAND. He had Catholic leaders in prison. Did you intercede for any of them?

Mr. BISSON. Not that I know of.

Senator EASTLAND. He had leaders of the extreme right in prison. Did you intercede for any of them?

Mr. BISSON. Not that I know of, not by name.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course you did not. He had racial persecutees in prison. Did you specifically intercede for any of them?

Mr. BISSON. Not for a specific individual.

Senator EASTLAND. You did intercede specifically for the head of the Communist Party in Germany; did you not?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course you were not a Communist sympathizer and were not pro-Communist. You deny all that?

Mr. BISSON. I do.

May I say in extension of my remarks here that so far as I remember I engaged on occasion in general acts against the Hitler tyranny.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course you did. All Communists did.

Mr. BISSON. This happened to be one instance.

Senator EASTLAND. All Communists did that, but no Communist would intercede for the release of the Catholic leadership which was anti-Communist. No Communist would intercede for the release of the leaders of the extreme right like Count von Plettenberg who were in prison. All the Communists all over the world interceded for the release of Ernst Thaelmann so he could get up a government.

I may say you were following the regular Communist line as laid down by Moscow. You say you are not a Communist. Maybe you are not.

Mr. BISSON. May I comment that this campaign was after all headed by a Social Democrat personage, the daughter of the Socialist Prime Minister of Norway.

Senator EASTLAND. That is the Communist strategy all over the world, to put some Social Democrat out in front. All the front organizations in the country had some big name that did not know what was happening behind the scenes. But I cannot understand that when the chips were down that you always turned up on the Red side of things. I cannot understand if you were not a Communist how you were used.

Mr. BISSON. The point I am making here is people of all political persuasions were against this political imprisonment. They operated for all of them.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes; but it is very strange that you just picked out of all of them that Communist leader to specifically help.

Mr. MORRIS. Do we have any document that reports the fact that Mr. Bisson did in fact support Ernst Thaelmann, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a publication called International Press Correspondence which has previously been identified as the official organ of the Communist Internationale. It is volume 15, No. 50, dated October 5, 1935, and on page 1263 is an article entitled "The World-Wide Campaign for Thaelmann," which publicizes the activities of the international release committee which is working for the release of Thaelmann there appears as a member of the committee the name of Bisson and Field.

I offer this page for the record.

Mr. BISSON. Was that committee headed by Sonya Branting?

Mr. MANDEL. All the names are given.

Mr. BISSON. She was the daughter of the Socialist Prime Minister.

Senator EASTLAND. That is the alibi to hide behind if it is charged it was a Communist set-up. It will be placed in the record.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 724" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 724

THE WORLD-WIDE CAMPAIGN FOR THAELMANN

We have received the following statement from the International Release Committee:

In all parts of the globe, even the most remote, the struggle for the release of Thaelmann is on the increase. New groups of trade-unionists, intellectuals, new great organisations and factories take the fate of the menaced German fighters for peace into their protecting hands.

The two great Congresses of French trade-unionists, that of the C. G. T. and of the C. G. T. U., adopted resolutions of protest against the imprisonment of Thaelmann, Mierendorff, Ossietzky, Brandes, and Maddalena. Jouhaux, the well-known French trade-union leader, declared at the opening of the C. G. T. congress that Caballero and Thaelmann are to be elected as honorary chairmen of this great congress. Many hundred union and branch secretaries of the two congresses, representing the French trade-union movement, which is now marching in a united front, signed a protest and demanded the release of Thaelmann, Mierendorff, Claus, Kayser, and of the thousands of imprisoned trade-unionists captured in the illegal struggle for the trade-unions in Germany.

In the United States of America the well-known Swedish lawyer, Sonia Branting, daughter of the former Swedish Prime Minister, Hjalmar Branting, is touring the country on behalf of the International Thaelmann Release Committee. Prominent American intellectuals have formed a Branting reception committee and are organising a campaign of meetings, lectures, and conferences all over the country. The committee includes Judge Anna Cross; Bisson, Secretary of the Committee on Foreign Relations; Field, director of the Institute; the lawyers Hays, Ernst, and Lucile B. Milner. The leader of the Socialist Party of the United States, Norman Thomas, a leading figure in American public life, has quite recently agreed to sit on the committee. The American press featured the first lectures of Sonia Branting in extensive articles.

The "New York American" pointed out that Sonia Branting was well-acquainted with conditions in Germany as she had been a delegate to the recent penal reform congress held in Berlin and had received a lasting impression of the level to which the administration of justice had sunk in Germany. The "New York Post" reported a lecture of Sonia Branting at length. She had especially stressed the barbarism of the methods of sterilisation, a procedure even applied as a punitive measure to political opponents. Sonia Branting drew a true picture of the German machinery of justice which obeys the commands from above and which will judge Thaelmann at just such commands from above. The "New York Times," in reporting a lecture of Miss Branting, quotes the attitude of the speaker to the coming Olympic Games, which are to be held in Germany. The paper points out that nonparticipation in the Olympic Games is an act of protest against the persecution of opponents in the Third Reich and would be an act of sympathy on the part of the civilised world for the men and women humiliated and tormented in Germany. The "New York Tribune" writes that Miss Branting received a telegram from leading French writers and journalists, asking her to form a release committee in the United States for the liberation of Thaelmann and all other imprisoned anti-fascists.

On October 5 a great Thaelmann meeting will be held in Yorkville. Sonia Branting and a number of other prominent speakers will speak. On October 17 a great banquet will be held with the participation of men and women prominent in the intellectual life of New York. Sonia Branting will speak. The great mass meeting on October 25 will to a certain extent be a culminating point. It is to be held in New York for the release of Thaelmann and of all German anti-Nazi prisoners. The mass movement against the Nazi terror in the United States has already provoked the New York Nazis to outbursts of impotent rage and provocative threats. They have announced that they would organise counter-demonstrations. But the rising anti-Nazi feeling in the United States will nip in the bud the provocative plans of the Hitlerites, especially after the tremendous success of the Bremen affair.

Even in the distant islands of New Zealand a wide mass movement is in progress on behalf of Thaelmann, Mierendorff, Ossietzky, etc. A great conference of trade-unions, peace societies, and student clubs adopted a resolution demanding the release of Thaelmann, held in custody unlawfully for nearly three years, the release of all other anti-Nazi prisoners, and the cessation of the persecution by the Hitler regime of political and religious opponents.

A delegation of three handed the German consul, Herr Penseler, a copy of this resolution on behalf of the working population of New Zealand. The consul declared that his government had informed him that Thaelmann was being "decently treated." He promised to forward the resolution to the Hitler government.

The New Zealand committee of the Movement Against War and Fascism has addressed a mass appeal to the workers, trade-unionists, and farmers of New Zealand.

In Spain the popular movement for the release of Thaelmann has been considerably intensified during recent weeks. A committee composed of intellectuals and representatives of various parties appointed September 14 as Spanish Thaelmann Day. A public meeting was held in one of the largest halls of Madrid which holds 5,000 persons. Over 15,000 people came to buy tickets. Representatives of the Radical Party, of the Republicans, of the Socialists, and a number of non-party intellectuals spoke. A unanimously adopted resolution demanded the release of Thaelmann and of the imprisoned German anti-fascists.

On the same day a mighty mass demonstration took place in Valencia, in which a number of representatives sent by other Spanish cities were present, and here as well as in Madrid the speakers included representatives of all progressive parties.

In five cities of the Balearic Islands mass demonstrations were held on the same day demanding the release of Thaelmann.

In almost every Spanish prison the political prisoners celebrated Thaelmann Day in their own particular way. About fifty letters came out of the prisons, fifty letters representing the result of discussions between thousands of captive workers. In these letters the prisoners, themselves victims of the terror, express their indignation at the barbarians now ruling Germany and demand the release of Thaelmann.

A campaign has been undertaken in Spain to get five million signatures for a petition to release Thaelmann. In Madrid, Barcelona, Valencia, Seville, etc., one sees posters and stickybacks everywhere demanding the release of Thaelmann.

The Spanish Legal Commission of Inquiry into the Thaelmann Trial, whose chairman is Victoria Kent, the well-known lawyer, recently adopted a resolution protesting against the further imprisonment of Thaelmann. The resolution was signed by the following jurists, all practising at the Madrid bar: Viktoria Kent, Luis Zubillaga, Enrique Porua, Francisco Lopez, de Goispechea, Benito Pavon,

E. Ortega y Gasset. A delegation presented this petition of protest to the German consul in Madrid. A great number of Spanish newspapers printed the text of this petition and declared their sympathy with the demand for the release of Thaelmann.

In the Scandinavian countries the campaign against the Hitler terror is making good progress. In Norway a release committee for the liberation of German anti-fascists is in the course of formation. Prominent scientists and writers, teachers' organisations, Socialist student clubs, and intellectuals have expressed their willingness to cooperate with the committee. In September the Oslo "Dagbladet" published a lengthy article on the scandalous sentence passed on Claus and Kayser. Various individuals prominent in public life have addressed an open letter of protest to Hitler, demanding the rescinding of the death sentence passed on Claus and Kayser. The whole action and the names of the leading personalities participating in it was described in a detailed communiqué issued by the official Norwegian news agency.

A world-wide movement is now on foot to free the German fighters for liberty, who are now threatened by death! The liberation of Dimitrov and the release under duress of Berthold Jakob have shown that only the mighty pressure of international public opinion can save our courageous and tormented brothers. The trial of the 25 anti-fascists of Neu-Koelln, now in press in Berlin and revealing the barbarous methods employed by German justice, has warned the workers of the whole world that our menaced comrades are in deadly danger. Thus in this Berlin trial, which is ultimately intended to bring Thaelmann's head under the axe, a number of perjuries, the falsification of sworn statements and false testimony by bribed Nazi witnesses have already been proven beyond a doubt.

Although the world is already in motion against the horrors of the Hitler regime, those harbingers of the horrors of the coming war—this movement is as yet only a start. Only if it is tremendously increased can Ernst Thaelmann and the other hostages of the Nazi war policy be wrested from the clutches of the fascist incendiaries and warmongers and restored to liberty.

(English Edition, Internationl Press Correspondence, vol. 15, No. 50, 5th October, 1935, p. 1263.)

Senator EASTLAND. Who approached you to become a member of that committee?

Mr. BISSON. I don't know anyone approached me.

Senator EASTLAND. You just voluntered?

Mr. BISSON. I may have discussed it with Mr. Field.

Senator EASTLAND. In fact now, to be frank, Mr. Field got you to become a member of that committee, did he not?

Mr. BISSON. I may have gotten Mr. Field to become a member of the committee. We were seeing each other in terms of our far-eastern work at that time.

Senator EASTLAND. You and Freddie Field, of course.

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Field was then in the IPR.

Senator EASTLAND. I understand he was.

Mr. BISSON. I was in the Far Eastern Policy Association. We were both interested in far-eastern matters both officially and otherwise.

Senator EASTLAND. I understand Mr. Field was in other things, too.

How did you get your job with the Board of Economic Welfare?

Mr. BISSON. To the best of my knowledge——

Senator EASTLAND. Wait a minute. Why say "To the best of my knowledge"? You know very well who recommended you for a place on the Board of Economic Warfare.

Mr. BISSON. I don't know. I don't remember specifically.

Senator EASTLAND. What is the best of your knowledge?

Mr. BISSON. I would probably have had support from the head of the Foreign Policy Association, Maj. Gen. Frank R. McCoy.

Senator EASTLAND. But you don't know you did?

Mr. BISSON. He was my official superior in the organization that I was working with.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know him?

Mr. BISSON. How could I help but know him. He was my superior. He was the president of the Foreign Policy Association. I was a member of the research staff there. I feel sure that I have a recommendation from him for that position.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you have a recommendation from Mr. Field?

Mr. BISSON. I might have.

Senator EASTLAND. What about Mr. Earl Browder?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you know Mr. Browder?

Mr. BISSON. I have met him.

Senator EASTLAND. Where did you meet Earl Browder?

Mr. BISSON. We spoke on the same lecture platform.

Senator EASTLAND. Where?

Mr. BISSON. In New York.

Senator EASTLAND. What lecture platform was that?

Mr. BISSON. I think it was a meeting that was concerned with the magazine China Today.

Senator EASTLAND. What about Jack Stachel? Did you know him?

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember knowing him.

Senator EASTLAND. You don't remember knowing him?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Senator EASTLAND. Have you been in Browder's office?

Mr. BISSON. Have I?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. I have not.

Senator EASTLAND. Where did you speak; in Union Square?

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember. I expect it was in some restaurant or dining place.

Senator EASTLAND. In some restaurant?

Mr. BISSON. It was an evening, as I remember, an evening engagement. We probably had dinner first and then we had speeches.

Senator EASTLAND. You and Browder had dinner and had speeches.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that the occasion that there has been testimony about here already?

Mr. BISSON. I am a little confused as to exactly which meeting that has reference to.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many meetings did you ever speak at with Mr. Browder?

Mr. BISSON. It is this China Today meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Answer the question.

Mr. BISSON. One.

Mr. SOURWINE. Only one?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is the one we have had testimony about?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You think that was in a restaurant?

Mr. BISSON. That was my recollection.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have a memory of speaking with Browder at some time with him in a restaurant?

Mr. BISSON. No; I do not have any specific memory.

Senator EASTLAND. The tickets for that banquet were sold by New Masses and the Worker Book Shop, which was a Communist headquarters, were they not?

Mr. BISSON. A Communist headquarters?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes; 50 East Thirteenth Street. Is that not Communist headquarters?

Mr. BISSON. I do not know. Not to my knowledge.

Senator EASTLAND. You do know New Masses was a Communist Party publication?

Mr. BISSON. I do.

Senator EASTLAND. I will tell you now that the tickets for this lecture that you made with Mr. Browder were sold at the Communist Party headquarters and New Masses. Was Mr. Hansu Chen present?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; I think he was.

Senator EASTLAND. He was a Communist?

Mr. BISSON. I have no reason to know he was.

Senator EASTLAND. He was one of the speakers who appeared with you and Browder; was he not?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. As a matter of fact, to be perfectly fair, Chen is a Communist?

Mr. BISSON. I know him as such today.

Senator EASTLAND. You know him as such today. Frederick Field was a speaker also?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. There was Bisson, Browder, Field, and Chen who were the speakers?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. They were all Communists but you?

Mr. BISSON. I do not say that.

Senator EASTLAND. You just said you knew Chen was a Communist. You know Earl Browder is a Communist?

Mr. BISSON. It was not clear at that time what is clear today.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you mean to say it was not clear to you that Earl Browder was a Communist?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; but I am speaking of the other two individuals, Mr. Field and Mr. Hansu Chen.

Senator EASTLAND. It was not clear to you Freddie Field was a Communist?

Mr. BISSON. Not at that time; no.

Mr. MORRIS. When you worked for the Board of Economic Welfare did you testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. To what extent did you testify before the House committee?

Mr. BISSON. I am not sure what you mean "to what extent."

Mr. MORRIS. How frequently did you testify?

Mr. BISSON. I was called before them once.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have a second appearance?

Mr. BISSON. I do not think so.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there a planned second appearance?

Mr. BISSON. Not that I know of.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you discuss with IPR confreres of yours the possibility of having a second appearance before the Dies committee?

Mr. BISSON. I may have. I don't remember.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what efforts you made in order to clear yourself before the Dies committee? Did you ask the IPR to help you?

Mr. BISSON. I may have. As I remember, there was a counsel of the BEW at that time and I can't remember his name, but it seems to me he gave us some help and came along to the session with me.

Mr. MORRIS. The counsel to the Board of Economic Warfare went to the hearings?

Mr. BISSON. This particular person.

Mr. MORRIS. What is his name?

Mr. BISSON. I cannot recall his name.

Mr. MORRIS. To what extent did you ask the IPR to help you in your appearance before that committee and before the——

Mr. BISSON. To my knowledge very little. My chief efforts were getting help from the agency with which I was connected.

Mr. MORRIS. You did, however, have the IPR to help you?

Mr. BISSON. I may have. I do not recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you identify this letter, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter on the letterhead of "353 Willard Avenue, Chevy Chase, Md." It is a handwritten letter addressed to "Dear Mr. Carter" and signed "T. A. Bisson." Date, April 26, 1943.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that letter taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. It was.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read that letter, please?

Mr. BISSON (reading):

DEAR MR. CARTER: I appreciate very much your generous assistance on the moving expenses, which will ease things up for us on the transfer very materially. If our dates work out, I should be ready to take up my new duties on June 2 or 3.

Thanks very much for sending me the copy of Buell's characteristic letter. I find the BEW appropriation bill has just gone in, so I may still have to run the gauntlet here early in May before the Kerr committee.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that go into the record?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes, sir.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 725" and was read in full.)

Senator EASTLAND. What was the Kerr committee?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, do you have any recollection of that committee?

Mr. MANDEL. The Kerr committee was a special committee of the House of Representatives, a subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee which at that time dealt with loyalty cases.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you write this letter?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Senator EASTLAND. What do you mean "so I may still have to run the gauntlet of the Kerr committee"?

Mr. BISSON. It means I would have to appear before the Kerr committee.

Senator EASTLAND. Does it not mean more than that? Does it not mean there was a probability in your mind your loyalty to your country might be questioned?

Mr. BISSON. It was a security test; yes.

Senator EASTLAND. That was in April 1943, April 26, while this country was at war with Germany and Japan. Did you not mean here "So I may still have to run the gauntlet here early in May before the Kerr committee" that you thought your loyalty to your country might be questioned?

Mr. BISSON. It might be questioned; yes. It still remained to be proved.

Senator EASTLAND. I understand that, but you thought conditions were such that your loyalty might be questioned. Why did you think your loyalty might be questioned? You were bound to have known the reasons that would cause them to question your loyalty to your country.

Mr. BISSON. There was a group of 12 or 15 BEW individuals who were undergoing this scrutiny. Several of them appeared before the Dies committee.

Senator EASTLAND. How did you know you would be called?

Mr. BISSON. Some of them had been called and therefore I assumed I would be called, too.

Senator EASTLAND. Why did you assume you would be called?

Mr. BISSON. I was among the group that was being investigated and they were dealing with us in a more or less similar way.

Senator EASTLAND. What had you done?

Mr. BISSON. Nothing.

Senator EASTLAND. What was the accusation against you? Why were they investigating your loyalty?

Mr. BISSON. I would not know.

Senator EASTLAND. You are bound to know. On what basis were the others being questioned as to their loyalty?

Mr. BISSON. I do not know the details.

Senator EASTLAND. You do not know the details? You say that you knew they were investigating others, Mr. Bisson. Is that true?

Mr. BISSON. That is true.

Senator EASTLAND. How did you know they were investigating them? From talking to them?

Mr. BISSON. The names were generally known.

Senator EASTLAND. You had talked to them about their appearances, had you not?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; although I remember no specific individuals that I talked to.

Senator EASTLAND. Of course if you talked to them about their appearance before the committee, you certainly knew that the basis was that their loyalty was being questioned?

Mr. BISSON. When I talked with them we were primarily concerned as to what the situation would be before the committee.

Senator EASTLAND. You know very well that if you asked a man about his appearance, you asked him on what grounds they were questioning him. Didn't you do that?

Mr. FANELLI. The answer is yes or no. You either did or did not.

Mr. BISSON. I was not sure what ground I would be questioned on.

Senator EASTLAND. You did not ask what grounds you would be questioned? When you asked the other people who had been called before that committee about their appearance, you certainly asked them the grounds on which their loyalty was questioned, did you not?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Senator Eastland. You did not?

Mr. Bisson. I do not remember so asking.

Senator Eastland. How do you know it was a security check on them if you did not do that?

Mr. Bisson. This was the general assumption.

Senator Eastland. You asked them? You say you knew it was a security check. How did you know?

Mr. Bisson. The Kerr committee was organized, as I remember after the Dies committee.

Senator Eastland. Is your answer you just assumed?

Mr. Bisson. I had not finished my answer. Since the Kerr committee was organized later, we assumed that perhaps the same group would go before that committee.

Senator Eastland. On what ground? The ground of loyalty?

Mr. Bisson. It was a security test.

Senator Eastland. That is a loyalty test?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Senator Eastland. Why was it you thought you would be called before them and questioned about your loyalty?

Mr. Bisson. I would not know. I don't recall.

Senator Eastland. Do you mean to tell me with your country at war and you an official of the American Government who was called before a committee of the American Congress to determine whether you were loyal to your country or not, in other words, whether you were a traitor or not, you would not know on what grounds your loyalty was questioned? Or you would not know on what grounds there was suspicion of treason against you? Do you mean to tell me that?

Mr. Bisson. Yes. That is exactly what I said. I went before the committee. I knew nothing of what I was being charged with.

May I add a statement here? I have just been called a traitor before this committee.

Senator Eastand. No, you have not.

Mr. Fanelli. Let's get on.

Senator Eastland. Let's straighten the record out. You have not been called a traitor. I said there was a question as to your loyalty by the Kerr committee; that that meant there was a question as to whether you were guilty of treason or not, and with an accusation like that you were certainly bound to know the facts on which it was based. Whether it was true or not I do not know. I am making no charges against you.

Mr. Bisson. May I be excused for a second?

Senator Eastland. No; I want to proceed with the hearing.

Mr. Bisson. I would like to go outside for a second.

Senator Eastland. All right.

(A short recess was taken.)

Mr. Morris. Will you identify this letter, please, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. Mandel. This is a photostat of a handwritten document from the files of the IPR on the letterhead of the Board of Economic Warfare, Washington, D. C., dated April 14, with no year given, addressed to "Dear Mr. Carter," signed T. A. Bisson, and the initials in the corner are ECC, WLH, KP, and HA.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read that letter, please?

Mr. BISSON (reading):

EXHIBIT NO. 726

DEAR MR. CARTER: I cannot begin to tell you how heartening the letters from New York have been. There has been no second hearing yet, which is all to the good. In fact, the weight of the letters may be alone sufficient to prevent one, though I am not too sanguine on this point. The Kerr committee has to feel strong enough to reject the transcript of my testimony before the Dies committee, and the letters are therefore just what is needed.

Unless complications develop, I am expecting to be at the Princeton conference this week end where I shall hope to have a chance to discuss things with you.

Please express my thanks and pass on this word to any who may inquire. I appreciate your efforts more than I can say.

Sincerely,

T. A. BISSON.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you write that letter?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Does that refresh your recollection whether the IPR aided you in your difficulty in Washington at that time?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you testify further on that subject?

Mr. BISSON. One of the things that we were doing was securing letters from persons that knew us in our previous careers that could testify to our loyalty to the United States and also to our general competency in the field that we were in. Mr. Carter, among others, was attempting to help me out in getting letters of that kind. I remember, for instance, that one letter came from Dr. Hu Shih who was, if not then a little later or a little earlier, the Chinese Ambassador to the United States.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony you can now recall this where you could not recall it 5 minutes ago?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You seem to have a clear memory now.

Mr. BISSON. I had forgotten who helped out on these letters. I knew about the letters but I had not read that the IPR, through Mr. Carter, was helping me get those letters. There is nothing unusual——

Mr. MORRIS. There was no implication anything was unusual. We are asking if you had used the instrumentality of the IPR to aid you in your difficulty in Washington.

Mr. BISSON. The answer is "No." I had asked my personal friend, Mr. Carter, to help me, and he was helping to get those letters.

Mr. MORRIS. May that letter go in?

Senator EASTLAND. It is submitted.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 726" and was read in full.)

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a handwritten letter from the files of the IPR on the letterhead addressed "353 Willard Avenue, Chevy Chase, Md.", dated April 30, 1943, addressed to "Dear Mr. Carter" and signed T. A. Bisson.

Senator EASTLAND. Right here, to save time, all these letters and documents will be admitted into the record unless challenged by the witness and his attorney. Then I will pass on them.

Mr. MANDEL. Attached thereto is a carbon copy from the files of the IPR dated April 30, 1943, addressed to "Dr. Joseph P. Chamberlain." It is unsigned.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read that letter, please?

Mr. BISSON. You mean the ink letter?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; the one in your handwriting.

Mr. BISSON (reading):

EXHIBIT No. 727

I enclose copy of a letter to Dr. Chamberlain for your information. My hunch is that the case here will develop into a large and politically significant fight. At the moment, however, it looks as though Watson and Dodd will provide the test cases over which the battle in Congress will be waged, leaving the rest until after that decision is reached.

Sincerely,

T. A. BISSON.

May I comment on that?

Mr. SOURWINE. May I see that letter while you are phrasing your comment?

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to know, too, if that second letter is a letter written by you?

Mr. BISSON. I will see.

The comment I wanted to make on this original one was that Watson and Dodd had had their salaries stopped apparently that the decision hinged on that because it was a question whether the salaries would be stopped before a decision had been reached, in other words, before the court test or the loyalty hearing, or whatever it was, that was concluded and a decision was reached as to whether the person was cleared or not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that other letter a copy of a letter you wrote? What is the date of that?

Mr. BISSON. That is April 30, 1943.

Mr. SOURWINE. To whom is it addressed?

Mr. BISSON. Dr. Joseph P. Chamberlain.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that a letter you wrote?

Mr. BISSON. May I look at it? It is a long letter.

Mr. SOURWINE. Surely.

Mr. BISSON. Yes; that is a letter I wrote to Dr. Chamberlain.

Mr. SOURWINE. May they go in the record?

Senator EASTLAND. I ordered them all in the record unless they are challenged.

(The letters referred to were marked "No. 727" (read in full), and "No. 728" and is as follows:)

APRIL 30, 1943.

Dr. JOSEPH P. CHAMBERLAIN,
510 Kent Hall, Columbia University, New York, N. Y.

DEAR DR. CHAMBERLAIN: Some of the recent developments in the handling of the congressional investigations here may be of interest to you. Three persons have appeared so far before the Kerr committee. As you know, Schuman was exonerated while Dodd and Watson were convicted. It seems possible that hearings of the others involved will be delayed until Dodd and Watson are ousted from office by congressional vote.

The ouster will apparently be attempted through attachment of riders to appropriation bills indicating that no funds from any source shall be utilized to pay the salary of the accused. Passage seems likely in the House, but a stiffer fight is in prospect in the Senate, doubtless with considerable attendant publicity. The issues in debate will probably extend beyond the narrower problem involved into such broader questions as to whether Dies, Fish, and the other isolationists or the accused were correct in estimating the course of international developments in the past decade and as to whether political liberalism can survive in this country in the near future if this preliminary attack succeeds.

The normal arbitrary procedures of a congressional committee have, of course, been applied in this case. The Dies committee permitted a legal representative of each agency involved to attend the hearing as an observer, but not to participate in the hearing or act as legal counsel for the accused. The Kerr committee has refused to permit a representative of the agency involved to attend the hearings even as an observer. No list of charges is furnished to the accused in advance of the hearing.

In one case certain members of the Kerr committee sought to pin the accused down to "Yes" or "No" answers, thus seeking to prevent the introduction of evidence into the hearing. This created a dispute within the committee which was finally resolved in favor of the accused. On the next day the same members of the committee again sought "Yes" or "No" answers and refused to be bound by the previous committee decision. When the accused picked up his papers and prepared to leave, however, the atmosphere cleared and the accused was again allowed to proceed with the introduction of evidence.

The Kerr committee's report on the Watson-Schuman-Dodd case (Congressional Record, April 21) has applied an extraordinary definition of "subversive" to certain organizations, defining them as such by reason of the judgment of the "court of public opinion" in the United States. Association with organizations so defined then involves the individuals concerned in "subversive activity."

The Kerr committee is on firmer legal ground apparently when it connects an individual with organizations listed as subversive in a statement by the Attorney General (cited by Dies on the floor of Congress last January). There is some question, however, as to whether this list was merely an interoffice memorandum within the Justice Department to which the Attorney General's name became attached by some unexplained means. This point would bear clearing up because it affords by far the strongest ground that has ever been afforded Dies in his campaign.

All of this information may be already known to you, but I have set it down here on the chance that some of the details may be new to you and of interest. I presume you have seen the 26-page statement issued by the Federal Communications Commission in defense of its employees.

Sincerely yours,

———— ————.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have a question, Mr. Sourwine?

Mr. SOURWINE. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you identify these letters, please, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a handwritten letter from the files of the IPR on the letterhead "353 Willard Avenue, Chevy Chase, Md." dated April 21, 1943, addressed to "Dear Mr. Carter," and signed "T. A. Bisson." An attachment thereto is a carbon copy of a letter from the files of the IPR addressed to "Hon. John H. Kerr, chairman, Special Subcommittee of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives," with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, this is already introduced in the record as Exhibit 260.

Mr. Bisson, will you read your letter, please?

Mr. BISSON (reading):

DEAR MR. CARTER: My formal letter of resignation here went in yesterday, effective for June 1. Stone just called me and the decision was made final.

The replies by Kerr make it seem that the matter may not be carried any further for the moment. Formal clearance, however, seems unlikely.

May I again express my deep appreciation for your help?

Sincerely,

T. A. BISSON.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you identify these letters, please?

Mr. MANDEL. I have here several carbon copies of letters from the files of the IPR. The first one is dated April 12, 1943, addressed to "Dear Dr. Evans, The Rockefeller Foundation", with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter. The second one is a carbon copy of a letter dated April 12, 1943, addressed to Miss Pearl Buck, with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter.

The third is a carbon copy of a letter dated April 12, 1943, addressed to Dr. Goodrich with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter.

The next is a carbon copy dated April 12, 1943, addressed to Dr. Raymond Leslie Buell, with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter.

And finally, a carbon copy of a letter dated April 12, 1943, addressed to Mr. Richard J. Walsh, with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, these all seem to be worded in the same fashion. The first paragraph begins:

The Dies Committee is after T. A. Bisson who for the past year has been working for the BEW. Bisson desires a few of his friends to write letters testifying to his loyalty as an American citizen, adding anything that the writer feels free to say.

That seems to be the form that Mr. Carter followed in all of these letters, Mr. Chairman. The letters will speak for themselves. May they go into the record?

Senator EASTLAND. They are ordered in unless there is objection.

(The letters referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 729" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT 729

129 EAST 52ND STREET,
New York City, April 12, 1943.

Dr. ROGER F. EVANS,
The Rockefeller Foundation,
49 East 49th Street, New York City.

DEAR DR. EVANS: Here is a copy of my letter to Honorable John H. Kerr, Chairman, Special Subcommittee on Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., regarding Mr. T. A. Bisson.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Copies of the following letter were sent to: Miss Pearl Buck, R. D. 3, Perkasie, Pennsylvania; Dr. L. Carrington Goodrich, Columbia University, New York City; Dr. Raymond Leslie Buell, Fortune Magazine, Time and Life Building, Rockefeller Plaza, New York; Mr. Richard J. Walsh, Asia Magazine, 40 East 49th Street, New York City.

129 EAST 52ND STREET,
New York City, April 12, 1943.

DEAR ——— ———: The Dies Committee is after T. A. Bisson who for the past year has been working for the BEW. Bisson desires a few of his friends to write letters testifying to his loyalty as an American citizen adding anything that the writer feels free to say.

Enclosed is a copy of what I have written. Would you feel free to write directly to Honorable John H. Kerr, Chairman, Special Subcommittee on Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., sending a copy of your letter to T. A. Bisson at 353 Willard Avenue, Chevy Chase, Maryland.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. Morris. This was not written by Mr. Bisson but it bears on the point of to what extent the IPR was an instrumentality in obtaining signatures or sending testimonial letters for Mr. Bisson.

Mr. Bisson. "To what extent Mr. Carter was." He was not necessarily acting as an IPR official but as an individual.

Mr. Morris. These were from the files of the IPR, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Eastland. Proceed.

Mr. Bisson. Are you turning to a new subject?

Mr. Morris. Do you have some comment?

Mr. Bisson. Yes. I think it is pertinent to this last half or three quarters of an hour's testimony to note that I was under investigation at this same time by the Civil Service Commission. As some of you may probably remember from that period, people were hired in a great hurry and went into the departments in large numbers and then the Civil Service Commission proceeded to conduct its routine investigation.

In the spring of 1943 the Civil Service Commission's formal clearance for me was suitable and fit for Government employment and that came through. They had conducted this investigation during the whole period when the Dies committee and the Kerr committee were operating. The decision of the Civil Service Commission was that I was suitable and fit for Government employment as indicated by that formal clearance.

I do not have a copy of that with me, but I presume this fact I am now stating can be verified.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Chairman, at that point may I interrogate very briefly?

I have before me what purports to be a copy of the Form 3721 personal history statement which this witness executed in connection with his Board of Economic Warfare employment. I do not ask this go in the record because this is not the best evidence. The committee is securing and will have in its possession later today a photostatic copy of the original form. I ask that the photostatic copy go in.

Senator Eastland. Yes, proceed.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 730" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 730

United States Civil Service Commission,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1952.

Honorable Pat McCarran,
Chairman, Senate Internal Security Subcommittee,
Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

Dear Senator McCarran: As requested in telephone conversation between my secretary and Miss Walker of your staff, I am enclosing a photostat copy of Form 3721, filled out by Mr. Thomas Arthur Bisson, born November 8, 1900. This is the only personal history statement for this person we were able to locate in our files.

Sincerely yours,

Robert Ramspeck, Chairman.

Inclosure 142384.

Form 2749
June 1941

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION
Washington, D. C.

U. S. CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION RECEIVED APR 10 1942 INVESTIGATIONS DIVISION

SPECIAL ATTENTION.

PERSONAL HISTORY STATEMENT

This form must be executed in the applicant's own handwriting, in ink. If additional space is needed for any item in this form, entries should be continued on a separate sheet, each entry numbered to correspond to the number of the question on the form.

1. Name: (Print) Thomas (First) Arthur (Middle) Bisson (Last)

2. Address: 920-26th Place South (Number) (Street) Arlington (City) Va. (State)

3. Place of birth: New York (City) N.Y. (State) U.S.A. (Country)

4. Date of birth: November (Month) 8 (Day) 1900 (Year)

5. IF FOREIGN-BORN, GIVE THE FOLLOWING INFORMATION:

(a) Date of arrival in U. S.: (Month) (Day) (Year)
(b) Port of entry:
(c) Name of vessel or other means of arrival:
(d) Place of naturalization: (City) (State)
(e) Date of naturalization:
(f) Court of naturalization:
(g) Naturalization certificate No.:
(h) Name under which naturalized: (First) (Middle) (Last)

6. IF CITIZENSHIP WAS DERIVED THROUGH PARENT OR THROUGH MARRIAGE, GIVE FOLLOWING INFORMATION REGARDING PERSON THROUGH WHOM CITIZENSHIP WAS DERIVED:

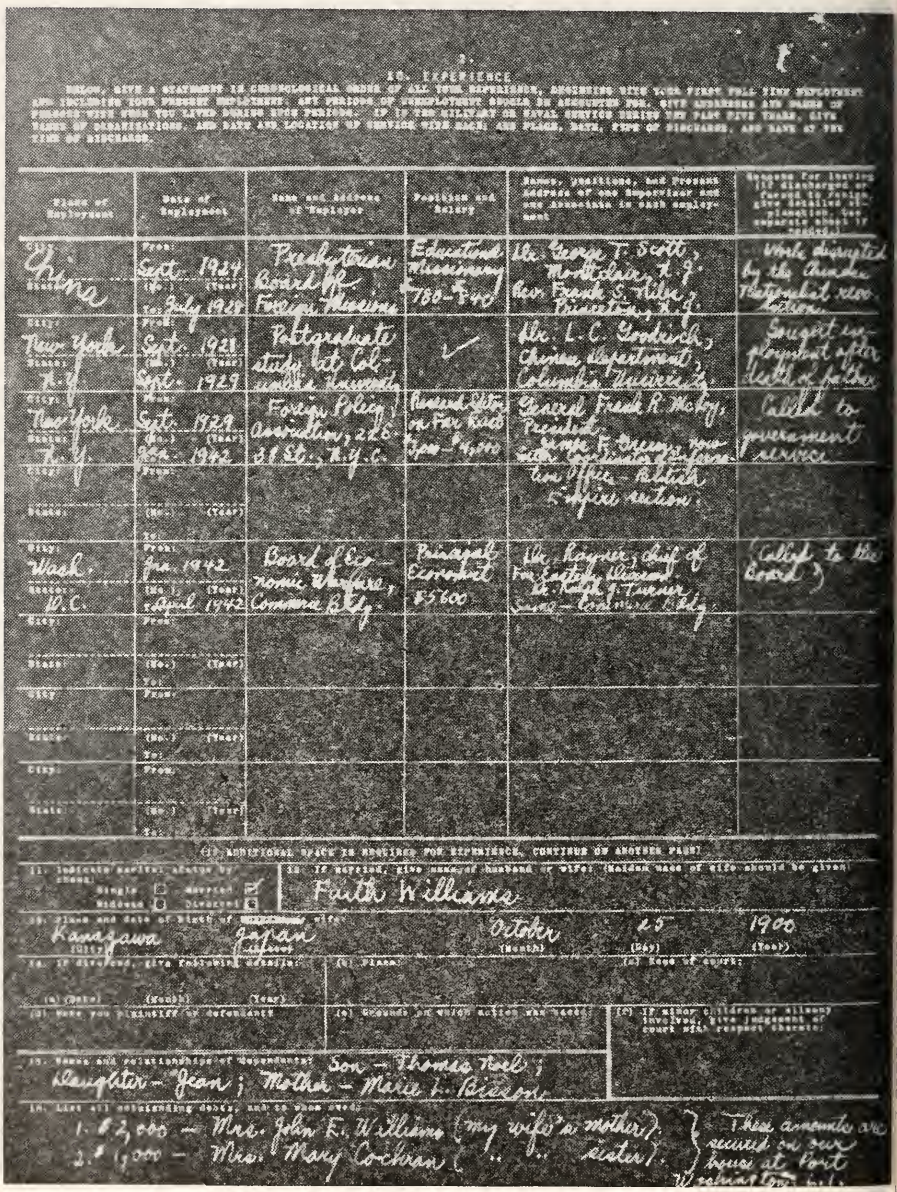
(a) Name and relationship:
(b) If husband, date and place of marriage:
(c) Date of arrival in U. S.:
(d) Port of entry:
(e) Name of vessel or other means of arrival:
(f) Place of naturalization: (City) (State)
(g) Date of naturalization:
(h) Court of naturalization:
(i) Naturalization certificate number:
(j) Name under which naturalized:

7. (a) Name of father: Noel Bisson
(b) Address: Deceased
(c) Place and date of his birth: (City) Ile Maligne (State) Province of Quebec (Month) (Day) (Year)

8. (a) Name of mother: (including maiden name) Marie Louise (Fréchard) Bisson
(b) Address: Sugartone Park, Morris Plains, N. J.
(c) Place and date of her birth: (City) Montreal (State) New York (Month) (Day) (Year)

9. EDUCATION — GIVE IN BLANKS BELOW A DETAILED STATEMENT OF YOUR EDUCATION, INCLUDING DATES:

(a) Grammar school: Attended from September, 1906 to June, 1915. Highest grade completed: Eighth.
(b) High School: Name and location: Englewood High School, Englewood, N. J. Attended from September, 1915, to June, 1919. Highest year completed: ---------- Were you graduated? ----------
(c) College or trade or technical school: Name and location: Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J. Attended from: Sept., 1919, to June, 1923. Highest year completed: Senior. Were you graduated? Yes.
Kind of courses pursued, and degrees, if any, received: History major; B.A.



10. EXPERIENCE

Below, give a statement in chronological order of all your employment, beginning with your first full time employment and including your present employment, any periods of unemployment during the preceding five years, and periods of personal work which you have devoted during such periods. If in the military or naval service during the past five years, give names of organizations, and dates and location of service with ranks and grades, dates, type of discharge, and name of final discharge.

Name of Employment	Date of Employment	Name and Address of Employer	Position and Salary	Names, positions, and present address of one supervisor and one associate in each employment	Reasons for leaving (If discharged or forced to resign, give details. If promotion, give comparable salary if possible.)
Self-employed Kobe, Japan	From: Sept. 1924 (Mo.) (Year) To: July 1928	Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions	Educational Missionary $780-$900	Mr. George T. Scott, Montclair, N. J. Rev. Frank S. Hilts, Princeton, N. J.	Work disrupted by the Canadian Pacific strike. Returned home on furlough.
City: New York State: N. Y.	From: Sept. 1928 (Mo.) (Year) To: Sept. 1929	Postgraduate study at Columbia University	✓	Mr. L. C. Goodrich, Chinese Department, Columbia University	Sought employment after death of father.
City: New York State: N. Y.	From: Sept. 1929 (Mo.) (Year) To: 1942	Foreign Policy Association, 22 E. 38 St., N.Y.C.	Research Worker on Far East Upon $4,000	General Frank R. McCoy, President Hugh L. Keenleyside, Asst. to the President Miss Alice Ballard, Executive Assistant	Called to government service
City: State:	From: (No.) (Year) To:
City: Wash. State: D.C.	From: Jan. 1942 (No.) (Year) To: April 1942	Board of Economic Warfare, Commerce Bldg.	Principal Economist $5600	Mr. Rogers, Chief of Far Eastern Division Mr. Ralph J. Tuneur Comm. Bldg.	(Called to the Board)
City: State:	From: (No.) (Year) To:
City: State:	From: (No.) (Year) To:
City: State:	From: (No.) (Year) To:

(If additional space is required for experience, continue on another page)

11. Indicate marital status by check: Single ☐ Married ☑ Widowed ☐ Divorced ☐

12. If married, give name of husband or wife (Maiden name of wife should be given): Faith Williams

13. Place and date of birth of husband or wife: Kanazawa (City) Japan (Country) October (Month) 25 (Day) 1900 (Year)

14. If divorced, give particulars of action: (a) (Date) (Month) (Year) (b) Place: (c) Name of court:

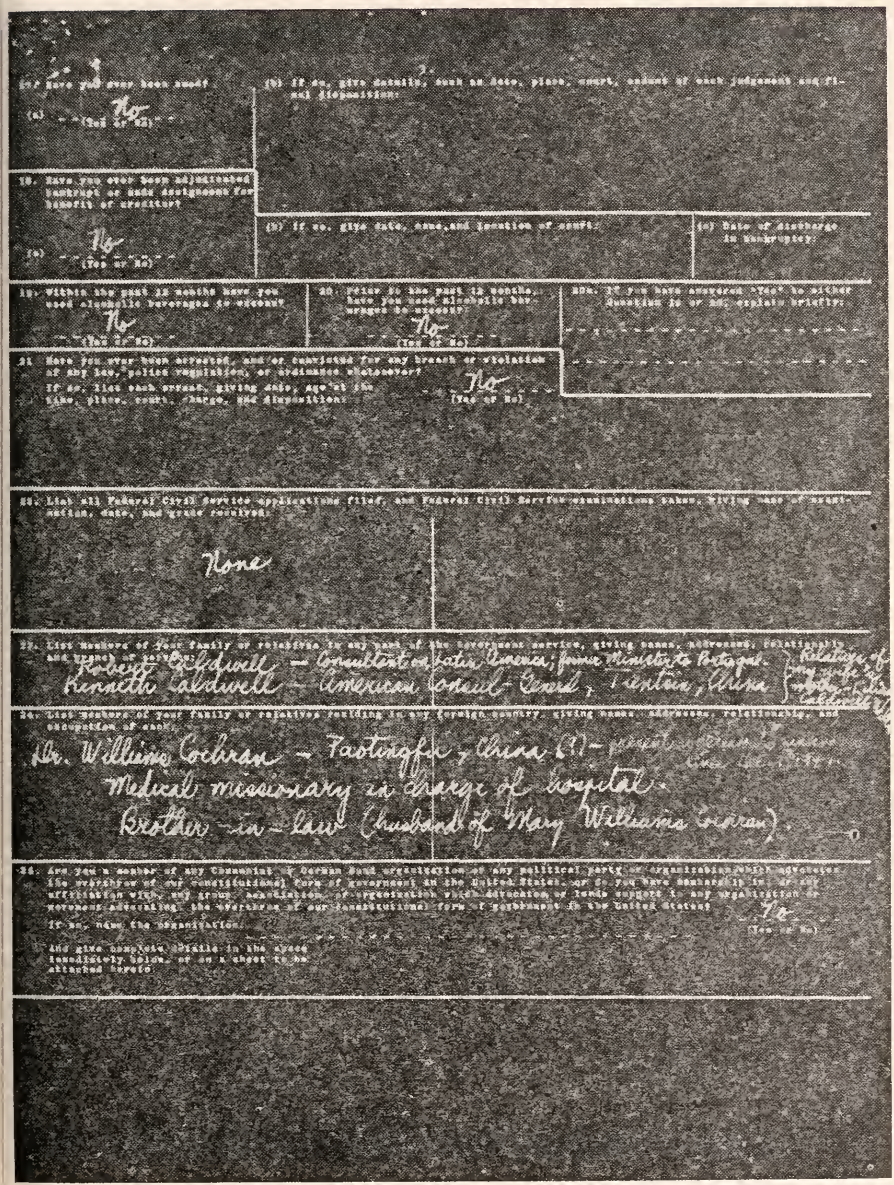
(d) Were you plaintiff or defendant? (e) Grounds on which action was based: (f) If minor children or alimony involved, give judgment of court with respect thereto:

15. Names and relationships of dependents: Son – Thomas Noel; Daughter – Jean; Mother – Marie L. Pierson.

16. List all outstanding debts, and to whom owed:

1. $2,000 – Mrs. John E. Williams (my wife's mother).
2. $1,000 – Miss Mary Cochran (" " sister).

These amounts are secured on our house at Point Washington, N.J.



(a) Have you ever been married?
No
(Yes or No)

(b) If so, give details, such as date, place, court, amount of each judgment and final disposition:

19. Have you ever been adjudicated bankrupt or made assignment for benefit of creditors?
(a) No
(Yes or No)

(b) If so, give date, name, and location of court:

(c) Date of discharge in bankruptcy:

19. Within the past 12 months have you used alcoholic beverages to excess?
No
(Yes or No)

20. Prior to the past 12 months have you used alcoholic beverages to excess?
No
(Yes or No)

20a. If you have answered "Yes" to either question 19 or 20, explain briefly:

21. Have you ever been arrested, and/or convicted for any breach or violation of any law, police regulation, or ordinance whatsoever?
If so, list each arrest, giving date, age at the time, place, court, charge, and disposition:
No
(Yes or No)

22. List all Federal Civil Service applications filed, and Federal Civil Service examinations taken, giving name of organization, date, and grade received:
None

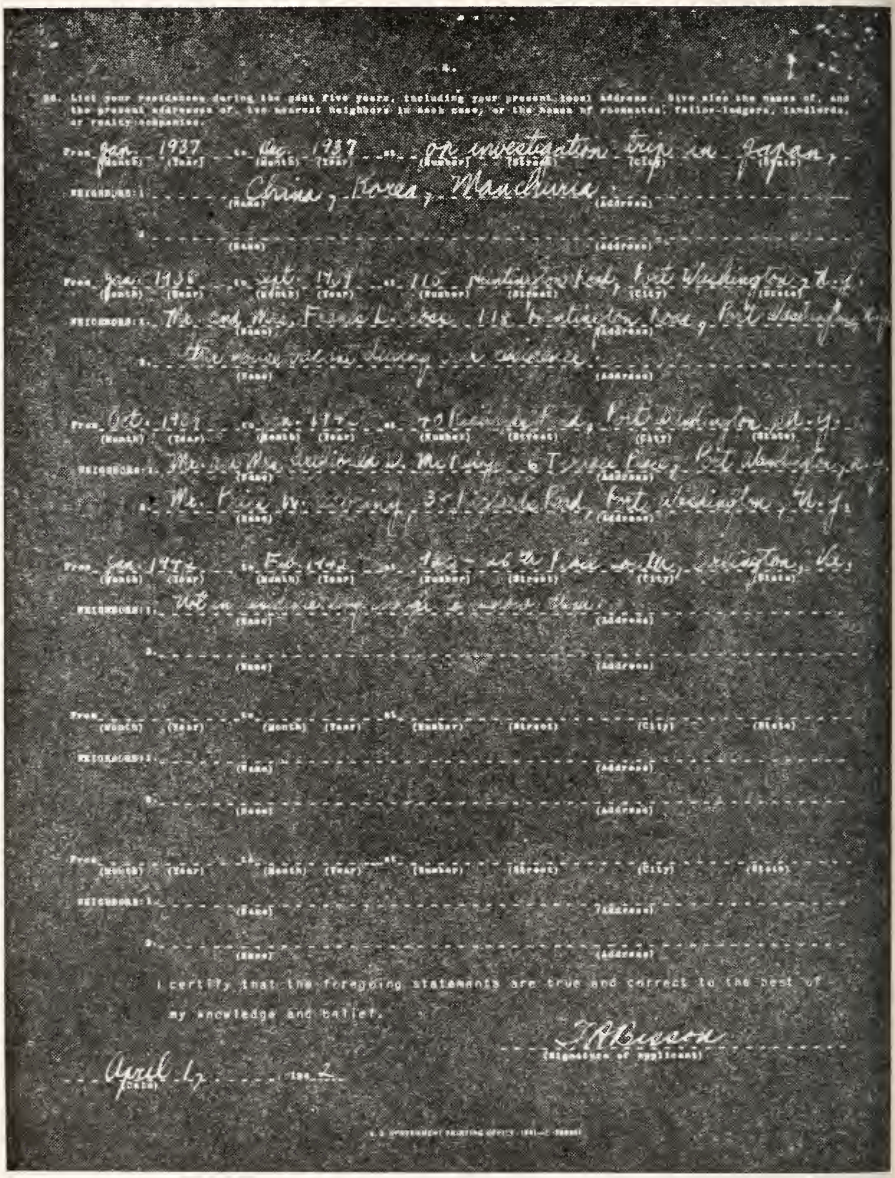
23. List Members of your family or relatives in any part of the government service, giving names, addresses, relationship and type of service:
Robert Caldwell — Consultant on Latin America, former Minister to Portugal.
Kenneth Caldwell — American Consul-General, Tientsin, China
[Relatives of wife to be listed]

24. List Members of your family or relatives residing in any foreign country, giving names, addresses, relationship, and occupation of each:
Dr. William Cochran — Taotungfu, China (?) — [illegible]
Medical missionary in charge of hospital.
Brother-in-law (husband of Mary Williams Cochran).

25. Are you a member of any Communist or German Bund organization or any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of the constitutional form of government in the United States, or do you have membership in or any affiliation with any group, association, or organization which advocates or supports advocating the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States?
No
(Yes or No)

If so, name the organization:

and give complete details in the space immediately below, or on a sheet to be attached hereto



8.

28. List your residences during the past five years, including your present (now) address. Give also the names of, and the present addresses of, two nearest neighbors in each case, or the names of roommates, foster-lodgers, landlords, or realty companies.

From Jan. 1937 (Month) (Year) to Dec. 1937 (Month) (Year) No. (Number) 8th investigation trip in Japan, (Street) (City) (State)

NEIGHBORS: 1. China, Korea, Manchuria (Name) (Address)

2. (Name) (Address)

From Jan. 1938 (Month) (Year) to Sept. 1941 (Month) (Year) No. 115 (Number) Monterey Road, Fort Washington, L.I. (Street) (City) (State)

NEIGHBORS: 1. Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Kent (Name) 118 Monterey Road (Address)

2. Mr. Kenneth Dewey (Name) 111 Monterey Road (Address)

From Oct. 1941 (Month) (Year) to Dec. 1942 (Month) (Year) No. 72 (Number) Lincoln Ave. (Street) Fort Washington, L.I. (City) N.Y. (State)

NEIGHBORS: 1. Mr. and Mrs. Leonard W. McClung (Name) 6 Tower Place (Address) Fort Washington, L.I.

2. Mr. Kirke Wy. Lissing (Name) 37 Lincoln Road (Address) Fort Washington, L.I.

From Jan. 1943 (Month) (Year) to Feb. 1943 (Month) (Year) No. 1643 (Number) 46th St. (Street) New York City (City) N.Y. (State)

NEIGHBORS: 1. Not on speaking terms with anyone there. (Name) (Address)

2. (Name) (Address)

From (Month) (Year) to (Month) (Year) No. (Number) (Street) (City) (State)

NEIGHBORS: 1. (Name) (Address)

2. (Name) (Address)

From (Month) (Year) to (Month) (Year) No. (Number) (Street) (City) (State)

NEIGHBORS: 1. (Name) (Address)

2. (Name) (Address)

I certify that the foregoing statements are true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

T. A. Bisson (Signature of applicant)

April 17, 1945 (Date)

U.S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1941—[illegible]

ARTICLES: (written in)

New York Times
" " Herald Tribune
Magazine of Wall Street
The Nation
The New Republic
Pacific Affairs
Political Science Quarterly
Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science
China Today
The Saturday Review of Literature
Americana

BOOKS: (written)

Japan in China — Macmillan, 1938

American Policy in the Far East, 1931-1940. Inquiry Series, Institute of Pacific Relations. 1940.

In addition, the Reports, Bulletins, Pamphlets and Headline Books.

Headline Book — Shadow Over Asia — War Department published 30,000 copies for distribution to army camps.

ORGANIZATIONS: (membership)

American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations.
American Committee for Non-Participation in Japanese Aggression.
American Friends of the Chinese People.

Was probably on the mailing list of the American League for Peace and Democracy. Never a dues-paying member.

T.A. Bisson

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you recall filing a personal history statement while you were with BEW?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were asked for that?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was some time after you had actually begun work?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. When you actually went to work did you file a Form 57, or an application form of any sort?

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember. Presumably there was some form. I do not recall at this time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not recall how you made application for work with the Board?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who was head of the Board of Economic Warfare when you went to work?

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Perkins, I think.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he remain the head of that Board throughout your entire tenure?

Mr. BISSON. No. I think he was replaced by the Vice President.

Mr. SOURWINE. What Vice President?

Mr. BISSON. Mr. Wallace.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was that?

Mr. BISSON. I am not sure just when that occurred, presumably in 1942.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was Mr. Wallace still the head of the Board when you left?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. When you filed this personal history statement—it is dated April 1, 1942—does that strike any discord with your memory? Are you willing to accept that as the date it was filed?

Mr. BISSON. I think that would be right.

Mr. SOURWINE. The purpose of that statement was to inform the Government as a basis for a civil-service check-up of where you had worked and what you had done; is that correct?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had this statement typed up, did you not?

Mr. BISSON. I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the portions of the statement which you had typed out did you give any information about your connection with IPR?

Mr. BISSON. I had no connection with the IPR before that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had not?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then the answer would be "No"?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you give any information about your connection with the American Committee for Nonparticipation in Japanese Aggression?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you give any information about your connection with American Friends of the Chinese People?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you give any information about your connection you may have had with the American League for Peace and Democracy?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you give any information about your connection with the International Release Committee that we have spoken about here?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you give any information about your connection with Amerasia?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Mr. Sourwine. This is the information that you were furnishing as the basis for the check-up that the Civil Service Commission was going to make on you?

Mr. Bisson. No; this, as I remember, was a check sheet asked by our employer in our section. It was not a sheet that was to be filed with the Civil Service Commission. He wanted to know the jobs we had held and what our background was in general.

Mr. Sourwine. You felt you were answering that question and giving him the desired information even though you did not give any of these items of information I have referred to?

Mr. Bisson. Certainly. It did not necessarily mean one was to give every possible organization that one had been connected with. He was primarily interested in the career background.

Mr. Sourwine. After you had filed this, weren't you subsequently told that you should have made mention of some of these organizations you belonged to?

Mr. Bisson. I may have been; yes.

Senator Eastland. Were you? You remember if you had been told that.

Mr. Bisson. I think I was.

Mr. Sourwine. Didn't you get the application form back, the Form 3721 back, and make additions to it in your own handwriting?

Mr. Bisson. I may have.

Mr. Sourwine. Didn't you make the additions under the heading "Membership organizations," with the first the American Council of the IPR?

Mr. Bisson. I may have.

Mr. Sourwine. You just said you had no connection with the IPR.

Mr. Bisson. I had no business connection with them. That merely a membership. I assumed you were referring to a business connection.

Mr. Sourwine. Didn't you add, in your own handwriting, the American Committee for Nonparticipation in Japanese Aggression?

Mr. Bisson. I may have; yes.

Mr. Sourwine. Didn't you add American Friends of the Chinese People?

Mr. Bisson. I may have.

Mr. Sourwine. Didn't you add "Was probably on the mailing list for American League for Peace and Democracy; never a dues-paying member"?

Mr. Bisson. Yes. Incidentally, may I make a comment on that point?

Mr. SOURWINE. Let me continue, please.

Your purpose for adding these was because you had been told there should be some mention of the organizations you belonged to on this sheet; is that right?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You added them?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why didn't you add your membership in the International Release Committee?

Mr. BISSON. In terms of my background, that was so unimportant that it never even occurred to me. My only relation with that committee, so far as I know, was this one occasion on which this greeting was made.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why didn't you add your connection with Amerasia? Was that completely unimportant in regard to your background?

Mr. BISSON. Amerasia was a magazine. It was not really an organization. I may have thought that a magazine was not called for here.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know why you didn't add it in?

Mr. BISSON. I would say that would be the reason.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it the reason? You said it must have been.

Mr. BISSON. Yes. That was the reason. That is the only magazine among that list so far as I know.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions.

Mr. BISSON. I would like to make one point here; that is, this takes on the appearance here of a very formal business. My recollection was that this was handled very informally. There was just a memorandum coming around saying "Get up some kind of sheet showing what your background was." I got that sheet up. That was the original one.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is a printed form; isn't it? The original one is a printed form?

Mr. BISSON. No. The original one was not. It was merely a typewritten manuscript that I typed out myself. Later on the head of our section said, "We want more information than has been given on these. Let's make them more complete and adequate." This was not a formal filing of applications for anything. It was merely an interoffice procedure.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were already employed by BEW?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had been employed there January 22, 1942?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You worked there until July 10, 1943?

Mr. BISSON. That was my formal severance date.

Mr. SOURWINE. This form 3721 is dated April 1, 1942. That is more than 3 months after you began working there?

Mr. BISSON. Yes, but what I am saying is that the first operation on that was just a memorandum saying "Set down some of your background for us for the use of the person that is in charge of this department."

Then later on it may have become formalized. I had forgotten there was a formal form. The thing was made more complete.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean your hiring by BEW was a very informal thing?

Mr. Bisson. This was not hiring.

Mr. Sourwine. I am asking about the time you were hired. It was a very informal thing. You made no formal application. You were not required to give a statement of your employment?

Mr. Bisson. On the contrary. I think I did give a formal statement of employment. This was an informal thing within the department afterward.

Senator Eastland. Proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. Morris. Do you know whether or not Dr. H. H. Fisher consulted personnel of the IPR in connection with his desire to increase the teaching and library facilities in the Far East in connection with his Hoover War Library?

Mr. Bisson. In connection with what?

Mr. Morris. His Hoover War Library.

Mr. Bisson. Did he consult with IPR?

Mr. Morris. With IPR personnel including yourself?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Will you tell us what you know about it?

Mr. Bisson. I do not know the details on it.

Mr. Morris. Did he consult with you on it?

Mr. Bisson. What is the date of this?

Mr. Morris. In 1945.

Mr. Bisson. Yes. I do not remember the details.

Mr. Morris. Will you identify that letter, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. Mandel. I have here a memorandum from the files of the IPR dated January 24, 1945, headed "RD from ECC."

Senator Eastland. Who is RD?

Mr. Morris. Who is RD?

Senator Eastland. Was it Raymond Dennett?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Senator Eastland. How do you spell it?

Mr. Bisson. D-e-n-n-e-t-t, I think.

Mr. Morris (reading):

Exhibit No 731

RD From ECC

Yesterday Dr. H. H. Fisher of the Hoover War Library came in in connection with Stanford's desire to increase its teaching and library facilities on the Far East.

In addition to meeting Grajdanzev and Bisson, I arranged for him to have a talk with Salisbury, who will doubtless report to you the substance of his conversations.

Does that refresh your recollection on the fact that you had a conversation with Dr. H. H. Fisher in connection with the question that was put to you?

Mr. Fanelli. He said he did, as I recall.

Mr. Bisson. My original statement was that I probably did talk with him; that I didn't remember the details.

Mr. Morris. Doesn't this indicate you did as a matter of fact talk with him?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Can you recall the conversation?

Mr. Bisson. I cannot. I said at the time I did not recall the details. I do not recall the details.

Mr. Morris. May this go into the record to establish the fact there was a conversation?

Senator Eastland. It will be admitted.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 731" and was read in full.)

Mr. Morris. Did you ever write for the publication, Soviet Russia Today?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. On how many occasions did you write for Soviet Russia Today?

Mr. Bisson. At least once.

Mr. Morris. With whom did you negotiate in your writings for Soviet Russia Today?

Mr. Bisson. Presumably it would be with the editor.

Mr. Morris. Did you negotiate with Jessica Smith?

Mr. Bisson. Yes; I probably did.

Senator Eastland. Did you negotiate with her?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Who is Jessica Smith?

Mr. Bisson. It has been indicated she is the editor of——

Senator Eastland. Was she? Testify, please.

Mr. Morris. Was she?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Did you know her personally?

Mr. Bisson. I do not actually remember seeing her.

Mr. Morris. How did you carry on negotiations?

Mr. Bisson. I don't know. Presumably by letter.

Mr. Morris. Is that your only recollection on the subject?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Do you remember signing a letter entitled "To All Active Supporters of Democracy and Peace," which is an open letter calling for greater unity of anti-Fascist forces and strengthening the forces against aggression, released on August 14 by 400 leading Americans, which appeared in Soviet Russia Today in September 1939?

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, may it be admitted into the record? I just call attention to this first point which seems to be called for in this open letter?

Senator Eastland. Yes; it may be admitted. When was it published?

(Document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 732" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 732

[Source: Soviet Russia Today, 1939, September]

To All Active Supporters of Democracy and Peace

The text of an Open Letter calling for greater unity of the anti fascist forces and strengthening of the front against aggression through closer cooperation with the Soviet Union, released on August 14 by 400 leading Americans.

One of the greatest problems confronting all those engaged in the struggle for democracy and peace, whether they be liberals, progressives, trade-unionists, or others, is how to unite their various forces so as to achieve victory for their common goals. The Fascists and their allies are well aware that democracy will win if its supporters are united. Accordingly, they are intent on destroying such unity at all costs.

On the international scene the Fascists and their friends have tried to prevent a united antiaggression front by sowing suspicion between the Soviet Union and other nations interested in maintaining peace.

On the domestic scene the reactionaries are attempting to split the democratic front by similar tactics. Realizing that here in America they cannot get far with a definitely profascist appeal, they strive to pervert American antifascist sentiment to their own ends. With the aim of turning antifascist feeling against the Soviet Union they have encouraged the fantastic falsehood that the U. S. S. R. and the totalitarian states are basically alike. By this strategy they hope to create dissension among the progressive forces whose united strength is a first necessity for the defeat of fascism.

Some sincere American liberals have fallen into this trap and unwittingly aided a cause to which they are essentially opposed. Thus, a number of them have carelessly lent their signatures to the recent manifesto issued by the so-called Committee for Cultural Freedom. This manifesto denounces in vague, undefined terms all forms of "Dictatorship" and asserts that the Fascist states and Soviet Russia equally menace American institutions and the democratic way of life.

While we prefer to dwell on facts rather than personalities, we feel it is necessary to point out that among the signers of this manifesto are individuals who have for years had as their chief political objective the maligning of the Soviet people and their government, and it is precisely these people who are the initiators and controllers of the committee.

A number of other committees have been formed which give lip service to democracy and peace while actually atacking the Soviet Union and aiding reaction. Honest persons approached by such committees should scrutinize their aims very carefully and support only those groups genuinely interested in preserving culture and freedom and refusing to serve as instruments for attacking the Soviet Union or aiding Fascism in any other way.

The undersigned do not represent any committee or organization, nor do they propose to form one. Our object is to point out the real purpose behind all these attempts to bracket the Soviet Union with the Fascist states, and to make it clear that Soviet and Fascist policies are diametrically opposed. To this end we should like to stress ten basic points in which Soviet socialism differs fundamentally from totalitarian fascism.

1. The Soviet Union continues, as always, to be a consistent bulwark against war and aggression, and works unceasingly for the goal of a peaceful international order.

2. It has eliminated racial and national prejudice within its borders, freed the minority peoples enslaved under the Tsars, stimulated the development of the culture and economic welfare of these peoples, and made the expression of anti-Semitism or any racial animosity a criminal offense.

3. It has socialized the means of production and distribution through the public ownership of industry and the collectivization of agriculture.

4. It has established nationwide socialist planning, resulting in increasingly higher living standards, and the abolition of unemployment and depression.

5. It has built the trade-unions, in which almost 24,000,000 workers are organized, into the very fabric of its society.

6. The Soviet Union has emancipated woman and the family, and has developed an advanced system of child care.

7. From the viewpoint of cultural freedom, the difference between the Soviet Union and the Fascist countries is most striking. The Soviet Union has effected one of the most far-reaching cultural and educational advances in all history and among a population which at the start was almost three-fourths illiterate. Those writers and thinkers whose books have been burned by the Nazis are published in the Soviet Union. The best literature from Homer to Thomas Mann, the best thought from Aristotle to Lenin, is available to the masses of the Soviet people, who themselves actively participate in the creation of culture.

8. It has replaced the myths and superstitions of old Russia with the truths and techniques of experimental science, extending scientific procedures to every field, from economics to public health. And it has made science and scientific study available to the mass of the people.

9. The Soviet Union considers political dictatorship a transitional form and has shown a steadily expanding democracy in every sphere. Its epoch-making new Constitution guarantees Soviet citizens universal suffrage, civil liberties, the right to employment, to leisure, to free education, to free medical care, to material security in sickness and old age, to equality of the sexes in all fields of activity, and to equality of all races and nationalities.

10. In relation to Russia's past, the country has been advancing rapidly along the road of material and cultural progress in ways that the American people can understand and appreciate.

The Soviet Union has an economic system different from our own. But Soviet aims and achievements make it clear that there exists a sound and permanent basis in mutual ideals for cooperation between the U. S. A. and the U. S. S. R. on behalf of world peace and the security and freedom of all nations.

Accordingly, the signers of this letter urge Americans of whatever political persuasion to stand firmly for close cooperation in this sphere between the United States and Soviet Russia, and to be on guard against any and all attempts to prevent such cooperation in this critical period in the affairs of mankind.

Among the 400 signers of the open letter are:

Dr. Thomas Addis, professor of medicine, Leland Stanford University
Helen Alfred, executive director, National Public Housing Conference
Prof. Newton Arvin, professor of English, Smith College
Dr. Charles S. Bacon, honorary president, American Russian Institute, Chicago, Ill.
Frank C. Bancroft, editor, Social Work Today
Maurice Becker, artist
Louis P. Birk, editor, Modern Age Books, Inc.
T. A. Bisson, research associate, Foreign Policy Association
Alice Stone Blackwell, suffragist, writer
Marc Blitzstein, composer
Anita Block, Theater Guild playreader
Sterling Bowen, poet
Richard Boyer, staff writer, The New Yorker
Millen Brand, writer
Simon Breines, architect
Robert Briffault, writer
Prof. Dorothy Brewster, assistant professor of English, Columbia University
Prof. Edwin Berry Burgum, associate professor of English, New York University
Fielding Burke, writer
Katherine Devereaux Blake, teacher
Meta Berger, writer, widow of the first Socialist Congressman
Prof. Robert A. Brady, professor of economics, University of California
J. E. Bromberg, actor
Bessie Beatty, writer
Vera Caspary, scenario writer
Maria Cristina Chambers, of the Authors' League
Prof. Robert Chambers, research professor of biology, New York University
Harold Clurman, producer
Robert M. Coates, writer
Lester Cohen, writer
Kyle Crichton, editorial staff of Collier's Weekly
Miriam Allen De Ford, writer
Paul De Kruif, writer
Pietro Di Donato, writer
William F. Dodd, Jr., chairman Anti-Nazi Literature Committee
Stanley D. Dodge, University of Michigan
Prof. Dorothy Douglas, department of economics, Smith College
Muriel Draper, writer
Prof. L. C. Dunn, professor of Zoology, Columbia University
Prof. Haakon Chevalier, professor of French, University of California
Harriet G. Eddy, library specialist
Prof. George B. Cressey, chairman of the department of geology and geography, Syracuse University
Prof. Henry Pratt Fairchild, professor of sociology, New York University
Kenneth Fearing, poet
Prof. Mildred Fairchild, professor of economics, Bryn Mawr College
Alice Withrow Field, writer
Sara Bard Field, writer
William O. Field, Jr., chairman of the board, American Russian Institute
Irving Fineman, writer

Marjorie Fischer, writer
Angel Flores, writer, critic
Waldo Frank, writer
Wanda Gag, artist
Hugo Gellert, artist
Robert Gessner, department of English, New York University
Prof. Willystine Goodsell, associate professor of education (retired), Columbia University
Mortimer Graves, of the American Council of Learned Societies
Dr. John H. Gray, economist, former president of the American Economics Association
William Gropper, artist
Maurice Haiperin, associate editor, Books Abroad
Earl P. Hanson, explorer, writer
Prof. Samuel N. Harper, profesosr of Russian language and institutions, Chicago University
Rev. Thomas L. Harris, national executive secretary, American League for Peace and Democracy
Dashiell Hammett, writer
Ernest Hemingway
Granville Hicks, writer
Prof. Norman E. Himes, department of sociology, Colgate University
Charles J. Hendley, president, Teachers' Union of the City of New York
Leo Huberman, writer
Langston Hughes, poet
Agatha Illes, writer
Rev. Otis G. Jackson, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Flint, Mich.
Sam Jaffe, actor
Orrick Johns, poet
Matthew Josephson, writer
George Kauffman, playwright
Prof. Alexander Kaun, associate professor of Slavic languages, University of California
Fred C. Kelly, writer
Rockwell Kent, artist
Dr. John A. Kingsbury, social worker, administrative consultant, WPA
Beatrice Kinkaid, writer
Lincoln E. Kirstein, ballet producer
Arthur Kober, playwright
Alfred Kreymborg, poet
Edward Lamb, lawyer
Dr. Corliss Lamont, writer, lecturer
Margaret I. Lamont, sociologist, writer
J. J. Lankes, artist
Jay Leyda, cinema critic
John Howard Lawson, playwright
Emil Lengyel, writer, critic
Prof. Max Lerner, professor of government, Williams College
Meridel LeSueur, writer
Meyer Levin, writer
Prof. Charles W. Lightbody, department of government and history, St. Lawrence University
Robert Morss Lovett, Governor of the Virgin Islands, an editor of the New Republic
Prof. Halford E. Luccock, Yale University Divinity School
Katherine Du Pre Lumpkin, writer
Klaus Mann, lecturer, writer, son of Thomas Mann
Prof. F. O. Mathiessen, associate professor of history and literature, Harvard University
Dr. Anita Marburg, department of English, Sarah Lawrence College
Dr. George Marshall, economist
Aline MacMahon, actress
Clifford T. McAvoy, instructor, department of romance languages, College of the City of New York
Prof. V. J. McGill, professor of philosophy, Hunter College
Prof. Robert McGregor, Reed College
Ruth McKenney, writer

Darwin J. Meserole, lawyer
Prof. Herbert A. Miller, professor of economics, Bryn Mawr College
Harvey O'Connor, writer
Clifford Odets, playwright
Shaemus O'Sheel, writer, critic
Mary White Ovington, social worker
S. J. Perelman, writer
Dr. John P. Peters, department of internal medicine, Yale University Medical School
Dr. Emily M. Pierson, physician
Walter N. Polakov, engineer
Prof. Alan Porter, professor of German, Vassar College
George D. Pratt, Jr., agriculturist
John Hyde Preston, writer
Samuel Putnam, writer
Prof. Paul Radin, professor of anthropology, University of California
Prof. Walter Rautenstrauch, professor of industrial engineering, Columbia University
Bernard J. Reis, accountant
Bertha C. Reynolds, social worker
Lynn Riggs, playwright
Col. Raymond Robins, former head of American Red Cross in Russia
William Rollins, Jr., writer
Harold J. Rome, composer
Ralph Roeder, writer
Dr. Joseph A. Rosen, former head of Jewish Joint Distribution Board
Eugene Schoen, architect
Prof. Margaret Schlauch, associate professor of English, New York University
Prof. Frederick L. Schuman, professor of government, Williams College
Prof. Vida D. Scudder, professor emeritus of English, Wellesley College
George Seldes, writer
Vincent Sheean, writer
Viola Brothers Shore, scenario writer
Herman Shumlin, producer
Prof. Ernest J. Simmons, assistant professor of English literature, Harvard University
Irina Skariatina, writer
Dr. F. Tredwell Smith, educator
Dr. Stephenson Smith, president, Oregon Commonwealth Federation
Hester Sondergaard, actress
Isobel Walker Soule, writer, editor
Lionel Stander, actor
Christina Stead, writer
A. E. Steig, artist
Alfred K. Stern, housing specialist
Dr. Bernhard J. Stern, department of sociology, Columbia University
Donald Ogden Stewart, writer
Maxwell S. Stewart, associate editor, the Nation
Paul Strand, producer and photographer
Prof. Dirk J. Struik, professor of mathematics, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Robert Tasker, scenario writer
C. Fayette Taylor, aeronautical engineer, head of automotive laboratories, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
James Thurber, artist, writer
Rebecca Janney Timbres, social worker, writer
Jean Starr Untermeyer, poet
Louis Untermeyer, poet
Mary Van Kleeck, economist, associate director, International Industrial Relations Institute
Stuyvesant Van Veen, artist
J. Raymond Walsh, economist
Dr. William Henry Walsh, physician
Prof. Harry F. Ward, professor of Christian ethics, Union Theological Seminary
Lynd Ward, artist
Morris Watson, New York Newspaper Guild
Clara Weatherwax, writer

Max Weber, artist
Dr. Gerald Wendt, director of science and education, New York World's Fair.
Rev. Robert Whitaker, clergyman and lecturer
Albert Rhys Williams, writer
Dr. William Carlos Williams, writer
Ella Winter, writer
Richard Wright, writer
Art Young, artist
Leane Zugsmith, writer

Mr. MORRIS. In Soviet Russia Today in September 1939.

Senator EASTLAND. Proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. The one point is:

The Soviet Union continues as always to be a consistent bulwark against Fascist aggression and works unceasingly for the goal of a peaceful international order.

Senator EASTLAND. Did this witness sign this?

Mr. MORRIS. He has stated he is one of the signers of this letter.

Senator EASTLAND. That was on the eve of the attack on Finland?

Mr. MORRIS. No, this is September 1939, subsequent to the announcement of the Hitler-Stalin pact.

Senator EASTLAND. It was on the eve of the attack on Finland.

Mr. MORRIS. It was before, I think.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is this offered for the record?

Mr. BISSON. I signed that.

Senator EASTLAND. Had Poland been attacked at that time?

Mr. BISSON. Not that I know of.

Senator EASTLAND. Not that you know of?

Mr. BISSON. I don't think so. My field was primarily the Far East, Mr. Chairman.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you mean to say because you are a far eastern expert you would not know whether Germany attacked Poland in September 1939 or not?

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know Theodore Draper?

Mr. BISSON. I may have.

Mr. MORRIS. I wish you would recall whether or not you know him.

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember meeting him.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you identify this letter, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a document from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, a photostat of a letter, on the letterhead of New Masses, 31 East Twenty-seventh Street, New York City, dated Septemper 23, 1937, addressed to "Dear Field" and signed "Theodore Draper."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read the first paragraph here:

DEAR FIELD: I have wanted to talk things over with you for some time but circumstances always intervened to make it impossible or to cause me to postpone it. Your absence from New York made me decide to write you a rather longish letter though perhaps I may see you again before long. Our friend, Chi, suggested that I tell you frankly what is bothering me, though it is wholly personal, for what advice or assistance you could suggest. With that as introduction. * * *

Paragraph 4 reads:

For this reason, I am going to take a crack at the Guggenheim fellowships this year. Incidentally, I am grateful for your permission to use your name in the application. Professor Laski of Great Britain has also consented and I am now looking for one or two more, besides yourself and Bisson.

Does that refresh your recollection at all?

Mr. Bisson. This would seem to indicate that he was looking for a letter of recommendation from me. I do not remember whether I gave him such a recommendation. I do not remember that I saw him, which was my original statement.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, I suggest we not under the circumstances introduce this into the record at this time.

Senator Eastland. Has the FBI attempted to talk with you?

Mr. Bisson. Yes; it has.

Senator Eastland. Did they ask you a number of questions?

Mr. Bisson. You mean quite recently?

Senator Eastland. Yes.

Mr. Bisson. Yes.

Senator Eastland. Did you give them whatever information they asked?

Mr. Bisson. Yes. I answered their questions.

Mr. Morris. Will you identify these letters, please, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. Mandel. These are documents from the files of the IPR, photostatic copies of handwritten letters. The first one is dated September 2, 1946, addressed to "Dear Bill" and signed "Art."

The second is addressed "Dear Bill," dated September 22, 1946, and signed "Art Bisson."

Mr. Morris. Will you identify those letters as having been written by you? There is going to be no question on them. They are going to be put into the record. They are in your own handwriting. I would like you to identify them as having been written by you.

Mr. Bisson. Yes. These are my letters.

Mr. Morris. May they be admitted?

Senator Eastland. Yes.

(The letters referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 733, 734" and are as follows:)

Exhibit No. 733

Dai-ichi Hotel,
Tokyo, Sept. 2, 1946.

Dear Bill: The impossibility of really describing the complicated nexus of things here has operated as a bar to writing letters ever since I've arrived except those to Faith. In literal terms my output has been none with the one exception of a letter carried by Major Everett Sherbourne which I hope he has delivered yon by now. His book should be a first-class job and I trust that he and the IPR may get together on it.

Your letter reached me here just as I put in for travel orders on October 1st. There is some reluctance to let me go, however, and the work here is sufficiently rewarding and significant that I am in a state of some indecision myself. The most difficult problem, of course, is that of a continued separation from the family. I should have some definite answer on the matter within a few days now, and will write fully then.

In my reading of your letter I am in some doubt as to whether you mean that I can do the project you have in mind while a full member of the staff of the American Council. I should much prefer that working basis, as it would give me a greater feeling of stability and permanence in my job.

A reorganization of the former membership (along with new members) of the old Council has occurred here, as you probably know if you have received letters from Matsuo. So far as I have followed it a good job has been done in a rather delicate situation, although some of the older members are still left out and there may be some heart-burnings there. I will, of course, join with Herb, Quigley, and Miriam in keeping contact with the Japanese group.

Please give my best regards to all at 1E54. I trust that my exile over here will not continue much longer.

Sincerely yours,

[s] Art.

Exhibit No. 734

PEL	ECC
MH	MAS
MK	LES

(Penciled notes:) HER—10 copies of marked paras.

Tokyo, Sept. 22, 1946.

Dear Bill: If I'm going to be a fixture here, I've decided to do a little more letter writing than before—I've been remiss almost completely thus far.

Andrew and I have spending considerable time the last week or so checking up on the land reform bill now going through the Diet. It still has some defects but on the whole Ladijinsky has done a good job, and I'm more hopeful about a thoroughgoing landlord abolition than Zaibatsu dissolution.

Eleanor Hadley has been working closely with me on virtually all economic phases of the occupation, but particularly the Zaibatsu problem and the economic control agencies. She is an excellent economist and a grand person, and knows Japan well (she was here in 1938–40). You (or Bill Lockwood) probably know of her work on the proto—SWNCC directive on the Zaibatsu when she was in the State Department. She returns to Harvard this January to do her thesis on the Zaibatsu—she has already passed her Radcliff generals for the doctorate. I've asked her whether she couldn't do for the conference a study of what has been done on the Zaibatsu under the occupation—not too long a piece, but a sort of balance sheet of accomplishments and the job yet to be done. If this suggestion is of any use to you please let me know and give some indication of length desired. Eleanor would make a most excellent woman member for your Amco delegation to London.

Friday afternoon I had a long talk with Matsuo on the recent developments re the new Japan Council. A preliminary organization meeting on September 18 crystallized the long job that has been done here during the past six months to weed out the older conservative elements and merge those left from the past with a new and more liberal group.

The chairman (or president) of the new Board of Directors will probably be Dr. Takano (Twasaburo), currently president of Radio Tokyo, formerly chief of the Ohara Institute of Social Research. The research secretary will be Professor Ouchi (Hyoe) of the Public Finance (senior professor) section of Tokyo Imperial. Ouchi is a close friend of Tsuru, who hopes that he (Ouchi) will be the nucleus around which the liberal-radical academic circle can be drawn into the new Council's work. This group already has under way a symposium on Japan's current problems (mainly the economic side) to which I have been asked to contribute a foreword.

These two will be members of the Board of Directors ex-officio. Other directors include:

Professor Yanaibara (Tadro), of Tokyo Imperial (specialist or International economics.

Prof. Yokota (Kisaburo), of Tokyo Imperial, specialist on International Law.

Prof. Suekawa (Hiroshi), of Kyoto Imperial University, law faculty.

Matsukata, Saburo.

Hani (Motoko), prominent woman publicist, with articles in many journals. She is associated with Jiyu Gakuin, a coed school in Tokyo.

Koike (Atsunosuke), businessman, head of Yamaishi Securities Company.

Saionji, Kinichi.

Present at the meeting was also Shibusawa, Keizo. He is willing to stay in background (he was Finance Minister in the Shidehara Cabinet earlier this year) and help to corral some much needed financial support. On the other hand, he may come into the open as Treasurer and member of the Board of Directors. With the research secretaryship in Ouchi's hands, Shibusawa is not likely to run away with the organization.

It seems unlikely that Takaki (who has been most outspoken in support of a Tenno system stronger than the Draft Constitution permits) or Takayarogi (active in the war crimes defense) will join, although both of them maintain an indirect and unofficial link with the new organization.

A Council (Shoin) of about 30 members is being organized of persons from various fields. This body may formally choose the directors at the formal organization meeting expected in mid-October. Name is Taiheiyo Mondai Chosakai (Pacific Problems Research Institute)—same as old. When asked, I advised them to keep the literal translation for the present instead of calling it the Japan Council of the Institute. Immediate problems are office space and money.

Miriam transferred to me your letter to Zhulsou, but unfortunately he had just left when I sought to reach him. I presume you do not wish me to mail it to him?

Many thanks for your advice and counsel to Faith when she called you. Give my best regards to Mr. Carter and all my friends on both floors.

ART BISSON.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you identify this, Mr. Mandel?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of a carbon copy of a letter from the files of the IPR dated September 29, 1939, addressed to Mr. T. A. Bisson, Foreign Policy Association, with the typed signature of Owen Lattimore, and at the top the initials KM.

Mr. MORRIS. I ask you if you can recall having received that letter from Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BISSON. Are you going to ask questions on this?

Mr. MORRIS. No.

Mr. BISSON. Yes; this letter was received by me.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be received?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 735" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 735

300 GILMAN HALL,
JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY,
Baltimore, Md., September 29, 1939.

Mr. T. A. BISSON,
Foreign Policy Association,
8 West 40th Street, New York City.

DEAR ART: You may be out on a limb, but it looks to me like a strong and springy limb. In fact, I think it is a splendid article. By this mail I am sending a copy, as edited. I made a few minor changes, most of them intended to make the article less "American," in view of the circulation of PACIFIC AFFAIRS abroad.

That, incidentally is one of our great problems, as people outside of the United States are tremendously interested in the American angle of the Far East, and in the way in which America reacts to each move and each stage out there, but at the same time it is better not to write for them just as if they were American.

Well, now what? Are the British and French going to fight? You tell me! This morning the Baltimore paper reports an "appeasement" article in the "New Statesman and Nation," which of course has always been against Chamberlain's appeasement.

I can see the futility of fighting to restore the kind of Poland that Lloyd George never liked anyway; but what I can't imagine are the specific terms on which the French and British could back down in front of Hitler.

In the meantime the Russians have got everything they asked for in the first place as the conditions for entering an alliance with the British and French—security against German occupation of the whole of Poland, security against German-engineered putsches in the Baltic States. They have got this at the cost of terrific hostility in the press, and the jolting up of, I suppose, all their more loosely attached adherents abroad. Am I right in supposing that they may begin to recover from this? In the first place, they are actually extending revolutionary principles, at least in Poland. In the second place, there are many who respect strength and power who are not penetrable by intellectual arguments.

All this European side of things is a puzzle and a tangle to me; all I can see clearly is that the Chinese are certainly not weakened, and probably, or at least potentially, strengthened.

Yours,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

OL:Y

Mr. MORRIS. Did you write an article in the Far Eastern Survey in August 1944 in anticipation of a negotiated peace with Japan, or in connection with peace with Japan?

Mr. BISSON. What is the title?

Mr. MORRIS. Japan Prepares for Peace Offensive.

I show you the Far Eastern Survey of that date and ask you if that is your article?

Mr. BISSON. Are there going to be questions on this?

Mr. MORRIS. Is this your article?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; it is.

Mr. MORRIS. May that be received into the record?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 736" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 736

[Source: Far Eastern Survey, American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, August 9, 1944, vol. 13, No. 16]

JAPAN PREPARES FOR PEACE OFFENSIVE

(By T. A. Bisson)

The Tojo Cabinet's resignation en bloc on July 18 is an impressive tribute to the weight of the Pacific offensive, currently tearing the vitals out of Japan's strongholds in the Marianas. This onslaught was seconded by the first massive blows from the B–29's on Japan's home soil—a factor which also counts heavily in Japanese home-front reactions. There is deep-seated apprehension among the Japanese that no preparations which their rulers can make will be sufficient to overcome their country's peculiar vulnerability to attack from the air, once such attack becomes large-scale and continuous. Finally, even before the attempt on Hitler's life, the Japanese were painfully noting the ominous collapse of Germany's military power, spectacularly evident in the crumbling of the eastern front before the Russian drives but also seen in the breaching of Hitler's boasted Atlantic Wall and the steady Allied progress in Italy.

The series of drastic Japanese defeats in the Pacific, culminating in the loss of Saipan, directly forced the resignation of the Japanese Cabinet. Between July 10 and 18 Tojo desperately maneuvered to save his cabinet by concessions which separated the military and naval staff commands from the War and Navy Ministries. Admiral Shigetaro Shimada first insisted that he should be divested of one of his two concurrent posts—Chief of the Naval Staff and Minister of the Navy. To this measure Tojo was forced to consent, and for the purpose appointed Admiral Naokuni Nomura to the Navy Ministry on July 17, leaving Admiral Shimada as Chief of the Naval Staff. Admiral Nomura must have set an unusual precedent, since—if the announced dates are correct—he retained his new post for exactly one day. But this concession was not enough to appease the opposition to Tojo and on July 18 it was announced that General Yoshijiro Umezu had become Chief of the Army Staff, succeeding General Tojo, who had "been relieved of his concurrent post." These dates, it should be noted, are announcements by the Cabinet Board of Information after the changes had been made. The actual changes may have preceded the announcements by a day or two, since the entire cabinet finally resigned on July 18. Thus Tojo's eleventh-hour attempt to save his cabinet completely failed.

While the cabinet resignation may be attributed mainly to Japan's military-naval defeats, for which Tojo was made to accept responsibility, an additional set of factors must be taken into account in order to explain the composition of the new cabinet. These factors are in part external, affecting the current status of the war in its global aspects. Japanese leaders, military as well as civilian, are not unaware of the effects which the coming defeat of Germany will have on Japan's war prospects. The Japanese leadership has always been acutely sensitive to the world setting within which it has plotted the successive steps in the program of national aggrandizement. It now begins to recognize, with full dread of the consequences, that the attack on Pearl Harbor constitutes the greatest miscalculation of Japanese diplomacy in the 76 years since the Restoration. And it is now taking the preliminary internal measures which, it hopes, may offer a prospect of salvaging the essential portions of the Empire from the wreckage of defeat. It is cleverly preparing the groundwork for that offer of a negotiated peace against which the United Nations must gird themselves in the aftermath of Nazi Germany's collapse.

These external factors, however, are but a part of the total complex situation in Japan which helps to explain the composition of the Koiso cabinet and gives us some assurance in gaging the role which it is expected to perform. The evolution of the Tojo cabinet, which has held office for the lengthy term of nearly 3 years, has logically concluded in the establishment of a government which relegates the armed services to their purely military and naval functions and assigns one man to do one job.

TOJO CABINET UNIQUE

In these respects, the Tojo cabinet was an extraordinary anomaly in Japanese constitutional history. For a Japanese minister to hold two concurrent posts was a common practice. But never before did one man succeed in grasping so many of the reins of government in his hands as did Tojo. At the outset, in October 1941, Tojo was Premier, War Minister, and Home Minister. He held the latter post until the success of the initial attacks was complete, thus assuring no untoward reactions on the home front. The first two posts he held until the end. To these he had added the extremely important offices of Munitions Minister, in control of war production, and Army Chief of Staff.

Two points may be made in this regard. No one man could be Premier, War Minister, Chief of Staff, and Munitions Minister, all at the same time, without detriment to administrative efficiency. In actual fact, much of the routine and even policy-forming activities of these positions had to be carried out by the Vice-Ministers or the Vice Chief of Staff. But—and this is the second point—such a condition immediately tended to create friction or animosity and to lead to charges of one-man dictatorship. So long as things went well, Tojo could reply that his unimpeded control gave unity and cohesive direction to the war effort. When defeats came in monotonous succession, this position could no longer be maintained; at the end it turned into a disadvantage for Tojo, culminating in his downfall.

On the eve of the July 18 overthrow, the earlier scope of Tojo's dictatorial powers had in reality been whittled down to a considerable extent. Under his effective control was left essentially the general direction of the cabinet and of the Army, but other phases of domestic administration had largely slipped from his grasp. This evolution, in accordance with normal Japanese constitutional practice, had come about so gradually as to be almost unnoticed. Over a period of nearly 3 years, many changes in cabinet portfolios would necessarily occur in Japan and it is by these changes that the political current is to be discerned. In the Tojo cabinet the ministerial shifts had been even more numerous than usual. They had occurred, as might be expected, largely in response to the changing fortunes of the war but also as a result of the pressure of those groups in the ruling circle which felt that Tojo had invaded their legitimate spheres.

The general drift is clearly indicated by several of the more important shifts. On September 1, 1942, despite the Midway defeat, Tojo was still able to announce establishment of the Greater East Asia Ministry, to accept the protest resignation of Foreign Minister Shigenori Togo, and to appoint Masayuk Tani, an Army favorite, in place of Tojo. The snub to the Foreign Office crowd was pronounced. With the loss of Guadalcanal, however, it became increasingly apparent that Tojo was meeting opposition to which he was forced to make concessions. He overplayed his hand in seeking extraordinary dictatorial powers to cope with the crisis of production, met unexpectedly strong opposition on this score in the Diet in January-February 1943, and ultimately—on March 17, 1943—announced that a ministerial-rank Council of seven financial and industrial magnates would advise him on the application of his emergency powers.

Further cabinet shifts on April 20, 1943, brought Mamoru Shigemitsu, a Foreign Office stalwart, to the Foreign Ministry and introduced two of the old party leaders into the cabinet. Within the Munitions Ministry, formed November 1, 1943, Tojo's undivided control was challenged by the business leaders, especially in the person of Ginjiro Fujihara, who was made State Minister without Portfolio on November 17 and became increasingly active in the production effort. The trend was unmistakable. It meant the return to the Foreign Office, of the business magnates, and of the party leaders to their old spheres of jurisdiction within the normal balance of group interests.

Under these internal conditions, added to the external factors of the military defeat in Europe and Asia, the Emperor's advisers were confronted on July 18 with the Tojo cabinet's resignation. In this case, it is important to observe that everything was done pro forma. Marquis Koichi Kido, Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal, was received in audience by the Emperor to discuss the selection of the next cabinet. The Elder Statesmen who used to perform the delicate constitutional function of advising the Emperor on the choice of a new Premier are no longer available, but since their passing a new constitutional practice has been sedulously developed. With Marquis Kido came the seven living ex-Premiers, the President of the Privy Council, Yoshimichi Hara, and the outgoing Premier, General Tojo. A glance at the ex-Premiers is instructive, in view of the crucial significance of their new constitutional role. The list comprises Baron Reijiro Wakatsuki, Admiral Keisuke Okada, Koki Hirota, Prince Fumimore Konoye, Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma, General Nobuyuki Abe, and Admiral Mitsumasa Yonai. Everyone in this group has distinguished himself, in one war or another, by working against the Army extremists. Hara and Kido are naturally of the same stamp. By the addition of Tojo, the overwhelmingly conservative cast of this group of constitutional advisers is hardly altered. This factor must be steadily kept in mind when future cabinet changes are under consideration.

In the present instance, i. e., the formation of the Koiso cabinet, the group of advisers worked in expert fashion to secure the results desired. The basic essential, of course, was to reconstitute a strong fighting team which would carry on the war with the utmost energy, efficiency and unity, so far as the fighting services were concerned. There can be little doubt that this objective was achieved. Five senior military and naval men hold the major posts. Koiso, as Premier, has the key position. As an old Kwantung Army man, he will obviously work hand in hand with General Yoshijiro Umezu, new Chief of the Army Staff, who comes directly from command of the Kwantung Army in Manchuria. Admiral Shigetaro Shimada, evidently a capable naval technician, retains his post of Chief of the Navy Staff. Admiral Yonai, as Navy Minister, and Field Marshal Gen Sugiyama, as War Minister, able leaders but by no means extremist, bring to the cabinet posts a conservative weight that balances the whole team. The principle of "one man to one post" is rigidly adhered to in these changes, and there can be no blinking the fact that a vigorous prosecution of the war can be expected from this group of leaders.

The political constituents of the new cabinet, however, carry the evolution which was proceeding within the Tojo cabinet to a new stage. General Koiso holds the single post of Premier, and no other. Not only is his direct outreach far less than that of Tojo, so far as cabinet portfolios are concerned, but in addition Navy Minister Yonai—a former Premier of moderate outlook—has been made Deputy Prime Minister. There is no good reason to believe that the creation of this post, rather unusual in Japanese constitutional practice, implies that Koiso and Yonai may work at cross purposes.

Koiso is, like Tojo, and old Kwantung Army man of the most aggressive type, and as such a good front man personifying determination to wage the war to a successful conclusion. He was, however, a colleague of Yonai's in the Hiranuma cabinet of 1939, as Overseas Minister, and held the same post in the 1940 cabinet headed by Yonai. During this period Koiso showed himself exceedingly active in furthering the Navy's program of expansion in Southeast Asia, especially as affecting the Netherlands Indies. There is thus every warrant for believing that the yoking together of General Koiso, the "extremist" Premier, and Admiral Yonai, the "moderate" Deputy Premier, will prove a smooth-working combination instead of the reverse. It will help to overcome the friction that had clearly developed between the Army and Navy commands at the close of Tojo's administration.

The marked curtailment of General Koiso's power in the new cabinet, as contrasted with Tojo's former position, is nevertheless a political factor of great importance. This change goes much further, moreover, than in relegating Koiso to the premiership alone and appointing a deputy to act with him. All the other traditional Japanese group interests—the diplomats, the businessmen, and the former party leaders—have resumed the regular administrative spheres and powers held in normal times.

CONSERVATIVES STAGE COMEBACK

Take the position of Foreign Minister Shigemitsu as one outstanding example of the shift back to normalcy. He, and not an Army man, holds the only major concurrent post in the cabinet. The Greater East Asia Ministry, set up by the military in order to keep administration of conquered territories in their own hands, now passes back to control of the Foreign Office. The change is boldly stated to be aimed at securing unified diplomacy. At one stroke the long history of the Army's determined efforts to maintain administrative control of territory conquered since 1931, exemplified in the political struggles attending formation of the Manchurian Affairs Board, the China Affairs Board and GEA Ministry itself, is nullified. The Foreign Office returns to its own—and, be it noted, thereby becomes responsible for the conduct of negotiations which could affect the disposal of Japan's nexus of ruling groups—such agreement will be forthcoming.

Hardly less significant of the changing political tide is the appointment of Ginjiro Fujihara, outstanding Japanese industrialist, as head of the Munitions Ministry. Tojo himself had held this portfolio in the old cabinet and the Vice-Minister had been Shinsuke Kishi, a former Manchukuo bureaucrat. Fujihara, carrying the ball for the business interests, had been critical of Tojo's production efforts even before the Munitions Ministry was established. After its formation, as noted, he had played an increasingly significant role in spurring production as State Minister. Now he takes over full control.

In addition no less than four of the old-time Koiso cabinet. Yonezo Maeda, former Seiyukai leader, becomes Transportation and Communications Minister, while Toshio Shimada is made Agriculture and Commerce Minister. These posts cover the administrative sphere which was normally occupied by the party leaders in the heyday of their power. Both Chuji Machida, former Minseito presided now described as dean of political circles, and Count Hideo Kodama, from the Kenkyukai group in the House of Peers, are accorded the dignified posts of Ministers of State Affairs (without portfolio).

Appointments to other cabinet posts follow the same trend. The Home Ministry goes to Shigeo Odate, a career bureaucrat in the legal field with some Manchukuo experience, instead of to an Army man. The Finance Ministry is taken by Sotaro Ishiwata, a bureaucrat who held the same post in the Hiranuma and Yonai cabinets. (Nine out of the 16 newly appointed ministers held office in these two cabinets, in itself a very revealing fact.) Taketora Ogata, State Minister and President of the Information Board, was vice-president of the ASAHI, also representing a shift from the career bureaucrats that have previously held this post. Hiromasa Matsuzaka, New Justice Minister, had been the Procurator General, while Hisatada Hirose, Welfare Minister, had also been a member of the Yonai cabinet. Lt. Gen. Harushige Ninomiya, as Education Minister, is the sole military leader holding a normally civilian post.

The far-reaching political realignment indicated by these changes does not imply that there will be a slackening in Japan's war effort. More probably the reverse is true. The caliber of the men chosen to lead the war and home fronts, characterized by ability, experience, and seniority, may well infuse greater efficiency and drive into the prosecution of the war. The Koiso cabinet's personnel, moreover, despite surface indications to the contrary, is essentially far more unified than Tojo's cabinet had become. Most of its members have worked closely together in the past, understand each other thoroughly, and have confidence in each other's ability. For the immediate continuation of a stubborn defensive fight, therefore, vigorous leadership may be expected from this cabinet.

Looking somewhat beyond the next few months, however, it is vitally necessary to recognize the second line of defense which the Emperor's far-seeing advisers have established in the making of this cabinet. Its political complexion proves unmistakably that it is a way-station on the road to the offer of a compromise peace. Only one additional change remains to be made in the cabinet as now constituted in order to give the political authority to seek terms. This change would be in the premiership. Yonai, already Deputy Prime Minister, could succeed Koiso; or General Nobuyuki Abe, who succeeded Koiso as Governor-General of Korea, could be brought home for the task. Such a development is virtually inevitable, as the blows in the Pacific strike closer to Japan. And the scope of the political shift already made indicates that the final change will be smoothly accomplished. If the elder statesmen's plans succeed, there will be no civil disturbances, as in Germany, when the decision to make the peace offer is eventually taken. The groundwork has been too carefully laid already in the Koiso cabinet. Japan's Army-Navy leadership will in all probability support the move toward a compromise settlement.

POSSIBLE TERMS OF PEACE OFFER

This offer will be carefully timed. We can probably expect it in the wake of Germany's final collapse, when Britain and the United States are in the trough of the wave, wrestling with such problems as the transfer of armed forces and equipment to the Pacific, and industrial reconversion. The terms will go far, possibly even to the extent of relinquishing all Japan's southern conquests and all of China Proper. Manchuria and Korea will not be offered, since they are both necessary for Japan if it is to remain a great power.

Is there any danger that this offer will be favorably entertained by the United States and Britain? If so, the time to reckon with the threat is now, for the Koiso cabinet strongly indicates that the day of the offer is approaching. Some voices will almost certainly be raised in favor of acceptance. It is to be hoped that they will be a small minority. There can be no question as to what such acceptance would mean. With the raw materials and industrial facilities of Korea and Manchuria, both intensively developed in the past decade, Japan would have all the necessary resources to heal the wounds of this war and lay careful plans for a full success in the next one. Within Japan itself the domination of the armed services, the monarchist bureaucracy and the business groups would be confirmed, and the Japanese people would again be yoked to the war chariot of their oppressors. China, disillusioned in the Western democracies, might fall an easy prey to the machinations of Japan's agents engaged in the work of preparation for the new conflict. These are the essential factors which make it necessary that the task now well begun be fully completed. The cost of stopping halfway to victory in the Pacific is too great to pay.

Mr. MORRIS. I offer you a partial list of writings by T. A. Bisson which has been compiled by Mr. Mandel. I ask you if you will look at that list and determine whether or not there are any inaccuracies.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that may not have to be done today. If the witness simply indicates he will so comply with this request, we can do that by subsequent correspondence and save time.

Mr. BISSON. Yes; that is all right. This is supposed to be a complete compilation?

Mr. MORRIS. Read the heading there.

Mr. BISSON. Partial list.

Mr. MORRIS. If you want to add anything to that list by title, by all means do it.

Look at the last page, please. The last page is writings of Frederick Spencer. There are nine articles on that list, I believe. I guess there are more than nine. There are 14 articles and reviews written for China Today under the name of Frederick Spencer. At the same time will you tell us whether or not all of those articles were written by you?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You have testified that you used the pen name of Frederick Spencer?

Mr. Bisson. You mean when I send back a statement on this.

Mr. Morris. On this, we will have to have sworn testimony and we should do that here. Whether or not all of these 14 items, reviews and articles were in fact written by you I mean. Can you determine that now?

Mr. Bisson. Do you have copies of those magazines here?

Mr. Morris. We have, Mr. Chairman. I wish you could determine now in the interest of time.

Mr. Bisson. It was my testimony and it is my knowledge of the articles in China Today under Frederick Spencer were by me, so that should cover this.

Senator Eastland. That may be admitted.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 737" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 737

Partial List of Writings by T. A. Bisson

America's Far Eastern Policy, IPR Inquiry Series.

Aspects of Wartime Economic Control in Japan, Secretariat Paper No. 2, 9th Conference IPR, Jan. 1945.

American Policy in the Far East, 1931–40, IPR Inquiry Series, 1939.

Japan's War Economy, Publication International Secretariat, IPR, Macmillan Co., 1945.

America's Far Eastern Policy, IPR Inquiry Series, Macmillan Co., 1945.

Prospects for Democracy in Japan, Published Under Auspices International Secretariat, IPR, 1949.

Japan in China, Macmillan Co., 1938.

AMERASIA

(Editorial)	Sept. 1935.
Behind Japan's Internal Crisis	June 1937.
Mao Tse-tung Analyzes Nanking—An Interview	Oct. 1937.
Aikawa Asks for Fifty Millions	March 1938.
Aikawa's "Open Door" (editorial)	April 1938.
Lessons of Taierhchwang (editorial)	May 1938
After Suchow, What? (editorial)	June 1938.
Japan Beats a Retreat (editorial)	Aug. 1938.
A Bold Proposal (editorial)	Sept. 1938.
Observations on Fascism in Japan	Sept. 1938.
Japan and the Open Door (editorial)	Oct. 1938.
No Collaboration With Chamberlain (editorial)	Nov. 1938.
Reviews:
Imperial Japan: 1926–1938, by A. Morgan	Nov. 1938.
Japan: The Hungry Guest, by G. C. Allen	Nov. 1938.
Hemisphere Armaments and the Open Door	Dec. 1938.
Mr. Bisson Replies to Mr. Nagano	Jan. 1939.
How the Axis Became a Triangle	Feb. 1939.
Japan's Next Move (editorial)	March 1939
Can Britain "Deal" With Japan (editorial)	July 1939.
Another Chance for Chamberlain (editorial)	Aug. 1939.
Japan Picks Up the Pieces (editorial)	Sept. 1939.
What Kind of "Peace" in the Far East	Nov. 1939.
No Progress in Puppet Land Puppetry (editorial)	Dec. 1939.
Review: The Inner Asian Frontiers of China, by Owen Lattimore.	May 1940.
Review: India Today, by R. Palme Dutt	Dec. 1940.
Japan's "New Structure" Falters	May 1941.
Toward Winning Far Eastern Security	Oct. 1941.

FAR EASTERN SURVEY

The Suzuki Cabinet ---------- May 9, 1945.
Nationalization by Request ---------- Aug. 1, 1945.
People's Army in Japan ---------- Aug. 15, 1945.
Japan Prepares for Peace Offensive ---------- Aug. 9, 1944.
China's Part in a Coalition War ---------- July 14, 1943.
Japan's New Industrial Conversion Program ---------- Sept. 8, 1943.
Reparations and Reform in Japan, Vol. XVI, 1947.

FOREIGN POLICY REPORTS

America's Dilemma in the Far East ---------- July 1, 1940.
Japan's "New Structure" ---------- April 15, 1941.

FOREIGN POLICY ASSOCIATION

Showdown in the Orient, World Affairs Pamphlets, No. 8 ---- Apr. 1940.
Clash in the Pacific, by T. A. Bisson and Ryllis Alexander Goslin, Headline Books.
Shadow Over Asia—the Rise of Militant Japan, Headline Books.

SOVIET RUSSIA TODAY

Far Eastern Front Against Aggression ---------- Nov. 1938.
To All Active Supporters of Democracy and Peace—Open Letter signed by T. A. Bisson. Sept. 1939.

PACIFIC AFFAIRS

The United States and the Far East ---------- Jan. 1932.
Review: Sun Yat Sen vs. Communism, by Maurice Williams ---------- Sept. 1932.
The United States in the Pacific ---------- Dec. 1932.
Japan Without Germany ---------- Dec. 1939.
The Price of Peace for Japan ---------- Mar. 1944.
Review: Battle Hymn of China, by Agnes Smedley ---------- Mar. 1944.
Review: The Japanese New Order in Asia, by Paul Einzy ---------- June 1944.
Japan as a Political Organism ---------- Dec. 1944.
The Zaibatsu's Wartime Role ---------- Dec. 1945.
The United States and the Orient, American National Survey, IPR 1118, 1930, Vol. III.
Problems of War Production Control in Japan, 1943, Vol. XVI.
Increase of Zaibatsu Predominance in Wartime Japan, 1945, Vol. XVIII.

CHINA TODAY

Under pseudonym of Frederick Spencer

Nanking Clasps Hands With China ---------- Oct. 1934.
Japan Takes Over Shanghai ---------- Nov. 1934.
Review: Twilight in the Forbidden City, by Reginald F. Johnston ---------- Do.
Chiang Kai-shek's Dictatorship Stumbles ---------- Dec. 1934.
Review: China, by L. A. Lydall ---------- Do.
To the American People (Open Letter) (signed by T. A. Bisson and Frederick Spencer). Feb. 1935.
Chiang Kai-shek Yields to Japan ---------- Mar. 1935.
Chiang Kai-shek "Rehabilitates" Kiangsi ---------- May 1935.
Review:
The Case for Manchoukuo, by Geo. Bronson ---------- Do.
Toward Understanding Japan, by Sidney L. Gulick ---------- Do.
Japan Calls the Tune ---------- July 1935.
The Missionaries Must Choose ---------- October 1935.
Chiang Kai-shek Licks Japan's Boots ---------- Nov. 1935.
The Same Old Wheeze ---------- Do.
Students Resist Nanking Betrayal ---------- Feb. 1936.
Case Studies in Japanese Imperialism ---------- Do.
Behind the Murders in Tokyo ---------- April 1936.
Viscount Ishii, Imperialist Diplomat ---------- June 1936.
The Gangly Days of American Imperialism ---------- August 1936.

Mr. Morris. Did you know Esther Carroll?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Morris. How well?
Mr. Bisson. I knew her from the American Friends of the Chinese People.
Mr. Morris. Were you a member of that organization?
Mr. Bisson. I was.
Mr. Morris. Did you ever speak under the auspices of the American League for Peace and Democracy?
Mr. Bisson. Yes; I imagine so.
Mr. Morris. What year?
Mr. Bisson. I don't recall the date.
Mr. Morris. Did you meet Susumu Okano in Japan?
Mr. Bisson. Yes. Mr. Okano, as I remember, was interviewed by several members of the Government Section.
Mr. Morris. He was the head of the Japanese Communist Party?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Morris. Did you meet him in connection with official duties?
Mr. Bisson. Yes.
Mr. Morris. I have no more questions. We do have one more exhibit. This is the Minutes of the Annual Membership Meeting of the American Friends of the Chinese People, dated January 23, 1938.
Senator Eastland. It will be admitted.
(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 738," and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 738

Annual Membership Meeting of the American Friends of the Chinese People

January 23, 1938—2:00 P. M.

Meeting opened by Mr. Julius Loeb who introduced the chairman for the day—Mr. Maxwell S. Stewart.
Mr. Stewart announces the Order of Business:

1. Discussion by Mr. T. A. Bisson.
2. Reports of work.
3. Discussion on reports.
4. Election of officers.

Mr. Bisson: Mr. Bisson pointed out the more optimistic perspective of the Chinese situation. Whereas five years ago all China was rent with partisan difference and political disunity, today the country is united. Despite Hirota's three demands, the infiltration of Japanese control in East Hopei and the attempt to invade Suiyuan, the Kuomintang was still waging war on the Communist forces.
The demand for unity was, however, growing steadily until finally the Generalissimo was detained at Sian by the rebellious troops under Chang Hsueh-liang who refused to fight their countrymen while the enemy kept advancing. In the spring of 1937 the Kuomintang could no longer hesitate and this led up to the present united-front situation. There are, however, some groups within the Kuomintang opposed to the arming of the population.
China more and more takes her place among the anti-fascist nations of the world. Her relations with the Soviet Union are more cordial than they have been in the last ten years.
Mr. Bisson concluded his report with an analysis of the military situation. He emphasized the necessity of organizing the peasantry for active defense and the extension of guerrilla warfare.
A brief period of questions and discussion followed.

REPORTS OF WORK

Mr. Julius Loeb (on history of organization): This organization was started on January 4th, 1933. Our activities during the past were mainly educational. Our Lecture Bureau, which includes Chinese, Japanese, and Korean speakers, has sent lecturers to all sorts of groups, and who have spoken to thousands of people monthly. We have a research staff and a School for Far Eastern Studies. Our other activities consist of holding mass meetings, sending delegates to various peace congresses and conferences, picketing, and holding demonstrations before the Japanese Consulate's Office and at Brooklyn docks where Japanese ships are being loaded with scrap iron. Several years ago we produced a documentary film, "The Birth of New China."

We started to publish a "Monthly Bulletin" in July 1933. By January 1934 the mimeographed CHINA TODAY was issued. The printed form was published October 1934, and has been issued consecutively every month since. It is the only magazine of its kind printed in the English language. Subscription price is $1.00 yearly; single copy, 10¢. We print ten thousand copies. The magazine circulates throughout the United States and in foreign countries. Our publication is barred in Japan.

The educational activities have been intensified and the membership and subscribers of our magazine have increased. A branch has been established in San Francisco, Portland, Chicago, and a group is functioning in Los Angeles. In the international field, Friends of the Chinese People have been established in Canada, Mexico, France, and in the Philippine Islands. A smaller group which has been operating in England recently merged with other larger groups which are helping China.

Having anticipated the present events in China, we were not unprepared for what we have to do now. We are holding larger meetings, have created a Boycott Committee, have held several anti-silk parades, and increased our picketing work, started to send organizers and lecturers out of town, and are increasing our efforts for the collection of funds for China's aid. From now on our work will be more national in scope than ever before. We must assist the Chinese people in all possible ways. By so doing we will justify our name, the American Friends of the Chinese People.

E. A. Schachner (editor, CHINA TODAY): "I don't know of any organization anywhere, considering the size and the number of people working with it, who do more good in the direction it wants to go than this organization. Perhaps the most effective weapon in the country on China is the magazine CHINA TODAY. The problem that faces us is very clearly this: to continue to make CHINA TODAY an effective factor in disseminating accurate information on China. We have got to be an expression in this country of all the various movements that are helping China at this moment.

"Our main object is the problem of funds. We have now the best correspondents on China as contributing editors. Our big difficulty is to get this magazine in the hands of the tens of thousands of interested Americans. We hope to improve the format considerably and increase the circulation in the very near future. We may start this very month with a new cover. We have already increased the size of the magazine by four pages. We haven't a circulation manager as yet, but hope to remedy the condition. I think if we get the cooperation from the executive council and from the friends of the organization, we can feel sure that the fine traditions of the organization will be continued and that CHINA TODAY will continue to be an important weapon in the country for the help that all of us want to give to the liberation and independence of the Chinese people."

Esther Carroll (Organization Secretary): "In 1934–35 only small groups of people were ready to listen to the message of China. All doubted Chinese willingness and ability to fight for her territorial integrity and independence. Then our speakers, our magazine CHINA TODAY, our forums, brought to the American public a better understanding of China's history, China's art, China's culture, and China's love for freedom. * * *

"When aggression in Spain broke out we knew that aggression in the Far East would follow. We knew that the aggressive fascist powers would want to ignite the flames of war in Asia too. But this time when Japan struck at China, when the heavy boot of the Japanese military swept through the ancient and beautiful cities, when the bombs of the Japanese war planes brought death and ruin to Shanghai, Nanking—a united and determined China came into being. The rest of the world, stirred and indignant, called for all support to the Chinese people and defeat of the Japanese aggressors. It was the voice calling for defense of a free Spain. * * *

"Such peace-loving Japanese friends like Mr. Kubota, Miss Matsui, Mr. Okano and others made it possible for us to act properly, timely. It was this teamwork and wise counsel that made it possible for us to organize the first big protest meeting on August 4th at the New School for Social Research to organize the successful and colorful mass meeting at Madison Square Garden together with the American League for Peace and Democracy on October 1st, for the airplanes and tugboats equipped with loudspeakers protesting the shipment of scrap iron to Japan, for the organization of the antisilk parade in New York, the participation of ten delegates equipped with speakers, posters, leaflets who went to the Congress for Peace and Democracy held in Pittsburgh. The sending of fraternal delegates to the American Federation of Labor and Committee for Industrial Organization conventions. It was with the help of our Japanese friends that we gave deserving 'receptions' and 'send-offs' to the Japanese war envoys who came to this country. And the special introductions which we gave for the Japanese labor misleader Bunji Suzuki who came here to defend his government. So much so that he never reached the east coast but went crying about the lack of appreciation on the part of American labor for the humanitarian aims of his government.

"It was with the help and advice of our Chinese and Japanese friends that we were able to have a series of demonstrations in front of many Japanese consulates throughout the country the day following the bombing of the 'Panay' and to distribute 120,000 leaflets in one week in the city of New York alone during the showing of the film. Over half a million pieces of literature and hundreds of thousands of buttons were sold and distributed.

"Branches of our organization were set up nationally and internationally. Everywhere people are clamoring for help and guidance. We hope to immediately after this meeting and with your help to raise the necessary funds for the purpose of sending out the best people of our staff on a tour together with Jack Chen and other Chinese friends who have kindly consented to participate and help.

"Relief work is not going fast enough. But good beginnings were made everywhere. Funds should be raised for medical aid, for doctors and nurses, and food to go in a constant stream to China. The boycott movement—well on its way must be rolled uphill faster. China Today, our magazine, must gain 2,000 new subscribers and thousands of additional readers in the next few months. We must intensify and increase throughout the country, pressure brought to bear on our government for an active peace policy, aid to China, and an embargo against Japan the aggressor. Let us help the people of our country to, in the spirit of true American tradition, give every substantial, moral, and material help to China in her fight for freedom, independence, progress, and world peace."

Conrad Komorowski (Educational Director) : Mr. Komorowski reported that the work of the Educational Committee was not quite satisfactory as yet. He pointed out that the feeling of sympathy for China is growing much faster than our organizational work is. The movement is growing by such leaps and bounds that we find ourselves lagging behind it. As an example of the good work the Educational Committee has done he mentioned the fact that in the last six or seven weeks the Lecture Bureau has sent out speakers who have reached approximately 10,000 people. He stressed that we must make new contacts—church groups, peace organizations, and trade-unions. We must utilize the radio. Another shortcoming is that we have no meetings for the speakers where they can discuss their work and settle mutual problems. This must be done soon, and also the issuance of a bulletin dealing specifically with the problems of the speakers and outlining facts for them.

The Library must be enlarged and improved to the point where it will be an actual help to the research workers. In this connection Mr. Rodgers was commended for the splendid work he has been doing in the research field. A research committee must be built around him to help carry on the work. The much-discussed speakers' class will be started some time in February. The plan is to get many new people from different organizations who can take our course and then return to their organizations to carry on the work there. One of the functions of the Educational Committee is to take care of the publicity that comes out of the office. With a larger, more efficient committee this can be done.

Mr. Komorowski concluded his report by appealing for volunteers for the Educational Committee. He urged all the members to bring to him the names of organizations, particularly church, peace, and trade-unions, which can be contacted by the Committee. In this way we can expand the work of the Committee and the organization.

Helen Holman (on Negro work) : Miss Holman spoke briefly on our work among the Negro people in Harlem. She emphasized that with Negro nationalist movements flourishing in Harlem, it is very important for our organization to become entrenched among the Negro people there and dispel all incorrect impressions that "Japan is a friend of the darker races," etc.

Mrs. Julia Church Kolar (Boycott Committee) : "In reviewing and setting down the actual work done by this committee since the first date recorded, that of September 10th, I came to this conclusion, that the results are amazing in comparison to effort put forth. On October 2nd in the 'Nation' we read the first call for the boycott in the voice of Mr. Maxwell Stewart. On October 6th, fifteen women picketed a Woolworth store and ours were the first feet to be marching for the boycott as far as I know. * * *

"We visited the Woolworth management in the Woolworth Building; we also called upon the executives in Macy's, Gimbels, Wanamakers', H. L. Green Co. We suggested they remove Japanese goods from their counters and make a statement to that effect. Leaflets were distributed. In December we had the Christmas banners. On Oct. 19th we had a picket line at the Commodity Exchange followed by a street meeting which was very successful, drawing a large crowd and which was written up in the papers. On Oct. 13th we visited the Viscous Company to get information about rayon for hose, and on the 14th five of us went as a delegation to the National Hosiery Manufacturers Association meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria where we had an interview with Mr. Consadine, the national director. * * *

"Oriental stores, stores selling only Japanese goods, wholesale houses, etc., were visited in order to get information and advise the trade what we were doing on the boycott. Letters came into the office from colleges, from students ,and from professors, from organizations in different parts of the country asking information about the boycott. We distributed thousands of buttons, visiting, meeting with them, and with leaflets. On November 10th two young women and myself boarded the S. S. Normandie with 2,000 cards which we distributed to oncoming possengers and handed in to staterooms. These announced that two fellow travelers—Baron Okura and Admiral Godo were Japanese envoys who were here on a so-called good will mission, and urged they be boycotted These cards were received with splendid response. A picket line was on the outside of the pier during this time. * * *

"Then began plans for the Women's Anti-Silk Parade which was held on December 11th when more than 2,000 women paraded in the name of peace. Among the women's organizations participating were: Theatre Arts Committee, League of Women Shoppers, Women's Division American League for Peace and Democracy, Women's Division, Medical Bureau for Spain. Free Synagogue Women, Progressive Women's Council, University Settlement Mothers Clubs, I. W. O. Women, Harlem Peace League, Workers Alliance, Union of Office and Professional Workers, Retail Store Employees, Federal Writers Project, W. P. A. Teachers Local, Teachers Union, Women's Advertising Guild, Social Workers, American Artists Union, International Labor Defense, Students, Chinese women and Spanish women, etc. Other prominent women who endorsed the parade were: Miss Hester Sondergaard, actress; Miss Frances Farmer, actress; Miss Claire Luce, actress; Miss Phoebe Brant, actress; Miss Edith Barret, actress; Mrs. Isobel Walker Soule, writer and editor; Mrs. Anna Rochester, writer; Miss Genevieve Taggart, poetess; Miss Grace Lumpkin, writer; Miss Muriel Rukeyser, poetess; Miss Eda Lou Walton, poetess. * * *

"On December 18th our committee was well represented at the Boycott Conference held at 99 Park Ave. I was placed on the resolutions committee. On January 19th we visited the directors office of the National Lamp Shade Manufacturers Association during the showing of the products to the trade. He told us how much the lamp shade business had changed, how no silk shades were made to sell for more than $15.00 where previously many had sold as high as $50.00. The following day they snapped two of our committee outside the Hotel New Yorker holding up signs urging buyers not to buy silk shades. We hope this photograph will be in the trade journal. * * *

"In concluding, I may make a few observations as to the future program of the boycott committee. So far we have not here in American been able to gain much support from church or religious groups. The Free Synagogue stands for the boycott. On February 6th at the Community Church Forum, the program is on the boycott with Dr. Sidney Goldstein and myself speaking in support of the boycott and the Women's Peace Union opposing the boycott.

Our Committee is now interested in getting out a film on the boycott. One last fact that strikes me as so humorous is that now manufacturers and wholesalers and employers generally are weeping over the hardship to the hosiery workers. Surely we all regret if any hardship must be endured by them, but some of these people I mentioned have not wept a single tear for the ten million now unemployed or the 20 million who were idle a few years ago. Surely we are sorry for any workers who may be temporarily out of jobs—American or Japanese, but our object is to save lives by smashing Japan's war machine and the boycott must go on, and it will.

"A mass meeting is to be held in Brownsville, Brooklyn. A women's antisilk parade in Brooklyn is scheduled for Lincoln's Birthday. Another women's antisilk parade should be held in Manhattan in the spring. Demonstrations on the waterfront, plans have been discussed as to a delegation to visit Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., asking him, in the name of humanity, to refuse more oil to Japan. We have made contact with the Federation of Women's Clubs and this is an important objective. There is work to be done in the trade unions.

"These are some of the activities that will be carried out and more will develop as events will determine and new ways to spread the boycott will be thought of. We ask all of you who are interested in this part of our work to join our Boycott Committee."

Jean Stanley (Finance): "You will all agree that money is one of the most important organizational matters. In the past half year, with war in the Far East, our organization has grown threefold and our great job is teaching the American people how they can help the Chinese people. Similarly our expenses have increased during this period, while our income, too, has been greater. In the next six months we must not only continue to carry out our work as we have been doing, but that we must also increase both our work and our scope. With this in mind, it is necessary to look into a budget for the next three months of our activity.

"The great items in a budget for our organization are: Publication of our organ in, CHINA TODAY and wages for our people who devote their full time to the organization and the magazine. There are four people on our payroll. Their salaries, based on a minimum living wage amounts to only $294.00 a month. We are considerably understaffed. CHINA TODAY, which will in the future come out in a color cannot be published for less than $275.00 a month. The circulation of our magazine has increased 250%. With these great leaps ahead, we have not yet been able to afford to add a circulation manager.

"Our income is derived from subscriptions to CHINA TODAY, cash sales of the magazine and newstand distribution both nationally and locally, and lecture fees from our speaking engagements. Here we must give due recognition and express our gratitude to Marcella Loring for donating and devoting her full time to the lecture bureau of our organization.

"In the budget for the next three months there will be a monthly deficit of $250.00 per month. This money will have to be realized from special affairs run for CHINA TODAY and the American Friends of the Chinese People as well as finding new friends to contribute regular monthly sums of however large or however small amounts each month. I hereby earnestly appeal to our membership and friends. If you know of anyone who can give even a small sum, as small as $1.00 a month, towards furthering the work of our organization, inform him of our needs".

Jack Chen (visitor from China): "If we stop Japan today the Rome-Berlin-Tokio axis is weakened, the fascists discouraged. America will not be alone in its efforts to stop Japan. $25,000 has already been sent from Soviet Russia to China for medical aid and civilian relief. In England a China Campaign Committee has been formed with three main aims: medical aid to China, the education of the English people on the Chinese question, and the furtherance of the boycott movement against Japan. Many churches, including the Unitarian Church are supporting this committee. Mass meetings of thousands of people have been arranged. At the Queens Hall meeting the Dean of Canterbury and various Members of Parliament were present as speakers.

"Demonstrations have been held at Trafalgar Square. Dockers of Southampton have refused to unload and ship Japanese goods. The dockers of Liverpool have pledged not to unload Japanese goods. Trade unions have gone on record for the boycott and imposition of sanctions. On February 14th an International Conference for the Boycott of Japanese Goods is being held in England. Delegates for all leading countries will attend. China must win, because China's struggle is the struggle for peace and for the welfare of the people of the world—and this cannot lose."

The floor was taken by an anonymous gentleman who introduced himself by saying that he had spent twenty-five years in Japan. He commended our work on the boycott. He warned us that the merchant dealing in Japanese goods must not be antagonized. We must approach them in a very nice way so that we will win them over as allies, instead of forcing them to become enemies. He also mentioned the fact that many Japanese students are not in accord with their government's policy. They are very carefully watched and are called to account by the Japanese Consul. We should seek these students out and encourage them to take a determined stand.

Bertram Loeb (Youth Director) : "Youth in China have taken leadership in the anti-Japanese fight. Youth here are also in the leadership in the movement for peace. The American Youth Congress passed a motion at its last Congress of solidarity with the Chinese youth. The American Student Union passed a Boycott resolution. The Youth section of the American Friends held a banquet commemorating the Peiping students demonstration. A China project was arranged for a group of office workers. Future work: Model Youth Legislature to have a resolution on the boycott. World Youth Congress being held in Washington this summer and should be attended by our representatives."

Mrs. Isadora W. Kerr: "I represent the University Settlement, the oldest settlement house in the city. We are affiliated to the American Friends of the Chinese People and some of us have individual membership in it. All of our people wear lisle hose. We have looked into the question of buying from Japan. We know that Macy's is sending their buyer to Denmark instead of Japan this year."

Miko Kubota : "I would like to send greetings of Japanese people to the American Friends. Esther Carroll pointed out that the Japanese people in New York have done something to help this organization. This is true and it is also true that this organization has done more for the Japanese people in New York as well as throughout this country. I appreciate this help. We Japanese will take care of the military-fascists of our country but we need your help. At present the greatest help which you can give us is your activities for aid to the Chinese people. Direct help to the Chinese people directly affects the Japanese people."

J. H. Lin: "On behalf of the Chinese people I express my sincere appreciation of the work you are doing. You have done your work very well considering the means at your disposal. You do your work with great devotion and your work not only affects the Chinese people in the United States but affects policy in China itself. I see that your activities are reported in the Chinese press. I hope that now we Chinese in the organization will be able to do more work than we have been doing. I think there are many tasks which confront us besides the dissemination of information on China, for there are some well-meaning pacifists who say 'what is the use of boycotting Japanese goods.' But the war is just beginning. The Chinese people will fight very well and will win this war. We must further developments on the boycott. We must render medical and moral aid to China. After all, the Chinese people are fighting a life and death struggle—but not for China alone. They are fighting for the peace and democracy of the entire world."

James Anderson: "I wish to speak briefly on our waterfront activities. We have organized meetings and demonstrations in front of the NYK and OYK lines in Brooklyn in the Red Hook district. I think in the near future we shall have to do what Jack Chen mentioned in his speech as regards the dockers of Southampton and Liverpool. On January 29th we intend to have another demonstration. We must begin on a real active period.

Other friends took the floor to criticize and further elaborate the reports given by the various officers.

Mr. J. H. Lin, on behalf of the Nominating Committee, proposes the following people as our national officers: Maxwell Stewart—National Chairman; Julius Loeb—National Vice Chairman; Helen Mallery—National Treasurer; Esther Carroll—Organizational Secretary; Manvil Rodgers—Recording Secretary. Motion made to accept these people as read. Seconded. Passed unanimously.

Mr. Julius Loeb in behalf of the Nominating Committee proposes enlarging Executive Council to 25 seats, leaving 5 seats open for possible additions. Proposes the following for the Executive Council: James Anderson, Esther Carroll, Helen Holman, Mrs. Julia Church Kolar, Mrs. Robert Kalvar, Mr. Conrad Komorowski, Mr. Kubota, Mr. J. H. Lin, Julius Loeb, Helen Mallery, Percy Quick, Manvil Rodgers, Ruth Rubin, Eugene Schrachner, Maxwell Stewart, Heng-chi Tao. Mr. Rothman moves to accept. Motion seconded and passed.

Mr. Julius Loeb announces that the National Advisory Board is in process of formation. The names being considered include: Miss Margaret Forsythe, Prof. Lovett, Mrs. J. C. Guggenheimer, Prof. J. Nash, Prof. McCall, and others.

Mr. Stewart in Summation : The American Friends of the Chinese People works under difficult conditions, but produces good results. New tasks lie ahead. While many of the things which need to be done by our organization are not, we must realize that no one organization can meet the needs of China. He emphasized that because we are the only organization in America today that is really initiating vigorous work for China, we have a stupendous task ahead of us. We have failed in the past because we haven't gone far enough. Our job calls for the various activities which have been mentioned today. Primarily we have to do what Jack Chen indicated is being done in Great Britain today. Firstly in aiding the people of China. Secondly raising money for relief. There are also a few other agencies which have attempted to do this. Thirdly, develop active resistance to the boycott. I really believe that the boycott alone can bring Japan to her knees. We should work among American workers and work for a government embargo. The primary challenge is to be a national organization—to spread out in the country. Branch out in church groups, settlements, youth groups, peace groups, etc. We must carry on the complete program which has been outlined by the speakers today. The first thing is to challenge—the next thing to do is to take it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the IPR in 1938 ask you to write a book on American policy in the Far East?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you write it?

Mr. BISSON. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you paid for it?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. How much were you paid?

Mr. BISSON. My memory is it was $250. It was not very much.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was the name of the book?

Mr. BISSON. The book was United States Policy in the Far East, or Toward the Far East, something of that kind. I am in doubt, because the title changed in the revised edition.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have a grant of any sort while you were writing that book?

Mr. BISSON. Well, the writing of that book coincided or overlapped, I think, with the time of the grant that covered my research trip to the Far East.

Mr. SOURWINE. You say the title changed. What did it change to?

Mr. BISSON. America's Far Eastern Policy.

Mr. SOURWINE. Under that name by whom was it published?

Mr. BISSON. The Institute of Pacific Relations and MacMillan.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember meeting Mr. Karl Wittfogel, Chao ting Chi, and Mr. Jaffe in late 1934?

Mr. BISSON. I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you say whether such a meeting took place?

Mr. BISSON. I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know there was testimony with regard to such a meeting in these hearings?

Mr. BISSON. I did. I saw that. I could not recall that meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, you have gone over all of the testimony in the published volumes of these hearings that concerns you, have you not?

Mr. BISSON. I have gone over the testimony that concerns me. I am not sure that I know it all.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you have had it pointed out to you?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. What I am saying is I am not sure I would remember everything that I have read about that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you write an article in 1943 for Pacific Affairs in which you discussed the democratic character of the Chinese Communist Party and referred to Chiang Kai-shek's party as feudal?

Mr. BISSON. You have your magazine wrong. You mean Far Eastern Survey.

Mr. SOURWINE. I will accept your correction.

Mr. BISSON. Is it July 1943?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You published it in the Far Eastern Survey?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that printed in the Far Eastern Survey of July 14, 1943?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. But while you were preparing that article you were employed by the Board of Economic Warfare?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were employed by the Board of Economic Warfare until July 10, 1943?

Mr. BISSON. No. May I say my salary continued to that date. I think my last official duties, actually performed duties with the Board, were at the end of May. I think I had a vacation of about a month or so before I joined the IPR.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you telling us you prepared this article during the month of June 1943, after you had left BEW?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did so in its entirety?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. By what time did you have to have it in order to have it published in the July 14 issue of Far Eastern Survey?

Mr. BISSON. I would not remember exactly. I think about a week or maybe 10 days.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then you did this whole article in a month or less?

Mr. BISSON. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember the manuscript of Lawrence Rosinger's book, Wartime Politics in China?

Mr. BISSON. The manuscript of it?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. Do you remember anything about the manuscript of that book?

Mr. BISSON. Not particularly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that manuscript sent to Mr. John Carter Vincent?

Mr. BISSON. I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ask him to send it back?

Mr. BISSON. I do not recall.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you familiar with the excerpt in that regard which is in the record of this committee?

Mr. BISSON. Apparently not; no.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you aware that on page 487 of this committee's record, exhibit No. 127, there is a letter dated November 12, 1943, from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations addressed to Mr. John Carter Vincent purporting to have been signed by you, saying:

DEAR MR. VINCENT: Knowing that you must be exceedingly busy at this time, I am sorry to bother you with a minor detail. We believe that the original copy of Mr. Lawrence Rosinger's manuscript on Wartime Politics in China was sent to you for criticism, but with your new responsibilities there is no reason to burden you with this task of reading and review. However, we are anxious to have the manuscript copy itself returned here for the printer if it is conveniently possible to have it sent back. Hoping to see you in New York soon.

Sincerely yours,

T. A. BISSON.

Did you write that letter?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you now remember any of the circumstances?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. It seems to me that, as I recall now, that manuscript had been sent to him sometime earlier and we had not heard from him, and we wanted the manuscript back.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where was it sent to him?

Mr. BISSON. Presumably they wanted his comments and criticisms for any changes that might be made.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you send other manuscripts to Mr. Vincent?

Mr. BISSON. Did I?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. I may have. I would not know whether I did actually.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whose idea it was to send manuscripts to Mr. Vincent?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it standard procedure? Was he one of those to whom manuscripts were sent?

Mr. BISSON. I should think so. It was standard procedure with the Foreign Policy Association in the earlier years.

Mr. SOURWINE. This was the IPR, not the Foreign Policy Association.

Mr. BISSON. It bears on this point, and I think I should state it. When I wrote a manuscript for the Foreign Policy Association reports, it was very often sent to Stanley K. Hornbeck. It would come back from him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who would send it to him?

Mr. BISSON. Either I would or the secretary of the Foreign Policy Association, asking him for his comments.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember participating in a draft of a statement which it was hoped or intended would be signed by Mr. Thomas Lamont and sent to the New York Times?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you consult with Mr. Lattimore about that matter; Owen Lattimore?

Mr. BISSON. I do not remember any consultation with him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Carter write to you about that matter?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; I think there was a memorandum he wrote to me about it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you remember anything about your participation in that?

Mr. BISSON. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember making a statement to the Daily Worker giving an interview urging President Truman to avert the danger of civil war in China by letting the Japanese surrender to the Communist Party?

Mr. BISSON. Is this a general letter with many signatures. I am not clear which you refer to.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. This is a statement specifically quoting you. It contains 20 other signatures. The statement was in a telegram signed by 20 other persons.

Mr. BISSON. You are asking whether I signed that statement?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

No, I am asking first whether you gave any interview to the Daily Worker. I will ask you about the statement in regard to the President in a moment.

Mr. BISSON. I do not recall any interview I gave to the Daily Worker.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you sign the telegram to the President?

Mr. BISSON. Yes; I think I did.

Senator EASTLAND. Were you ever interviewed by the Daily Worker?

Mr. BISSON. Not that I know of.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you ever write an article for the Daily Worker?

Mr. BISSON. No, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. New Masses?

Mr. BISSON. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you see Andrew Grajdanzev's report on Formosa in 1942?

Mr. BISSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that in connection with your official duties?

Mr. BISSON. Yes. It was because I was head of a Manchuria-Korea-Formosa unit in the Board of Economic Warfare.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you do anything to circulate that report?

Mr. BISSON. Yes, probably. It was probably circulated among the members of the Board.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you do anything to circulate it other than among the members of the Board?

Mr. BISSON. Outside the Board of Economic Warfare?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. BISSON. I may have.

Mr. SOURWINE. What might you have done to circulate it outside the Board of Economic Warfare?

Mr. BISSON. I do not recall specific individuals I may have sent it to, but it is possible that there were other outside individuals that I wanted to have read this.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, you did send it to outside individuals, did you not?

Mr. BISSON. I probably did. I do not recall any specific individuals.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you write an article for Spotlight on the Far East in February 1948?

Mr. BISSON. I probably did.

Mr. SOURWINE. I want to show you page 1018 of our hearings and ask you if the article there is one which you wrote? It has been identified as an article which you did write. Is that something you wrote?

Mr. BISSON. No; I do not think I wrote this at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. You deny having written that?

Mr. BISSON. This is a summary of what occurred at the conference mentioned in here.

Mr. SOURWINE. I don't think you are looking at the same thing.

Mr. BISSON. I am looking at the wrong one.

Mr. SOURWINE. The one right at the top of the page.

Mr. BISSON. This is again a similar situation, someone writing in Spotlight reporting what I said at this conference.

Mr. Sourwine. I did not say you wrote it. I am asking you if you did write it?

Mr. Bisson. No.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you give an interview to Spotlight on the Far East about that matter?

Mr. Bisson. About the conference?

Mr. Sourwine. Yes.

Mr. Bisson. I do not remember.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you give them any memoranda about it?

Mr. Bisson. I may have given them a memorandum. I made some remarks at the conference, and they may have wanted to know what those remarks were.

Mr. Sourwine. That publication is published by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. Bisson. That is right.

Mr. Sourwine. That is all.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, will you receive into the record this page 276 and up to page 284? It begins a new subject. It is from Amerasia of 1943.

Senator Eastland. It will be filed as an exhibit.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 739" and is as follows:)

Exhibit No. 739

[Source: Amerasia, September 1943, pp. 276–278]

The Two Chinas

This all-important question of the present trend in Chinese policy was discussed at some length by T. A. Bisson in an article on "China's Part in a Coalition War" published in the Far Eastern Survey of July 14. Mr. Bisson is extremely critical of the shortcomings of America and Britain in their dealings with China, but he also believes that the present political situation in China is cause for well-justified apprehension, since it affects "not only the current prosecution of the war, but also the prospects for the postwar emergence of a stable, united, and democratic China." Together with many other students of Chinese affairs, Mr. Bisson considers that "the early promise held out by the war for the broadening and deepening of Chinese unity through the achievement of liberal political and economic reforms has not been fulfilled." Instead, the conservative elements in the Kuomintang, alarmed by the growing influence of the Communist-led armies in the guerrilla areas of North China, and by the agrarian reforms and democratic electoral procedures introduced in these areas, have imposed a military blockade against them. Thus two Chinas have emerged, "each with its own government, military forces, and territories, and each with its own characteristic set of political and economic institutions."

These two areas are commonly referred to as Kuomintang China and Communist China, but Mr. Bisson maintains that the terms "feudal China" and "democratic China" more accurately describe the basic distinction between the two regions. His use of the term "feudal," Mr. Bisson explains, is intended to define a society "in which the landlord-peasant relationship is dominant and autocracy in government centers around this relationship." Its application to Kuomintang China is justified, in his opinion, by the fact that no serious effort has been made to uproot the landlord-usurer system, and that the great landlords have become the economic mainstay of the Kuomintang regime, while political power is exercised solely by the Kuomintang bureaucracy, with no provision for popular representation or control.

In so-called "Communist China," on the other hand, economic and political reforms have combined to free the peasant from "the crushing burden of rent, taxes, and usurious interest charges levied by a feudal economy," and to introduce a system of local democratic government in which all classes of the population, including the landlords and merchants as well as the peasants and workers, participate. "The task of statesmanship," declares Mr. Bisson, "is to merge these two Chinas into one. To be sound, such unification must come on the high plane of social advance and democratic reform. Until unification is achieved on this plane, China's full strength cannot be placed behind the war effort."

Mr. Bisson's use of the term "feudal" to describe conditions in Kuomintang China was sharply criticized by Dr. C. L. Hsia, Director of the Chinese News Service in New York, as well as by Chinese officials in Chungking. In a letter to the editors, published in the Far Eastern Survey of August 11, Dr. Hsia contends that Chinese landlords do not exercise any control over the Chinese government, and that the present land tax system and land reform policy pursued by Chungking have served to restrict the influence of the landlords and place greater financial burdens on them. Furthermore, Dr. Hsia argues that if one accepts Mr. Bisson's definition of feudalism, "we may say that practically all countries in the world, with the exception of the U. S. S. R., are feudal. Outside the U. S. S. R., we find peasants and landlords everywhere, whether the landlords are owners of large farms, great estates, oil wells, or iron and coal mines."

Dr. Hsia also criticizes Mr. Bisson for failing to state the specific means by which Chinese unity is to be attained, and contends that it is utterly impossible for the Chinese Government to introduce far-reaching political and agrarian reforms in the midst of war, disregarding, apparently, Mr. Bisson's contention that such reforms are being carried out today in the guerrilla regions. Dr. Hsia appears to be chiefly incensed, however, by the assertion that the mobilization of China's resources is being hampered by the feudal character of her political and economic structure. But if Chinese feudalism "passed away some twenty-one centuries ago," as Dr. Hsia maintains, how does he explain the statement made by Chiang Kai-shek on December 10, 1928, that the two basic objectives of the Chinese Revolution are international equality and the overthrow of feudalism?[1] It is also difficult to reconcile his claim that the power of the landlords is decreasing with the statement by Sun Fo, President of the Legislative Yuan, that "The landlords" share of the taxes is still too small, while the small owners are shouldering an increased burden. During recent years, the landlord class has been greatly enriched. * * * The big landlords are employing their surplus funds to increase their holdings. * * * Land ownership is more and more concentrated in the hands of the landlords." (Ta Kung Pao, October 16, 1942.)

The persistence of feudal or semifeudal elements in a country's political and economic strncture is certainly not peculiar to China. In essence, similar conditions exist in the southern states in this country, as well as in many parts of Europe. It is significant, for example, that the new Italian Action Party, headed by Count Sforza, has for one of the planks in its liberal, democratic platform: "wide agrarian reform looking toward the elimination of feudalism." The point to be stressed here is that the liberal and progressive forces that exist in Kuomintang China are being seriously hampered in their efforts to secure an extension of democracy in both the political and economic spheres as an essential factor in strengthening China's war effort. In their view, a program of land reform which would limit both the political and economic power of the great landlords is not only possible but essential in time of war in order to give the Chinese people a greater incentive to carry on the struggle. Furthermore, they maintain that greater political democracy is essential to secure the close cooperation of all anti-Japanese groups in China in the war against the invader. In this connection it is worth noting that not only the Chinese Communists but also many of the smaller political parties in China, some of them even more conservative than the Kuomintang, have demanded that they be granted legal status as minority parties and given the opportunity to be represented in the government by popularly elected delegates.[2]

At the moment, however, there appears to be little prospect of any change in the attitude of the Kuomintang leaders toward other political parties in China. On the contrary, recent reports have stressed the rising political tension in Free China, resulting from the Chungking Government's efforts to suppress the activities of all non-Kuomintang organizations. As applied to the Chinese Communist Party and the armed forces under its control, this policy has been expressed in the continued blockade of the guerrilla areas in the north by Central Government

[1] The speech containing this statement appeared in a book entitled "Collected Speeches of the Generalissimo" (in Chinese), published by the Cheng Chung Book Shop, Chungking, 1938, p. 5.

[2] For a detailed account of the organization of the "smaller parties" in China into the Federation for Political Democracy, see Amerasia, Spring Quarterly, April 25, 1943, pp. 97–120.

troops. No large-scale armed clashes have occurred between the Kuomintang and Communist forces since the "New Fourth Army Incident" of January 1941, but reports have reached this country in recent weeks that certain elements in the Kuomintang favor immediate steps to force the dissolution of the Border Region Government and of the armies under Communist leadership.

[Source: Amerasia, September 1943, pp. 278–281]

THREAT OF CIVIL WAR IN CHINA: A SOVIET OBSERVER'S VIEW

The most outspoken of these reports was contained in a United Press dispatch from Moscow on August 6, quoting excerpts from an article on China published in the official Soviet trade union journal, War and the Working Class. Its author, Vladimir Rogov, recently returned to the Soviet Union after serving for twelve years in China as a representative of the Tass agency, and the prominence given his report would seem to indicate that the Soviet Government is seriously disturbed by the current Chinese situation. For purposes of record, the full text of Mr. Rogov's article is published herewith:[1]

"During six years of war, the Chinese command, at the cost of considerable territorial losses, succeeded in saving its troops from defeat. Despite heavy odds, the Chinese army preserved its capacity for resistance. The Japanese militarists failed in their plan for a rapid conquest of China, and proved incapable of breaking the resistance of the Chinese people. The war in China became prolonged, threatening Japan with ever-increasing complications.

"In defensive battles on an extremely long front, the Chinese army gained the necessary time for reorganizing its troops and strengthening their fighting capacity. Soon after the fall of Wuhan (Hankow) in October 1938, Chiang Kai-shek outlined a program for the reorganization of the country's armed forces, the principal points of which were as follows: First, China's national policy must become the policy of a long, defensive war. Second, the guerrilla movement must be developed. Third, in order to conduct a general counter-offensive, a new army must be created, many millions strong and trained in the use of the most up-to-date war equipment.

"However, the plans of Chiang Kai-shek met with covert resistance from the outset. The reforms in the army with the aim of training new units, reorganizing control and strengthening discipline were not completed, and the task of creating an economic base for war was not accomplished. The main reason for this was the divisive work of the 'appeasers,' the defeatists, and capitulators.

"The war economy resources of National China (Free China) are large and afford an adequate base for the rearmament and supply of the army. On its territory National China has all the strategic raw materials necessary for the conduct of a prolonged war. Nevertheless, large-scale construction has not been undertaken because industrial and financial circles prefer to engage in profiteering rather than invest their capital in the armaments industry.

"This situation has led to the weakening of the army's fighting capacity and to greater dependence on the supply of arms from the United States and Great Britain who, owing to their own war, find it extremely difficult to supply China. Elements favoring capitulation have sabotaged the measures for the mobilization of China's internal resources intended to establish the national economy on a war basis, as well as the measures for waging economic warfare against the Japanese invaders.

"China has no lack of human reserves, but the Chinese army receives no regular reinforcements. There are insufficient trained reserves. There is no organized military registration of the population, and law providing for universal military service is not fully enforced. The army also receives a large percentage of men unfit for service.

"The main defect of the Chinese army is the shortage of trained commanders. All foreign military observers who have visited the Chinese army agree that the Chinese soldier is tenacious and enduring in the field and is undemanding as far as food and uniforms are concerned; whereas the commanding personnel is extremely weak and backward in military and technical training. The army's equipment is still at a low level, and the organization and control of the troops is far from perfect. One of the defects of the Chinese army is the lack of an effective united command and of coordinated operations on the separate fronts. The internal friction and suspicion among the generals cannot help but affect the fighting capacity and discipline of their troops.

---

[1] Since Mr. Rogov's original article in Russian has not yet arrived in this country, this text is based on the English translations cabled from Moscow by the United Press and Inter-Continent News.

"In Chungking, of course, there are no open advocates of surrender, but this does not mean that there is a lack of capitulators and defeatists there, some of whom occupy important positions in the Kuomintang. These defeatists elements have evolved a theory of an 'honorable' peace with Japan, and are weakening China by their political intrigues. There is no doubt that these elements represent a serious menace.

"Since December 1941, the Japanese have concentrated their attention on the war in the Pacific, while the war in China has receded into the background. This has led to the appearance among Chinese political and military leaders of a certain complacency, and the Japanese are taking advantage of this attitude to intensify their 'peace offensives.' They are now making every effort to deepen and sharpen internal conflicts in China to weaken Chinese resistance and strengthen their own position. In this attempt they are aided by the maneuvers of the Chinese 'appeasers' who are doing their utmost to undermine the military collaboration between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party and to incite the persecution of the Eighth Route and New Fourth Armies which, as units of China's united national army, have inscribed many heroic pages in the history of the resistance of the Chinese people to the Japanese invaders.

"These armies consist of the most progressive, steadfast, and self-sacrificing people of China. They are led by the Chinese Communist Party which enjoys merited prestige among the broad masses of the working people as the organizer of their struggle for national freedom and independence. Today, by direct military pressure, new attempts are being made to bring about the dissolution of the Chinese Communist Party and the liquidation of the Eighth Route and New Fourth Armies. The Chinese high command has transferred new divisions to the districts where these armies are stationed, with large supplies of munitions and food, obviously in preparation for an attack on the Eighth Route and New Fourth. If these moves are crowned with any success, anti-democratic and anti-popular forces will gain the upper hand in Chungking, and if fratricidal war results, it will lead to fatal consequences for the Chinese war of liberation. Such an unprovoked attack by the Chungking generals against the Eighth Route and New Fourth Armies would be tantamount to a knife in the back of the Chinese people, and would be of incalculable aid to the Japanese imperialists.

"A number of outstanding Kuomintang leaders strongly oppose the treacherous activities of the appeasers, capitulators, and provocateurs, and demand closer collaboration with all anti-Japanese groups. The discontent with the Kuomintang's policies in this respect is widespread throughout China. However, the Chinese Government has shown no firmness in eliminating the capitulators who are undermining national unity and weakening China's resistance against Japanese aggression.

"In the last few years I have had occasion to visit more than fifteen provinces of China. Both at the front and deep in the rear, in occupied Shanghai and Manchuria, representatives of various groups in China watch with grave concern the criminal activity of the traitors, turncoats, defeatists, and saboteurs. Nevertheless they are unanimous in their confidence that all efforts to provoke civil war are doomed to failure because the people of Free China, in hard fighting, have accumulated great strength and will not permit the cause of national liberation to die.

"With large strategic raw material resources and tremendous manpower reserves at her disposal, China has every possibility for victory over the enemy. The necessary conditions for this victory are the realization of radical measures for reorganizing the entire economy on a war footing, subordinating all economic life to the needs of the front, and strengthening the armed forces against capitulation and defeatism, and, most important of all, the genuine unity of all national forces in the struggle for freedom and national independence.

"The extent to which Chiang Kai-shek and the Chungking authorities recognize the importance of this principal condition and succeed in averting the danger of internal struggle, now being fostered by the enemies of the Chinese people, will determine whether the exhausting war forced upon China by Japanese imperialism will be brought to a successful conclusion in the interests of the Chinese people as a whole."

Many Americans presumably discounted Mr. Rogov's comments on the grounds that he is naturally prejudiced in favor of the Communist-led armies of China and therefore inclined to take an exaggeratedly hostile and alarmist view of Kuomintang policies. But though one may question his contention that as of today China possesses all the strategic raw materials necessary for the conduct of the war, and his implication that today she has the potential strength to defeat Japan single-handed, his warning regarding the dangers of renewed civil strife in China cannot be dismissed as merely pro-Communist propaganda.

As we noted earlier in this article, many competent American students of China have expressed concern in recent months over the suppression of liberal forces in China and the growing influence of reactionary elements within the Kuomintang. These include writers who have staunchly supported the Chinese Government for many years, and who can in no way be regarded as Communist sympathizers. Their view is simply that the preservation of Chinese unity and the strengthening of the liberal, democratic forces in China are essential not only for the success of the United Nations war effort in Asia, but also for the emergence of a strong and stable China in the post-war world. For this reason, they are sincerely concerned over the fact that the trend toward greater political unity and democracy in China, which appeared so promising in the early years of the Sino-Japanese war, has now been reversed in favor of a strengthened dictatorship by the Kuomintang and the suppression of groups seeking political and economic reforms.

An excellent analysis of the basic cause of the political crisis in China was provided by Mr. Raymond Gram Swing on August 11. Mr. Swing has earned a well-merited reputation both in this country and abroad as an informative and reliable news analyst, and it may be assumed that his appraisals of the Chinese situation was based on the authoritativeness by millions of listeners throughout the world, but in view of their importance, it seemed desirable that they should be made available to Amerasia readers in printed form. We are therefore including in this record, with Mr. Swing's permission and approval, that portion of his broadcast which dealt with China.

[Source: Amerasia, September 1943, pp. 281–284]

An Appraisal of Conditions in China by Raymond Gram Swing

An item crept into the news yesterday about China which calls for careful appraisal. It came first from London. Chineses circles there authoritatively denied that the Chinese Government is taking military action against the so-called Chinese Communists. And the same denial later reached this country from Chungking direct, in a wireless to the New York Times. The denials were evoked by an article appearing in a trade-union newspaper in Moscow, by a writer named Vladimir Rogov, who has spent the last twelve years in China, and stated the appeasement and defeatist sections of the Chinese Government have been undermining the war effort by seeking to provoke internal trouble and urging dissolution of the Communist units of the Chinese forces. He said that the Chineses Government is facing serious internal difficulties that could result in civil war or Japanese victory. The Chinese authorities quoted in the New York Times categorically denied these assertions and the Times correspondent adds an observation: "In view of month-old rumors of trouble with the Communists breaking out again, this news is considered of the highest importance."

These rumors have reached this country, too, and caused great concern, for a forcible attempt to liquidate the Eighth Route or Communist army, repeating the attack on the Fourth Army, would do a most unwelcome injury to the United Nations war against Japan. They were accompanied by reports that the Chinese Government has yielded quite visibly to reactionary influences, and that the prospects of early democratization, in our sense of the word, were fading away. Thus the Chinese cooperatives, while not suppressed, were finding it hard to maintain themselves. Accepting the news as true that no forceful measures are planned against the Communists, the situation in China still remains critical and disquieting. And it is a situation not appreciated by the public in this country, though it is well enough known by the China experts. The simplest statement of the facts is enough to show that the problem is well-nigh unsoluble. The Communists hold sections of Shensi, Shansi, and Kansu Provinces, a fairly small territory, with a population of approximately five or six million. Here they have instituted their agrarian and social reforms. For these are not Marxian Proletarians, these so-called Communists, they are agrarian radicals, trying to establish democratic practices and particularly to break up the great estates, so that the farm worker can have individual status and now own property. A word is in order about these agrarian radicals. They should not be called Communists, whatever their origin may be. They have developed in another direction. At the same time that the Kuomintang has gone to the right, the Communists have become versed in the democratic art of compromise. They have had to deal with the landlord, too, to convince him they are not simply going to expropriate his land. T. A. Bisson, writing for the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, objects to the labels, Kuomintang China and Communist China. "These are only party labels," he says. "To be more descriptive the one might be called feudal China, the other, democratic China." The Communists have their own army, and though it is only a small percentage of the total of Chinese forces, it has produced more than two-fifths of the casualties inflicted on the Japanese in 1941 and 1942. The Communists were the ones who first insisted on resistance to Japan. They precipitated the union of action against the Japanese. But they settled down in the territory they occupied, established their own regime, maintained the independence of their army, which they now refuse to give up.

Obviously this is a contradiction of unity, and the Central Chinese Government—the Kuomintang Government—feels it cannot permanently tolerate it. Chiang Kai-shek, who had waged war against the Communists before the war opened against Japan, now has blockaded the Communist territory, and is using some half million troops to isolate it from the rest of China. Some of Chiang's crack troops are kept there. They have not smelled gunpowder in any clash with the Japanese. They are on guard to hold the Communist movement in check. I should add that Communist influence extends much farther than the blockaded province. It seeps throughout the North, and the celebrated Chinese guerrillas operating against the Japanese in the North function not as agents of the Central Government but of the Communists. So the Communist movement is far more pervading and significant than a regime established in provinces of five to six millions.

When the Comintern was abolished, some leaders in the Central Government argued that this meant the severance of Russian connection with the Chinese Communists, and steps could safely be taken to liquidate them as an independent movement. So the troops blockading the Communists were apparently strengthened, though that has been denied, and it is believed that the Communists were presented with terms. They had to join Central China and put their army under Chiang or disband it. They either had to become a minority party, or accept membership in the Kuomintang. The Kuomintang is the single party which rules China today and does it with the trappings of a secret police, a youth movement, and the successful elimination of most civil rights. The Communists are believed to have rejected the terms. If they turn their army over to the Central Government they lose their identity. If they lose their identity they lose their cause, and abandon hope of introducing their social and agrarian reforms in all China. And they do not believe that as a minority party they would be allowed to exist. From their point of view, they are just as logical as the Central Government. And there is little that outsiders have been able to suggest as a solution of the problem. If the Communists were to come into Central China and serve as a minority and opposition party they would have to have a guarantee that they were to be allowed to function. But the only convincing guarantee that Chiang could give them would be to show some interest in their reforms. He might introduce some of them. But that is out of the question, because Chiang Kai-shek derives most of his power from the very landlord class which the Communists are seeking to dethrone. His power is from these great owners, and from militarists and bureaucrats in sympathy with them. So whatever Chiang may feel about the reforms, he would be powerless to institute them.

As to Chiang himself, it used to be thought that he was sympathetic with the reforms, and that he looked forward to the introduction of true democracy after the war, which obviously would bring reforms in its train. Democracy is the end goal of the Yat-sen policy to which Chiang is committed. But doubts have been raised as to Chiang's own views. He has recently published a book on foreign and domestic policy [1] which now becomes the official guide and textbook for Kuomintang, a kind of bible of Chinese policy.

It has not been translated into English, as Chiang decided not to permit it to be translated. In spirit it is an antiforeign book. It also is anti-imperialist, and it lays down the principle that China itself will not pursue an imperialist policy. But it does not much differentiate between American policy and imperialism, and it is not friendly to the tenets of Western liberalism.

On the subject of Democracy, Chiang writes that there can be other types of it than the Western kind, and states that the destiny of China rests with the Kuomintang. In other words, while there can be other factions in theory, China will keep the one-party system, continuing its youth movement, and presumably its rigid controls. There is no mention in the book of land reforms. So there is no basis in this doctrine on which to build hopes for what we should consider a democratic movement in which the agrarian radicals would have some political weight. The news that the Central Government is not going to use force against the Communists is, as the Times correspondent pointed out, of the highest importance. It means that China will not be engulfed in a civil war at once. But it also is clear that this simply postpones a crisis for which no solution appears available. While it is undeniable that this is an internal affair of the Chinese it is not one that China's allies can ignore, while the war is in progress. Nor will this country be able to ignore it after the war is over. The Chinese people have all the sympathy of this country, and deserve it all. They will need American loans and equipment after the war. Their place as a power and their leadership for stability and development must be assured. So long as the United States has Pacific responsibilities what happens in China will affect us, and hence interest us. And though it is important news that force is not going to be used against the Eighth Route Army, one can only wish that the crisis might have a constructive solution, not merely a postponement.

Senator EASTLAND. You may be excused and the hearing is closed.

(Whereupon, at 12:25 p. m., the hearing was closed, subject to call.)

---

[1] "China's Destiny," not to be confused with "Resistance and Reconstruction" recently published in this country by Harpers. "China's Destiny" is published only in Chinese, and is reported to have already sold over a million copies in China. It is virtually impossible to obtain a copy in this country.

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to call, at 10:45 a. m., in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Homer Ferguson, presiding.

Present: Senators Eastland and Ferguson, and Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

Senator FERGUSON. The committee will come to order.

You may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give your name and address to the reporter?

TESTIMONY OF JULIAN R. FRIEDMAN, BERKELEY, CALIF.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Julian R. Friedman, 2466 Hilgard Avenue, Berkeley, Calif.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. At the present moment I am a lecturer in political science in the department of political science, University of California.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that a full time job?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No; it is a three-fourths time job at the present time, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. What is your salary?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am receiving for this term—I have just started as of January 1952—about $1,700, $1,680.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your age, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am 31 years old.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like the record to show that the witness has been sworn in executive session.

Senator FERGUSON. You have been sworn. You understand that.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yesterday; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Friedman, were you ever an employee of the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I was an employee of the State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. What position or positions did you hold at that time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In September 1943, I was employed by the State Department as a junior professional assistant in what was then the Office of the Assistant Adviser on International Economic Affairs. Subsequently that office became the Division of Labor Relations, and I believe, while I was still there, the Division of International Labor, Health, and Social Affairs.

I remained in the Division until, officially, November 20, 1944, when I was appointed Divisional Assistant in the Division of Chinese Affairs.

At the time I left the Division of Labor Relations, I was then the assistant to the Chief, with the rating of P–2, transferred to the Division of Chinese Affairs also with the rating of P–2. I was in the Division of Chinese Affairs until my assignment, my appointment, to the Foreign Service Auxiliary, which was officially made, I believe, on October 5, 1945.

In the period in which I was a member of the Division of Chinese Affairs, I was officially assigned to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco from, I believe, April 18, until July 1, 1945, and served on the Internatonal Secretariat as the Assistant Secretary of Committee 2, Commission 1.

Mr. Morris. That is, you were assigned by the State Department to the International Secretariat for the United Nations Conference?

Mr. Friedman. I was made available to the Secretariat.

Mr. Sourwine. What is the difference between "made available" and "assigned"? You used the term "made available."

Mr. Friedman. The specific difference, I think, is that the International Secretariat was not an American Secretariat but an international one, for which several governments made personnel available.

Mr. Sourwine. Were you required to go there? Was that a part of your duties?

Mr. Friedman. When I was assigned and accepted, it was part of my duties; yes, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. A part of your duties for the State Department?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir. At the assignment to the International Secretariat, my duties were entirely for the International Secretariat.

Mr. Sourwine. Did the State Department pay you during that time?

Mr. Friedman. I believe the State Department did. Yes; I believe the arrangement was that each government would pay the personnel which it made available to the International Secretariat. I am not quite sure on that point, but I think I am correct.

Mr. Sourwine. Is it your judgment that during that period of time you owed no allegiance to the State Department which was paying you, but you did owe allegiance to the International Secretariat?

Mr. Friedman. I believe I owed allegiance or loyalty for the duration of the conference to the International Secretariat, that I would perform my duties as an international civil servant for that period.

Senator Ferguson. Was this before the Charter had been approved by the Congress?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, Senator.

Senator Ferguson. How could you, as an employee of the United States Government, the State Department, accept employment from an international organization without a transfer over to them?

Mr. Friedman. To the international organization? I am not sure of the details under which the arrangement was made. I know I was one of several persons from the State Department, which the State Department made available to the conference. I am certainly not familiar——

Senator FERGUSON. You were not, then, when you were on that conference out at San Francisco, working for the United States Government. You felt that your duty was to a foreign organization, an international organization?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Excuse me, sir. Not a foreign organization.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, at least foreign to the United States, because it was international.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, it was international in the sense that the United States was also a participant and a principal participant and the host at San Francisco. I should make that clear, that the United States Government was the host to the conference.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, how many of our employees were assigned to international organizations like that, out of San Francisco?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I cannot say specifically the number of persons, sir, but my impression was that the international conference probably was staffed, oh, with 95 percent Americans made available from the State Department and other agencies of the United States Government.

Senator FERGUSON. That was at least your understanding, that you were working for the international group.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. For the International Secretariat, to which the State Department provided part of the personnel; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. How long after you left college did you go into Government?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I graduated from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Medford, Mass., in, I believe, June 1943, and entered the State Department in September 1943.

Senator FERGUSON. Just afterward?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. A few months, yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Friedman, were you assigned by the State Department to the Hot Springs Convention of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I was.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you were sent there on official duty for the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, what were your duties at Hot Springs?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. My principal duty was to serve as a reporter of committees of the conference, which was an international conference of the Institute of Pacific Relations. That was my principal duty; in addition to which I arranged, at the conference, a party, a social gathering, on behalf of some members of the American delegation, particularly Mr. John Carter Vincent, who was an American delegate to the conference; and subsequently, subsequent to the conference, I helped the Protocol Division of the State Department arrange a cocktail party or tea party for the delegates at Blair House.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I inquire about that Blair House conference? Because we have been interested in that.

You were the person who helped the Protocol Division arrange it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe that I helped make the arrangements; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. What were your duties in connection with those arrangements?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall specifically. I think principally to inform the Protocol Department that it was desirable to have such a reception.

Mr. Sourwine. Wait a minute. That is a little different from helping them arrange it. That is bringing it about, isn't it?

Senator Eastland. Let him finish his answer.

Mr. Friedman. Thank you, Senator.

If I am not mistaken, the party was to be given on behalf of the Under Secretary, who was Mr. Joseph Grew at that time. Mr. Grew was the host.

The Protocol Department consulted the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, the Division of Chinese Affairs, as to the type of party that was wanted—the number of persons who might be expected.

Mr. Sourwine. You spoke of your duties in convincing the Protocol Department that such a party should be held.

Mr. Friedman. Not convincing the Protocol Department. It was decided in the Department that the Under Secretary should offer a party, since so many of the delegates to the conference were distinguished persons from many foreign countries.

Mr. Sourwine. How was that decided?

Mr. Friedman. That I don't know, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. Who gave you your first instructions with regard to it?

Mr. Friedman. To the party?

Mr. Sourwine. Yes.

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall.

Mr. Sourwine. Did anyone ask you to go to protocol and tell them there should be such a party?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall that, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you make the first contact with protocol about this party?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall that either.

Mr. Sourwine. What was it that you had in mind a moment ago when you started to say something about telling protocol, or informing protocol, of the need for having such a party?

Mr. Friedman. That the Department had decided that such a party should be held—a party given by the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Grew.

Senator Ferguson. You mean the State Department?

Mr. Friedman. The State Department; yes, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you have anything to do with selecting the list of guests for that party?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. Did you know that that party had been suggested initially by the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall whether the institute took the initiative. I don't quite recall the details for arranging that affair. The point was that there were so many distinguished guests in Washington that it seemed to be one of the desirable duties of the Under Secretary to entertain them following the institute's conference. I am not sure whether the arrangements were made or proposed by the institute. I am not sure whether they were proposed before the conference was over or subsequent to the conference.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that the institute had anything to do with it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Since the party was for delegates to the international conference, I presume that the institute itself was consulted.

Mr. SOURWINE. I asked what you know, Mr. Friedman.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't know specifically.

Mr. SOURWINE. You vouchsafed the information here that you had assisted in preparing for that party.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, will you tell us anything about what you did, what your duties were, in connection with that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, as I say, specifically my duties were at that time in connection with the Protocol Department, informing them of the number of guests, the type of party that was desired.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you do that on behalf of Mr. John Carter Vincent? Was he your chief then?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. He was my chief at that time; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You spoke in his name when you made those arrangements?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am not sure that I did, sir. I am not sure whether I spoke directly in his name.

Mr. SOURWINE. You got your authority by virtue of your position in his Division, did you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. My authority was my State Department contract. I was a member of his Division. And this Division was interested in this party at Blair House.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you ever tell anybody you were a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I don't believe I have told anyone.

Senator EASTLAND. You don't believe you did. Do you not know?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am quite certain I did not, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Quite certain?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Now, why is there a little question in your mind, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, since——

Senator EASTLAND. Now, do not hesitate. You can answer the question without hesitating. You have been making a good witness.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have just been on the cautious side, since in a sense over the past years I have spoken to people, and as I say I am almost certain that I have never told anyone that I was a member of the Communist Party. I am almost prepared to say that I never told anyone I was a member of the Communist Party.

Senator EASTLAND. Almost prepared?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You know, his question did not say "a member of the Communist Party."

Senator EASTLAND. No.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am taking that to mean, sir, a member of the Communist Party.

Senator EASTLAND. Why is there a question in your mind about whether you told people you were a Communist or not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Just on the cautious side, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Cautious, why? Because you might have?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I have, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. But you are cautious because you might have told somebody you were a Communist. Then if you specifically denied it, you would be guilty of perjury; was that your reason?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I just want to be accurate and provide the information that the committee is seeking.

Senator EASTLAND. Go ahead.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your last assignment with the State Department, Mr. Friedman? We left you at the United Nations Secretariat, did we not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. After that what were your duties with the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. When I returned from San Francisco I remained with the Department until my appointment to the Foreign Service or Auxiliary, which I believe I said was October 1945.

I went to Shanghai as a junior economic officer assigned to the American consulate general in Shanghai, to perform the duties of a labor attaché in China. And I remained in that post from October 1945, or perhaps it was November 1 by the time I got started, until my return to the United States, which was when I departed from Shanghai in November 1946.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Now, what was your next employment after that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. From February 1947, when I landed, reached the United States from China—I took a slow boat from China on the way back—I remained in the New York area. I visited Harvard University. I visited Johns Hopkins University, to lecture on China. I visited Washington, D. C., to lecture at a local meeting of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I was unemployed for——

Senator EASTLAND. Had you been connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations in any way?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I had been a member of the institute following the conference in 1945, Senator.

I believe I took out my membership about January 1945 or February 1945.

Senator EASTLAND. Why?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Why did I take it out?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes. Why did you join the institute?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I must say that my experience at Hot Springs impressed me with two things—its international nature, and secondly, the high level of discussion and material which was identified with it.

Senator EASTLAND. And it was a fact that the institute was influential with the State Department. That was a factor?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; that did not come into it, as I recall. I also wanted to get the publications of the institute, which I believe required taking out some form of membership.

Senator EASTLAND. But while it did not influence you in joining, you also knew that the institute was very influential with the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Influential in what sense, Senator?

In respect of what?

Senator EASTLAND. Policies and personnel.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I did not know that the institute was influential with reference to policy and I certainly did not know that the institute, as you suggest, was influential in respect of personnel.

Senator EASTLAND. Then, if they were not influential, why did the Department assign you to Hot Springs?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Since the Institute of Pacific Relations has, over the I believe past 20 or 25 years—I am not sure of the exact length of time—held international conferences, the United States was the host country in this case, and the institute wanted to have a representative of the American delegation, and it wanted, I believe, to provide the American delegation with an opportunity of sending observers who were neither delegates——

Senator EASTLAND. Yes. Now, what other private organizations did the State Department assign personnel to, to cover their conferences?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In this matter, sir? That is, personnel to serve on the Secretariat?

Senator EASTLAND. Just like you were assigned to Hot Springs.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't know, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Well, as a matter of fact, no other organization. Is that not right?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am not familiar with whether the Department had a policy in this respect. All I know is in a sense my own empirical experience.

Senator EASTLAND. Do you not think that the institute was influential with the State Department, and, in fact, that it is demonstrated that it is, when you, as an employee of the State Department were assigned to that conference? Now, you want to be fair about this thing.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, let me put it this way: This was one of the international meetings which I mentioned. These were international meetings in which personnel of the first eminence attended.

Senator EASTLAND. Yes. I understand all that. Now, answer my question, "Yes" or "No," and then you can explain.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Could I have the question again, please?

Senator EASTLAND. Do you not think that, by virtue of the fact that you, an employee of the State Department, were assigned to that conference at Hot Springs, Va., it showed that the institute was influential with the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would say that I just can't answer "Yes" or "No," Senator, to that.

Senator EASTLAND. You can answer "Yes" or "No" and then explain your answer.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would say "No," sir; it did not show that the institute was influential with the State Department.

Senator EASTLAND. Well, you answer is "No," then.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. May I explain my answer, sir?

Senator EASTLAND. After you answer it, I am going to let you explain.

Now, what is your answer?—"Yes," or "No"?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The answer is "No," Senator.

Senator EASTLAND. All right. Now explain.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not believe that the institute was influential with the State Department in respect of policy or personnel; that the Department considered the conference in Hot Springs in 1945 of sufficient significance to make available personnel when the Institute of Pacific Relations made it known that personnel would be welcomed.

Senator EASTLAND. All right; now you say, in regard to policy and personnel, that the institute was not influential with the State Department. That is your answer; is it not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. All right; and in what respect was the institute influential with the State Department? You limited your answer to two things: that they were not influential in policy and personnel.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I took the two points that you had mentioned before, Senator.

Senator EASTLAND. All right.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I should say that the institute, to my knowledge, was not influential in any other respect as far as the State Department was concerned.

Senator EASTLAND. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, when you lectured at John Hopkins University, with whom did you negotiate to carry on that lecture?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. With Mr. Owen Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. At that time, you were unemployed?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I was unemployed.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever get any compensation for that lecture?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe not, sir; no, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. What was your next employment, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. My next employment was the London School of Economics of the University of London.

Mr. MORRIS. How long were you there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Which began in January 1948. If I may just fill in the period——

Mr. MORRIS. Go ahead.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In September 1947, I went abroad to be a graduate student at the London School of Economics. I arrived in London, in September, registered for courses at the school, and in January there was a vacancy of an assistant lecturer in the field of colonial social science. I was appointed to the lectureship after appearing before a selection board of distinguished British scholars.

I was appointed to the assistant lectureship, and then subsequently, I think in October 1950, after serving in the assistant lectureship, I was appointed a lecturer in colonial administration at the London School of Economics.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, when did you become active in the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have never been active in the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy; although I have written a piece for its publication and I have spoken on the public platform, where I believe the sponsor of the meeting was the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know at the time that that was a Communist organization?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did not know at the time that that was a Communist organization.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you recognize it as such now?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have not had contact with that organization, if I recall, for about 3 to 4½ years, and I could not answer that question. I just have no opinion on whether it is or it is not.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Now, with whom did you speak when you spoke under the auspices of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, now, if I may just refresh my memory: On March 6, 1947, I spoke on the platform, or I should say under the auspices of the committee, with a speaker named Mr. Chu Tong. C-h-u T-o-n-g.

Mr. MORRIS. I am sorry. I didn't hear you, Mr. Friedman.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Mr. Chu Tong was the other speaker that day.

Mr. MORRIS. He is a Communist; is he not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not know, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. He is now in Red China; is he not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not know, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read the transcript of our public hearing, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. With reference to what, sir?

Mr. MORRIS. This Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have gone over the transcript.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you notice our exhibit 8, which is a letter from the Communist Party of New York State, signed "May Miller, Assistant Organizing Secretary," which ends up in the last paragraph [reading]:

> Any inquiries in relation to further activity can be received by writing to the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy at 111 East Forty-second Street, New York City.
>
> Comradely yours.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. May I look at that?

Mr. MORRIS. By all means. I am asking you if you had read that. That is bearing on your present knowledge as to whether it was a Communist organization, at this time.

Mr. Mandel, we have put in your citation that this organization has been listed by the Attorney General; have we not?

Mr. MANDEL. The Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy was cited as subversive by Attorney General Tom Clark on April 27, 1949.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever inquire as to whether any of these organizations were Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. You are referring to the organization, the Committee for a Democratic——

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; the organization that you were joining and speaking for.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I did not inquire whether this was a Communist organization when I was speaking for the organization or writing for its publication in 1947.

Senator FERGUSON. You never made an inquiry?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Are you an economist by profession?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am a political scientist by profession.

Senator FERGUSON. You are a political scientist. And you are well acquainted with communism?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I won't say "well acquainted," sir. I am familiar with some of the writings in the field.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, can you recognize communism when you see it or hear it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I could recognize a Communist point of view if I heard it spoken, or I probably could recognize communism by looking at a book; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, the question was, then: When you were speaking at this organization, did you know it was Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did not, sir; no, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will you receive into the record the guest column of the Spotlight on the Far East, which is a publication of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, dated April 1947, a guest column entitled "China's Unions Refuse To Be Puppets," by Julian Friedman.

That is your article; is it not, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; it is.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you receive that, Mr. Chairman?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; I will receive it.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 740" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 740

[Source: Spotlight on the Far East, published by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, vol. II, No. 4, April 1947]

CHINA'S UNIONS REFUSE TO BE PUPPETS

(By Julian Friedman)

(For the past two years the author was United States labor attaché in China. He became personally acquainted with all ranks of trade-unionists and speaks with authority on the Chinese labor movement.)

Genuine trade-unionists are not easy to find in Kuomintang China. To reach them, you have to visit obscure, innocent-looking alleys or out-of-the-way fields in the suburbs of the cities.

But it is most dangerous for them to be known as trade-unionists or to work openly for real trade-unionism.

The Chiang Kai-shek government is absolutely opposed to trade-unionism because it means democracy, a menace to Chiang's plutocracy. Genuine trade-unionists are certainly opposed to the present anti-labor National Government.

Many were originally either company-union or Kuomintang headquarters' appointees. There were also secret-society agents and gangsters in labor roles. The latter are quickly exposed today by the workers themselves.

As for the company-union and bureaucratic-union officials, the workers have given them every opportunity to work for the real trade-union movement. So they now face this dilemma: serve as Kuomintang stooges and "finks" and lose support among the workers or fight with the workers and be attacked by the fascists.

That several have chosen the latter course has enraged the National Government and Kuomintang, which has retaliated with arrests, threats of violence, expulsion from official labor circles, purging of official unions, and reorganizing them.

Nothing illustrates the change in labor so aptly as the Shanghai anti-civil-war demonstration of June 23, 1946. On the day before, the government had called official trade-union representatives to a meeting and dictated resolutions which said that no workers or unions would participate in the demonstration, and that any persons in the demonstration could not be considered workers. The resolutions were "unanimously adopted" because the government chairman said so, with no one else given a chance to speak. But more than 100,000 workers turned out the next day. And the representatives who had "passed" the resolutions the previous day marched at their head.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read Herbert Philbrick's book, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did not read the entire book.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read that that portion which pertains to you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I looked at the index and saw my name there, and turned to that portion of the book where my name appears, and Mr. Philbrick says I spoke on the public platform, if I recall it, of the Twentieth Century Association, which he describes as a traditional liberal organization of Boston; that I spoke with Mr. Lewis Lyon, the curate of the Nieman Foundation, I believe formerly editor of the Boston Globe, who was chairman of the meeting, and I believe the other speaker was Mr. Philip Jaffe.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did he say who arranged that meeting?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I knew that the meeting had been arranged at the request of the Boston committee.

Mr. MORRIS. Not who asked you, but who made the arrangements for you to go up there and speak.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was in Boston at the time, or, rather, I should say that I was planning to go up to Harvard in Cambridge at the time. I think these plans of mine were known by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, and that they asked me would I be available as a speaker, and I believe Rev. Stephen Fritchman, of the Unitarian Service Committee in Boston, actually sent me the invitation.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with Senator Eastland's question, have you ever told anybody that you were a member of the Communist Party?

I am asking you if you were associated in any way with the arbitration proceeding of Betty Levin.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. There are two questions? Or just one question?

Mr. MORRIS. One question is: Are you acquainted with the arbitration proceedings of Betty Levin?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I am acquainted with the arbitration proceedings of Betty Levin.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you give us a little background material on that subject, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. My recollection of the testimony is that you were acting behind the scenes in that arbitration.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Mrs. Levin testified?

Mr. MORRIS. No; Mrs. Widener, a witness before this committee, has testified that you were active behind the scenes in the arbitration proceedings of Betty Levin.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. May I just read Mrs. Widener's statement? She does not quite say that.

Mr. MORRIS. By all means. I am just asking your recollection of the episode.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Mrs. Widener contended that she made some inquiries about my participation in these proceedings, and she first went to a Miss Sarah Hodgekinson, a friend of hers, employed, so the record says, by the State Department's Mission at the United Nations, and Miss Hodgekinson referred Mrs. Widener to a reporter, who eventually referred her to Mr. Frederick Woltman, of the New York World-Telegram.

Mr. Morris. Yes. Now, Mr. Friedman, I do not want to go into that with too much detail. I just want to know what your connection was. I just made general reference. I think she said you were working behind the scenes on it.

Mr. Friedman. May I say she is quoting Mr. Frederick Woltman.

Mr. Morris. No; she is not.

Mr. Sourwine. Counsel and the witness need not argue about what is in the record.

Senator Ferguson. Yes. You just answer his question.

Mr. Morris. What was your activity with the arbitration proceeding about Betty Levin?

Mr. Friedman. I became aware of this case through two sources. The first source, I believe, was the New York press. And this was some time after I had returned from China, was in the United States, and clearly after the case had gone to arbitration.

Mr. Morris. Now, what did you learn from the New York press, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. Friedman. I learned of the existence of the arbitration.

Mr. Morris. What was the problem there? Tell us what the problem is, Mr. Friedman.

Mr. Friedman. May I finish, Mr. Morris? I would like to be helpful in this case.

Mr. Morris. Go ahead.

Mr. Friedman. The thing that caught my eye about the reports of the case was references to a number of books on China, if I recall correctly, and also references to an organization called the China Aid Council. And I believe—I am not sure whether this was in the press—the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy.

Mr. Morris. And you had been connected with all of those things?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir. If I may explain chronologically——

Mr. Morris. It is all right to explain that, Mr. Friedman, but I think there is a chairman here, and some Senators.

Senator Ferguson. We want to get along as fast as we can.

Mr. Morris. Not only that, but we also would like to know what the case was about. You haven't told us that, Mr. Friedman.

Mr. Friedman. If I may tell how I came into the case, since it is really, Senator, not my full knowledge of the entire case that I can give——

Senator Ferguson. How did you get into it? Answer that question.

Mr. Friedman. I volunteered my services, because I was interested in the issues, and I approached the counsel for the union in this case.

Mr. Morris. What was that counsel?

Mr. Friedman. The firm was the New York law firm of Boudin, Glickstein, and Cohen. I am not quite sure if that is the right name, but I know that the Boudin name is identified with it.

Mr. Morris. What was the union involved?

Mr. Friedman. The union involved, if I may read from the arbitrator's award, was the Social Service Employees Union, Local 19, United Office and Professional Workers of America, CIO.

Mr. Morris. That has been expelled by the CIO as a Communist-controlled union, has it not?

Mr. Friedman. I do not know, sir.

Mr. Morris. Proceed. Tell me this, Mr. Friedman. Was not the issue in that case whether or not Betty Levin had been putting books into the council library, the subject council library, in such a way as to cause a certain partisan interpretation, a partisan atmosphere, to the whole library?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't believe it was the library, Mr. Morris.

I believe that what was involved in the case were book lists which she made up in the course of her educational work on behalf of the national council.

Mr. MORRIS. That's right. What came to your attention were books that you had been acquainted with from your own experience in China and in the State Department; is that correct?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, although I had to look over one or two of the books at the time, since I was not too familiar with them.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, tell me this, Mr. Friedman. You were acquainted with those books, were you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was acquainted with almost all of the China books.

Mr. MORRIS. What were the books?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, if I may read the list of books:

Red Star Over China, by Mr. Edgar Snow
The Good Earth, by Pearl Buck
Man's Fate, by Andre Malraux
The Challenge of Red China, by Gunther Stein
Solution in Asia, by Owen Lattimore
Battle Hymn of China, by Agnes Smedley
Report from Red China, by Harrison Forman
Shark Fins and Millet, by Ilona Ralph Sues

And the other book is Village in August by T'ien Chun.

These are the books on China.

Mr. MORRIS. You said you had recognized those books. Where had you seen those books before?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I had seen these books in book shops and libraries. I have read some of these books, because I possessed them.

Mr. MORRIS. You had read them, and you were acquainted with them.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I had read most of them, and at the time of the arbitration proceeding, I was not familiar, not fully familiar, with the book called Village in August, which was a novel; and I do not believe it was one of the books on which I had to comment.

Mr. MORRIS. Tell me further about the books. Now, had you used those books when you were in the State Department, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think that I had read these books in the course of my preparation—at least those which were available at the time I was in the State Department—read them in the course of my preparation for the Far East.

Mr. MORRIS. Were they general background reading for the State Department people?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; these were books which were generally available, which one wanting to find out something about China could read.

Senator FERGUSON. Were they anti-Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. These books, sir? I don't think I can answer that question, Senator, because I don't think that one can—at least, an academic man with intellectual honesty cannot simply say whether a book is pro- or anti-Communist.

Senator FERGUSON. Can you tell us whether any of them were anti-Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. This is purely opinion you are asking for, but I believe Mr. Lattimore's Solution in Asia might be classified as an anti-Communist book, although I would not want to say that any of these books were essentially anti-Communist or pro-Communist.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you think the Communist book stores would sell an anti-Communist book?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't know the selling policies of Communist book stores, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know there is now testimony that these books were recommended as the party line and sold in Communist book stores?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have not seen that testimony.

Senator EASTLAND. The testimony was stronger than that: that the employees were instructed by the party to recommend these books to party members as a Communist program.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Friedman, do you remember what you testified in executive session with regard to the book, Shark Fins and Millet, by Ilona Ralph Sues?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe I said that this book was critical, particularly critical, of Nationalist China.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is not what you said, but is that a fact? Was it particularly critical of Nationalist China?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, may I go into that?

Mr. SOURWINE. Just answer the question, yes or no.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I would say it was particularly critical of one important section of Nationalist China.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it procoalition Government?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If I recall correctly, I believe that was the general tendency of the book.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it proradical reform in China?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, what I would call radical reform.

Mr. SOURWINE. You testified to that effect in executive session, did you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you want to say the book is not pro-Communist.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. I would not say that this book is necessarily pro-Communist, any more than I would like to say any of the books are pro- or anti-Communist.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was certainly pro the Chinese Communists, was it not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am just trying to remember the book. I haven't looked at it in a long time. I came to this book for a rather special interest at the time I was employed by the State Department. May I explain that, Senator?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes, if you can do it in a few sentences.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. All right. Fine.

This book has an unusual description of Miss Sues' meeting with a very famous Chinese Nationalist leader closely identified with the Generalissimo. And that is a Mr. Tu Yueh-Sen, and also identified with Mr. Tu Yueh-Sen was Mr. Chu Sueh-Fan, the Chinese Association of Labor Chairman, a person who, in my official duties, as labor attaché, I would have to meet. And consequently this was one of the books on which I got, you might call it, personality data on Chinese labor officials and a brief description of Chinese labor association.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember testifying in executive session that Miss Sues was friendly to the Chinese Communists?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I did say that, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you mean her personally? Or her book?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would say personally, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know her personally?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have met Miss Sues in connection with the book.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Have you read her testimony before this committee that she was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall it, sir. If it is in the first five volumes, I perhaps have read it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Friedman, when did you first meet Owen Lattimore?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I met Owen Lattimore some time in November or December 1944.

Mr. MORRIS. Where did you meet him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I met him, I believe, in the State Department building.

Mr. MORRIS. In whose office?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe it was the office of Mr. John Carter Vincent, the Chief of the Division of Chinese Affairs.

Mr. MORRIS. What was he doing there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall—no, I don't even know the purpose of Mr. Lattimore's visit. I do know Mr. Vincent informed me that Mr. Lattimore was coming into the Department, and that I might meet him on that occasion.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you look forward to that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I certainly did, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did you show him any State Department papers at that time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I showed him, if I recall correctly, a memorandum, a background memorandum, which I was preparing on the subject of Sinkiang, this far western province of China, which was at that time going through some troubles.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I get back to that arbitration proceeding?

Mr. SOURWINE. May I ask one question about this memorandum, first?

By "background memorandum," do you mean a memorandum covering the available information about Mr. T'ien Chun?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. This was a memorandum that summarized the available information.

Mr. SOURWINE. That summarized the available information about T'ien Chun?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, within, I believe, about a page or page and a quarter, which was a space assigned to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You got all the available information about T'ien Chun summarized in a page or a page and a quarter?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. As far as I could, yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. He told you it was a good job you had done?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, Senator. And as I recall, I was rather pleased at this, that Mr. Lattimore, who was a recognized authority in the field of inner Asia, thought that I had done a good job.

Senator FERGUSON. And you let him read it, and he approved it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did let him read it, and Mr. Vincent knew that Mr. Lattimore was reading the memorandum.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Friedman, did you aid Betty Levin in her arbitration difficulty?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I appeared in the arbitration proceedings as an expert witness, put on the stand by the union of which Miss Levin was a member. And I was on the stand, on the scene, on the record, in front of Mr. James Lawrence Fly, who was the arbitrator, and I was cross-examined, answered questions on books put forward to me by the counsel for the National Council of Jewish Women.

Mr. MORRIS. With whom in particular in that union did you carry on negotiations prior to testifying in that proceeding?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The only person I carried on negotiations with, if you want to use that term, the person in a sense who suggested I might appear as an expert witness, was the attorney for the union, Mr. Boudin.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Did you meet any union officials?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The only union official I can remember meeting then was Mr. Bernard Siegel; my dealings in respect of the case were entirely with the lawyer for Miss Levin and the union.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Now, did you testify about the books that you have just mentioned?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was asked to testify to the best of my knowledge, having recently returned from China, on the accuracy and the content of the books. That was my principal service, to read, go over these books, and to make known whether I thought the books portrayed the situation to the extent that I knew it accurately, and whether the books represented in that sense competent work.

Senator FERGUSON. Was there any question in that case as to communism?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That was not the particular issue, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, was it an issue at all?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes. Generally speaking; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That she was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not believe I heard that charged.

Senator FERGUSON. Or pro-Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The reference of "pro-Communist" certainly appears in the case; yes, sir. And the arbitrator himself points out that there was a bias in the book list, or a lack, certainly, of nonpartisanship.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you point that out when you testified about the books?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think that the principal part of my testimony concerned the content of the books, the accuracy in terms of the scene that I was familiar with. I recall vaguely being asked whether any of the books were pro-Communist or anti-Communist. I also recall that I believe it was the counsel for the National Council of Jewish Women—that would be Mr. Jesse Friedon—asked me whether I thought the books taken together would be pro or anti; and I remember that I was also asked, I believe by the arbitrator, although I don't recall whether it was the arbitrator of Mr. Boudin or Mr. Friedon, whether I could make up a list of books, could recommend a list of books which would be pro-Communist.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you run down now?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Have I run down now?

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you answer the question now, please?

Did you in your testimony point out to anybody that these books had bias?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not recall whether I pointed that out, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why didn't you say that in the first place, instead of going on here for 3 minutes with stuff that had nothing to do with the question? You are fencing with this committee, sir, and you are wasting the committee's time.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. I apologize to the chairman if he feels that I am fencing with the committee.

Senator FERGUSON. Let us try and keep it on the track and answer the questions directly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, one of those books was definitely pro-Communist, wasn't it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. One of the books on the list could be taken as pro-Communist, but I still would prefer to refrain from "pro" or "anti."

Mr. SOURWINE. Which one?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The one book in my estimation you could consider pro-Communist was probably Battle Hymn of China by Agnes Smedley.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, regardless of what you said here this morning about not characterizing anything as pro-Communist, you did characterize that book as pro-Communist in the executive session, didn't you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Voluntarily, sir, in reply to questions put to me. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, if you were not acquainted with communism any more than you indicate this morning, how could you be an expert on these books?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I testified on the books, sir, to the extent of my own experiences and my preparation reading on the subject. I did not put myself forward as the only authority, as a supreme expert.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, you were asked to testify as an expert?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was asked to testify as an expert; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Therefore, you had to read the books to find out.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes. I am familiar with almost all of these books. The ones which I do not believe I had to testify one were the novels, sir. I may be mistaken on failing to recall that accurately, but I believe it was essentially the books with which I was most familiar by actual experience.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, now, has anyone told you that Betty Levin is a Communist, is or was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have heard second hand that Miss Levin was a Communist. And that was only recently.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Now, had anyone told you at that time, or had you any reason to believe at that time, that Betty Levin was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not recall that anyone told me at that time that Miss Levin was a Communist, and I had no reason to believe at that time that she was a member of the Communist Party or a Communist in the sense of being a Marxist. All I knew at that particular time—I did not know Miss Levin when I came into the affair. The proceedings were already under way, and my relations were principally with Miss Levin's attorney, Mr. Boudin.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ask the counsel as to whether or not his client was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ask anyone?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not believe so; no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you went in there to testify as an expert on these books, and you made no inquiry as to whether or not the person was a Communist that you were in effect defending?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In effect, sir, I wanted to stick to the books and not to participate in the larger issues of the proceeding.

Senator FERGUSON. Sure. The larger issue was whether or not she was a Communist, whether she was putting out Communist propaganda. And you did not want to know about that. You just wanted to go in and testify as an expert on the propaganda.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. On the books. Excuse me, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, did you inquire from any Communist as to whether these books were pro-Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I did not. The opinions that I gave the arbitrator were my own opinions, based on knowledge of the books and knowledge of the areas which these books dealt with.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did you indicate at that time that you thought Agnes Smedley's book was pro-Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe that at the request of the arbitrator, in saying which books I would include if a pro-Communist list were being made up, I believe I included Miss Smedley's book; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. How does that answer the question? In other words, you did indicate at that time that you thought it was pro-Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That it would fit in with a list of pro-Communist books; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. But the others you said would not fit in with such a list.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe that was my testimony, yes, sir. I do not recall it in detail.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you written anything under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, I have written something under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations, a chapter or supplement, rather, on Labor in Nationalist China, 1945–48, and this appears in a larger publication of the institute called Notes on Labor in Nationalist China.

Mr. MORRIS. Who compiled those notes?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The notes, I believe, were originally compiled by a Chinese writer, but written up in this country, I believe, or written up anyway and published under the name of Mr. Israel Epstein.

Mr. MORRIS. Is he a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would have reason to believe he is pro-Communist sir. I do not know whether he is a Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know where he is now?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe you told me yesterday he was in Peiping.

Mr. MORRIS. I didn't tell you that yesterday.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe it was suggested to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether he is in Peiping?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe he is in Peiping.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any other information, other than the information you think you got last night?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe I saw an article of his in a Chinese publication. Not China Today; an English language Chinese publication which Mr. Epstein has written recently.

Mr. SOURWINE. What publication?

Mr. MORRIS. Was it China Monthly?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. China Review?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is this a paper published in Communist China that you are talking about?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe it is published either in Communist China or Hong Kong. It used to be published in Hong Kong.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you read it regularly?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. MORRIS. Didn't you testify in executive session that you discovered, you thought, that Israel Epstein was a Communist when you heard about his departure for Peiping?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe I may have testified to that effect.

Mr. MORRIS. You did know he left for Peiping, then, at that time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you hear that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I heard—now, how did I hear this? I am not quite sure how I learned that Mr. Epstein had left for Peiping. I believe I heard while I was still in London, but I am not quite sure.

Mr. MORRIS. Did some Communist tell you that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't know, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, how was it that you happened to collaborate with Israel Epstein in this writing project for the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did not collaborate with Mr. Epstein in this project. I was invited by Mr. William Holland of the Institute of Pacific Relations, invited in 1948, to write an introduction to this study of Chinese labor, which Mr. Epstein was preparing under the auspices of the Institute of Pacific Relations. I agreed to write the introduction, and then subsequently was informed by Mr. Holland that he preferred to have a supplement covering the period in which I was in China and the events immediately following. In writing to Mr. Holland, I agreed to receive Mr. Epstein's manuscript, and read over the manuscript, and I replied with criticism of the manuscript. And it was on that basis that I did write the supplement, and I believe it was eventually published some time in 1949. Or I should say mineographed. It was not published in ordinary book form.

Mr. MORRIS. Had you ever met Israel Epstein at the time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I had met Mr. Epstein on one or two occasions.

Mr. MORRIS. Where had you met him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I met him first of all—I may again be mistaken—in connection with the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy. And I dined with Mr. Epstein at his home in Staten Island some time in 1947, at a time when he wanted to introduce me to a correspondent for the famous Chinese newspaper, the Dagoon Bow.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was the correspondent?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe Miss Yang Gong.

Mr. MORRIS. Where is she now?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't know where Miss Yang Gong is now.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was the Chinese writer who prepared the original notes which Mr. Israel Epstein converted into this particular book?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall at the moment. Perhaps Mr. Mandel would let me see, and I could read it.

Mr. MORRIS. Is People's China the name of the publication wherein you read that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; People's China is correct. It used to have another name.

Mr. SOURWINE. How do you receive copies of that magazine?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Oh, I think one can buy it on newsstands in many places.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that how you get it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I do not subscribe to it.

Mr. MORRIS. In the October 16, 1951, issue of People's China, there is an article by Israel Epstein entitled "Return to New China."

Senator FERGUSON. Do you want to receive that?

Mr. MORRIS. I just want it noted.

Do you know Israel Epstein's wife, Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I do know Mrs. Cholmeley.

Mr. MORRIS. How well do you know her?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I met her at the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, where she was employed, and I met her at her home. I may have met her on the occasion on which I spoke, under the auspices of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy in New York. And I saw her in London, England, in January, I believe January 1951. But I am not quite sure whether it was 1950 or 1951.

Mr. MORRIS. How frequently did you go to the offices of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall, sir. In this period of time, I was in New York City, and I may have dropped in frequently or infrequently. I don't recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that she is in Red China now?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not know that definitely; no, sir. When I saw her in London, she informed me that she was returning to the United States, and I did not see her after that occasion.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Israel Epstein connected with the Allied Labor News?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe that is the same Israel Epstein. And also Time magazine.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you tell Mrs. Widener that you were active on behalf of Betty Levin in the arbitration proceeding?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. From what I can recall of the conversation in the company of Mrs. Widener on this evening, the date of which neither Mrs. Widener nor I seemed to remember, but which must have been in April or May, 1947, some months after I was out of State Department employment—what I recall is that I probably did discuss the case. And that is particularly the relationship of the books.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you probably did.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Don't you have any clear recollection of that conversation?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I do not, sir. This evening in question was of the least significance and importance.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that you did talk to Mrs. Widener?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I could answer that, sir; no, and yes. She was not Mrs. Widener at the time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You know the person that we are referring to when we ask that question, don't you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have reason to believe I know the person, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know the person who is now Mrs. Alice Widener?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If she was the former Mrs. Alice Berezhovsky, then I do know the person and met her one evening at the home of Mr. Clark Andrews, or rather Mrs. Clark Andrews, and I saw her some weeks later, I believe at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, at which she was present.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you talk to Mrs. Berezhovsky at the time of your meeting?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I remember that we did have conversation that evening; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember anything about what you talked about?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not specifically; no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you do not deny what she said.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do deny it, sir. I should deny it on the basis, sir, that had she said some of the things which she claims she said, had I said some of the things which she claims I said, I would certainly have remembered that evening.

May I add a word to that, Senator?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have asked Mr. Berezhovsky, who was subsequently divorced, a year or perhaps 2 years after this conversation which Mrs. Widener talked about. Mr. Berezhovsky informed me that in his memory he cannot recall any single time——

Mr. MORRIS. He was not there, was he?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Excuse me, Senator. He was present.

Mr. MORRIS. He was not there at that conversation.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. He came to the home of Mrs. Andrews, at that time Mrs. Ullman—he came to pick up his wife and take her home. He had previously, as I recall, been at a concert, which he was either conducting or participating in. He came later in the evening, and I recall Mrs. Berezhovsky going home with Mr. Berezhovsky.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you quite sure about that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes I am, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are under oath here. There is no question in your mind about it. That much you remember clearly. The rest may be vague, but that much you remember clearly?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not only do I remember it to that extent, sir, but I have discussed this with Mr. Berezhovsky and with Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, and both, or all three of them, remember that Mr. Berezhovsky came later in the evening and left the house with Mrs. Berezhovsky.

Mr. SOURWINE. Oh, you have tried to refresh your memory about this incident, have you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. When I——

Mr. SOURWINE. Answer that "Yes" or "No."

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, I have.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have done that since you have read testimony in these hearings about it, is that right?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, with all of your efforts to refresh your memory about this, you still can recall nothing about it other than what you have told us?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, I have asked Mr. Andrews and Mrs. Andrews and Mr. Berezhovsky, who was present part of the evening, whether they could remember what was discussed.

The most they could tell me they remember was that in a sense politics was discussed, but that there were no references which Mrs. Berehovsky herself says were made that evening.

Mr. MORRIS. You testified a while ago that you could not recall whether you had mentioned the arbitration proceeding.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I said I believe I explained the arbitration proceeding.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think that is what you said?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Excuse me, sir?

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think that is what you said, that you had explained the arbitration proceeding?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe the record will show that I was interrupted as I was explaining.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think the record will show that you said you explained the arbitration proceeding to Mrs. Widener?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I explained to the persons in the room at the time what the arbitration proceeding was and why it was so interesting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was Mrs. Berezhovsky in the room at the time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe she was, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, now, when Mr. Morris asked you if you had told Mrs. Berezhovsky—using the name Widener; but you didn't make the claim that you didn't know who he meant—when he asked if you had told her about your connection with the arbitration proceedings, we had a great deal of difficulty getting the answer.

Now, the answer to that question is "Yes," then, isn't it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe that I did tell her, yes, sir. But based on recollection, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. But that is all you can recall about the conversation?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. About that particular conversation, yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, have you read the testimony of Eugene Dooman before this committee?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever leak information from area committee meetings in the State Department to correspondents, left-wing correspondents?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I did not leak information to left-wing correspondents.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you leak it to any one?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. The best of my recollection is I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, now, wait. You ought to have a recollection on that, if you leaked information out of a Department of Government. Did you leak any information to any one outside of Government?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Will you please define "leaked"?

Senator FERGUSON. Did you give information that you were working on in Government, or obtained as an employee of Government, to people outside of Government?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I believe, sir, that I have discussed with a number of people matters which were matters of our foreign policy.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. But I do not remember specifically—in fact, I would say that specifically I did not leak information.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, you and I are having difficulty, then, over the word "leak"; is that it? Did you give any pamphlets or any memorandums of any papers to anyone?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. In the course of my employment in the State Department, I have officially given out publications in the course of my duties. And in connection with one matter, and that is a study on Japan, I did make available some notes.

Senator FERGUSON. Some notes. And whom did you give those notes to?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Those notes were given to Lt. Andrew Roth.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. Now, you do not classify him as a left-wing correspondent?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Mr. Roth at that time was known to me only as a lieutenant in the United States Navy, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, now, what was a lieutenant in the United States Navy doing coming to you for notes on foreign policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. These were not notes on foreign policy, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. What were they on?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. These were notes on the history of the Japanese labor movement.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Now, what did Roth want with the notes on the Japanese labor movement?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Roth at that time had written but had not yet published a book entitled, "Dilemma in Japan," and he wanted to check, if I may continue just a moment, sir, the accuracy of his own material against the notes which I had.

Senator FERGUSON. Which was Government material.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Which was material—yes; which one I think would properly say was Government material. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Now, were we at war at that time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. We were, sir. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And this was material that you had obtained as an employee of the United States Government?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; this was information in my possession as an employee of the United States Government.

Senator FERGUSON. And you gave it to Lieutenant Roth?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. This was information which I had compiled on the history of the Japanese labor movement, mainly, if not all, from public sources, from the usual books on the subject. I had put it together, and Roth wanted to use the material.

Senator FERGUSON. And you were paid for your labor by the United States Government?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was in the employment of the United States Government at the time; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And were paid for your work?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Now, did you ever give anybody else information?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. While I was employed by the Government?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. Or did you take any away with you when you quit employment with the Government, and give it to them? You showed Mr. Lattimore this memorandum that you had prepared.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That was work that you were working on.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever give anything to Y. Y. Hsu?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What did you give to Hsu?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Mr. Hsu had written to the Department to see if we could provide him with a map which could be used in his study on conditions, I believe social and economic conditions, in the liberated areas of China. And I replied by sending him a nonrestricted map which had come in from the Far East, and which he accepted, in exchange for which I believe he sent the Department first copies of his report.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Now, whom did you consult about turning this matter over?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall whether I consulted anyone specifically, sir. I probably took this act on my own.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you give Roth this information?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would say perhaps March—I am not quite sure—probably March or February 1945.

Senator FERGUSON. 1945.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It was shortly after I met Mr. Roth.

Senator FERGUSON. And when was he prosecuted, or a case made against him? When was he arrested?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe he was arrested some time in June of '45.

Senator FERGUSON. And one of the things they arrested him for was the taking of information out of the State Department, or the obtaining of information out of the State Department; is that right?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall the exact charge, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever hear of the Amerasia case?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. Of course, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you knew Roth was one of the parties in the Amerasia case?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you had given him information out of the State Department in March of the same year that he was arrested?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In February or March the same year, I gave him some notes on Japanese labor history; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, did you ever give him any other papers?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not that I recall, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, try to recall.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am almost certain, sir, that I did not give Mr. Roth any other papers. In fact, Mr. Roth gave me some papers which were not official publications, but what he called information which he had gotten from outside sources and which I had passed on to Mr. Vincent.

Senator FERGUSON. You say you obtained that information from Roth out of the Navy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I do not believe this was naval information.

Senator FERGUSON. Was he in uniform at the time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I believe he was.

Mr. MORRIS. When we are talking about Y. Y. Hsu, did you know Y. Y. Hsu at the time you gave him that material?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Where had you met him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I first met Y. Y. Hsu through Miss Ilona Ralph Sues, at the time I was interested in this labor section of her book, which I described before. And then I subsequently, if I recall correctly, saw Mr. Hsu at the Institute of Pacific Relations conference at Hot Springs, and it was at that time that he raised the question of getting a suitable map for the publication which he was writing under the auspices of the institute, and I believe after that he wrote me at the Department asking if such a map were available or any maps were available which would be suitable, and we paid to him, sir, the same courtesy we paid to most scholars in the field, helping make available what was not restricted, and which would, in a sense, advance the cause of scholarship.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know he was a Communist at that time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you acquainted with his Communist record at that time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know where he is now?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe he is in Red China.

Senator FERGUSON. Another question. You were working for Mr. Vincent at the time these papers were given to Lieutenant Roth?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you had a desk in Mr. Vincent's office?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. For part of the time, sir, yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. For part of the time. At the time you gave these papers to Roth?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't believe so, no, sir. I am not sure at which time I had a desk in the same room as Mr. Vincent and at which time I was outside in the larger room.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Service?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, I met Mr. Service.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever give any information to Service?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The information that I must have given Mr. Service was official information of the State Department while he was on assignment to the Department.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. But he was working in your Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. He was visiting our department at that time. He was on leave from China, if I recall.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know one Philip Jaffe?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did not know Mr. Philip Jaffe while I was in the service of the United States Government. I did meet Mr. Jaffe after I had left Government service.

Senator FERGUSON. And that was after the case against Jaffe?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Long after the case against Jaffe; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, did you ever give any other papers out, to anyone?

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever give any papers to Rose Yardumian?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I did give a paper to Rose Yardumian, again a nongovernmental paper, concerning the Institute of Pacific Relations, which—and I refreshed my memory on this—which I believe originated with Mr. Ullman, and was handed someone in the State Department, who in turn handed it on to me, and since it concerned the institute, I let Miss Yardumian have a copy for Mr. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know if she has recently been in Red China?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe she either is in Red China or has been recently in Red China; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know her sister?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I have met her sister.

Mr. MORRIS. What is her first name?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Isabel.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was she married to?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. She is now Mrs. Stein, Mrs. Gunther Stein.

Senator FERGUSON. I would like to now take up the investigation that the State Department made of leaks or papers going out of the Department.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you recall that investigation?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, no sir; because I was never at any time interrogated by the Department officials on this matter.

Senator FERGUSON. You mean to say that papers disappeared out of the office of Service and Vincent, and you were an employee there, and——

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was one of several employees.

Senator FERGUSON. But you were an employee?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And that no investigation was ever made by the State Department to ascertain how the papers might have got to Jaffe and Roth and Service—the papers in the Amerasia case?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. I do not recall any departmental investigation, but my answer to your question is that I was never at any time interrogated by the Department on this matter.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. That is what I am getting at. So, as an employee, at the time, and now telling us that you did give information to Roth, you tell us that the State Department never made an investigation in that office to your knowledge.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. To my knowledge, sir, the Department did not make an investigation.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, they did not question you about leaks, and you had given a leak in March to Roth.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Excuse me, sir. That was not a leak.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Call it what you will. I am going to use the word "leak."

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think that fails to describe the situation, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. The record will show. You gave him information.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I gave him information on the history of the Japanese labor movement.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes, sir. And you had prepared it, and it was Government property.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; as I was in the employ of the Government, it was Government property.

Senator FERGUSON. Sure. And it was in this office, and it was just a month or two or three before he was arrested for taking papers or having papers that were obtained in the Government.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And the State Department itself never made an investigation, to your knowledge, in that Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. To my knowledge, sir. May I add——

Senator FERGUSON. All right. But to your knowledge they never made an investigation.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That is right, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. At least no one ever came to you and questioned you as to how he may have obtained those papers?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No one in the Department; no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. No one in the Department.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Friedman, did you know any correspondents for the following publications, anyone in Washington for the following publications: The New Republic?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. I believe after June 1945, I knew Miss Helen Fuller of the New Republic.

Mr. MORRIS. She was the Washington correspondent?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. How frequently did you see Miss Helen Fuller?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't believe I saw her more than two or three times between the time I met her and the time I departed for China in October 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever have lunch with her?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall. I remember having a splendid dinner at the home of Mr. Uhl of PM, who was another correspondent whom I knew, and I believe only since June 1945, or around that period, perhaps before——

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever have lunch with him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I cannot——

Senator FERGUSON. Knowing what you do know now, about the Amerasia case, are you not amazed that the State Department did not make an investigation?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am not saying the State Department did not make an investigation, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You never knew what they did?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I never knew that they made an investigation.

Senator FERGUSON. Does it not seem extremely strange that they would not ask you about the disappearance of papers or the fact that papers got out of the Government?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, sir, I think that perhaps one might answer this question with a bit more information.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, can you answer it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; that at the time of the arrest of the accused in the Amerasia case, I believe a number of officials in the State Department were interrogated by the agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and at that time I was in San Francisco and spent a day or two providing information on the previous period to two agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I heard nothing after these 2 days of interrogation, until I read, in fact in the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, the reply of Mr. Milton Ladd, the Assistant to the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who, in reply to a question, "Were there any other employees of the State Department involved in the removal of confidential documents that you know of," Mr. Ladd said, "No, sir." And this was after I had a discussion with special agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Senator FERGUSON. But I mean the State Department itself did not come to you and ask.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Vincent never asked?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you tell Ladd what you had actually give to Jaffe?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did not speak to Ladd, and I did not give anything to Jaffe, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Or not Jaffe. To Roth.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. To Roth? Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You were not a witness in that case?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. One question, and I will finish my subject, Senator.

Did you meet the Daily Worker correspondent, Frederick V. Field, at the United Nations Conference in San Francisco?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. To the best of my recollection that is where I met Mr. Frederick Field. It was in the press room of the United Nations Conference at San Francisco.

Mr. MORRIS. And how long did you speak with him on that occasion?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't have the slightest recollection, but there were a number of pressmen there, and Mr. Field was one of them.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have just two questions, sir. They are both susceptible, I think, to very short answers.

When you came back from Great Britain, in 1951, did you bring with you a number of publications of the British Communist Party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I brought back from England a number of publications put out by several bodies, most of which were put out by the British Government. But also among the publications were those of British political parties, including the British Communist Party; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And did you give some of those to Mr. Jaffe?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. In the summer of 1951, I saw Mr. Jaffe. He was interested in the political situation in England. And I made available to him a number of these publications.

Senator FERGUSON. The Communist publications?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Communist and non-Communist; yes, sir, including the debates of the House of Commons.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Jaffe was primarily interested in what he thought were changes in the Communist line of the British Communist Party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That was one of the things Mr. Jaffe was interested in. He was also interested at that time in the background of the so-called Bevanite or Bevanism movement in the British Labor Party.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you knew specifically that he was interested in the changes in the Communist line of the British Communist Party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Of the British Communist Party; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you gave him these documents because of his interest in that connection?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Senator FERGUSON. We will recess now until 2 o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 12:05 p. m., a recess was taken until 2 p. m., this same day.)

AFTER RECESS

Senator WATKINS (presiding). The committee will resume session. Mr. Morris, have you a witness to be sworn?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Friedman has been sworn and we are well into our testimony, Senator.

Senator WATKINS. If he has been sworn, then, you may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. At the termination of today's testimony, you stated that you had met Frederick Vanderbilt Field, who was acting as a Daily Worker correspondent at the United Nations Conference in San Francisco in 1945.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet Frederick Field on any other occasion after that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe, Mr. Morris, that I met Mr. Field in 1947, and I believe at the Committee for Democratic Foreign Policy.

Mr. MORRIS. On how many occasions did you meet him at the Committee for Democratic Foreign Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall. I think just one occasion, if I recall directly.

Mr. MORRIS. You testified earlier that you also met Israel Epstein and Fairfax Cholmely at that time. Were they together at that time or did you meet them on separate occasions?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe that I met them on separate occasions.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever met them together?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, I think I said before that I had been to their home.

Mr. MORRIS. I mean Field and Epstein.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not that I recall; no, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. So your recollection of meeting Field after the United Nations Conference at San Francisco was at the Committee for Democratic Foreign Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; that is what I recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Then you also met Epstein and Elsie Fairfax Cholmely at the same place but not at the same time as Field?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I say I am not sure on that particular point.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did you know Mildred Price?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. If you will pardon the interruption, does that mean that you do know that you met them at the same place, but you are not sure whether it was or was not at the same time, speaking now of Field and Cholmely?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I have said that I have seen Mr. Field, Mr. Epstein, and Miss Cholmely at the same place—that is, the Committee for Democratic Foreign Policy.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right. It is a question of whether that was at the same time or different times that you are not clear about.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe at different times.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Mildred Price?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, I do know Mildred Price.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she the secretary of the China Aid Council?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have any dealings with Mildred Price, either individually or in the capacity of secretary of the China Aid Coucil?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I have.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about them?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Surely. If I recall correctly, I met Miss Price in New York, January 1945, at a party at the home of Mr. Gunther Stein. I am not quite sure about that. But the next time I did see her was in China sometime between October 1945 and my departure in November of 1946. I don't recall the exact dates of her visit to China. She was in China on behalf of the China Aid Council which at that time was a section of the United China Relief. I saw Miss Price infrequently in China, perhaps once or twice to the best of my recollection, since she traveled about the country and at that time I was held down at Shanghai. I was particularly interested in one or two projects that Miss Price's organization was sponsoring or supporting and particularly the project of the Yutsai School of Dr. Tao Heng Chi.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the first one?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Tao.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there any reason to believe at the time you met Miss Price that she was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; no reason at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. We have a question that has been asked a great many others. It is phrased slightly differently. Do you know of any reason to believe that Miss Price at any time voluntarily and intentionally cooperated or collaborated with members of the Communist Party for the furtherance of Communist objectives?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not know that she has done so and I do not believe she has done so.

Mr. SOURWINE. I asked you if you had any reason to believe.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have no reason to believe.

Mr. MORRIS. You have no reason even now, and in view of the fact that when she appeared before this committee and was asked if she was a Communist she refused to answer on the grounds that it might incriminate her? You would not consider that to be a reason?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I would not consider such a constitutional answer to the committee to be a reason.

Mr. MORRIS. A reason for you to believe that she may have been a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; that would not be a reason.

Mr. MORRIS. It is not a reason for you to believe that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Exactly.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you first met her at a party given by Gunther Stein at his home?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Gunther Stein very well?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I now know Mr. Stein quite well. In the time of my employment in the State Department, I think, I may have seen Mr. Stein at the most on three or four occasions. I met Mr. Stein, first of all, at the Institute of Pacific Relations Conference, Hot Springs, 1945, when he was one of the members of the British delegations. I attended a party that Mr. Stein gave some time after the conference, in New York City, and it is on this occasion that I believe that I met Miss Price.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read the evidence in the charges relating to the fact that Gunther Stein was a member of the Sorge espionage ring in Japan?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have heard of the charges. I have not read the evidence.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you last see Mr. Stein?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I saw Mr. Stein in London I think in 1950 or the beginning of 1951. I don't recall correctly. He had just come from France and I believe was on his way to Switzerland.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know whether or not he was deported from France for espionage?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. He was deported from France but I do not know that it was for espionage.

Mr. MORRIS. Did that enter into your relationship with him at all—the fact that you knew he had been deported from France?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Who else was at Gunther Stein's house when you met Miss Price?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't really recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, there were more than three people.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. There must have been other people, yes, sir, but I just don't recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Were there people who were frequently in attendance at meetings for the Committee for Democratic Foreign Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Talitha Gerlach?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I met Talitha Gerlach. I know her name, but I don't think on any occasion I did meet her.

Mr. MORRIS. You don't think she was at the party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If she were, I don't recall meeting her. I am almost sure that she wasn't. Since I have seen the name many times in connection with China Affairs, I am quite sure I have never met her.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet Doctor Ch'ao-ting Chi?

Mr. Friedman. I have met Dr. Ch'ao-ting Chi.

Mr. Morris. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Friedman. I met Dr. Chi, I believe, first of all at the Central Bank of China which is along the Bund in Shanghai and this would be again sometime between October 1945, and November 1946.

Mr. Morris. What was the occasion of your meeting him there?

Mr. Friedman. The occasion was to make available some information for the bank's monthly publication and to obtain from his research staff some information, I believe, on either social insurance schemes or wages, labor problems in Swatow, on which his staff was working.

Mr. Morris. Did he ask you to come to the bank or did you volunteer to go to the bank?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall.

Mr. Morris. Did you offer him information before he gave you information? You give it in that order, you testified in that order, that you gave him some information that he wanted.

Mr. Friedman. I gave information for the bank publication, yes. I don't recall.

Mr. Morris. What was the nature? Was that Government official information that you gave him?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir; I do not believe it was.

Mr. Morris. What was it?

Mr. Friedman. I think it was essentially from American labor publications. Perhaps, if I am not mistaken, it was from the Monthly Labor Review of the Department of Labor, which, I should have added, is really a Government publication.

Mr. Morris. Did you meet Dr. Chi on any other occasions?

Mr. Friedman. I think that I have met Dr. Chi socially but I just don't recall. I am sure that I have met him at parties of the Ambassador and of the consul general in Shanghai.

Mr. Morris. You do know what he looks like?

Mr. Friedman. I think I would have recognized—I know what he looked like then; yes, sir.

Mr. Morris. Do you have eany reason now to believe that he was a Communist?

Mr. Friedman. Well, I think that his participation as a member of the government in Peking might indicate that he is a Communist; yes, sir.

Mr. Morris. Do you have any reason to believe that he was a Communist at the time you were giving him information?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir; I only identified him with Dr. H. H. Kung at that time.

Senator Watkins. Did you know any Communists at all in this period of time about which Mr. Morris is inquiring about?

Mr. Friedman. In China?

Senator Watkins. Did you know any?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir; I did.

Senator Watkins. And yet some of these who have refused to answer the question if they are asked if they have ever been a Communist or now a Communist, they rely on the fifth amendment and say it might incriminate them, you don't think that has any bearing on it at all, whether or not they are Communists?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It may have some, but I just wouldn't venture an opinion on the basis of this refusal to answer questions and the reliance on the fifth amendment.

Senator WATKINS. Now, with respect to Mildred Price, did she advocate any principle or any policies or line of conduct for this country that might seem to be going in the same direction as the Communist line?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Certainly not in the period that I have known her; no, sir.

Senator WATKINS. How long have you known her?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think either as far back as January 1945 or perhaps sometime between October 1945 and November 1946, and I have known her since and am still friendly with Miss Price.

Senator WATKINS. And you don't think there is anything in her conduct that would indicate to you that she was a Communist or that she was a fellow traveler. Let us put it that way.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Certainly nothing in her conduct in the period I have known her would indicate to me that she was a Communist. Could you be more specific on the fellow traveler?

Senator WATKINS. Well, someone who believes pretty much the same and advocates the same line.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; then she does not fit that category; not to my stipulation.

Senator WATKINS. You have had enough experience with Communists to know one when you see one, have you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I haven't had much experience with them, Senator.

Senator WATKINS. No experience.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I haven't had much experience. I have met some Communists.

Senator WATKINS. Have you ever studied communism?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have studied Communist literature, yes, sir. Not all of it; some of it.

Senator WATKINS. I am probably at a disadvantage. I wasn't here this morning. What position in the State Department did you hold?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was in originally what was the Division of Labor Relations, Division of International Health and Labor and Social Affairs, from September 1943 until November 1944, and then subsequently I was in the Chinese Affairs Division, roughly from November 1944 until October 1945, with a period of assignment to the United Nations Conference at San Francisco. And then I was a junior economic analyst, serving as the American labor attaché in China from October 1945 until November 1946.

Senator WATKINS. Was it any part of your job to acquaint yourself with the conduct of Communists and their policies?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Insofar as it had bearing on labor reporting, yes, sir.

Senator WATKINS. That would be reporting?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, indeed. But I don't say that I have become an expert on the subject.

Senator WATKINS. I don't expect you are an expert, but you ought to be able to tell one if you saw one, and talked to him.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would have to talk at some length, I presume, to get some idea.

Mr. Morris. What was the extent of your acquaintance with Mildred Price?

Mr. Friedman. I have known Miss Price for a considerable period of time, and my stipulation is that she was not a Communist, and I do not have any reason to believe that she is a Communist.

Mr. Morris. Do you know Solomon Adler?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir. I know Solomon Adler.

Mr. Morris. How well do you know Solomon Adler?

Mr. Friedman. I would call Solomon Adler a friend of mine.

Mr. Morris. When did you last see Solomon Adler?

Mr. Friedman. I believe I saw him in Cambridge, England—it was either Cambridge, England, in the late summer of 1951 or it was in London—no, excuse me, not the summer of 1951 but 1950, and possibly sometime at the end of the year in 1950 or 1951 when he came to town. He is on the staff of Cambridge University.

Mr. Morris. Do you now have or did you ever have any reason to believe that Solomon Adler was a Communist?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir; never.

Mr. Morris. Are you acquainted with the testimony of Chambers and Bentley before this committee with respect to Adler?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir; I believe the name came up. I don't recall the testimony.

Mr. Morris. You have not read the testimony?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir; I have gone over the testimony, but I don't recall at the moment exactly what they testified.

Mr. Morris. You mean it isn't of any concern to you whether some man you call a friend has been identified before a Senate committee by two witnesses as a Communist?

Mr. Friedman. In this particular case of Mr. Adler, I believe he is not a Communist and I disregard the testimony of the committee. I simply wait until the committee files its reports.

Senator Watkins. That wouldn't make much difference, would it? You would rely on the evidence more than you would the report itself.

Mr. Friedman. Well, I place great weight in the judgment of the Senators, Senator.

Senator Watkins. I am glad to hear you say that. Some people don't.

Mr. Morris. Did you ever give him any information, any official information?

Mr. Friedman. Mr. Adler was the Treasury attaché of the Embassy, and I was the labor attaché of the Embassy. I think that we exchanged information on wages, on labor conditions, inflation in China. It was part of our official duties.

Mr. Morris. How frequently did you see Solomon Adler in those days?

Mr. Friedman. I certainly saw him, I think, only once here in Washington, D. C., before I went to China, and I couldn't say how many times I saw him in China, but I know not too frequently because he was in Nanking and I was in Shanghai; but I must say probably four times.

Mr. Morris. Did you know that he and John Service shared the same apartment together.

Mr. Friedman. Mr. Adler was married in the period I knew him, and I believe I have read that in the testimony, some references.

Mr. MORRIS. But that was not at the time that you were seeing Mr. Adler.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know a man named Tung Pi-wu?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I believe Mr. Tung Pi-wu was one of the Chinese delegates to the San Francisco conference.

Mr. MORRIS. He was a Communist delegate; wasn't he?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. He was a delegate of the National Government of China, selected——

Mr. MORRIS. To represent the Communists in China?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No sir; he was sent here to represent the Chinese Government, and he was nominated by the Chinese Communists under a plan of General Hurley.

Mr. MORRIS. And did you meet him while he was here?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. I met him in San Francisco.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the occasion of your meeting him in San Francisco?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe in meeting the Chinese delegation. I believe actually the time in which I met him was either a Chinese luncheon or dinner party which was given by either Mr. Liu Chieh, who is now the Chinese Ambassador to Canada, or one of the other senior officials of the Chinese Government.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet him in the United States?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In addition to this occasion?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; in addition to this occasion.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall seeing him again. Yes; I think he did pay a courtesy visit to the State Department in Washington while he was here, although I don't quite recall the occasion.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever meet him at a party—at a social party—given under the auspices of the Committee for Democratic Foreign Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall. Could you give me the date?

Mr. MORRIS. No; just if you can recall meeting him there.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No; I just don't recall meeting him.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did you ever meet Alger Hiss?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I met Alger Hiss in the State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the first occasion I met Mr. Hiss was—I am not quite sure—this was the meeting of the Area Committee on the Far East of the State Department, of which, I believe, he was a member when I was a member representing the Labor Division of the State Department. I can remember, I believe, seeing him—I think, meeting him at San Francisco, when he was a secretary general of the conference—and I recall being in a committee meeting with him upon my return from San Francisco, at which committee meeting the State Department was preparing its case or rather making its preparations for the forthcoming meeting of the United Nations Assembly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Might I interrupt to clear something up there? We found confusion in the records during the testimony of previous witnesses about the phrase "Far East" or "Far Eastern Committee." I wonder if you would clear up just what committee you were referring to there.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I believe that it would be the same committee that Mr. Dooman refers to—that is, the Far East Area Committee of the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does that have anything to do with the Far East Committee of SWINK—State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am not sure of the relationship between the two.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what SWINK was?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe SWINK was a State, War, and Navy Department committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. By definition it wasn't. It was the State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee. But do you know about the existence of that committee?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I have heard of the existence of that committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have anything to do with any subcommittee of SWINK?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The only committee that I had something—now, I have to clear this up. I was a participant in the State Department's Area Committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am trying to get, first, the question of whether you had anything to do with any subcommittee of SWINK, any subcommittee of the State, War, Navy Coordinating Committee?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, you see, I am just trying—am wondering whether you consider the Area Committee a subcommittee.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am asking you. You were the expert. You were the man who was a member of something there.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Let me say I was a member of two committees.

Mr. SOURWINE. You might have been a member of any number of committees. I want to know if you were a member of any subcommittee of SWINK. Certainly you know whether you were or whether you weren't.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I wasn't a member of any subcommittee that called itself a subcommittee of SWINK. So I am not sure of any relationship between certain State Department committees and SWINK.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were in Vincent's office for some time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew that Vincent headed the Far Eastern Subcommittee of SWINK?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I believe he became the Chairman of that at the time I was preparing to depart or had already departed. Actually the committee of which I was a participant was headed for most of the period by Mr. Ballentine, Mr. Joseph Ballantine.

Mr. SOURWINE. Headed by Mr. Ballantine?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know of Mr. Dooman's position before Mr. Vincent became head of the China Division?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If I recall, Mr. Dooman was the Special Assistant to the Under Secretary of State, that is, Mr. Grew, at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Dooman headed the Far Eastern Committee of SWINK?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I don't recall that, sir. All I know is that Mr. Dooman did not generally preside at the meeting of the Area Committee, that Mr. Ballantine presided and Mr. Dooman would sit in, I believe, when Mr. Ballantine was not present.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what the Far East Commission is?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The Far East Commission located in Washington?

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what the Far East Commission is?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. There is a Commission in Washington which is made up of representatives of the various governments that participated in the war against Japan. Is that the Commission to which you are referring?

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that the Far Eastern Commission? Is there any other Far Eastern Commission that you know about or Far East Commission that you know about?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Is there not a Commission that existed in Tokyo to advise the Supreme Commander which was a Far Eastern Commission also made up, I believe, of representatives of those nations which participated in the war against Japan?

Senator WATKINS. The committee will suspend for a moment.

(Short recess.)

Senator WATKINS. The committee will resume session.

Mr. SOURWINE. What I am trying to find out is whether while you were with the State Department, you were actually a member of any of the subcommittees of State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee, speaking specifically of the Far East Subcommittee of State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I was a member of the Area Committee of the State Department, which called itself the Area Committee of the State Department, and I do not know whether that fits the description of a Subcommittee of SWINK.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know whether the Area Committee was or was not a Subcommittee of SWINK?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, do you know of the Subcommittee of SWINK which first Mr. Dooman and later Mr. Vincent was Chairman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, I don't believe I do.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever attend the meetings of any committee or subcommittee having to do with the Far East as a Deputy for Mr. Vincent or in Mr. Vincent's stead or representing him or his office?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I think that I probably attended some meetings of the State Department's Area Committee on the Far East on behalf of the Division of Chinese Affairs. But actually, if I may say so, my representation in that Committee was generally for the Division of Labor Relations and the Division of International Labor, Health, and Social Affairs, pending that Division obtaining some one to represent the Division in the Committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. What is the answer to my question, "Yes" or "No"?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Could you repeat the question?

Mr. SOURWINE. Don't you have the question in mind?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I haven't.

Mr. SOURWINE. The question was whether you ever attended a meeting of a State Department committee or subcommittee having to do with the Far East as a deputy to Mr. Vincent or in his stead or representing his Division?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I did represent his Division on some occasion, yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Before what committee was that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. This would be the Area Committee on the Far East of the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. And do you not know whether that had anything to do with SWINK?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; that is correct, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. While you attended such committee meetings, was there any leak of information that came out through the press or through the radio that you know of?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall on my own, although having read the record I see that Mr. Dooman testifies to that point.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know of any? Do you know whether any newspaper or radio programs came out with any news that took place within the committee hearing room?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, other than what I have read in your record.

Mr. MORRIS. But you know of nothing at the time of your own personal knowledge?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we were asking the witness of his experiences with Alger Hiss.

Will you go on? Is that the only time you saw Mr. Hiss?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think that I was saying that I was a member of a committee which was making the preparations for the United States Government participation in the forthcoming U. N. meeting. I believe that was the only time or the last time I saw Mr. Hiss while I was in Government employment.

Mr. MORRIS. Who recommended you to go out to San Francisco in connection with your job out there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Actually I was recommended or selected by Dean Robert Stewart, of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy.

Mr. MORRIS. That is in connection with your assignment as Assistant Secretary?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Exactly. Doctor Stewart was at that time working with the State Department group making preparations for the San Francisco conference.

Mr. MORRIS. And he knew you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Knew your work and recommended you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. He wanted me on the staff and Mr. Vincent made me available; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you next meet Alger Hiss?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I think that was the last time I met Alger Hiss, although subsequent to my departure from the State Department and when he was the chairman of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, I wrote to Mr. Hiss seeking a fellowship with which I could sustain myself while studying abroad. Mr. Hiss replied that he was unable to make any provisions of a fellowship for me.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, in connection with this arbitration proceeding, may I get back to that, you said that you first knew about that case by reading the New York press?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe that was my original contact with the case, was through the press.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you read the World-Telegram accounts of those hearings?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I read some of them. I don't recall specifically.

Mr. MORRIS. I offer you the New York World-Telegram, an excerpt from the New York World-Telegram, of August 11, 1947, which is the announcement after James Fly announced his decision in that case, and ask you if you had read that? Do you mind reading aloud, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Surely.

[New York World Telegram, August 11, 1947, p. 6]

ARBITRATOR ORDERS REHIRING OF WOMAN FIRED AS PRO-RED—SECRETARY ACCUSED OF ADHERING TO THE PARTY LINE

(By Nelson Frank, World-Telegram staff writer)

In an important arbitration decision, James L. Fly, former Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, after holding that an employee dismissed for attempting to insert the Communist Party line into her work "acted improperly" prepared a "biased" reading list, and "deviated" from the policy of her employer, nevertheless has ordered the worker returned to her job "with the hope for unity."

At the same time he stated that the National Council of Jewish Women, the employer, need not pay the employee for the 7 months she has lost since being dismissed for "malfeasance" last January.

The worker, Miss Betty Levin, a member of the Social Service Employees Union of the United Office and Professional Workers (CIO) has been defended by the union which hailed Mr. Fly's award as "a signal victory * * * for the entire labor movement."

The arbitration hearing before Mr. Fly lasted for 23 days, a record for any labor dispute before any American Arbitration Association member. Mr. Fly's award takes 65 printed pages.

The charges against Miss Levin, an area secretary assigned to educate the sections of the council along the lines of its program were that she consistently gave a pro-Soviet view and recommended pro-Soviet or pro-Communist books, magazines, and organizations.

In his decision, Mr. Fly states that the area secretary deviated from the council's policy and program in recommending her list of books, organizations, and publications in three key cities. Among the publications advocated by Miss Levin were The Protestant and In Fact, both consistent followers of the Communist Party line. Books on China were pro-Communist except in one instance where a pro-Government book was listed with the notation "a partisan account."

During the period leading up to the arbitration, said Mr. Fly, "so high did the mutual distrust and suspicion mount (in the council's office) that at one point a private investigator was hired by the council to guard its files."

It was at this time that the social service branch of the Communist Party, one of whose members is Bernard Segal, executive director of the union——

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me. Notice how that particular reporter describes Bernard Segal.

Mr. FRIEDMAN (reading):

One of whose members is Bernard Segal, executive director of the union.

Mr. MORRIS. Read the full paragraph.

Mr. FRIEDMAN (reading):

It was at this time that the social-service branch of the Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. "Of the Communist Party——"

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Go ahead.

Mr. FRIEDMAN (reading):

One of whose members is Bernard Segal, executive director of the union, called the case a test case to determine whether a progressive * * * may be Red-baited out of a job.

Among the organizations recommended by Miss Levin were People's Songs, a group which writes the Communist May Day tunes, the Council on African Affairs, and China Aid Council, both well-known Communist fronts, and the National Council of American Soviet Friendship, key pro-Soviet propaganda outfit in this country. Also recommended by her was the Communist front, National Committee to Win the Peace. It was of this organization that Mr. Fly accused her of acting "improperly * * * (in that) her response to the Chicago section was designed to encourage cooperation * * *" with this committee.

However, because she was not previously warned that her actions were against the council's policy, he has ordered her reinstated.

Mr. Morris. Is that one of the articles you had read in the New York Press?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall, Mr. Morris. This would be August 1947. I don't recall whether I read this specific article.

Mr. Morris. You were in New York at that time, were you not?

Mr. Friedman. Let me think. I believe I was; but I am not sure.

Mr. Morris. You will notice that that particular news article presents the problem in rather a different light from what you have testified here.

Mr. Friedman. I have presented the problem in the light of the arbitrator's statements of it, yes.

Mr. Morris. Did you have high marks at Harvard? The reason I ask that, Mr. Chairman, is that a witness who has given some testimony before this committee has testified that the person she was talking about was a person who had gotten high marks at Harvard. So that is why that question is appropriate.

Mr. Friedman. May I read that section just from the report of the committee, Mr. Chairman? It is just a sentence or two, and then I can reply fully to it.

Senator Watkins. I don't see any objection to that.

Mr. Friedman. Thank you. This is Mrs. Widener, speaking on page 758 of the committee's hearings, part 3.

Senator Watkins. This committee?

Mr. Friedman. This committee; yes, sir [reading]:

Prior to Mr. Friedman's arrival, Mr. Andrews had told me that Mr. Friedman had graduated with the highest honors from Harvard University. I believe he graduated with either magna or summa cum laude.

Mr. Chairman, I perhaps hate to admit this to the committee but I did not graduate either magna cum laude or summa cum laude or cum laude at Harvard, although the marks that I had were considered Dean's highest marks but not honor marks at Harvard University. And I believe that I could introduce, if the committee wanted it in its record, the Harvard indication that I was not an honor candidate at that time.

Senator Watkins. But you are sure that if you had received such honors you would be likely to claim them rather than deny them.

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

Mr. Morris. Can you recall attending a meeting in Shanghai at which the following people were present: Rose Yardumian, Mary Barrett, Gerald Tannenbaum, Dorothy Campbell? Those individuals or any combinations of them?

Mr. Friedman. I don't really recall attending any meeting with those individuals together.

Mr. Morris. This meeting was held at the Hamilton House, room 812, just before Christmas of 1946.

Mr. Friedman. Then I don't recall such a meeting.

Mr. MORRIS. You do not recall such a meeting?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever attend a meeting in Shanghai at which Rose Yardumian was present?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I have attended a meeting in Shanghai of the International Committee of the Chinese Industrial Cooperative at which Miss Yardumian was present and I attended as an observer from the United States State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. Were not Mary Barrett, Gerald Tannenbaum, and Dorothy Campbell also active in that organization?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think so. Certainly not Mr. Tannenbaum who is not in that organization, nor Miss Barrett whom I believe, again I am not sure, was at that time employed by the United States Foreign Service. The name Dorothy Campbell doesn't come back to me at all.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you invite to attend a meeting of the Chinese industrial cooperatives another labor attaché from the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall that, Mr. Morris. When you say another attaché of the State Department, you mean in China?

Mr. MORRIS. In China.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. There was no other labor attaché.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was your successor?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall whether I had a successor or not. I don't believe the Department did formally succeed me. I don't know if any one subsequent to my departure carried on the labor-reporting program.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony that there was not another labor attaché present at that time in China from the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; as far as I know, there was no other labor attaché from the State Department in China at the time I was present.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony that you did not invite any other labor attaché to attend a meeting at which these people were present?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I certainly don't recall the meeting. I certainly don't recall meeting with such persons present. I don't recall inviting another labor attaché to such a meeting.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you ever remember telling another labor attaché of the State Department that you were a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. May I say perhaps two "No, sirs," to that question. That is, I do not remember telling any labor attaché, and I am sure that I did not tell any labor attaché that I was a Communist, because I was not a Communist.

Senator WATKINS. At that or any other time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. At that or any other time.

Mr. MORRIS. The issue, Mr. Chairman, is whether or not this witness told a labor attaché in Shanghai at that time whether or not he was a Communist.

Do you know a man named Willis R. Etter?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Willis R. Etter? I don't recall the name unless—was he a member of the American consulate general in Shanghai?

Mr. MORRIS. I believe he was.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, I believe I do remember that name, but he certainly was not the labor attaché in my tenure of office. If I recall Mr. Etter worked in the consular section or the shipping section of the consulate, but certainly not in any labor attaché section while I was there. May I, Mr. Morris, introduce——

Mr. Morris. Wait until I finish these questions. Did you ever meet Lauchlin Currie?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir. I did not meet Lauchlin Currie.

Mr. Morris. Did you ever meet John K. Fairbank and his wife, Wilma Fairbank?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir; I know the Fairbanks very well indeed.

Mr. Morris. When did you last see the Fairbanks?

Mr. Friedman. I believe I saw the Fairbanks in the autumn of 1951 at their home in Cambridge, Mass.

Mr. Morris. Did you meet the Fairbanks in China?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir; I met the Fairbanks in China.

Mr. Morris. Did you see them frequently in China?

Mr. Friedman. No, not too frequently, because Mr. Fairbank was mainly in Nanking while I was in Shanghai, and Mrs. Fairbank did a good deal of traveling for the Cultural Office of the Embassy.

Mr. Morris. What was her position?

Mr. Friedman. She was the cultural officer for the United States Embassy.

Mr. Morris. She was there in China?

Mr. Friedman. Yes; I believe she was there for part of the time the Marshall mission was there.

Mr. Morris. Did you ever meet Mr. Benjamin Kizer? Do you know him well?

Mr. Friedman. Not very well, sir.

Mr. Morris. When did you last see Mr. Kizer?

Mr. Friedman. When did I see Mr. Kizer? I believe I saw Mr. Kizer in Shanghai in the end of 1945 or the beginning of 1946, but I don't think I have seen him since. I have seen members of his family since that time.

Mr. Morris. What was his position during the war? Was he the head of the China Division of UNRRA?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall. I recall Mr. Kizer when he was the Director of UNRRA for the China operation.

Mr. Morris. That is what I meant.

Mr. Friedman. Yes; he was for some time its Director.

Mr. Morris. What were his duties, do you know, at that time?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir; I do not know.

Mr. Morris. You do not know what his duties were?

Mr. Friedman. I do not know what his duties were.

Mr. Morris. Are you acquainted with the Stilwell dispute? I mean the dispute that arose over the dismissal of General Stilwell.

Mr. Friedman. Dispute between whom?

Mr. Morris. There was a general controversy. There was a controversy that took place in many of the newspapers at the time.

Mr. Friedman. I can remember in particular Mr. Brooks Atkinson's famous New York Times story on that.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Brooks Atkinson opposed the removal of Stilwell, did he not?

Mr. Friedman. I don't recall at the moment.

Mr. Morris. You said you recalled Brooks Atkinson.

Mr. Friedman. I just recall the article because of its importance. I presume, if I may, that probably Mr. Atkinson—you see, I would like to say definitely by looking at the article, but I believe that he was generally opposed to the removal of General Stilwell.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you favor the removal of General Stilwell?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't quite recall exactly what position I took at that time, but I certainly now, having gone back over the period, do favor the recall of General Stilwell. And I probably, if I may put it in terms of probability, favored his recall at that time, because I did, in a sense, admire much of the work that General Hurley was doing in the Middle East and in the Far East in that period of time.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that the Daily Worker took issue with Brooks Atkinson in his opposition to the removal of Stilwell?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't know anything about that; no, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. The reason I asked that was that you are acquainted with the episode in connection with the Atkinson article, and it was the Atkinson article with which the Daily Worker took issue.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. But I know that as a reader of the New York Times, and not of the Daily Worker.

Mr. MORRIS. But you did favor the removal of Stilwell?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am saying now that I probably did favor the removal of Stilwell, simply because he was a man who would not get along with the government with which he was at the time. My opinion is further confirmed by Earl Mountbatten's reports when he describes his great difficulties with General Stilwell, plus General Stilwell's own book, which is not altogether diplomatic, either in its words or its tone.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever visit Owen Lattimore at his home?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, I have been at the home of Owen Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the occasion?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The only occasion that I recall, Mr. Morris, is an invitation to lecture at his seminar at Johns Hopkins. This was in the early—it must have been either February or March of 1947, after I had left the Government service. And I remember either staying with the Lattimores just before the seminar or just after the seminar, before proceeding to Washington, where I spent the night at the home of the Lattimores.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with Alger Hiss, did you ever write to Alger Hiss in connection with his trials?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I don't recall specifically on that. I think it is possible that I may have written him at the very beginning of his troubles a letter of sympathy or lamentation. But I don't recall this definitely, and I haven't found any such letter among my own papers or a copy of any such letter among my own papers.

Senator WATKINS. Were you in the habit of keeping copies of your letters?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not everything, Senator. I think that if I did at the time, it was because of his negative but nevertheless kind response from the Carnegie Endowment to which I had written for a fellowship.

Senator WATKINS. In other words, he acknowledged your letter, but did not do anything for you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Pardon me?

Senator WATKINS. He acknowledged your letter but he did not do anything for you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Exactly.

Senator WATKINS. So you felt kindly about that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well——

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Mark Gayn?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, I have known Mr. Mark Gayn.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you first meet Mark Gayn?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I met Mr. Mark Gayn at a party of Mr. Gunther Stein in January or February 1945, to which we have already referred.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever give him any State Department official information?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, I did not.

Mr. MORRIS. You gave him no information and no papers of any kind?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, might I inquire at that point very briefly?

I show you, sir, five lines, typewritten. I ask you if you have ever seen documents with that statement or inscription written or imprinted upon them?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I believe I have seen some documents. I couldn't vouch for the title, sections, and so forth, but I believe something of this nature.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is generally familiar to you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you seen it on documents in the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall so much, because the State Department's classification system in the period I was there tended to be either nothing at all or "restricted" or "secret," with a simple stamp rather than with this.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then your testimony is that you do not remember having seen this on documents?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. On State Department documents as distinguished from any documents that may have come in to the State Department from any other agency.

Mr. SOURWINE. This note reads:

Warning. This material contains information affecting the national defense of the United States within the meaning of the espionage law, title XVIII, U. S. C., titles 793 and 794, the transmission or revelation of which in any manner to an unauthorized person in any manner is prohibited by law.

Mr. Friedman, did you ever give to any unauthorized person any documents bearing this stamp or imprint?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I certainly believe not, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give to any unauthorized person any documents bearing any stamp or imprint indicating them to be classified?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Certainly within the State Department——

Mr. SOURWINE. Don't limit the question, sir. Answer it "Yes" or "No."

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not believe so.

Senator WATKINS. Do you have any hesitation in answering that? In fact, you indicate by your manner that you do have some doubt.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No. This morning we discussed a matter, Senator, and that was the matter of some notes to Mr. Andrew Roth, notes on the history of the Japanese labor movement which I prepared.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were they classified matter?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. May I finish, Mr. Sourwine?

Mr. SOURWINE. Were they classified matter?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. These notes, to the best of my recollection, at the time I had it, were not classified.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then they do not affect your answer to this question, do they?

Senator WATKINS. There is not any doubt in your mind as to whether they were classified?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. The reason I raise the question is that I think, in the final preparation of the paper, that these notes may have played a part in the background section, and that is why I want to be quite specific and frank with the committee. This is a matter which was mentioned to the Federal Bureau of Investigation at the time of the Amerasia affair, and I believe that the notes, as I gave them to Mr. Roth, were quite unclassified. But they were historical background material from published sources.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you mean that those notes subsequently became a part of classified material?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am not sure of what the history of the documents was, that is, any final document. But these are notes which I was working up, and which were used in connection with a paper on Japanese labor.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, I would like to get back to the question I asked earlier. Did you ever give any unauthorized person documents bearing a stamp or imprint indicating they were classified?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I do not believe so, no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That answer indicates that you think there is a chance that you might have.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. This is some years ago, sir, and many papers have passed over my desk, and I should like to leave the answer, "I do not believe I have ever given any person classified material."

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you mean by that that there is some doubt in your mind?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. I want to be on the cautious side.

Senator WATKINS. You would not answer categorically, "No," that you did not, because you think there is a possibility that you might have done so?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think there is a possibility.

Senator WATKINS. Why do you not say there is not any possibility?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would like to leave the answer as it stands, Senator, if I may.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Friedman, did you ever see a report on the subject of the need of an American policy toward the problems created by the rise of the Chinese Communist Party, a report indicating that the Communists were about one-fifth of the population, and that they were going to have a definite influence on the future of China?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall that report.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever see a report on the subject of the growth of the new Fourth Army, an example of the popular democratic appeal of the Chinese Communists, indicating that the popular support of the Chinese Communists shows their policies and methods are democratic?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Again, I don't recall offhand such reports.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you recall having seen a document entitled, "The Views of Mao Tse-tung, America and China," dated March 1945?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Again, I just don't recall offhand.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that those papers were circulated through your division at the time you were a divisional assistant?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I say I don't recall the document, so I don't know whether they were circulated through the division.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that all three of those documents mentioned were among the so-called Amerasia papers?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, I do not know that.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Friedman, have you ever knowingly associated with people you knew to be Communists?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. On what occasions?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. On social occasions only. Certainly not on political occasions.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us the extent to which you have done that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, it is not very frequently. In this country, in England or France when we traveled about, we have met people——

Mr. MORRIS. When you say "we," who do you mean?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In recent years, my wife and I. And we have been in homes of persons who were known to us to be Communists; yes, sir. But this is not in the period of the State Department, but post-period.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were those people you knew to be Communists?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the one name I mention is a Mr. John Horner of Great Britain.

Mr. MORRIS. Why do you say the one that you could name?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I say one whose name comes to me, because it was within the last year or so, I should say within the last year and a half, when we were in England.

Mr. MORRIS. Tell me this, Mr. Friedman: If you were now in the State Department—this is a hypothetical question—would you give information as you have in the past, say, to Y. Y. Hsu, and to Rose Yardumian, and to—who was the other one you mentioned? Just take those two. Would you now give such information to Gunther Stein?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would rather not answer a hypothetical question of that sort, Senator. Is is so open to——

Senator WATKINS. That reveals your present state of mind. It may have some bearing on your answers that you have given in the past.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think the answer is quite simple: That I would follow all of the rules and regulations of the State Department with reference to the circulation of materials which is governmental and State Department material.

Mr. MORRIS. And you would impose no higher standard than that on yourself?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I would follow the rules of the Department by which I was employed; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Suppose you knew that a Communist wanted some particular information for a purpose to further the Communist conspiracy in the world, and he came to you and asked you for that information. If there were no State Department prohibition against it, would you give it to him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. I would report it to my senior official.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you so report as to Y. Y. Hsu, when you gave him a map that he wanted?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Pardon me?

Mr. MORRIS. Did you report to your official in the State Department the fact that Y. Y. Hsu wanted a map from you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall that I did. I am almost sure that I discussed the matter with a Mr. Chase, but I take full responsibility.

Mr. MORRIS. And he gave you permission?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It wasn't a question of permission. It was a question of an unrestricted map on the liberated areas of China. It was for Mr. Hsu's book, copies of which came to the State Department shortly afterward.

Mr. MORRIS. Knowing what you know about Mr. Hsu now, do you think that his motive in obtaining that map was completely harmless?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. At that particular time, it was harmless. It was for publication, and was published subsequently.

Mr. MORRIS. I mean, do you concede now that Y. Y. Hsu was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir. I just don't know anything about that. I believe we have said that he is in Peking, and I presume that he is. But other than that, I couldn't say any further, on the basis of my own knowledge of Mr. Hsu.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Friedman, have you ever seen or read the Communist Manifesto by Marx and Engels?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I have read the Communist Manifesto by Marx and Engels.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you ever read State and Revolution by Lenin?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I have, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what that book is?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No. That is one of the reasons I don't think I read it, because I couldn't say what the contents are.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you ever read Left Wing Communism and Infantile Disorder by Lenin?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, indeed; I have read that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you read Foundations of Leninism by Stalin?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have read, I think, a part of that book. In fact, I haven't read that, because it was a matter in which I was looking into quite recently.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean, "looking into"? You were looking into the book, or looking into the matter of whether you had read it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, into the book itself.

Mr. SOURWINE. You would say you have been exposed to it, but didn't catch it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No. As I say, I am pretty sure that I have not read that book.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you dipped into it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No. I haven't gotten it yet.

Mr. SOURWINE. What did you mean when you said you were looking into it? Do you mean you have ordered it?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I haven't ordered it yet, either, but I was going to read it sometime in the course of the year.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who recommended that book to you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Nobody in particular.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever read History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, authored by the central committee of the Communist Party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, I have never read that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever read, Program of the Communist International and its Constitution, the third American edition?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I have; no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Any edition?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever read The Revolutionary Movement in the Colonies and Semi-Colonies, a thesis of the Sixth World Congress of the Comintern?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; that, I believe, I have read.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you tell us, sir, something of the circumstances under which you read those books to the reading of which you have just testified?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I just don't recall the circumstances.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you perhaps read them because you felt they were necessary or desirable as background for your work?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I would say that I have read those books because I thought that some of them were necessary as part of the literature of an educated man.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not feel that any of them were necessary in connection with your work in the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Absolutely not; no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you read any of them in connection with study groups, with others?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I don't think I have ever been in the study group of the type I believe you are referring to.

Mr. SOURWINE. You read all of these books on your own initiative?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. No one recommended them to you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not that I recall, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Anthony Jenkinson at any time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I don't believe I have ever met Mr. Jenkinson. I can identify the name, I think, with the Allied Labor News.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the one; yes. Your testimony is that you have never met him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I ever met him.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know that he is an Englishman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe it is Jenkinson; yes. I have heard that he was an Englishman.

Mr. MORRIS. You did not see him on your trip to London?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Michael Lindsay?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever meet him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. When was the last you met Michael Lindsay?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think I met Lindsay, Michael Lindsay, sometime in London in the last 2 years, I believe prior to his departure as a research scholar for a university.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever meet him in the United States?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; at Harvard University in 1947.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever meet him at the Committee for Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know his wife?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have met his wife; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was his wife?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Mrs. Lindsay.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know her before she married him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Agnes Smedley at any time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, I met Miss Smedley.

Mr. MORRIS. Where did you meet Miss Smedley?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. When did I meet Miss Smedley? I met Miss Smedley sometime in 1947 after I left the State Department. I shouldn't be surprised if I didn't meet Miss Smedley at the office of the China Aid Council or the home of Miss Mildred Price.

Mr. MORRIS. Were they closely associated?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think they were quite friendly, yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Miss Smedley active in the Committee for Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I wouldn't know, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet Miss Smedley when she was in London?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, I saw Miss Smedley in London.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the occasion of that?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was invited to an occasion by Lady Selywyn Clark, whose husband was the British governor of the Seychelles Islands and was a very eminent and distinguished medical officer of Hong Kong.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the circumstances?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It was just a social occasion.

Mr. MORRIS. Were any of these other people you have been discussing today present at that party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Just my wife present in addition to Miss Smedley and Miss Clark.

Mr. MORRIS. How many times did you see Miss Smedley in England?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am sure not more than twice.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you see her at about the time that she died?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Just before, I believe.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know anything about the circumstances surrounding her death?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I do not.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you read about the circumstances?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, I have read about the death, but I don't know any of the circumstances.

Mr. Morris. You could not tell this committee about any of the details surrounding the death?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir.

Mr. Morris. You did read her will in the papers, did you not?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, I believe I have. I am not quite sure. I have seen references to it if I haven't actually read the will in the paper.

Mr. Morris. You do know that she willed the property to Chuh Teh, the Chinese Communist general?

Mr. Friedman. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Did that surprise you?

Mr. Friedman. Not at all.

Mr. Morris. In fact, that was consistent to the person Agnes Smedley?

Mr. Friedman. I know she had the greatest admiration for General Teh, about whom she was writing an autobiography.

Mr. Morris. Did you ever meet Anna Louise Strong?

Mr. Friedman. Yes; I have met Anna Louise Strong.

Mr. Morris. Where did you meet her?

Mr. Friedman. I met her in Shanghai in 1946, I believe. She came to me and was introduced to me because she was interested in Chinese labor problems, and I was the American labor attaché to whom many Chinese even turned for explanation of the Chinese labor scene.

Mr. Morris. Did you turn to her for explanation of the Chinese labor scene?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir.

Mr. Morris. Where else did you see Anna Louise Strong?

Mr. Friedman. This is the only period.

Mr. Morris. Did you see her in the United States?

Mr. Friedman. No, I have never seen her in the United States. No, sir.

Mr. Morris. Did you know Victor Yakhontoff?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir, I don't believe I have ever.

Mr. Morris. Have you ever met him?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir.

Mr. Morris. Do you know who he is?

Mr. Friedman. The author of Chinese Soviet; is that the one to whom you are referring?

Mr. Morris. I believe that is the same man, yes.

Mr. Friedman. I don't know him. I have never met him.

Mr. Morris. Do you know Michael Greenberg?

Mr. Friedman. I don't know him.

Mr. Morris. You did not see him in England?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir.

Mr. Morris. He is there now?

Mr. Friedman. I don't know. His book has just been published.

Mr. Morris. From London?

Mr. Friedman. Yes.

Mr. Morris. Are you acquainted with the testimony before this committee about the Communist associations of Michael Greenberg?

Mr. Friedman. Not specifically. I am sure I have read them.

Mr. Morris. Have you testimony to believe that Michael Greenberg is or was a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't know. I just don't know the man.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever met the Snows, the Edgar Snows?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe Mr. Edgar Snow and the person, Mrs. Snow, the writer Nym Wales. I don't recall the occasion for meeting Edgar Snow, unless it was at the State Department. I remember meeting Mrs. Snow, Nym Wales, at the San Francisco Conference, United Nations Conference.

Mr. MORRIS. In what capacity was she there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she in the press room or one of the official rooms?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I just don't recall.

Mr. MORRIS. She was there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I am pretty sure she was.

Mr. MORRIS. And you say you thought you met Edgar Snow in the State Department?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. As I say, I don't recall the circumstances.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Dolly Eltenton?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't believe I did; no, sir. I don't know the name.

Mr. MORRIS. You don't know the name?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Chen Han-seng?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Chen Han-seng.

Mr. MORRIS. In what capacity did you meet Dr. Chen Han-seng?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I met Dr. Chen in his capacity as a research scholar at Johns Hopkins University, and I met Dr. Chen in New York, I think, at the Committee for Democratic Far Eastern Policy. I believe that is where I saw him in New York.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Mr. Bisson, who was a witness here yesterday?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I know Mr. Bisson.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet him in connection with the Committee for Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I believe I met Mr. and Mrs. Bisson at the Institute of Pacific Relations conference in Hot Springs. I don't recall seeing Mr. Bisson, I don't think, even in 1947 when I was back in America, and I have seen him recently where he is a colleague of mine at the University of California.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could I interrupt?

Do you remember testifying with regard to your duties while you were divisional assistant under Mr. Vincent?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember testifying that material coming into the office reached your desk after it had gone over the desk of Mr. Vincent or the assistant chief of the division?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I suggested I was down at the bottom of the routing list.

Mr. SOURWINE. And the exception to that, I believe you stated, was when Mr. Vincent would give you something directly.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes. Well, that was still routing.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is it true that you had a number of specific duties while you were in Mr. Vincent's office?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, specifically in the sense of writing memoranda; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did write memoranda?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. For Mr. Vincent?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. And you summarized dispatches on occasion?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I believe I did.
Mr. SOURWINE. And you did prepare correspondence for his signature on occasion?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I believe I did that, too.
Mr. SOURWINE. And you sometimes initiated reports or communications which sometimes involved policy. Is that a fair statement?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; I think it is a fair statement.
Mr. SOURWINE. I have been attempting to cut through what took us several pages in executive session, and I do not want to put words in your mouth if that is not a fair statement.
Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe that some of the memos or writings may be considered policy matters, but at my level they were not policy.
Mr. SOURWINE. No; but you said you did sometimes initiate memoranda and they subsequently became policy?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with drafting any documents which subsequently or ultimately received the signature of the President of the United States.
Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall clearly.
Mr. SOURWINE. I will give you an example. Mr. Vincent testified that certain documents had been prepared in his office and that persons in his office had worked on them, which ultimately became a part of the directive to General Marshall. Did you work on any of those documents?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I don't believe I have ever worked on what would be the preparatory material for General Marshall.
Mr. SOURWINE. There was a document, a letter or communication, from President Roosevelt to President Chiang Kai-shek under date of July 14, 1944, which appears at page 560 of the so-called white paper of the State Department.
Can you tell me whether you had anything to do with the drafting of that or a paper preliminary to it?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Would you repeat the date, please?
Mr. SOURWINE. I will be glad to show it to you in the white paper—the one on the left-hand page there [handing document].
Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; this was before I was a member of Mr. Vincent's division.
Mr. SOURWINE. You were with the State Department, but before you were a member of the division?
Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. In that category of papers, did you ever, to your knowledge, prepare a memorandum for inclusion in, or what ultimately became, a paper or document for the signature of the Secretary of State?
Mr FRIEDMAN. I just don't recall. Again, if you could be specific——
Mr. SOURWINE. If you had prepared a document which was subsequently signed by the Secretary of State, you would be very likely to remember it, would you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Not necessarily, because I might not know that it had become a document.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, if you knew about it.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I probably would remember it.

Mr. SOURWINE. We all follow our brain children.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Some of us have pride of authorship; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you exclude yourself?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. So that if you had written something which substantially, in the form in which you wrote it, was ultimately signed by the Secretary, you would have known that, would you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe so; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any knowledge of that happening?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall; no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Turning to another question, do you know Georgi Dimitroff?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Would you repeat that?

Mr. SOURWINE. Georgi Dimitroff.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Could you identify him for me?

Mr. SOURWINE. I am asking you if you know him.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't believe I know anyone by that name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that a man of that name was head of the Communist International?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes; now I know of whom you are speaking.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do place that Georgi Dimitroff?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know him?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever read any of his writings?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. May I at this point introduce a number of documents which I think fit appropriately in the record of the committee?

Senator WATKINS. I would say that if you want to submit them to the committee that we do not allow the promiscuous introduction of any documents. You see, your testimony is supposed to be sworn to here. If you want to leave them with the committee, we will have our staff check them, and we will make the ruling later as to whether they will be admitted as a part of the record.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Perhaps if I may take a moment of your record to get further guidance on this point.

In the record, the printed testimony of Mrs. Widener, there is a statement, there is a letter, from Mr. Durbrow of the State Department to this committee, explaining that I was terminated from the State Department without prejudice, and, first of all, Mr. Morris, in summarizing the letter at one point, substituted—and I am sure inadvertently—"dismissed" for "terminated."

Senator WATKINS. What is the difference?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The difference is, sir, that the phrase "termination without prejudice" is the equivalent of an honorable discharge, and that the term "dismissed" suggests something very uncomplimentary.

Senator WATKINS. I just wanted that for the purpose of the record.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I should like to submit into the record, to correct this inadvertency, the copies of my retirement papers or termination papers, and a subsequent letter from the State Department to me explaining the meaning of the term "without prejudice."

Mr. SOURWINE. Could you offer those one by one, identify them, and let the Chair take them under advisement with regard to inclusion?

Senator WATKINS. That would be proper.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like the record to show, Mr. Chariman, that I did ask Mr. Friedman earlier today if he had such papers if he would submit them to me by way of facilitating their introduction into the record, and he declined to show them.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Would the record, Mr. Chairman, also show that I took the initiative in mentioning this to Mr. Morris?

Senator WATKINS. You mentioned it, but did you decline to let him have them?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I suggested that I would wait until you arrived, sir.

Senator WATKINS. As I indicated, the Chair will allow you to leave the documents here for the purpose of checking them to see whether or not they are properly admissible.

We do not know what is in them; we have not seen them. We want to know what goes into this record. In other words, that is our responsibility.

Mr. SOURWINE. The first specific offer you are making is your record?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The first specific offer is a Department of Foreign Service personnel notice, dated October 14, 1946.

Senator WATKINS. That is identified sufficiently, I take it, for the purpose of the record. I do not want you to read what is in it.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I want to describe what is under the words "nature of action" since it will then identify the document.

Senator WATKINS. Is that not self-apparent without you explaining that it is there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I feel at this point that if I am leaving it for the committee perhaps I should identify it by its title.

Senator WATKINS. Proceed.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. "Nature of action, termination of services without prejudice."

The second document, also Division of Foreign Service Personnel, dated June 4, 1947, with the title "Termination and lump-sum payment."

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Friedman, when a man resigns from the State Department, is that technically a termination of services without prejudice?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am introducing into the record——

Mr. MORRIS. You are offering to be introduced into the record.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am offering. Excuse me. I am not familiar with the procedures.

Senator WATKINS. You can give the date of the letter, and if it is your letter, without telling us what is in it. That is what we want.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. This is a letter dated November 6, 1951, signed by Elbridge Durbrow, Chief, Division of Foreign Service Personnel.

Senator WATKINS. That is enough identification.

Mr. SOURWINE. My question, sir, which remains unanswered, is when an official of the State Department or an employee of the State Department resigns, is that technically termination without prejudice?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I believe it is.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you resign?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I did not resign.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your severance was involuntary as far as you are concerned?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; my severance was voluntary, and I waited for the State Department procedures to effectuate the act of termination.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you elected to leave?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I desired to leave; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you communicate your desire to the superiors or superior in any way?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you did not resign?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I communicated my desires to my chief in Shanghai on at least two occasions, and I informed Mr. Vincent in Washington, and he was still the Director, that I was preparing to leave the Foreign Service of the United States.

At that time, legislation on the Foreign Service was about to go into effect, and I waited for that legislation to take place.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you technically in the Foreign Service of the United States?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I was on the Foreign Service auxiliary which terminated with this new legislation of November 1946.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you did not resign?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I did not submit a letter of resignation, no, sir.

Senator WATKINS. What you did was tantamount, was it not, to a resignation?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It was my wish to leave.

Senator WATKINS. That is what you say, "I want to leave." That was a resignation. "I want to leave, and I am going to leave, the service."

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If I may just explain this point, since Mr. Sourwine has raised it, that when the State Department inquired which wanted to stay and which wanted to leave, in the Foreign Service, and this was in August of 1946, I then informed my superior that I was prepared to stay on until about June 1947, in the course of which I was hoping a successor would come out and I would break him in.

Then subsequently I decided that I would like to leave by the first of the year, and the Department decided that the best date was this date of the new legislation taking effect.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have another specific offer for the record?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. This will be your offer number four.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Will I receive from the committee a receipt for these documents?

Senator WATKINS. I think we can.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you want the documents returned to you?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I should like them returned to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are offering them for the record. How are we going to have them in the record if you want them returned?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Perhaps after the conclusion, if the committee decides to include them in the record, the actual documents will be returned to me.

Mr. Sourwine. I do not see how we can put a document in our record and return it to you at the same time?

Mr. Friedman. Perhaps a copy can be made for that purpose.

Mr. Morris. They are photostatic copies, are they not?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. In any event, the record stands clear that you desire to have these documents returned to you.

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. These are not originals, are they?

Mr. Friedman. These are photostatic copies.

Mr. Sourwine. Who procured the photostats?

Mr. Friedman. I did.

Mr. Sourwine. Yourself? You did not make them, did you?

Mr. Friedman. No, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. They were made commercially?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. From the originals?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. The originals are in your possession?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sourwine. If the originals are in your possession, why do you want the photostats back?

Mr. Friedman. Well, if the committee would prefer the photostats, I would prefer to keep the originals myself.

Mr. Sourwine. I asked you if the originals were in your possession, why do you want the photostats back?

Senator Watkins. In other words, what you are submitting here are photostats, and we are wondering why you want those back, if you have the originals.

Mr. Friedman. I think just to preserve them and not to have to make any new ones, if there are any further hearings.

Mr. Sourwine. What you are offering the committee here are photostats that you have had made of original documents in your possession, and you are asking that the photostats be returned to you?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

May I also offer another exhibit which I believe will complete the description of Mrs. Widener, who testified before the committee, and whose civil service was introduced into the record with the exception of her letter of resignation or termination. Therefore, I should like to submit for the record and the consideration of this committee two articles that appeared——

Senator Eastland (presiding). You may proceed. Let me get my bearings. If you want to offer something, you want to offer something in the record?

Mr. Friedman. Yes, sir.

Senator Eastland. You have to submit it to the counsel.

Mr. Friedman. I was following—I don't quite know the procedures.

Senator Eastland. I say submit it to the counsel and I will hear from him whether he wants to object to it.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, generally if we have witnesses who want something introduced into the record, by way of expediting and facilitating its entry into the record it is our practice, either in executive session or in formal hearings before the committee——

Senator EASTLAND. Wait a minute. I understand the background. But whatever goes in, it should be submitted to the counsel, and when it goes in I will hear from the counsel, whether he objects to it or what.

Mr. SOURWINE. The witness wanted the record at this time to show what he was offering for the chair to pass upon after counsel had had an opportunity to study it.

Senator EASTLAND. Have you objections?

Mr. MORRIS. I have objections. I think it is an unnecessary step that the witness is taking. We have been most liberal in introducing things into the record.

Senator EASTLAND. What I want to do is to file the stuff with you, all of it. Then when you go over it I will hear from you as to what your objections are, and pass upon it at that time.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Then you just wish me, without saying anything further, to hand this to Mr. Morris?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes, file the stuff with him.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Will we be able to identify them?

Mr. MORRIS. They will be properly identified.

Senator EASTLAND. It will be properly identified if I let it go into the record. I will let it go into the record if he does not object. If he objects, I will hear his grounds of objecting, and then I will pass upon it.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I see. But may I just say a word to indicate to Mr. Morris which articles I am introducing?

Senator EASTLAND. I wish you would just let him have the stuff that you want to go in. You can make a list of it, if you want to, get him to sign it, if you want to, and he will give you a receipt for it.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. May I then offer another document, sir, which is a typewritten copy of a testimonial?

Senator EASTLAND. The same ruling is going to apply to all of those. With anything like that, just give it to him and if you want a receipt for it, he will give you a receipt.

(The documents referred to were marked exhibits Numbers 741A, 741B, 741C, 741D, 741E, and 741F, and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 741–A

FP:ACS

DIVISION OF FOREIGN SERVICE PERSONNEL
DEPARTMENT OF STATE

DATE: Oct.14,1946
JOURNAL NO: 10-22

NAME (LAST)	(FIRST)	(INITIAL)	DATE OF BIRTH	CIVIL SERVICE OR OTHER LEGAL AUTHORITY
Friedman	Julian	R.	6.2.20

THIS IS TO NOTIFY YOU OF THE FOLLOWING PERSONNEL ACTION CONCERNING YOUR EMPLOYMENT.

SERVICE: Auxiliary

NATURE OF ACTION	EFFECTIVE DATE	APPROPRIATION
Termination of services without prejudice	to be established	1970509

	FROM	TO
POSITION TITLE	Jr. Economic Analyst
GRADE AND SALARY	$3648
POST	Shanghai
BASIC SALARY	$3648
AMOUNT OF TEMPORARY INCREASE	nil
APPROPRIATION	1970509
POSITION NUMBER	A-2873	Abolished

REMARKS

Reason of termination due to liquidation of Auxiliary Service.

Effective date to be established after arrival in U.S. Travel should be completed before 11.12.46

353

DATE OF OATH	DATE ASSIGNED	NATURE OF POSITION: PERM	TEMP	FULL	PART	MARITAL STATUS AND CHILDREN UNDER 21
		x		x		single

SEX	AMERICAN OR FOREIGN BORN	LEGAL RESIDENCE	RETIREMENT DEDUCTIONS: YES	NO
male	American		YES

FOR THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Albert W. Gray

1

CHIEF OF THE DIVISION OF FOREIGN SERVICE PERSONNEL

EMPLOYEE'S COPY

EXHIBIT No. 741–B

FORM FS 348 REVISED 1-4-46

FP:JDB

DIVISION OF FOREIGN SERVICE PERSONNEL
DEPARTMENT OF STATE

DATE 6-4-47
JOURNAL NO.

NAME (LAST)	(FIRST)	(MIDDLE)	DATE OF BIRTH	CIVIL SERVICE OR OTHER LEGAL AUTHORITY
FRIEDMAN	Julian	R.	6-2-20

THIS IS TO NOTIFY YOU OF THE FOLLOWING PERSONNEL ACTION CONCERNING YOUR EMPLOYMENT.

NATURE OF ACTION	EFFECTIVE DATE	SERVICE (AND CLASSIFICATION)
Termination & Lump-sum Payment	COB 11-15-46	FSS 1970551

	FROM	TO
POSITION TITLE	Jr. Econ. Anal.	Period Nov. 11-15/46 is approved as transit allowable by air from Shanghai to Rockville Centre, N.Y.
GRADE AND SALARY	FSS-11 $3720
POST	Shanghai
BASIC SALARY	$3720
AMOUNT OF TEMPORARY INCREASE	Nil
APPROPRIATION	1970551
POSITION NUMBER	SH-69

REMARKS: Termination of services without prejudice effective COB 11-15-46 Lump-sum payment authorized for 13 1/2 days cumulative annual leave and 52 1/2 days accrued current annual leave. Payment to be made by Department. Further communications regarding lump-sum payment should be addressed to the Division of Finance.
Address: 18 Davison Place, Rockville Centre, New York.

DATE OF BIRTH	DATE ASSIGNED	NATURE OF POSITION: FROM	TEMP	FULL	PART	MARITAL STATUS AND NUMBER OF DEPENDENTS UNDER 21
				X		Single

SEX	AMERICAN OR FOREIGN BORN	LEGAL RESIDENCE	VETERANS PREFERENCE: YES	NO
Male	American		X

FOR THE SECRETARY OF STATE

1

CHIEF OF THE DIVISION OF FOREIGN SERVICE PERSONNEL

EMPLOYEE'S COPY

0990 728849

EXHIBIT No. 741–C

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 6, 1951.

In reply refer to: FP

Mr. JULIAN R. FRIEDMAN,
18 Davison Place, Rockville Centre, New York.

DEAR MR. FRIEDMAN: Your letter of September 28, 1951, regarding an article appearing in the September 19 issue of the Herald Tribune has been referred to me for reply.

In 1946, you were one of approximately 80 officers in the Foreign Service who were terminated as a result of the liquidation of the Foreign Service Auxiliary. As you know, this was a temporary wartime branch of the Department of State which was abolished on November 12, 1946, following the passage of the Foreign Service Act of 1946. The term "Without prejudice" was rather broadly used at that time for separation of employees because of reductions in force, resignations for personal reasons, or, as in this case, terminations due to the discontinuance of the Auxiliary branch of the Foreign Service.

It will not be possible to supply you with the various communications you request, since the policy of the Department precludes the release of this material. Furthermore, the Department released no information to the press regarding your employment or your termination from the Foreign Service. Any statements purportedly made by Mr. Eugene Dooman were made by him as a private individual, and not as a State Department official. Mr. Dooman has not been an employee of the Department of State since 1945.

Sincerely yours,

[s] Elbridge Durbrow
ELBRIDGE DURBROW.
Chief, Division of Foreign Service Personnel.

EXHIBIT No. 741–D

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF ECONOMICS AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

(University of London)

Houghton Street, Aldwych,

LONDON, W. C. 2

Mr. JULIAN R. FRIEDMAN was accepted by this School as a graduate student in March 1947. His knowledge of and interest in the social and allied problems of colonial territories attracted the attention of his supervisors, and as there was then a vacancy on the teaching staff of the School he was invited to become an assistant lecturer in colonial social science in the autumn of 1947. At that time the London School of Economics was conducting a course in colonial social studies at the request of the Colonial Office, and it was in the arrangements for the teaching for this course that Mr. Friedman participated. We were entirely satisfied with the way in which he carried out his duties, and in October 1950 he was appointed to a lectureship in colonial administration, since it was in this particular sphere that his interests were concentrated. Once again we were entirely satisfied with the manner in which he discharged his duties. He has now decided to return to the United States, and indeed he had told us from the beginning that his stay in this country would only be for a short period of years.

Mr. Friedman has been a most welcome member of the staff and has taken a full part in the social life of the School. He served for a period as the secretary of the Senior Common Room. The teaching duties allotted to him were not easy to carry out because the field is not very clearly defined; there is an absence of literature and no established tradition of instruction. Mr. Friedman overcame these difficulties. He is a careful and conscientious teacher who has the interests of his students much in mind. Some of these students have been officers of British colonial governments seconded to this country for the purpose of taking a year's course at this School. It was obvious that this country to undertake the instruction of students of this class. Mr. Friedman showed that he possesses the tact and accomplishment necessary for this unusual and difficult duty, and this is a very considerable tribute to him. He has shown in his publications considerable breadth of mind and power of understanding; and he has greatly deepened and enlarged his interests since he has been with us. He is in a sense an explorer in a new country, the boundaries of which are not clearly visible. Thus it is more difficult than elsewhere to produce results. It is greatly to his credit that he has not rushed in and attempted to make contributions before he had consolidated his background. What he has contributed shows great promise of the future.

I have no hesitation whatever in recommending Mr. Friedman as a most valuable member of the staff of a university.

(Signed) A. M. CARR-SAUNDERS,
Director.

28th May, 1951.

Original to Dr. B. Stewart, Dean, Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, Medford, Massachusetts.

Copied by: JRF.

Checked by: ——— ———.

EXHIBIT No. 741–E

[New York Journal-American, Wednesday, December 12, 1951]

ACCUSES VOICE OF CENSORING SLAPS AT REDS—WRITER SAYS SCRIPT CUT

(By Howard Rushmore)

Voice of America scripts which contained "too hard-hitting criticisms" of Russia and not enough of the State Department's official "subtle and indirect approach" to the subject were censored by the local voice office, a veteran radio writer charged today.

Mrs. Alice Widener of 829 Park ave., said portions of her original scripts were cut to eliminate "criticisms which I considered factual and direct based on thorough research and investigation."

Mrs. Widener, who prepared 40 scripts for the Voice of America's overseas short wave at the standard rate of $40 per script said some of these documents were now being studied by the Senate subcommittee on Internal Security.

HER SCRIPT SUBPOENAED

Mrs. Widener, who appeared as a witness before the Senate group in public hearings last Summer in connection with public hearings on the Institute of Pacific Relations, said she had testified "for two hours in closed sessions on the Voice of America."

Copies of her original scripts and those used in the actual broadcast were then subpoenaed by the subcommittee, Mrs. Widener said.

The free-lance writer worked for the State Department's local office, 224 W. 57th st., from January to June of this year.

Mrs. Widener said her chief objection came when her scripts dealing with the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund were cut to eliminate criticism of Russia "turning this worth-while cause" into "a political football, while refusing to contribute funds."

Since the UN organization was founded in 1946, the United States has given $75,000,000, with 45 other nations giving $115,000,000 including such "war-wrecked nations as Belgium and Holland," Mrs. Widener said.

"I was asked to prepare a script for international broadcast pointing up the value of this children's group," she added.

"Three paragraphs of my script were directly critical of Russia's refusal to contribute to the world's hungry children. They were cut out of the broadcast with only a one-sentence rebuke to Stalin left in."

DELETED ITEM BARED

Mrs. Widener produced her original script and the official State Department broadcast which eliminated the following criticism:

"A representative of the Soviet Union does play a political part in UNICEF by setting on the executive committee. However, this man and his government seem perfectly content merely to sit and talk about suffering children.

"Today millions of grateful mothers whose children have thrived and progressed under UNICEF care can say 'the Communists sit and talk about defending children. But people in free countries act to defend children."

The official broadcast mentioned Russia's refusal to contribute money to children's relief but all other criticism was removed by Mrs. Widener's superiors.

RUMANIA SCRIPT CUT

On another occasion, Mrs. Widener said she had been assigned to prepare a script answering a Rumanian propaganda statement that a mother of nine children in that satellite nation had gone to work on a factory night-shift to show her loyalty to Stalin.

Her original script contained the following paragraph which was cut by the Voice of America in the final broadcast:

"People in free countries wish to know about the sincerity of Olena Pichkova's (the Rumanian mother) gratitude to Stalin. Is it really possible that a woman can be grateful to a political leader for the fact that her nine sleeping children are left without a mother's care at night."

Another script by Mrs. Widener dealing with the same subject had the following criticism deleted in the actual broadcast:

"It's easy to understand just why these Rumanian women and all women in Communist lands are so worried about what a mother can do for her small children while she's away at work.

"Now that millions of these women have been lured and forced by Communists to take jobs outside the home, mothers are facing the tragic fact that neither the Soviet government nor any other Communist regime can provide enough child-care centers and day nurseries to meet maternal needs."

Mrs. Widener said she was dismissed after six months and was told that her scripts "were too hard-hitting and not the subtle and indirect approach" required of State Department writers.

"My superiors were not Communists," Mrs. Widener told the N. Y. Journal-American. "They were merely following their orders from Washington. But most of the principal propaganda points in my scripts were either eliminated or weakened here.

"But I believe that people behind the iron curtain who risk their lives to listen to our broadcasts want direct truth and not 'subtle and indirect' propaganda. That was what I tried to give them. And I found that the Voice of America didn't want it."

EXHIBIT No. 471–F

[New York Journal American, December 13, 1951]

"TIME LIMITATIONS"—OFFICIALS EXPLAIN "VOICE" DELETIONS

(By Howard Rushmore)

Voice of America officials today said that deletions were made in the Anti-Russian scripts of a writer for the State Department's propaganda agency because of "time limitations" and "too much editorial content."

Mrs. Alice Widener, 829 Park Ave., had charged that cuts were made in some of the 40 programs she did for the Voice because her superiors told her the scripts "were too hard-hitting."

Foy D. Kohler, chief of the Voice of America, said at his office, 251 W. 57th St., that Mrs. Widener had "never done anything we considered at all useful."

ACTION DEFENDED

In reply Mrs. Widener's accusation that the Voice wanted more "subtle and indirect" writing dealing with the Russian scene, Kohler said:

"We never considered her one of our psychological warriors, skilled in various forms of propaganda. We have been accused of being too hard-hitting by Western European audiences where we must use the subtle approach.

"We have to tailor our broadcasts to fit the audiences."

Mrs. Widener's immediate superiors, who terminated her employment as a free lance script writer last June, complained that Mrs. Widener "used too much editorializing in her scripts after her point had been made."

DELETION QUOTED

Mrs. Widener had stated one of the important deletions of her script dealt with Russia's refusal to contribute any money to the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund.

The deletion which the State Department now claims was too "editorial" for their anti-Russian propaganda follows:

"A representative of the Soviet Union does play a political part in UNICEF by sitting on the executive committee. However, this man and his government seem perfectly content merely to sit and talk about suffering children.

"Today millions of grateful mothers whose children have thrived and progressed under UNICEF care can say 'the Communists sit and talk about defending children. But people in free countries act to defend children'."

"SURPRISED"

Mrs. Widener said that she was surprised that Kohler had accused her of incompetence.

"Last Summer Mrs. Olive Remington Goldman wrote Mr. Kohler praising my assistance and advice given during the sessions of the UN Commission on the Status of Women at which Mrs. Goldman was the United States delegate," she declared.

"In this letter, Mrs. Goldman told Mr. Kohler that the Voice should be praised for having me connected with it.

"I never knew that Mrs. Goldman sent this letter until she told me several weeks later. She expressed surprise that Mr. Kohler had not told me about it."

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Fine, thank you, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Friedman, I want to run through a list of publications here, and I will lay the foundation very briefly.

In connection with your work in the State Department and your interest in the Far East, did you think it necessary or desirable to do any reading in literature having to do with the Chinese Communist movement?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir, I did believe it desirable to read.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you read some such literature?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. I believe at the time that I read such a book as Mr. Gunther Stein's Red Challenge.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to read through this list and if you remember having read any of these please say so.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir. That is, remember reading them at the time of my employment in the State Department?

Mr. SOURWINE. If you remember you ever read the book. Years of Fulfillment, by Harriet Moore?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Soviet Communism, by Sidney and Beatrice Webb?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe I read parts of that; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. The Soviet State, by B. W. Maxwell?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall that.

Mr. SOURWINE. The Racial Myth, by Paul Radin?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I have read Mr. Radin's book.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you read Ryuiche Kaji's review of that, by any chance?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall; no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Soviet Russia Fights Crime, by Lenka von Koerber?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall that volume. Is that a book or a pamphlet? Would you have some indication?

Mr. SOURWINE. The distinction between pamphlets forms and book forms is one I would not be prepared to answer with regard to that publication.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. It might assist.

Mr. SOURWINE. A Soviet Study of the American Position in the Far East, by Harriet Moore?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't believe I have read that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Literature on the Chinese Soviet Movement, a bibliography prepared by the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall on that.

Mr. SOURWINE. The Agricultural Economy of China, by L. Madyar?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I don't recall that volume.

Mr. SOURWINE. Karl Radek's Theoretical Analysis of Chinese History?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir, I don't believe I have ever read that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Safarov's History of the Development of Chinese Society?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am not familiar with that first-hand, no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. The Revolutionary Movement in the Colonies, Thesis of the Sixth World Congress of the Communist International?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I may have read that, yes, sir. I am not sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. Between the Fifth and the Sixth World Congresses, 1924–28: A report on the position of all sections of the world Communist Party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I am not sure of that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yelk's The Chinese Revolution?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Would you spell the author's name, please?

Mr. SOURWINE. Y-e-l-k.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, I don't believe I have read that volume.

Mr. SOURWINE. British Imperialisms in China, by G. Voitinsky?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall that volume either.

Mr. SOURWINE. Hansu Chan, Sun Yat-sen and the Chinese Revolution, an article in China Today?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Would you pronounce that again?

Mr. SOURWINE. Hansu Chan, Sun Yat-sen and the Chinese Revolution?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't recall that.

Mr. SOURWINE. The Situation in China by G. Voitinsky?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Again I don't recall that one.

Mr. SOURWINE. Resolution on the Chinese Question Passed by the Sixth Plenum of the Enlarged Executive Committee of the Communist International?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Again I don't recall whether I have read that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever read any of the volumes of the publication Imprecorr?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe not, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You know what that publication is?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I believe it would be a publication of the Communist International.

Mr. SOURWINE. International press correspondence, yes.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. International press correspondence.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are correct about the publication.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I have read that, no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you read a speech by Stalin in the Chinese Commission of the Seventh Plenum which was published in pamphlet form?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Again I believe I have read speeches by Stalin on China and I am pretty sure that would have been included.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have just a few more questions?

Senator EASTLAND. You may proceed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you now or have you ever been a member of the Communist Party of the United States or of any other country?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I am not a member of the Communist Party of the United States; I have never been, and I am not a member and have never been a member, of the Communist Party of any country.

Senator EASTLAND. Were you ever solicited by any one to join the Communist Party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I don't believe so.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you ever discuss it with any member?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have never discussed joining the Communist Party.

Senator EASTLAND. Have you ever discussed communism with members of the party?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes, sir; I have.

Senator EASTLAND. Who were they?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I referred to Mr. John Horner, of the British Communist Party, of whom I have discussed communism; yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Who in the United States?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I have ever discussed communism with any American Communists.

Senator EASTLAND. What Communists or pro-Communists have you associated with in this country?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. In this country?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes. That is, such as Mr. Lattimore. Who else?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Are you identifying Mr. Lattimore as a Communist or pro-Communist, Senator?

Senator EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. The only answer I can give is that I have associated with Mr. Lattimore; yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Who else?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, if you could be more specific, perhaps I can give you a specific answer.

Senator EASTLAND. I cannot be specific. I want information. I am asking a question to get information.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think I——

Mr. MORRIS. You have associated with Israel Epstein have you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have met Mr. Epstein; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. You have associated with him, have you not?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I have been at his home; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And do you think he is a Communist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think I can say that he is a pro-Communist; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you being responsive to Senator Eastland's question under the circumstances?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. If you mentioned Epstein, yes; I know Epstein.

Senator EASTLAND. I did not mention it. I asked you the question. Who else is there?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I just don't recall any American Communists or pro-Communists with whom I have discussed communism.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever discuss it with Agnes Smedley?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I think I have discussed China with Agnes Smedley without discussing communism with Agnes Smedley.

Senator EASTLAND. You associated with Agnes Smedley? She was an associate of yours?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. She was not an associate. I have been acquainted with Agnes Smedley; yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Are you a Marxist?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think so, and I don't think the Marxists consider me one, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. Would you call yourself a sympathizer to communism?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I would not call myself a sympathizer with communism. I have my own affirmative views on matters political and they are certainly not consistent with the views of the Communists.

Senator EASTLAND. Proceed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you ever knowingly assisted the Communist Party of any country, or any person or persons known to you to be Communists or pro-Communists?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I don't believe I have ever done so knowingly, and I don't think I have done so unknowingly.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever been asked to do so?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I don't believe I have ever been asked to—yes, I am sure I have made suggestions to Miss Smedley or Mr. Epstein or Mr. Horner.

Mr. MORRIS. Such as what kind of suggestions?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I just don't recall specifically.

Mr. MORRIS. You said you are sure you have made such suggestions to those persons.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Well, I mean suggestions in the sense of "Won't you come over for dinner?" or "Won't we go out for a walk?"

Mr. MORRIS. Beyond that you have not made any?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; not that I recall.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever been asked or invited or urged to join the Communist Party of any country?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; I do not believe I have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you ever received any advice or directives on policy from any Communist or pro-Communist source during the entire time you were employed by the United States?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you ever received any money, reward, emolument, decoration, or praise from any Communist government or its representatives at any time?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. No, sir; not that I know of.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions, Mr. Chairman.

Senator EASTLAND. That will be all. You are excused.

(Whereupon, at 4 p. m., Tuesday, April 1, 1952, the hearing was recessed subject to the call of the Chair.)

INDEX

(NOTE.—The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee attaches no significance to the mere fact of the appearance of the name of an individual or an organization in this index.)

A

Page

Abe Cabinet (Japanese) 4202
Abe, General Nobuyuki 4202, 4267, 4269
Aberyswyst University (British) 4037
Abo, Baron (Admiral) 4148
Addis, Dr. Thomas 4258
Adjutant General, The 4072, 4074
Adler, Solomon 4322
Advisory Committee 4101
Agrarian China 4231
Agriculture 4070
A. A. A. (Agriculture Administration Act) 4071
Agricultural Economy of China, The 4352
Air Force in China 4134
Akita, Kiyoshi 4148
Allen, Carolyn E 4119
Allen, G. C 4270
Allen, James S 4208, 4209
Allen, Riley 4125–4126, 4146
Aleutian Islands 4109
Alexander, J. W 4089
Alexander, Wallace M 4044, 4092—4093, 4105–4106, 4108, 4109, 4134
Alfred, Helen 4258
Allied Labor News 4078, 4308, 4336
Allport, Gordon W 4119
Alper, Michael (Rabbi) 4115
Alsberg, Carl L 4044, 4092–4093, 4105–4106, 4108, 4119, 4130, 4134
Ambassador (German) 4043
Amerasia 4046–4047, 4058, 4069, 4076, 4093, 4097, 4103, 4106–4107, 4120–4121, 4124, 4136, 4141, 4147, 4149, 4188, 4200, 4212–4213, 4254, 4270, 4282–4284, 4286, 4312, 4314, 4316, 4333, 4334.
Amerasia case 4177
American Ambassador 4099–4100
American Anthropological Association 4119
American Arbitration Association 4327
American Artist Union 4275
American Association of University Women 4138
American, British and French policy 4205
American Chinese Export Co 4081
American Civil Liberties Union 4116
American Committee for Nonparticipation in Japanese Aggression 4252, 4253
American Communications Association 4116
American Cooperating Committee for Chinese Mass Education Movement 4046
Amco (see Institute of Pacific Relations-American Council) 4146
American Congress for Peace and Democracy 4114–4115, 4118
American Consulate General in Shanghai 4329
American Council of Learned Societies 4259
American Delegation (October 27, 1944) 4122–4123
American Economic Association 4119, 4259

Page
American Far Eastern Policy---- 4056–4057, 4095, 4278
American Federation of Labor (AFL)---- 4274
American Federation of Teachers---- 4116
American Foreign Policy---- 4135, 4164
American Foreign Policy in the Light of Coming Philippine Independence (speech)---- 4127
American Friends of the Chinese People---- 4064–4065, 4139, 4166–4167, 4169, 4187, 4252–4253, 4272, 4276–4277
American Historical Association---- 4119
American Intervention in Siberia---- 4090
American League Against War and Fascism---- 4118
American League for Peace and Democracy---- 4086, 4114–4115, 4118, 4138, 4187, 4253, 4259, 4272, 4273
American League for Peace and Democracy (Women's Division)---- 4275
American Friends of Chinese People---- 4065
American Museum of Natural History---- 4119
American Neutrality Act---- 4151
American Participation in the China Consortiums---- 4047, 4135
American Peace Mobilization---- 4045–4046, 4051–4053, 4075, 4098, 4140
American Political Science Association---- 4119
American Psychological Association---- 4119
American Red Cross---- 4147
American Red Cross (Russia)---- 4260
American Russian Institute---- 4091, 4144–4145, 4258
American Sociological Association---- 4119
American Statistical Association---- 4119
American Student Union---- 4116, 4277
American Telephone & Telegraph Co---- 4119
American Youth Congress---- 4138
Amter, Israel---- 4117
Amtorg Trading Corp---- 4038–4039, 4042, 4077
Anderson, James---- 4277
Anderson, Robbins B---- 4125–4126, 4146
Anderson, Sherwood---- 4115
Anderson, William---- 4119
Andrew, Seymour L---- 4119
Andrews, Clark---- 4309–4310, 4328
Andrews, Mrs. Clark---- 4309–4310
Anglo-American Coalition---- 4203
Anglo-French-Soviet Alliance---- 4201
Antarctic---- 4147
Anti-Comintern Pact (November 1936)---- 4201–4202
Anti-Japanese Policy---- 4217
Anti-Nazi Literature Committee---- 4258
Araki, General---- 4148
Arens, Mrs---- 4041–4042
Arima, Count---- 4149
Arneman, Lt. Col. George E---- 4125
Arctic---- 4147
Artist, Rev. Edgar R---- 4115
Arvin, Newton---- 4258
Ashton-Gwatkin (C. M. G.) F. ("P. J." per name)---- 4122
Asia---- 4047, 4165, 4267, 4273, 4286
Asiaticus. (See Mueller, Moeller, Shippe.)
Associated Farmers in California---- 4113
Atherton, Frank C---- 4125–4126, 4146
Atkinson, Brooks---- 4330–4331
Atlantic Charter---- 4164
Auriea, Juan Mariveilli Vid---- 4081
Austern, Miss Hilda (Mrs. Nat Bretholtz)---- 4044, 4053–4054, 4076, 4086, 4092–4094, 4097, 4105–4106, 4108–4109, 4131, 4134, 4143, 4241.
Australia---- 4070, 4080, 4112
Austria---- 4204
Authors' League---- 4258

Page
AVCO International Corp 4079
Aversa, Ray 4117
Axis-Japan Alliance 4203

B

Bachman, Paul S 4125–4126
Bachrach, Marion 4136
Bacon, Dr. Charles S 4258
Baker, Newton D 4054, 4070–4071, 4086–4087, 4100, 4108, 4130, 4135
Baldwin, Bene 4174
Baldwin, Roger 4115, 4142, 4170–4171, 4174
Ball, Maj. William 4046
Ballantine, Joseph 4324
Bancroft, Frank C 4285
Bank of Japan 4148
Barach, Mrs. Edmond 4136
Barber, Jr., Joseph 4108
Barcelona, Spain 4235
Barnes, Harry Elmer 4091, 4145
Barnes, Joseph F 4035, 4126, 4130
Barnes, Kathleen 4043, 4086–4087, 4090–4091, 4094, 4096–4097, 4108, 4135, 4144–4145, 4208–4209
Barnett, E. E 4107
Barnett, Robert W 4075, 4226–4228
Barnett, Mrs. Robert W 4075
Barr, Captain 4046
Barret, Miss Edith 4275
Barrett, Colonel David 4220
Barrett, Miss Mary 4328–4329
Batavia 4111
Battle Hymn of China 4305
Beard, Mr 4110
Beatty, Bessie 4258
Becker, Maurice 4258
Belgium 4113, 4349
Bentley, Elizabeth 4322
Berezhovsky, Mrs. Alice. (See Mrs. Alice Widener.)
Berger, Mrs. Victor L. (Berger, Meta) 4116, 4142, 4258
Berkeley Public Library 4090
Berlin, Germany 4136, 4200, 4203, 4234
Berlin-Rome Axis 4202
Bernal, J. D 4089
Berne, Lewis Alan 4115
Berridge, William A 4119
Bess, Demaree 4135
Biddle, George 4115
Bieberman, Herbert 4038, 4050–4051, 4063, 4066
Binder, Carroll 4140
Bingham, Woodbridge 4226
Birch, Francis 4089
Birk, Louis P 4258
Bisson, T. A 4085–4086, 4089, 4092, 4158–4159, 4288, 4339
Blackwell, Alice Stone 4258
Blake, Katherine Devereaux 4258
Blakeslee, Mr 4127
Blair House 4291, 4293
Blitzstein, Marc 4258
Block, Anita 4258
Blumenthal, Annette 4086, 4108, 4118
Board of Economic Warfare 4161, 4226–4228, 4236, 4238–4241, 4245–4246, 4252, 4254, 4279, 4281
Boas, Prof. Franz 4115, 4136
Bodansky, Aaron 4091, 4145
Boddy, Manchester 4136–4137
Bodian, Clara 4142

Page
Bogdanov, Peter A---- 4042
Book and Magazine Guild---- 4111
Borovoy, Mrs---- 4042
Borg, Dorothy---- 4102
Bosch, John H---- 4115
Boston Globe---- 4299
Boston University---- 4116
Boudin, Louis B---- 4089, 4304–4306
Boudin, Glickstein, and Cohen---- 4300
Bowen, Sterling---- 4258
Bowie, Mrs. W. Russell---- 4115
Bowman, Isiah---- 4119
Bowman, LeRoy---- 4142
Boyer, Richard---- 4258
Brady, Robert A---- 4258
Brand, Millen---- 4258
Brandes, Mr---- 4234
Brameld, Theodore B---- 4089
Brannan, Eleanor D---- 4142
Brant, Miss Phoebe---- 4275
Branting, Hajalmar---- 4234
Branting, Sonya---- 4234–4235
Breines, Simon---- 4258
Bremen Affair---- 4235
Bretholtz, Nat---- 4053
Bretholtz, Mrs. Nat. (See Hilda Austern.)
Brewster, Dorothy---- 4089, 4258
Bridges, Harry---- 4121
Briffault, Robert---- 4258
Briggs, Marion---- 4053, 4140
Bright, John---- 4136
British and American Policy in the Far East---- 4203, 4211
British Army Intelligence Service---- 4087, 4131
British Communist Party---- 4316–4317, 4353
British Government---- 4128
British Labor Party---- 4317
British Policy in the Far East---- 4214, 4216
Bromberg, J. E---- 4258
Bronson, George---- 4271
Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America, District Council No. 9---- 4116
Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen---- 4116
Browder, Earl---- 4084, 4110, 4142, 4170, 4172–4175, 4177, 4179–4180, 4182, 4237, 4238
Brown, Delmar M---- 4160
Bryan, Helen R---- 4117
Bryn Mawr College---- 4258, 5260
Buck, Pearl---- 4245, 4301
Buck, Peter H---- 4125–4126
Budenz, Louis---- 4078, 4167, 4195
Buell, Dr. Raymond Leslie---- 4130, 4239, 4245
Bunche, Ralph J---- 4089
Bund in Shanghai---- 4320
Burden, Bill---- 4063, 4066–4067
Burden, Shirley---- 4063, 4066–4067
Burdick, Usher L---- 4115
Burdick, Virginia---- 4091, 4144–4145
Burgum, Edwin Berry---- 4089, 4117, 4258
Burke, Fielding---- 4258
Burke, Kenneth---- 4089
Buss, Claude---- 4225–4226
Butkovich, John D---- 4115
Butler, Maj. Gen. Smedley D---- 4169

C

Page
Caballero, Mr ---- 4234
Cabinet Advisory Council (Japanese) ---- 4147
Cadden, Joseph ---- 4115
Caldwell, Oliver ---- 4143
Callott, M. S ---- 4091
Cambridge University ---- 4089, 4322
Campbell, Dorothy ---- 4328–4329
Canada ---- 4064, 4070, 4099, 4118
Canada Institute of International Affairs ---- 4064, 4099
Canadian Friends of the Chinese People ---- 4065, 4273
Canadian Historical Review ---- 4150
Canton, China ---- 4046, 4111
Carlson, Captain ---- 4125
Carnegie Corporation ---- 4160
Carnegie Endowment for International Peace ---- 4107, 4326, 4331
Carr, E. H. (John Keith) ---- 4122
Carr-Saunders, A. M ---- 4349
Carroll, Esther ---- 4272–4273, 4277
Carter, Bill ---- 4208–4210
Carter, Edward C ---- 4043–4046, 4050, 4052–4053, 4065, 4067–4069, 4074–4076, 4086–4087, 4092–4100, 4104–4106, 4108–4109, 4111, 4121–4122, 4125–4126, 4129–4131, 4136, 4140, 4145–4146, 4161, 4188, 4208–4209, 4239, 4241–4242, 4244–4246, 4255, 4263–4264, 4314.
Carter, Elmer ---- 4142
Case of the Anti-Soviet Trotskyite Center ---- 4145
Case, Everett ---- 4087, 4127
Caspary, Vera ---- 4258
Cavert, Mrs. Samuel McCrea ---- 4138
Central Bank of China ---- 4320
Central China ---- 4131–4133, 4226, 4228
Central Committee of the Communist Party ---- 4336
Century Association ---- 4047
Century Club ---- 4044
Chamberlain, John ---- 4117
Chamberlain, Dr. Joseph P ---- 4037, 4054, 4243
Chamberlain, Neville ---- 4204, 4264
Chamberlain, Mrs. Sellah ---- 4080
Chambers, Maria Cristina ---- 4258
Chambers, Robert ---- 4258
Chambers, Whittaker ---- 4322
Chan, Hansu. (See Chi, Ch'ao-ting.)
Chang, Gen. Chun ---- 4150–4151
Chang, Ch'un-kawagoe ---- 4213–4214
Changkufeng Incident (July to August 1938) ---- 4132
Chang, Hsueh-liang ---- 4272
Chahar Province (China) ---- 4151
Chapman, Abraham ---- 4078
Chapman, Royal N ---- 4126
Chappel, Winifred ---- 4170–4171, 4175
Chase, Mr ---- 4335
Chatham House (London) ---- 4108, 4122
Chelyuskin (film) ---- 4042
Chen, Han-seng ---- 4057, 4059, 4060, 4069, 4095–4096, 4141, 4146, 4149–4150, 4231, 4339
Chen, Jack ---- 4274, 4276–4278
Cheng, Chung Book Shop ---- 4283
Chevalier, Haakon ---- 4258
Chi, Dr. Ch'ao-ting ---- 4065, 4067–4068, 4092, 4095–4097, 4104, 4141, 4143, 4179–4180, 4182, 4238, 4352, 4261, 4278, 4319, 4320
Chi Hung-chang's army ---- 4213
Chi, Dr. Tao Heng ---- 4318
Chiang Kai-shek ---- 4059–4060, 4103, 4147, 4149, 4151, 4169, 4215, 4271–4272, 4278, 4283–4284, 4287–4288, 4298, 4302, 4340.

Page
Chiang, Gen. Tso-pin---- 4150
Chien, Tuan-sheng---- 4188
Chin-Doihara Agreement---- 4151
China---- 4035, 4047, 4053, 4068–4069, 4071, 4076, 4077, 4090, 4092, 4095, 4102–4103, 4106, 4110–4111, 4115, 4118, 4121–4123, 4133–4134, 4139–4141, 4147, 4149, 4169, 4178, 4184, 4202, 4215–4217, 4219–4220, 4222–4223, 4228, 4232, 4269, 4271–4273, 4276, 4278, 4282, 4285–4286, 4298, 4300–4301, 4303, 4312, 4321, 4329, 4330, 4333, 4335, 4352–4353.
China Aid Council---- 4079, 4138, 4300, 4318, 4328, 4337
China Monthly---- 4307
China Today---- 4085, 4104, 4166, 4169, 4171, 4174, 4179–4182, 4187, 4189, 4203, 4237, 4269–4271, 4273, 4274, 4276, 4307, 4352
Chinese---- 4058–4061, 4068–4070, 4096, 4102–4104, 4138, 4182, 4214, 4215, 4216, 4218–4220, 4231
Chinese Association of Labor---- 4302, 4303
Chinese Benevolent Association---- 4138
Chinese Communist---- 4103, 4120, 4150, 4216–4218, 4222, 4231, 4283, 4286, 4287
Chinese Communist Army---- 4059–4061, 4103, 4215, 4218, 4222, 4282, 4286
Chinese Communist Government---- 4207, 4313–4314, 4323, 4333
Chinese Communist Group at Yenan---- 4231
Chinese Communist Movement---- 4103, 4104
Chinese Communist Party---- 4022, 4283, 4285, 4333–4334
Chinese Communist Party Policy---- 4110
Chinese Industrial Cooperatives (INDUSCO)---- 4329
Chinese Laundrymen's Association---- 4079
Chinese Nationalist Army---- 4103, 4170, 4205, 4222
Chinese Nationalist Government---- 4022, 4058, 4069, 4071, 4150–4152, 4207, 4214, 4222, 4285–4287, 4298, 4302, 4323
Chinese Revolution---- 4136, 4169, 4216, 4352
Chinese Soviets---- 4103, 4120, 4169, 4352
Chinese Youth Delegation---- 4137–4139
Cholmeley, Elsie Fairfax---- 4308, 4317–4318
Christian Student Movement House---- 4124
Christy, Mr---- 4107
Chu, Sueh-fan---- 4302
Chu, Te (Chu, Teh)---- 4022, 4218, 4338
Chu, Tong---- 4036–4037, 4297
Chun, T'ien---- 4301–4302
Chungking---- 4022, 4205, 4283, 4285
Church, Col. Gerald L---- 4047, 4072–4073
Church League for Industrial Democracy---- 4115–4116
Churchman (publication), the---- 4116, 4118
City College of New York---- 4156, 4259
Civil Service Commission (United States)---- 4045, 4163–4165, 4246, 4253
Civilian Personnel Division---- 4073
Clark, Lady Sclywyn---- 4337
Clark, Tom---- 4163–4164, 4297
Claus, Mr---- 4234, 4236
Cleaners, Dyers and Truck Drivers Union---- 4116
Cleeve, Miss---- 4122
Cliveden Set---- 4098
Cooperative Unity Alliance---- 4116
Club Valhalla---- 4182
Clurman, Harold---- 4091, 4145, 4258
Clyde, Mrs. Ethel---- 4091, 4145
Coates, Robert M---- 4258
Cochran, William F---- 4115
Cohen, Mrs. J. X---- 4117
Cohen, Lester---- 4258
Cohen, Rabbi Samuel M---- 4115
Coffee, John M---- 4115
Colegrove, Kenneth---- 4124
Colgate University---- 4259

Page
College de France, Paris ---- 4089
Collier's Weekly ---- 4258
Colman, Louis ---- 4136
Columbia University ---- 4037, 4089–4099, 4107, 4116–4117, 4119, 4227–4228, 4245, 4258–4259, 4260
Comintern (see Communist International) ---- 4287
Committee Against Tom Clark, the ---- 4163–4164
Committee for Cultural Freedom ---- 4257
Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy ---- 4080, 4083, 4162–4164, 4183, 4282, 4296–4300, 4308, 4317–4319, 4323, 4337, 4339
Communists ---- 4061, 4103–4104, 4154–4157, 4166–4167, 4170, 4172, 4174–4175, 4177, 4179–4185, 4187, 4207, 4211–4212, 4214, 4215, 4218, 4220, 4221–4222, 4232–4234, 4303–4304, 4307, 4313, 4317, 4319–4322, 4329, 4335, 4338, 4350–4354.
Communist Book Shop ---- 4302
Communist China ---- 4180, 4220, 4282, 4287
Communist International ---- 4234, 4341, 4352
Communist Manifesto ---- 4335
Communist Party ---- 4069, 4073, 4153–4154, 4157–4158, 4162, 4172, 4174, 4177–4181, 4183, 4209, 4213–4217, 4220–4221, 4238, 4293–4294, 4296–4297, 4299–4302, 4306, 4318, 4327, 4336, 4352–4354
Communist Party (Chuman) ---- 4081
Communist Party in Germany ---- 4243, 4233
Communist Party in Japan ---- 4183, 4272, 4280
Communist Party (New York State) ---- 4297
Communist Party (Sunnyside) ---- 4081
Comstock, Miss Ada ---- 4044, 4092, 4093, 4105–4106, 4108–4209, 4134, 4143
Congress for Industrial Organization ---- 4274
Congress for Peace and Democracy ---- 4274
Connor, E. C ---- 4064
Conliffe, Mr ---- 4226
Consadine, Mr ---- 4275
Constitution of Japan ---- 4185
Cooper, John ---- 4064
Cooper, Marion ---- 4064, 4067
Corbett, Charles ---- 4206, 4208, 4210
Corbett, Percy E ---- 4208
Costigan, Howard ---- 4115
Coughlin, Father ---- 4110
Connell of International Affairs ---- 4151
Council on African Affairs ---- 4327, 4328
Council on Foreign Relations ---- 4047, 4093, 4097, 4104
Counts, George S ---- 4091, 4145, 4170–4171, 4175
Cowley, Malcolm ---- 4117, 4170–4171, 4175, 4179, 4182
Council for Pan-American Democracy ---- 4125, 4136
Craigie-Arita "Formula" of July 24 ---- 4201
Crane, Dr. Robert T ---- 4086, 4119, 4120
Crawford, David L ---- 4125–4126
Cressey, George B ---- 4258
Crichton, Kyle ---- 4258
Criminal Law of the U. S. S. R ---- 4145
Cristanzi, Mr. ---- 4155
Croatian Fraternal Union of America ---- 4115
Cromwell, Doris Duke ---- 4092
Crosbie, Paul ---- 4142
Crosby, Alexander L ---- 4152
Cross, Judge Anna ---- 4234
Cunard White Star Co ---- 4049
Curran, Joseph ---- 4136
Currie, Lauchlin ---- 4048, 4073–4074, 4330
Curtis, Lt. Col. E. P ---- 4073
Cutler, Addison T ---- 4089
Czaristic regime (Russia) ---- 4060, 4120
Czechoslovakia ---- 4134, 4204

D

	Page
"Dagbladet" (publication)	4236
Dahlberg, Edward	4170–4171, 4176
Daily Worker	4116, 4147, 4173, 4180, 4280–4281, 4316, 4331
Daladier	4204
Danilin, Sergei	4040, 4042
Davis, Jerome	4115
Davis, John P	4116
Dawes Plan	4037
Dean, A. L	4125–4126
Dean, Mrs. Vera Micheles	4091, 4145
DeFord, Miriam Allen	4258
de Goispechea	4235
de Kruif, Paul	4115, 4258
de Naucrede, Edith	4170–4171, 4176
Department of Labor (U. S. Government)	4320, 4323
Deputy Chief of Government Section	4184
Dennery, Etienne	4021
Dennett, Raymond	4122, 4124, 4255
Dennis, Eugene	4080
Dewey, Ethel L	4170–4171, 4176
Dewey, John	4091, 4145, 4171
Di Donato, Pietro	4258
Dickinson, John	4119
Dies, Mr	4244
Dies Committee	4239–4242, 4244, 4246
Diet (Japanese)	4092, 4166, 4263
Dilemma in Japan	4311
Dillingham, W. F	4125–4126
Dimitroff, Georgi	4341
Dimitrov, Mr	4236
Dobb, Maurice	4089
Dobrer, Ruth	4117
Dodd, Mr	4243–4244
Dodd, William F., Jr	4258
Dodge, Stanley D	4258
Domei News Agency	4022, 4121
Doolittle, Major	4169
Dooman, Eugene	4310, 4323–4326, 4348
Dorsey, Lieutenant	4169
Doubleday-Doran & Co	4047, 4070, 4135
Douglas, Prof. Dorothy	4258
Douglas, Melvyn	4062, 4066, 4116
Draper, Muriel	4258
Draper, Theodore	4086, 4093–4096, 4261
Dreiser, Theodore	4116, 4170, 4171, 4176
Drucker, David	4076
Drucker, Mrs. Esther	4076
Duggan, Lawrence	4036, 4086, 4108
Duggan, Dr. Stephen	4107
DuPont, Mr	4127
Dunbar, Barrington	4115
Dunn, L. C	4258
Duranty, Mr	4090–4091
Durbrow, Mr. Elbridge	4341–4342, 4348
Duskis, Miss Nettie	4086, 4089
Dutch East Indies	4205
Dutt, R. Palme	4270

E

Earle Committee	4075
East Asia, New Order in	4202
East Asiatic Studies (University of California)	4160
Eastern Baptist Association of New York	4116
Economic China	4108
Economic Handbook of the Pacific Area	4047, 4068, 4070, 4122, 4135

Page
Economic Mission to Far East 4046–4047
Economic Survey of the Pacific Area 4047
Eddy, Harriet G 4258
Editorial Committee of the Atlas 4146
Efron, David 4136
Eighth Route Army 4058, 4060–4061, 4122, 4149, 4169, 4285–4286, 4288
Einzig, Paul 4271
Eliot, Maj. George Fielding 4125
Elmhirst Fund 4142
Eltenton, Dolly 4078, 4339
Eltenton, George C 4078
Embree, Edwin 4092
Emperor Hiroshia 4147–4149, 4184
Engels, Morris 4117, 4335
England 4060, 4134, 4136
Epstein, Israel 4082, 4306, 4308, 4317–4318, 4353–4354
Ernst, Mr 4234
Ethiopian Fiasco 4204
Etter, Willis R 4329
Eurasian 4203
Europe 4103, 4105, 4135, 4200–4201, 4216, 4267
European Theatre of the War of 1914–1918 4147
European War 4104–4105, 4204
Evans, Dr. Roger F 4245
Eyes on Japan 4120

F

Fairbank, John K 4107, 4206, 4330
Fairbank, Wilma (Mrs. John K.) 4188, 4206, 4330
Fairbanks, Douglas 4063, 4066
Fairchild, Henry Pratt 4116, 4258
Fanelli, Joseph A 4152, 4159, 4187, 4189, 4195
Far East ..... 4046 4047, 4055, 4070, 4092–4099, 4103–4106, 4114, 4120, 4122–4125, 4128, 4139, 4140, 4201, 4202, 4204, 4207, 4216–4218, 4225, 4255, 4261, 4273, 4276, 4312, 4323, 4324, 4325, 4331, 4351.
Far Eastern Commission 4325
Far East Spotlight 4163–4166
Far Eastern Affairs 4021, 4202
Far Eastern Policy 4202, 4205
Far Eastern Survey ..... 4047, 4096, 4098, 4103, 4107, 4114, 4128, 4135, 4140, 4144–4146, 4265, 4279, 4282, 4283.
Farley, Miriam S 4086, 4097, 4108, 4124, 4225, 4226–4229, 4263, 4264
Farmer, Miss Frances 4275
Farrar, Mr 4020
Fascist 4069–4070, 4115, 4118, 4203, 4204, 4214–4216, 4256–4257
Faymonville, Col. Philip R 4078
Fearing, Kenneth 4258
Federal Bureau of Investigation 4045, 4137, 4261, 4316, 4333
Federal Communications Commission 4244, 4327
Federal Writers Project 4275
Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists, and Technicians 4116
Federation of Women's Clubs 4276
Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America 4116
Federated Press 4152
Feingold, Abraham 4117
Feis, Mr 4108
Feng, General 4151
Feval, Mr 4091
Field, Edith (Mrs. Frederick V. Field) 4136, 4149
Field, Elizabeth 4108
Field, Alice Withrow 4258

Page
Field, Frederick V ---- 4033–4152, 4158, 4167, 4173, 4179–4180, 4182, 4208–4209, 4211, 4234, 4236–4237, 4238, 4261, 4316–4317.
Field, Mrs. Frederick V ---- 4041
Field, Sara Bard ---- 4258
Field, Jr., William O ---- 4091, 4145, 4258
Fifth National Congress (ALPD) ---- 4115
Fight, the (publication) ---- 4118
Fineman, Irving ---- 4258
Finland ---- 4261
Finley, Moses (also Mose Finkelstein) ---- 4152–4158
Fish, Mr ---- 4244
Fischer, Louis ---- 4091
Fischer, Marjorie ---- 4259
Fisher, Dorothy Canfield ---- 4116
Fisher, Galen M ---- 4105–4106
Fisher, Gerald W ---- 4125
Fisher, H. H ---- 4225, 4255
Flaxer, Abram ---- 4116
Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy ---- 4291, 4326, 4349
Flores, Angel ---- 4259
Fly, James Lawrence ---- 4304, 4327–4328
Foley, Martha ---- 4117
Food Research Institute ---- 4099
Forbes, Cameron ---- 4046
Ford, Guy S ---- 4119
Ford Foundation ---- 4153
Foreign Policy Association ---- 4093, 4102, 4111, 4130, 4161, 4167, 4217, 4223, 4226, 4236–4237, 4258, 4267, 4271, 4280
Forman, Harrison ---- 4301
Formosa ---- 4053, 4112, 4113, 4281
Fornwall, H. C ---- 4127
Forsyth, Margaret ---- 4116, 4142, 4277
Fortas, Abe ---- 4195
Foundations of Leninism ---- 4335
France ---- 4069, 4103, 4133–4134, 4136, 4202, 4216, 4264, 4319
Franco ---- 4216
Frank, Nelson ---- 4327
Frank, Waldo ---- 4170, 4171, 4176, 4259
Frazier, E. Franklin ---- 4089
Free Synagogue Women ---- 4275
Freeman, David ---- 4117
Freeman, Joseph ---- 4170–4171, 4176
French, Beals E. L ---- 4170–4171, 4176
French Friends of the Chinese People ---- 4273
French, Myrtle M ---- 4170–4171, 4176
French Indochina ---- 4098
Friedman, Mrs. Julian ---- 4334
Friedon, Jesse ---- 4304–4305
Fritchman, Rev. Stephen ---- 4299
Fujihara, Ginjiro ---- 4267–4268
Fuller, Miss Helen ---- 4315

G

Gag, Wanda ---- 4259
Gallup poll ---- 4202
Gannes, Harry ---- 4058, 4079, 4147
Gannett, Lewis ---- 4091, 4145
Garland Fund ---- 4143
Garramone, Michael ---- 4136
Garriga, Miguel ---- 4116
Garside, Dr. B. A ---- 4141
Gayn, Mark ---- 4332
Geiger, Ted ---- 4155

Page
Gellert, Hugo ---- 4136, 4259
Gellhorn, Mrs. Kitty ---- 4078, 4139
Gellhorn, Walter ---- 4078
George, Harrison ---- 4084
George, Lloyd ---- 4264
Gerlach, Talitha ---- 4319
German-Japanese Alliance ---- 4151
Germany ---- 4037, 4058, 4084, 4098, 4106, 4113, 4129, 4134, 4137, 4140, 4201, 4203, 4205, 4214, 4216, 4232, 4234, 4235, 4240, 4261, 4266, 4269, 4271
Gessner, Robert ---- 4259
Ghidoni, Albert ---- 4116
Gibbs, Mr ---- 4053–4054
Gleason, Mary H ---- 4170–4171, 4176
Godo, Admiral ---- 4275
Goebbels, Mr ---- 4136
Goh, Baron ---- 4148
Gold, Mike ---- 4170–4171, 4173, 4176
Golden, Ben ---- 4136
Goldman, Mrs. Olive Remington ---- 4351
Goldstein, Dr. Sidney ---- 4275
Goodrich, Dr. L. Carrington ---- 4245
Goodsell, Willystine ---- 4116, 4259
Government Section in Tokyo ---- 4185, 4224, 4230
Goslin, Alexander Ryllis ---- 4271
Graduate History Society (Columbia University) ---- 4153
Graham, Katherine ---- 4170–4171, 4176
Grajdanzev, Andrew ---- 4208, 4210, 4255, 4281
Granich, Grace ---- 4080
Granich, Max ---- 4158, 4173, 4174
Granna, Eleanor ---- 4117
Graves, Mortimer ---- 4091, 4107, 4145, 4259
Graves, Gen. William S ---- 4090, 4091, 4145
Gray, Dr. John H ---- 4259
Great Britain ---- 4103, 4140, 4202, 4264, 4269, 4276, 4278, 4284, 4316, 4334
Green, H. L. Co ---- 4275
Green, Jerome ---- 4037, 4147
Greenberg, Michael ---- 4161, 4188, 4338
Greene, Roger ---- 4147
Grew, Ambassador Joseph C ---- 4056–4057, 4292, 4324
Gromov, Michael ---- 4040, 4042
Gropper, William ---- 4259
Guadalcanal ---- 4266
Guam ---- 4053
Guggenheim Fellowship ---- 4086, 4095, 4096
Guggenheim Foundation ---- 4095, 4261
Guggenheimer, Mrs. J. C ---- 4277
Gulick, Sidney L ---- 4271
Gyles, R. M ---- 4170–4171, 4176

H

Haaser, Stephen G ---- 4088, 4196
Hadley, Eleanor ---- 4263
Haessler, Carl ---- 4152
Hague Rules of War, the ---- 4228
Halperin, Maurice ---- 4259
Hainan ---- 4112–4113
Hammett, Dashiell ---- 4259
Hamilton House (Shanghai) ---- 4328
Han Fu, Chang ---- 4080
Hangchow, China ---- 4047, 4133, 4169
Hankow, China ---- 4059–4060, 4131–4132, 4284
Hansen, Alvin H ---- 4119
Hanson, Earl P ---- 4259

Page
Hanson, Haldore 4020
Hanwell, Norman 4093
Hara, Yoshimichi 4267
Harap, Louis 4089
Harju, Rudolph 4116
Harlem Peace League 4275
Harman, Francis S 4109, 4143
Harper, Prof. Samuel N 4091, 4259
Harpers Magazine 4287
Harris, Rev. Thomas L 4259
Harrison, Peyton 4125
Harrison, Shelby M 4119
Hartman, L. O 4116
Harvard Club 4047
Harvard University 4046, 4096, 4107, 4119, 4259–4260, 4263, 4294, 4328, 4337
Hata, Gen. Shunroku 4202
Hathway, Clarence 4116, 4142
Hauser, Ernest 4093–4094
Hawks, Capt. Frank 4169
Hayashi, Group (Japan) 4092
Hayes, Max S 4142, 4234
Hazard, John N 4155
Heald, Brian 4117
Hearn, Lawrence 4085
Heminway, Ernest 4141, 4259
Henderson, Donald 4116, 4142
Hendley, Charles J 4259
Hicks, Granville 4089, 4170–4171, 4176, 4259
Himes, Prof. Norman E 4259
Hindus, Maurice 4091
Hiranuma, Baron Kijchiro 4267
Hiranuma Cabinet (Japanese 1939) 4202, 4267, 4268
Hirose, Hisatada 4268
Hirota, Koki 4151, 4267, 4272
Hirota Principles 4151
Hirsch, Alcan 4091, 4145
Hiss, Alger 4323, 4326, 4331
History of the Communist Party in the Soviet Union 4336
History of the Development of Chinese Society 4352
Hitler, Adolph 4106, 4200, 4203, 4232–4233, 4235–4236, 4264–4265
Hitler-Stalin Pact 4188, 4261
Ho-Umetsu Compromise Agreement 4213
Hodgekinson, Miss Sarah 4299
Hoffman, Alexander 4116
Hogben, Lancelot 4089
Holland (Europe) 4113
Holland, William L 4034, 4052, 4103, 4109, 4119, 4122, 4160–4161, 4188, 4193–4196, 4198–4200, 4208, 4224–4231, 4241, 4262, 4263, 4307, 4349
Hollywood Anti-Nazi League 4062, 4066
Hollywood Groups (Left-wing) 4063–4064, 4066
Holman, Helen 4274, 4277
Holmes, Eugene C 4089
Hom, Q. Pan 4037
Hong Kong 4046, 4053, 4060, 4069, 4129, 4149–4150, 4201–4202, 4307, 4337
Honig Charlotte 4078, 4080, 4081, 4083–4084
Honolulu, Hawaii 4047, 4124–4126, 4129
Hoover Research Library 4225–4255
Hopei 4103
Hopkins, Johns (Institute) 4091
Hornbeck, Ambassador Stanley K 4129, 4280
Horner, John 4334, 4353–4354
Hotel and Restaurant Employees International Alliance 4116
Hotel Richmond, Geneva, Switzerland 4120
Houghton-Mifflin Co 4107
Ho-Umetsu Understanding 4151

Page
House Appropriations Committee 4239, 4244–4245
House of Peers (Japan) 4184
House of Representatives (Japan) 4184
House Un-American Activities Committee 4238
Howie, Miss 4075
Hsia, Dr. C. L 4283
Hsuchow, China 4060–4061
Hsu, Shuhsi 4150–4152
Hsu, Y. Y 4080–4081, 4083, 4312–4313, 4334–4335
Hu, Dr. Shih 4022, 4147, 4242
Huangpu Clique 4216
Huberman, Leo 4089, 4259
Hughes, Langston 4259
Hughes, Nancy C 4108
Hull (Secretary of State), Cordell 4201–4202
Humane Endeavour 4120
Hume, Miss Joy 4137, 4143
Hunter College 4089, 4259
Hurley, Gen. Patrick 4323, 4331
Hyman, Albert 4117

I

Ikeda, Seihin 4148
Illes, Agatha 4259
Imes, Wm. Llyod (Rev.) 4116–4117
Imperial College of Science, London 4089
India 4123, 4270
Indo-China 4098, 4205
Inner Asia 4304
Inner Mongolia 4150, 4226, 4228
Inparel 4087, 4105, 4106, 4108, 4111, 4113, 4121
Institute of Genetics (Moscow) 4089
Institute of Pacific Relations 4033, 4035, 4038–4039, 4042, 4044–4046, 4048–4052, 4054–4057, 4059, 4062–4063, 4065, 4067, 4070, 4074–4075, 4078, 4081, 4083–4085, 4088, 4091–4093, 4097–4101, 4105–4106, 4108–4109, 4111, 4114, 4119–4120, 4122–4127, 4129–4131, 4134, 4136, 4138, 4140–4141, 4143, 4145–4147, 4149, 4158, 4160–4161, 4190, 4195, 4199, 4206, 4208, 4210–4211, 4223–4231, 4236, 4239, 4242–4246, 4252, 4261–4262, 4278–4280, 4292, 4294–4296, 4306–4307, 4313–4314, 4339, 4349
Institute of Pacific Relations (American Council) 4034, 4044, 4046, 4056–4057, 4065, 4067, 4074, 4087, 4092–4094, 4096, 4099, 4100, 4104–4109, 4111–4112, 4114, 4124–4127, 4130, 4134–4135, 4141, 4143, 4145, 4225–4226, 4253, 4262–4263, 4265, 4287, 4352.
Institute of Pacific Relations (Central Secretariat) 4100, 4102
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Atlantic City) 4123
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Banff, 1933) 4046, 4099, 4102
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Hangchow-Shanghai, 1931) 4135
Institute of Pacific Relation (Conference, Hot Springs, American Delegation) 4123, 4201, 4294–4296, 4313, 4319, 4339
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Kyoto, 1929) 4035, 4046
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Mont Tremblant, Quebec, December 1942) 4099
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Princeton) 4242
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Schofield) 4125
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Shanghai, 1931) 4046, 4101
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Virginia Beach, 1939) 4046, 4077, 4099, 4100
Institute of Pacific Relations (Conference, Yosemite, 1936) 4046, 4121, 4127, 4230
Institute of Pacific Relations (executive committee) 4106, 4111, 4125, 4126, 4130–4131, 4135–4136, 4145
Institute of Pacific Relations (Hawaii Group) 4125–4126
Institute of Pacific Relations (Inquiry Series) 4270
Institute of Pacific Relations (International Secretariat) 4068, 4095, 4131, 4135, 4150, 4270

Page
Institute of Pacific Relations (Japanese Council) ---- 4102, 4229–4231, 4263–4264
Institute of Pacific Relations (Pacific Council) ---- 4099, 4101, 4121, 4135, 4137, 4143
Institute of Pacific Relations Library ---- 4146
Institute of Pacific Relations (San Francisco Branch) ---- 4093, 4105–4106, 4226
Institute of Pacific Relations (Secretary-General) ---- 4130, 4147, 4149, 4224–4226, 4230–4231
Institute of Pacific Relations (Soviet Council) ---- 4035, 4047, 4146
Inter-Continent News ---- 4284
International Committee on African Affairs ---- 4116
International Conference for the Boycott of Japanese Goods ---- 4276
International Industrial Relations Institute ---- 4260
International Institute of Social Research ---- 4107
International Labor Defense ---- 4275
International Labor Office ---- 4108
International Press Correspondence ---- 4234, 4236
International Release Committee ---- 4234, 4253–4254
International Relief Commission ---- 4071
International Research Program ---- 4224, 4231
International Research Fund ---- 4224
"International Security" ---- 4100
International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers of America ---- 4116
I. W. O. Women ---- 4275
Isaacs, Harold ---- 4103–4104, 4136
Ishii, Viscount ---- 4271
Ishimoto, Baroness ---- 4184
Ishiwata, Sataro ---- 4268
Isserman, A. J ---- 4136
Ivens, Joris ---- 4141
Italian Action Party ---- 4283
Italy ---- 4058, 4201, 4203, 4214

J

Jack, Josephine ---- 4170–4171, 4176
Jackson, Rev. Otis G ---- 4259
Jaffe, Philip J. (see J. W. Philip) ---- 4058, 4065, 4171–4173, 4176–4177, 4213, 4218, 4278, 4299, 4314, 4316–4317
Jaffe, Sam ---- 4259
Jakob, Berthold ---- 4236
Japan ---- 4037, 4046–4047, 4053, 4057–4058, 4061, 4069, 4071–4073, 4076, 4090, 4096, 4098, 4101–4104, 4106, 4108–4109, 4112–4114,4123–4124, 4129, 4131–4132, 4134–4135, 4147, 4149, 4151, 4160, 4161, 4166, 4183, 4200, 4201–4202, 4214–4216, 4218–4219, 4223–4226, 4229, 4231, 4240, 4270–4276, 4285–4286, 4311, 4313, 4332–4333.
Japan Advertiser ---- 4134
"Japan in China" (book) ---- 4089, 4218
"Japan Picks Up the Pieces" (publication) ---- 4188, 4200
Japanese-American Commercial Treaty ---- 4201
Japanese-American Trade Treaty ---- 4202
Japanese-American war in the Pacific ---- 4205
Japanese Army ---- 4022, 4131–4133, 4265
Japanese Army Yangtzpoo Clearing Hospital ---- 4133
Japanese-Chinese Relations ---- 4219
Japanese Government ---- 4184
Japanese Navy ---- 4112–4113, 4133, 4265
Japanese-Occupied Southeast Asia ---- 4226
Japan Prepares for Peace Offensive ---- 4265
Jenkinson, Anthony ---- 4077, 4100, 4336
Jessup Philip C ---- 4044, 4051–4053, 4074, 4087, 4092, 4097, 4099, 4100, 4109, 4121–4123, 4131, 4134–4135, 4143, 4227–4228.
Jewish Joint Distribution Board ---- 4260
Jiyu Gakuin School (Tokyo) ---- 4263

Page
Johns Hopkins University 4104, 4111, 4119, 4136, 4294, 4296, 4331, 4339
Johns, Orrick 4170–4171, 4176, 4259
Johnson, Nelson T 4056–4057
Johnston, Reginald 4271
Johnstone, Anne 4129
Johnstone, Wm. C 4087, 4122–4124
Joint Report of Chinese Journalists 4060
Jones, E. Stanley 4116
Jorgenson, Miss 4075
Josephson, Matthew 4259
Jouhaux 4234
Judd, Charles H 4119

K

Kades, Charles L. (Colonel) 4184
Kaji, Ryuiche 4351
Kaji, Wataru 4184
Kalvar, Mrs. Robert 4277
Kamehameha School 4126
Kang, Chen Chia 4080
Kantorovitch 4108
Kato, Kanju 4143, 4184
Kauffman, George 4259
Kaufman, Milton 4117
Kaun, Prof. Alexander 4259
Kawagoo 4151
Kawai, Dr 4127
Kawai, Mrs 4127
Kayser 4234, 4236
Keeney, Philip O 4165–4166, 4182–4183
Kelly, Fred C 4259
Kelly & Walsh, Ltd 4150
Kent, Rockwell 4116, 4259
Kerner 4226
Kerr Committee 4239–4246
Kerr, Mrs. Isadora W 4277
Kerr, John H. (Hon.) 4244–4245
Kiaotsi 4061
Kido, Marquis Koichi 4267
Kilpatrick, William (Professor) 4037
Kingsbury, Dr. John A 4091, 4145, 4259
Kinkead, Beatrice 4259
Kirstein, Lincoln E 4259
Kishi, Shinsuke 4268
Kiukiang 4132–4133
Kiukiang Army Hospital 4133
Kizer, Benjamin H 4044, 4092, 4109, 4134, 4143, 4330
Knight, Frank H 4119
Kobe, Japan 4134
Kober, Arthur 4259
Kodama, Count Hideo 4268
Kohler, Foy D 4350, 4351
Koike (Atsunosuke) 4263
Koiso Cabinet (Japan) 4266, 4267, 4268
Koiso, General 4268, 4269
Kolar, Mrs. Julia Church 4275, 4277
Komorowski, Conrad 4274, 4277
Konoye Cabinet 4092
Konoye, Prince Fumimore 4267
Korea 4053, 4129, 4148, 4207, 4217, 4226, 4269, 4272, 4281
Kreymborg, Alfred 4259
Krivitsky 4136
Kubota, Miko 4273, 4277
Kung, Dr. H. H 4320

Page
Kuomintang 4022, 4121–4122, 4214, 4272, 4282–4288, 4298
Kuling 4151
Kwangtung 4131
Kwantung Army 4134, 4267
Kweichow 4068
Kyoto Imperial University 4263
Kyushu (Nagaski region) 4149

L

Labarca, Carlos Contreros 4080
Labor in Nationalist China, 1945–48 4306
Lachatanere, Romolo 4136
Ladd, Milton 4316
Ladijinsky, Wolf 4263
Lamb, Edward 4259
Lamont, Corliss 4036, 4089, 4105, 4170–4171, 4259
Lamont, Margaret L 4259
Lamont, Thomas 4280
Lancaster, William W 4091, 4155
Land, Clayton 4034
Lang, Olga 4231
Langevin, Paul 4089
Lankes, J. J 4259
Larkin, Oliver 4089
Lash, Joseph 4073, 4116
Lasker, Bruno 4075, 4102, 4129
Laski, Prof 4261
Lasser, David 4116
Latin America 4118
Latin-American Republic 4070
Latourette, Kenneth S 4108
Lattimore, Owen 4048, 4059, 4068, 4082, 4086–4087, 4100, 4103–4104, 4106, 4109–4111, 4123–4124, 4136, 4150, 4161, 4195, 4206, 4208, 4210, 4212–4213, 4218–4219, 4264–4265, 4270, 4280, 4296, 4301–4304, 4331, 4353
Lawson, John Howard 4259
Leaf, Earl H 4087, 4131
League of American Writers 4116
League of Nations 4055, 4077, 4204
League of Women Shoppers 4116, 4139, 4275
Leaning, W. J 4208–4210
Lee, Shao-chang 4125–4126
Leebuck 4127
Leffingwell, Russell 4054–4055
Left Wing Communism and Infantile Disorder 4335
Leland Stanford University 4099, 4119, 4225–4226, 4258
Lengyel, Emil 4259
Lenin 4110–4111, 4257, 4335
Lerman, Louis 4157
Lerner, James 4142
Lerner, Prof. Max 4116, 4259
Lescaze, William 4091, 4145
LeSeuer, Meridel 4259
Levin, Betty 4299–4300, 4304–4306, 4308, 4327
Levin, Meyer 4259
Levy, H 4089
Leyda, Jay 4259
Li, Choh-ming 4141
Li, Tsung-jen (Gen) 4061
Libby, Fred 4129
Library of International Relations 4062, 4066
Licorich, Rev. David 4117
Lightbody, Prof. Charles W 4259
Lillenthal, Philip E 4263
Lin, J. H 4277

Page
Lindsay, Michael 4336–4337
Littell, Robert 4091, 4145
Little Era in Old Russia 4091
Litvinov, Maxim 4043, 4135, 4204
Liu, Chieh 4323
Liu, Yu-wan 4087, 4108, 4121
Living Age 4147
Living Buddha 4149
Lobanov 4091
Lobenstine 4107
Lockwood, William W 4058, 4075, 4086, 4093–4094, 4096–4097, 4107, 4129–4131, 4208–4209, 4226, 4228, 4263
Loeb, Julius 4272, 4277
London 4047, 4049, 4098, 4108, 4124, 4128, 4136, 4201, 4204, 4286, 4307–4308
London School of Economics 4348
Loomis, Charles F 4086, 4099, 4100, 4125–4127, 4145
Lopez, Francisco 4235
Lopez, Marina 4136
Loring, Marcella 4276
Los Angeles Daily News 4136
Lovett, Robert Morss 4073, 4089 4117, 4142, 4170–4171, 4176, 4259, 4277
Lowe, C. H. 4127
Loyang (China) 4213
Luan River (China) 4151
Luccock, Prof. Halford E 4259
Luce, Miss Claire 4275
Luce, Henry E 4140
Lui, Yu-wen 4068
Lukouchiao Incident (July 7, 1937) 4131
Lumpkin, Miss Grace 4275
Lumkin, Katherine DuPre 4259
Lund, Thora 4170–4171, 4176
Luzon, P. Islands 4046
Lydall, L. A 4271
Lyde 4146
Lyon, Lewis 4299
Lynd, Robert S 4075

M

MacArthur, Gen. Douglas 4182, 4223, 4224
MacDonald, Jeannette 4127
MacLeish, Archibald 4078
MacMahon Aline 4259
MacMillan Co 4166, 4270, 4278
Machida, Chuji 4148, 4268
Macy's 4275
Maddalena 4234
Madison, Joan 4136
Midrid (Spain) 4235, 4236
Madvar, L 4352
Maeda, Yonezo 4148, 4268
Malaya 4098
Males, William 4117
Mallery, Helen 4277
Malraux, Andre 4301
Manchuria 4047, 4053, 4055, 4071, 4129, 4205, 4216–4217, 4226, 4267, 4269, 4281, 4285
Mandated Islands 4112
Mandel, William 4155
Mangold, William P 4142
Manila 4125
Mann, Klaus 4259
Mann, Thomas 4257
Mao, Tse-tung 4212–4213, 4270, 4334

	Page
Marburg, Anita	4259
Marcantonio, Vito	4117
March, Frederick	4062–4064, 4066
Mariana Islands	4265
Marshall, Dr. George	4136, 4259
Marshall, Gen. George C	4340
Marshall Library (Cambridge)	4089
Martial Spirit, The	4109
Martin, Charles E	4104
Marx	4335
Marxian Quarterly	4089
Massachusetts Institute of Technology	4089, 4260
Masso, John	4142
Mather, Kirtley F	4116
Mathiessen, Prof. F. O	4259
Matsui, Miss	4273
Matsukata, Saburo	4101, 4229–4230, 4263
Matsuo	4230, 4262–4263
Matsuoka	4148
Matsuzaka, Hiromasa	4268
Maxwell, B. W	4351
May, Stacy	4107
McAvoy, Clifford T	4136, 4259
McCall, Professor	4277
McCann, Coward	4120
McConnell, Dorothy	4142
McConnell, Francis J	4116
McCoy, Frank	4054, 4055, 4236
McCulloch, Rhoda E	4116
McCune, George	4226
McCune, Shannon	4199
McGill, Prof. V. J	4089, 4259
McGregor, Prof. Robert	4259
McInerny, Katherine	4116
McKenney, Ruth	4259
McLaughlin, Mrs. Alfred	4090, 4093, 4105–4106
McLaughlin, Arthur J	4117
McNutt, Waldo	4142
Medical Bureau for Spain (Women's Division)	4275
Meiji Era (Japan)	4151
Merriam, Charles E	4119
Merrill, Lewis	4116
Meserole, Darwin J	4260
Metropolitan Life Insurance Co	4119
Metropolitan Police Board, Tokio	4134
Mexico	4069–4070
Mexican Friends of the Chinese People	4273
Meyer, Ernest L	4152
Middle East	4331
Midkiff, Frank E	4125–4126
Midway Island	4236
Miller, Prof. Herbert A	4260
Miller, May	4297
Millis, Walter	4109
Mills, Saul	4081
Milner, Lucile B	4234
Minobe, Tatsukichi	4184
Mitsui	4148
Mins, H. F., Jr	4089
Minseito	4148
Mierendorff	4234
Mirsky, Jacob	4117, 4142
Mitchel, Kate L	4096, 4100, 4109, 4264
Mitchell, Broadus	4089
Mitchell, Wesley C	4119

Page
Mitsubishi 4148
Modern Age Books, Inc 4258
Moe 4095
Molotov 4043
Mongolia 4100, 4150, 4152, 4202
Monroe Doctrine 4070
Monthly Labor Review 4320
Mood, Fulmer 4089
Moore, Harriet L 4090–4091, 4145, 4188, 4208–4209, 4351
Morgan, A 4270
Morgan, J. P 4055, 4105
Morgenthau, Henry 4056
Mori, Iga 4125–4126
Morrish, William F 4093
Moscow 4035, 4042, 4049, 4108, 4120, 4151, 4203, 4284, 4286
Moscow Trials 4105, 4144, 4145
Moss, Malcolm W 4045–4046
Motion Picture Artists Committee 4066
Motion Picture Democratic Committee 4062–4063, 4066
Motylev, V. E 4020–4021, 4146
Mountbatten, Earl 4331
Movement Against War and Fascism (New Zealand) 4235
Moy, Eugene 4037
Muhle 4208, 4209
Muller, H. J 4089
Munich Agreement 4115, 4204
Murphy, Gardner 4119
Mussolini, Benito 4106, 4204
Muster, Morris 4116

N

Nagano, Mr. 4270
Nagasaki (Japan) 4112
Nankai (China) 4108
Nanking (China) 4047, 4133, 4150–4151, 4169, 4213, 4215, 4217, 4220, 4271, 4273, 4322
Nash, Prof. J 4277
Nasu 4231
Nation, the 4260, 4275
National Committee to Win the Peace 4328
National Council of American Soviet Friendship 4328
National Council of Jewish Women 4304, 4327
National Council for the Prevention of War 4127
National Diet (Japan) 4185
National Farm Holiday Association 4116
National Hosiery Manufacturers Association 4275
National Lamp Shade Manufacturers Association 4275
National Negro Congress 4116
National Peace Conference 4105
National Public Housing Conference 4258
National United Front 4022
Nazi 4205, 4235–4257
Nazi, Congress at Nurenberg 4207
Needham, Joseph 4089
Neibuhr, Reinhold 4116
Neilson, William Allen 4091, 4145
Netherlands Indies 4098, 4104, 4113–4114, 4267
Neu-Koellu 4236
Neutrality Act 4115, 4128, 4202, 4203
New China Daily News 4036–4037, 4079
New Fourth Route Army 4284–4286, 4333
New Masses 4069–4071, 4093–4094, 4179–4182, 4238, 4281
New Republic 4259, 4315
New School for Social Research 4273
New Statesman and Nation 4264

Page
New York American 4234
New York Journal-American 4350
New York Post 4234
New York State Consumers League 4115
New York Times 4235, 4280, 4286, 4330–4331
New York Tribune 4234
New York University 4089, 4116, 4258–4260
New York World-Telegram 4299, 4326–4327
New Yorker, the 4258
New Zealand 4235
Newsholme 4091
Newpaper Guild (New York) 4260
Neymann, Mr 4042
Neymann, Mrs 4042
Nichols, Roy F 4119
Nigata 4149
Nine Power Treaty 4148
Ninomiya, Lt. Gen. Harushige 4268
Nomura, Admiral Naokumi 4265
Norman, E. Herbert 4064–4066, 4154, 4225, 4229, 4231
Normandie (steamship) 4275
North American Trade Consultants 4079
North China 4058, 4131–4132, 4201, 4214, 4218, 4226, 4228
North China Language School 4092
North China Problem, the 4150
North Honau 4131
North Pacific 4124
North Pole 4042
Northern Shensi Province 4022
Norwegian News Agency 4236
Norway 4113, 4236
Nuremberg Congress 4201

O

Oak, Liston M 4142
Oakie, John H 4086, 4093, 4105–4106, 4111
O'Connor, Harvey 4260
Odate, Shigeo 4268
Odegard, Professor 4160
Odets, Clifford 4260
Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation Operations 4099
Ogata, Taketora 4268
Ogburn, William F 4119
Ohara Institute of Social Research 4263
Ohtani, Count 4149
Okada, Admiral Keisuke 4267
Okano, Susumo 4183–4184, 4272–4273
Okura, Baron 4275
Olympic Games (Germany) 4234
Oregon Commonwealth Federation 4260
Ornitz, Samuel 4116
Osaka, Japan 4134, 4148
Osaka Mainichi (Publication) 4134
Osborn, Fred 4054–4055
Osborne, Herman P 4136
Osgood 4067
O'Sheel, Shaemus 4260
Oshima, Lt. Gen. Hiroshi 4202
Oslo, Norway 4236
Ossietzky 4234
Osumi, Admiral 4201
Otis, Brooks 4089
Ottosen, Colonel 4104
Ouchi, Professor (Hyoe) 4263
Oumansky, Constantine (Mr.) 4043–4044
Oumansky, C. (Mrs.) 4040
Outer Mongolia 4118, 4202

Outer Mongolian People's Republic ---- 4120
"Outline for A Proposed Study of Chinese Political Unification and Economic Reconstruction," 1931–38 ---- 4068
Outlook, the ---- 4150
Ovington, Mary White ---- 4260

P

Pacific Affairs ---- 4047, 4089, 4102–4104, 4109–4111, 4124–4125, 4135, 4147, 4150, 4161, 4184, 4188, 4264, 4271, 4278
Pacific Club ---- 4127
Pacific Digest (Publication) ---- 4141
Paddock, Robert L. (Bishop) ---- 4116
Page, Charles ---- 4063, 4066
Pai, Chung-hsi ---- 4141
Paine, Mrs. Frances Flynn ---- 4145
Pakhoi, China ---- 4046
Palembang ---- 4114
Palmquist, Elim A. (Rev.) ---- 4116
Paochia ---- 4061–4062
Paoting ---- 4103
Paotingfee, China ---- 4047
Parker, Philo W ---- 4086, 4109, 4114, 4135, 4143
Parkins, Helen, Miss ---- 4137–4138
Paris, France ---- 4201
Paschal, Marion ---- 4092
Paskoff, Benjamin ---- 4157
Pass, Joseph ---- 4142
Patterson (Secretary of War) ---- 4097
Patterson, Samuel C ---- 4142
Pavon, Benito ---- 4235
Peake ---- 4226–4228
Pearl Harbor ---- 4112, 4266
Peffer, Nathaniel ---- 4086, 4089, 4102, 4107, 4134
Peiping, China (Peking) ---- 4047, 4057, 4102, 4141, 4218, 4220, 4227, 4307, 4335, 4206, 4212
Peiping Normal University. (See Shih Ta.)
Peiping Student Union ---- 4215
Penseler, Herr ---- 4235
Peoples Government ---- 4070
People's Livelihood, The ---- 4110
Peoples Revolutionary Army ---- 4149
People's World (Publication) ---- 4137
Perkins ---- 4252
Perelman, S. J ---- 4260
Peters, Dr. John P ---- 4260
Philbrick, Herbert ---- 4299
Philip, Cyril ---- 4117
Philippine Friends of the Chinese People ---- 4273
Philippine Masses ---- 4070
Phillips, John ---- 4069, 4071
Phillips, J. W ---- 4170–4173, 4176
Phillips, Herbert J ---- 4089
"Photo History" (publication) ---- 4145
Pichkova, Olena ---- 4350
Pickford, Mary ---- 4127
Pierson, Dr. Emily M ---- 4260
Pittman, Key (Senator) ---- 4128
Pladjos, (N. Indies) ---- 4114
Platt, Phillip S ---- 4125–4126
Plopkin ---- 4044
PM newspaper ---- 4315
Poffenberger, A. T ---- 4119
Polakov, Walter N ---- 4260
Poland ---- 4113, 4136, 4261, 4264–4265
"Politics in Tokyo" ---- 4121
Pollard, John A ---- 4086, 4097–4098
Pomfert, John E ---- 4119
Pope, Arthur Upham ---- 4075

Page
Pope, James P---- 4116
Popper, Martin---- 4081
Porter, Prof. Alan---- 4260
Porter, Catherine---- 4075, 4086, 4093, 4096, 4100, 4104, 4106, 4108, 4122, 4241
Porter, Mrs. George F---- 4091, 4145
Porua, Enrique---- 4235
Powell, Jr., Rev. A. Clayton---- 4117
Power, Cynthia---- 4107
Powers, Eileen---- 4037
Power, Sir John---- 4107
Pratt, George D. Jr---- 4260
Pravda (Russian newspaper)---- 4020
Prentis, Albert---- 4117
Preston, John Hyde---- 4260
Price, Harry---- 4104
Price, Mildred (Coy)---- 4079, 4318–4319, 4321–4322, 4337
Princeton University---- 4053
Problems of the Pacific---- 4100
Progressive Women's Council---- 4275
Propaganda and War---- 4102
Prosin, V. F---- 4039
Prospects for Democracy in Japan---- 4165–4166
Public Affairs Committee---- 4047, 4102, 4190, 4194, 4198
Puskin, Alexander---- 4091, 4144
Putnam, Samuel---- 4136, 4260

Q

Queen Mary (steamship)---- 4049
Quick, Percy---- 4277
Quigley, Harold---- 4225, 4229, 4231
Quigley, Herb---- 4263

R

Racial Myth, the---- 4351
Radek, Karl---- 4352
Radin, Prof. Paul---- 4260, 4351
Radius, Walter---- 4093, 4094
Railway, Chinese Eastern---- 4037
Railway, Trans-Siberian---- 4037, 4046, 4135
Rajchmann, Ludwig---- 4077, 4129
Ramsey, David---- 4089
Ramspeck, Robert---- 4246
Randolph, Jeanette---- 4108
Rathborne, Mervyn---- 4116
Rautenstrauch, Prof. Walter---- 4260
Read, Arthur---- 4131
Realpolitik---- 4124
Recht, Charles---- 4136
Reconstructionist---- 4115
Red Star Over China---- 4082
Redfield, Robert---- 4119
Reed, College---- 4259
Reed, John---- 4090
Reed, Marie---- 4139
Reich (Germany)---- 4136
Reid, Paul M---- 4142
Reis, Bernard---- 4260
Reischauer, Mr---- 4125, 4206
Reissig, Herman F---- 4117, 4142
Renwanz, Lt. Col. Rowland H---- 4072
Reports Russia---- 4090
Requa, Eloise---- 4062, 4066
Research Bulletin on the Soviet Union---- 4145
Resolution on the Chinese Question Passed by the Sixth Plenum of the Enlarged Executive Committee of the Communist International---- 4352

Page
Retail Store Employees 4275
Reustle, Rev. Frederick 4117
Revolutionary Military Council 4213
Revolutionary Movement in the Colonies and Semi-Colonies 4336, 4352
Reynolds, Bertha C 4260
Rhoads, Charles, Jr 4044, 4092–4093, 4105–4106, 4108, 4134
Rice, Elmer 4117
Riggs, Lynn 4260
Rinehart 4120
Robins, Raymond 4091, 4145
Robinson, Geroid T 4091, 4145
Robinson, Reid 4116
Rochester, Mrs. Anna 4275
Rockefeller, John D., Jr 4105, 4276
Rockefeller Foundation 4065, 4093–4095, 4103, 4107, 4119, 4160, 4217, 4244
Rodgers, Manvil 4277
Roeder, Ralph 4260
Rogers, Mr. Lindsay 4119, 4274
Rogov, Vladimir 4284, 4286
Rollins, William, Jr 4260
Roman, Agnes 4103
Rome, Harold J 4260
Rome (Italy) 4201, 4203
Romm, Vladimir 4047, 4050
Roosevelt, Franklin D 4071, 4128, 4137, 4340
Roosevelt, Theodore, Jr 4138
Root, Elihu 4100
Rosen, Dr. Joseph A 4260
Rosenwald Fund 4092
Rosinger, Lawrence K 4093, 4155, 4279
Rosinski, Herbert 4124
Rostovsky 4091
Roth, Andrew 4155, 4311–4314, 4316, 4332–4333
Rothchild, John 4091, 4145
Rothman, Mr 4277
Rowell, Chester 4021
Royal Institute of International Affairs (England) 4047, 4064
Rubin, Ruth 4277
Rukeyser, Miss Muriel 4275
Rumania 4350
Rushmore, Howard 4349, 4350
Russell 4135
Russell, Maud 4163–4164
Russell Sage Foundation 4119
Russia 4090–4091, 4120, 4122, 4132, 4137, 4144, 4146, 4202, 4257–4258, 4264–4265, 4287
Russia and Asia 4091
Russian-China Pact 4189
Russian Embassy (Tokyo) 4020
Russia and the Soviet Union in the Far East 4091, 4120
Russian War Relief 4097
Rutgers University 4152

S

Safarov, Mr 4352
Saionji, Kinichi 4229–4230, 4263
Saipan Island 4265
Saito, Takao 4184
Salisbury, Lawrence E 4263
Samoa 4053
San Francisco Chamber of Commerce 4207, 4208
San Francisco World Affairs Council 4226
Sansom 4224
Sarah Lawrence College 4259

Page
Sassoon ---- 4228
Saturday Evening Post ---- 4135
Savarin ---- 4199–4200
Scalapino, Robert A ---- 4160
Schachner, A. E ---- 4273
Scherer, Marcel ---- 4037–4038
Schlauch, Prof. Margaret ---- 4089, 4117, 4260
Schlesinger, Arthur M ---- 4119
Schoen, Eugene ---- 4260
School for Democracy ---- 4156–4157
School of Economics and Political Science (London) ---- 4046
Schneider, Isidor ---- 4170–4171, 4177
Schneiderman, Anna C ---- 4117
Schneller, Oscar ---- 4117
Schrachner, Eugene ---- 4277
Schuman, Prof. Frederick L ---- 4243–4244, 4260
Science and Society ---- 4089
Scott ---- 4067
Scott, Byron N ---- 4116
Scudder, Prof. Vida D ---- 4260
Secker & Warburg (publishers, London) ---- 4136
"Security in the Pacific" ---- 4100
Seiyukai (Japanese Political Party) ---- 4148
Seldes, George ---- 4260
Sellin, Thorsten ---- 4119
Sen, Henry ---- 4152
Service, John S ---- 4313–4314, 4322
Seville, Spain ---- 4235
Seychelles Islands (British possession) ---- 4337
Seymour, Whitney ---- 4091, 4145
Sforza, Count ---- 4283
Shanghai, China ---- 4035, 4047, 4058, 4077, 4103, 4108, 4131–4132–4150, 4201, 4271, 4273, 4285, 4298, 4318, 4320, 4322, 4328–4330, 4338
Shanghai Muncipal Council ---- 4202
Shanghai Truce, 1932 ---- 4151
Shankaikwan (China) ---- 4151
Shansi Province, China ---- 4103, 4122, 4131
Shantung, China ---- 4060–4061, 4103, 4131
Shaokwan, China ---- 4169
Sharp (Colonel), Frederick D ---- 4045, 4073
Sheean, Vincent ---- 4260
Shensi Province, China ---- 4122, 4213
Shepard, Oscar F ---- 4125–4126
Sherbourne, Maj. Everett ---- 4262
Shibusawa, Keizo ---- 4263
Shidehara Cabinet (Japan) ---- 4263
Shigemitshu ---- 4135
Shigemitsu, Mamoru—Ambassador to London (Japanese) ---- 4202, 4267, 4268
Shimada, Admiral Shigetaro ---- 4265, 4237
Shimada, Toshio ---- 4268
Shiman, Russell G ---- 4103, 4108, 4130
Shipler, Guy Emery (Rev.) ---- 4116, 4118
Shippe (Asiaticus) ---- 4038, 4110
Shiratori, Toshio—Japanese Ambassador in Rome ---- 4202
Shively, Donald ---- 4160
Sholokhov ---- 4091
Shore, Maurice ---- 4110
Shore, Viola Brothers ---- 4116, 4260
Shotwell, James T ---- 4037
Shumlin, Herman ---- 4260
Sian ---- 4213–4214, 4272
Sian Incident ---- 4150–4151, 5215
Sibley, H. Norman (Rev.) ---- 4116
Siegel, Bernard ---- 4304,4327
Sigerist, Dr. Henry ---- 4091

Page
Sillen, Samuel ---- 4089
Silverman, Arthur G ---- 4136
Simmons, Prof. Ernest J ---- 4260
Simonson, Lee ---- 4091, 4117, 4145
Singapore ---- 4053, 4113, 4150, 4205
Sinkiang ---- 4303
Sino-Japanese War ---- 4056–4057, 4103, 4286
Sister, Marion (Miss) ---- 4062, 4066
Situation in China, the ---- 4352
Sixth World Congress of the Comintern ---- 4336, 4352
Skariatina, Irina ---- 4091, 4260
Slade, Louis F. (Mrs.) ---- 4108
Slichter, Sumner H ---- 4119
Sloane, Gordon ---- 4117
Smedley, Agnes ---- 4146, 4219–4220, 4271, 4301, 4305, 4306, 4337, 4353–4354
Smith College ---- 4258
Smith, Ferdinand ---- 4136
Smith, Jessica ---- 4256
Smith, Stephenson ---- 4260
Smith, Susan T. (Miss) ---- 4086, 4090, 4091
Smith, Readwell ---- 4136
Snow, Edgar ---- 4082, 4110, 4136, 4212, 4218, 4301, 4339
Snow, Edgar (Mrs.) (Nym Wales) ---- 4218, 4339
Social Interpretation of History, the ---- 4110
Social Science Research Council ---- 4118, 4120
Social Work Today ---- 4258
Socialists Student Clubs ---- 4236
Soga, Yasutaro ---- 4125–4126
Sokolsky, George E ---- 4125
Solution in Asia ---- 4082, 4302
Sondergaard, Hester ---- 4260, 4275
Soong, T. V ---- 4077
Sorge, Richard ---- 4319
Sorkin, Isidore ---- 4117
Soule, Isobel Walker ---- 4260, 4275
South China ---- 4132, 4218
South Manchurian Railway ---- 4132
Southeast Asia ---- 4098, 4104–4105, 4228, 4267
Southern Negro Youth Congress ---- 4116
Southwestern Political Council (Chinese) ---- 4151
Soviet Administration of Criminal Law ---- 4091
Soviet Atlas ---- 4146
Soviet China ---- 4071
Soviet Communism ---- 4351
Soviet Embassy (Washington) ---- 4038, 4040
Soviet-German Non-aggression Pact ---- 4187, 4201
Soviet-Japanese Pact ---- 4211
Soviet-Japanese Pact in Historical Perspective, the ---- 4189, 4203, 4211
Soviet Journey ---- 4091
Soviet Russia ---- 4039–4040, 4043, 4060, 4071, 4091, 4105, 4122, 4134, 4146, 4257, 4276
Soviet Russia Today ---- 4079, 4189, 4256, 4261
Soviet State, the ---- 4351
Soviet Union ---- 4037, 4039, 4090, 4105–4106, 4109, 4129, 4134–4136, 4144, 4201–4204, 4214–4216, 4256–4258, 4261, 4272, 4284, 4349, 4351
Soviet Union in World Problems ---- 4091
Soviets in World Affairs ---- 4091
Spain ---- 4069, 4115, 4216, 4235, 4273
Spanish Earth (motion picture) ---- 4141
Spanish Legal Commission of Inquiry ---- 4235
Speer, Robert K., Prof ---- 4117
Spencer, Frederick (see also T. A. Bisson, Frederick V. Field) ---- 4085, 4167, 4170–4171, 4173, 4177, 4269, 4270
Spivack, Robert G ---- 4116
Spofford, Wm. B. (Rev.) ---- 4116, 4142
Spotlight on the Far East ---- 4281, 4283, 4298

Page
Spread of the Soviet Movement in China 4104
Sproul, Robert Gordon 4093, 4105–4106, 4109, 4126, 4143
Spykman, Nicholas J 4107
St. Lawrence University 4259
Stachel, Jack 4237
Staley 4226
Stalin, Joseph 4043, 4063, 4066, 4105–4106, 4136–4137, 4335, 4350, 4352
Standard Oil 4114
Stander, Lionel 4260
Stanley, Jean 4276
State, County and Municipal Workers of America 4116
State Department 4069, 4086, 4099, 4108, 4118, 4169, 4207, 4223, 4263, 4289, 4291, 4293–4296, 4301–4302, 4311–4316, 4319, 4321, 4323–4326, 4329, 4332–4334, 4336, 4340–4343, 4347–4351.
State Department (Area Committee) 4323, 4325
State Department (Division of Chinese Affairs) 4290, 4303, 4321, 4325
State Department (Division of International Labor, Health, and Social Affairs) 4289, 4321, 4325
State Department (Division of Labor Relations) 4289
State Department (Foreign Service Auxliary) 4290, 4294, 4342–4343, 4348
State Department (Mission at the United Nations) 4299
State Department (Office of the Assistant Adviser on International Economic Affairs) 4289
State Department (Office of Far Eastern Affairs, Division of Chinese Affairs) 4292
State Department (Protocol Division) 4291–4293
State and Revolution 4335
State, War, and Navy Coordinating Committee (SWNCC) 4263, 4324–4326
Stead, Christina 4260
Steffens, Lincoln 4142
Steig, A. E 4260
Stein, Gunther 4301, 4318–4319, 4332, 4334, 4351
Stein, Mrs. Gunther 4314
Steinhart, Jesse 4105–4106
Steinmetz, Harry C 4089
Stekoll, Harry 4090
Stern, Alfred K 4260
Stern, Dr. Bernhard J 4089, 4260
Stewart, Dean Robert 4326, 4349
Stewart, Donald Ogden 4116, 4260
Stewart, John 4063, 4066
Stewart, Mrs. Marguerite A 4124, 4263
Stewart, Maxwell S 4102, 4170–4171, 4173, 4177, 4189–4199, 4260, 4272, 4275, 4277
Stilwell, Gen. Joseph 4330, 4331
Stimson (Colonel) 4054, 4055
Stolley, Herman 4117
Stone, Marc 4152, 4244
Strand, Paul 4260
Strategic Bombing Survey in Japan 4161, 4184
Strong, Anna Louise 4338
Strong, Edward E 4116
Struik, Prof. Dirk J 4089, 4260
Stuart, J. Leighton 4141
Sturgeon 4108–4109
Suekawa, Prof. (Hiroshi) 4263
Sues, Ilona Ralph 4301–4302, 4313
Suetsugu (Admiral) 4148
Sugiyama (General) 4267
Suiyuan Invasion 4151
Sumitoma 4148
Sun, Fo 4283
Sun, Yat Sen 4110–4111, 4271, 4352

Page
Sun, Yat-senism ---- 4110–4111
Sun, Yat-Sen versus Communism ---- 4110
Supreme Command of the Allied Powers (General Headquarters, Tokyo) ---- 4162, 4166, 4185, 4230–4231
Sutsuki ---- 4148
Suzuki, Bunji ---- 4274
Swedish Prime Minister ---- 4234
Sweezy, Paul M ---- 4089
Swing, Raymond Gram ---- 4075, 4286
Switzerland ---- 4200, 4319
Syracuse University ---- 4258
Szechwan ---- 4061, 4068

T

Taggart, Miss Genevieve ---- 4089, 4275
Taiehrchuang ---- 4061, 4131
Taiheiyo Mondai Chosakai (Pacific Problems Research Institute) ---- 4264
Takaki ---- 4127, 4264
Takano, Dr. Twasaburo ---- 4263
Takayarogi ---- 4264
Tanaka Cabinet ---- 4148
Tangku (China) ---- 4132, 4134
Tangku Truce ---- 4151
Tani, Masayuk ---- 4266
Tannenbaum, Gerald ---- 4328–4329
Tao, Heng-chi ---- 4277
Tarr, E. J ---- 4087, 4121
Tasker, Robert ---- 4260
Tass ---- 4284
Taylor, C. Fayette ---- 4260
Taylor, George ---- 4124
Taylor, Graham R ---- 4091, 4145
Taylor, Margaret R ---- 4062, 4066, 4086, 4092, 4097
Teachers' Union of the City of New York ---- 4259
Teh, Prince ---- 4152
Teigan, Henry G ---- 4116
Ten Days That Shook the World ---- 4090
Tennent, Hugh C ---- 4125–4126
Terauchi, General ---- 4201
Terrill, Katherine ---- 4117, 4170–4171, 4178
Thaelmann, Ernst ---- 4232–4236
Thailand ---- 4098
Theatre Arts Committee ---- 4275
Theoretical Analysis of Chinese History ---- 4352
Third Reich ---- 4235
Thomas, Norman ---- 4234
Thompson, Virginia ---- 4135
Thompson, Rev. John B ---- 4053
Thorner, Daniel ---- 4153
Thornton, Ernest ---- 4080
Three People's Principles ---- 4111, 4122
Thurber, James ---- 4260
Tientsin (China) ---- 4047, 4134, 4151, 4201–4202
Tientsin-Pukow War Front ---- 4059–4060
Tilney, Frederick ---- 4091, 4145
Timbres, Rebecca Janney ---- 4260
Times Atlas in English ---- 4146
Time magazine ---- 4038
Ting, Leonard G ---- 4108
Tippy, Worth M ---- 4116
Togawa, Daikichiro ---- 4184
Togo, Shigenori ---- 4266
Tojo ---- 4265-4268
Tojo Cabinet ---- 4266
Tokugawa, Lieutenant General ---- 4134

Page
Tokyo 4108, 4134, 4147, 4150, 4182–4185, 4200–4201, 4224–4225, 4262
Tokyo Imperial (Public Finance Japan) 4263
Tokyo Imperial University 4127
Toledano, Vincent Lombard 4078
Tolokonski, Mrs 4041–4042
Tongking (China) 4046
Totten, Ashley P 4117
Tovarich 4091
Tozzer, Alfred M 4119
Trade Union Service Association 4079
Tredwell, Dr. F 4260
Troiano, Rose 4116
Trone, S. A 4091, 4145
Trotsky, Leon 4104, 4110, 4216
Troyanovsky, Mrs 4041
Truman, President Harry S 4280
Tsa-chuang 4060
Tsienpu 4061
Tsinan 4061
Tsingtao (China) 4132
Tsuro 4096
Tu, Yueh-sen 4302
Tung, Pi-wu 4080, 4083, 4231–4232, 4323
Tuttle, Frank 4116
Twentieth Century Association 4299

U

Ugaki, General 4148
Uhl, Alex 4315
Ullman, Mr 4314
Umezu, Gen. Yoshijiro 4265, 4267
Unfinished Revolution in China 4082
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (U. S. R. R.) 4040–4041, 4043, 4070–4071, 4100, 4134, 4203, 4257, 4283
United American Artists 4116
United Automobile Workers (West Side Local) 4152
United Cannery, Agriculture, Packing and Allied Workers of America 4116
United China Relif 4318
United Council for Civilian Relief 4138
United Furniture Workers of America 4116
United Nations 4231, 4286, 4316–4317, 4321, 4323, 4326, 4339
United Nations Atomic Commission 4055
United Nations Commission 4351
United Nations (Conference in San Francisco) 4232, 4290
United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF) 4349–4351
United Nations (International Secretariat) 4290–4291, 4294
United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA) 4099, 4330
United Office and Professional Workers of America 4116, 4143, 4275
United Office and Professional Workers of America, CIO (Social Service Employees Union Local 19) 4300, 4327
United Press (UP) 4284
United States of America 4083, 4094, 4098, 4105, 4109, 4113, 4118, 4120, 4128, 4131, 4134–4135, 4137–4141, 4158, 4169, 4183, 4202, 4207, 4231–4232, 4234, 4242, 4258, 4288, 4264, 4269, 4271, 4284, 4298, 4300, 4308, 4323, 4332, 4334, 4337, 4353, 4354
United States Army 4035–4036, 4045, 4064, 4072, 4074–4075, 4185
United States Army Air Force 4045, 4073
United States Army Intelligence (G–2) 4045–4046, 4064, 4072–4073, 4125, 4184
United States Attorney General 4162–4164, 4166, 4187, 4244
United States Congress 4072, 4076, 4098, 4113, 4128–4129, 4241, 4290
United States Government 4056–4057, 4069–4070, 4164, 4290–4291, 4311–4312, 4326, 4348
United States gunboats 4118
United States House of Representatives (Special Committee on Un-American Activities) 4187

Page
United States International Student Service 4116
United States, Justice Department of 4244
United States Marine Corps 4169
United States Navy 4113, 4311, 4313
United States Navy Intelligence (Office of Naval Intelligence) (ONI) 4073, 4127
United States Strategic Bombing Survey (Japan) 4161, 4182
United States Treasury Department (Internal Revenue) 4048, 4049, 4069
United States Senate 4116, 4169, 4244
United States Senate (Foreign Relations Committee) 4316
United States Supreme Court 4128
United States, War Department 4071–4073, 4185
United States and the World Court, the 4100
University of Aberdeen 4089
University of California 4159, 4160, 4225, 4226, 4258–4260, 4289, 4339
University of Chicago 4047, 4119, 4135, 4259
University of Hawaii 4093
University of London 4037, 4296
University of Michigan 4258
University of Minnesota 4093, 4119
University of Pennsylvania 4119
University Settlement Mothers Clubs 4275
University of Washington 4104
Untermeyer, Jean Starr 4260
Untermeyer, Louis 4260
Utley, Freda 4060, 4124

V

Valencia (Spain) 4235
Valtin 4136
Van Kirk, Walter 4107
Van Kleeck, Mary 4091, 4145, 4260
Van Veen, Stuyvesant 4260
Vanderbilt 4127
Vassar College 4260
Vincent, John Carter 4279–4280, 4291, 4293, 4303, 4313–4314, 4324–4326, 4339–4340, 4343
Vaughan, David D 4116
Vixman, Mrs. A. H 4116
Vladivostok 4037
Voice of America 4349–4351
Voice of China 4037
Voitinsky, G. N 4352
Von Koerber, Lenka 4351
Von Plettenberg, Count 4233
Von Seckt, General 4061
Von Trott, Adam 4077, 4083–4084

W

Wakatsuki, Baron Reijiro 4267
Wales, Nym. (See Mrs. Edgar Snow.)
Walker, Miss 4093
Walking Wounded Collecting Centre 4133
Wallace, Henry A 4252
Walsh, J. Raymond 4260
Walsh, Dr. William Henry 4260
Walton, Miss Eda Lou 4275
Walworth, Mr 4107
Walsh, Richard J 4245
Wanamakers' 4275
Wang, Dr. C. H 4150–4151
War and the Working Class 4284
Ward, Harry F 4116, 4118, 4142–4143, 4170–4171, 4178, 4260
Ward, Mrs. Harry F 4127
Ward, Lynd 4260

Page
Wardwell, Allen ---- 4091, 4145
Wartime Politics in China ---- 4279
Washington Commonwealth Federation ---- 4115
Watson, Dr. Goodwin ---- 4116, 4243–4244
Watson, Morris ---- 4260
Watson-Schuman-Dodd Case ---- 4244
Watts, Richard, Jr ---- 4091, 4145
Weatherwax, Clara ---- 4260
Webb, Sidney and Beatrice ---- 4351
Webber, Charles C ---- 4142
Weber, Max ---- 4260
Webster, Professor ---- 4037
Weisner, Louis ---- 4089
Welch, Clifford ---- 4117
Wellesley College ---- 4260
Wendt, Dr. Gerald ---- 4261
Wertheim, Maurice ---- 4091, 4145
Western Europe ---- 4136
Western Union telegram ---- 4067, 4100, 4141
Whitaker, Rev. Robert ---- 4261
White House ---- 4073–4074, 4098
White Paper ---- 4340
Whitney, A. F ---- 4116
Whitney, Courtney ---- 4185
Who's Who of Pacific Affairs ---- 4122
Widener, Mrs. Alice ---- 4299, 4308–4309, 4310, 4328, 4341, 4344, 4349, 4350–4351
Wilbur, Ray Lyman ---- 4044, 4092–4093, 4105–4106, 4109, 4134, 4140, 4143
Williams, Albert Rhys ---- 4261
Williams College ---- 4259–4260
Williams, Maurice ---- 4110–4111, 4271
Williams, Dr. William Carlos ---- 4261
Willoughby, Maj. Gen. Charles A ---- 4184
Wilson, Edwin B ---- 4119
Winter, Ella ---- 4261
Wiss, Helen ---- 4108
Wise, James Waterman ---- 4142
Wissler, Clark ---- 4119
Wittfogel, Karl August ---- 4096–4097, 4106–4107, 4147, 4153, 4155, 4278
Woltman, Frederick ---- 4299–4300
Womans Press, the ---- 4116
Womens Advertising Guild ---- 4275
Women's Peace Union ---- 4275
Woolworth ---- 4275
Workers Alliance of America ---- 4116, 4275
Worker's Bookshop ---- 4179, 4181–4182, 4238
Works Progress Administration (WPA) ---- 4259
W. P. A. Teachers Local ---- 4275
World Affairs Council of Northern California ---- 4207
World Education Conference ---- 4126
Worldwide Campaign for Thaelmann, the ---- 4234
World Youth Congress ---- 4138, 4277
Wrenn, Heaton L ---- 4125–4126
Wright, Richard ---- 4261
Wu, Ting-chang ---- 4151

Y

Y Gasset, E. Ortega ---- 4236
Yakhontoff, Victor A ---- 4086, 4091, 4119–4120, 4144, 4170–4171, 4178–4179, 4182, 4338
Yale University ---- 4259–4260
Yamaishi Securities Co ---- 4263
Yanaibara ---- 4229–4230
Yang, Li-K'uei ---- 4214
Yangtze ---- 4132
Yangtze Valley ---- 4133

Page
Yangtze River 4058
Yangtzepao Clearing Hospital 4133
Yarmolinsky, Aorahm 4145
Yarnell, Admiral Harry E 4104, 4111, 4113
Yardumian, Rose 4087, 4122, 4314, 4328–4329, 4334
Yarmolinsky, Avrahm 4091
Yelk, Mr 4352
Yen, Y. C. James 4046
Yenan (China) 4184, 4212, 4217, 4220
Yenanfu (Fushin) 4213
Yenching University 4141, 4215
Yergan, Max 4080, 4116, 4136
Yokota, Prof. (Kisaburo) 4229–4230, 4236
Yonai, Admiral Mitsumasa 4267–4268
Yonai Cabinet (Japan) 4268
Young, Art 4261
Young, Donald 4107, 4119
Young, Judaea 4116
Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA) 4138
Young Plan 4037
Young, Ruth (Mrs.) 4086, 4099
Young, Thomas 4117
Youth Congress at Vassar 4139
Youth Congress in Wisconsin 4143
Yumashev, Andrei 4040, 4042
Yunnan (China) 4046, 4068
Yutsai School 4318
Yzestia Moscow (Newspaper) 4049

Z

Za Industrializaciu (Soviet Newspaper) 4039
Zaibatsu 4166, 4263
Zelitch 4091
Zhulsou 4264
Zimbalist, Mrs. Efrem 4091, 4145
Zions Herald 4116
Zostchenko 4090
Zubillaga, Lius 4235
Zugsmith, Leane 4261

○

3 9999 05018 334 0

9335.4A165A

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

HEARINGS

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS

OF THE

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY UNITED STATES SENATE

EIGHTY-SECOND CONGRESS

SECOND SESSION

ON

THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

PART 13

APRIL 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, MAY 15, 16, AND 29, 1952

Printed for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary

Florida Technical Library
DEC 24 1952

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

HEARINGS

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS

OF THE

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY UNITED STATES SENATE

EIGHTY-SECOND CONGRESS

SECOND SESSION

ON

THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

PART 13

APRIL 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, MAY 15, 16, AND 29, 1952

Printed for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
88348 WASHINGTON : 1952

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada, Chairman

HARLEY M. KILGORE, West Virginia	ALEXANDER WILEY, Wisconsin
JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi	WILLIAM LANGER, North Dakota
WARREN G. MAGNUSON, Washington	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan
HERBERT R. O'CONOR, Maryland	WILLIAM E. JENNER, Indiana
ESTES KEFAUVER, Tennessee	ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah
WILLIS SMITH, North Carolina	ROBERT C. HENDRICKSON, New Jersey

J. G. SOURWINE, Counsel

INTERNAL SECURITY SUBCOMMITTEE

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada, Chairman

JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan
HERBERT R. O'CONOR, Maryland	WILLIAM E. JENNER, Indiana
WILLIS SMITH, North Carolina	ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah

SUBCOMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

JAMES O. EASTLAND, Mississippi, Chairman

PAT McCARRAN, Nevada	HOMER FERGUSON, Michigan

ROBERT MORRIS, Special Counsel
BENJAMIN MANDEL, Director of Research

CONTENTS

	Page
Bentley, Elizabeth	4775–4804
Bogolepov, Igor	4479–4520
Bullitt, William C	4521–4593
Carter, Edward C	4466–4478
Chambers, Jay David Whittaker	4775–4804
Chennault, Claire Lee	4763–4775
Farley, Miriam S	4445–4455
Farrell, Frank	4407–4438
Hillenkoetter, Roscoe H	4775–4804
Jones, Catesby	4358–4391
Jones, Mrs. Catesby	4392–4399
Kaplan, Irving	4738–4761
Lattimore, Eleanor	4455–4466
Massing, Hede	4798–4804
Miller, Robert T	4401–4407
Moy, Eugene	4355–4358
Philbrick, Herbert A	4782–4804
Weintraub, David	4627–4737
Yergan, Max	4595–4626

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS, OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to call, at 4 p. m., in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. James O. Eastland, presiding.

President: Senators Eastland, O'Conor, and Ferguson.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

Senator EASTLAND. Will you give the reporter your name, please?

Mr. MOY. Eugene Moy, M-o-y.

Senator EASTLAND. Will you stand? Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give the Subcommittee on Internal Security of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. MOY. I do.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator, we have had testimony before this committee concerning the New China Daily News. We have introduced into the record a letter from Mr. Owen Lattimore to Mr. Joseph Barnes, in which he makes recommendations of personnel for the Office of War Information, with which both Mr. Lattimore and Mr. Barnes were employed at the time; and Mr. Lattimore's recommendation in connection with the New China Daily News says here:

> One of the outstanding rallying points of the unaffiliated Chinese in America is the New China Daily News in New York.

Then he goes on to give some comment on the nature of the New China Daily News.

Now, today we subpenaed two of the editors of the New China Daily News. At least, they have been editors of the New China Daily News. Mr. Chew Hong was mentioned in this letter at the bottom of page 2:

> Mr. Chi and Mr. Chew Hong, both of our New York office, conform excellently to these requirements.

Mr. Chew Hong, we are informed by the marshal's office, is now in Red China, and therefore is not here today. We have here, however, Mr. Eugene Moy, and we would like to determine whether he is one of the editors of the New China Daily News.

Senator EASTLAND. You may proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Moy, are you an editor of the New China Daily News?

TESTIMONY OF EUGENE MOY, ACCOMPANIED BY HIS COUNSEL, BENEDICT WOLF

Mr. MOY. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may incriminate me.

Mr. MORRIS. You mean you won't even tell this committee whether or not you are now one of the editors of the New China Daily News?

Mr. MOY. I have stated as I did this morning when you asked me questions.

Mr. MORRIS. In executive session?

Mr. MOY. That the Federal grand jury is conducting an investigation of the New China Daily News.

Senator EASTLAND. Are you a citizen of the United States?

Mr. MOY. Should I finish?

Senator EASTLAND. No, I asked you a question, and I want you to answer it.

Mr. MOY. Yes, I am.

Senator EASTLAND. How did you become a citizen?

Mr. MOY. Because my father was born here.

Senator EASTLAND. Where were you born?

Mr. MOY. I was born in China.

Mr. MORRIS. You were saying you refused to answer on the grounds that the Federal grand jury in New York is conducting an investigation of the New China Daily News.

Mr. MOY. Of the New China Daily News. And I have been subpenaed to appear before the grand jury several times, to be exact, four times, in connection with that investigation.

Mr. MORRIS. So therefore you will not even tell us whether you are an editor of that paper. Your name appears upon the masthead, does it not?

Mr. MOY. That would tend to incriminate me.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, tell me this, sir. Does your name appear on the masthead of the New China Daily News?

Mr. MOY. I decline to answer on the ground that it would tend to incriminate me.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Chairman, may I just ask a question right there?

Is it not required that there be published reports as to who are the editors or publishers of newspapers in New York State?

Mr. MOY. Yes, it is.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, have such reports been made, and are they being made currently?

Mr. MOY. Yes, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Do you have those reports? Are they available?

Mr. MOY. You mean in the newspaper?

Senator O'CONOR. Either in the newspaper or copies of reports that you make to the State authorities in accordance with law.

Mr. MOY. I decline to answer that, because it would tend to incriminate me.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, now, I am not asking you as to what you did. I am asking you whether this particular publication has made reports; which may not include you; may or may not include you. But I am asking you whether such reports have been made.

Mr. MOY. I noticed that papers do make reports.

Senator O'CONOR. Papers do make reports. Well, do you know whether this particular publication has made a report, in accordance with the law of the State?

Mr. MOY. In accordance with the law of the State, all papers do.

Senator O'CONOR. All papers do. And this paper did?

Mr. MOY. I think it does.

Senator O'CONOR. You think it did. When, to your knowledge, did the paper make the last report as to its ownership and publishers?

Mr. MOY. Oh, the paper usually does it on October 1.

Senator O'CONOR. And to your knowledge did this paper do it on last October 1?

Mr. MOY. All papers do.

Senator O'CONOR. All papers do. Well, that is a matter of public record, is it not?

Mr. MOY. I think it is.

Senator EASTLAND. Well, if it is a matter of public record, why can you not answer the question?

Mr. MOY. I have stated the facts, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you last communicate with anyone on the continent of Asia?

Mr. MOY. I decline to answer because of possible self-incrimination.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, that question has nothing to do with the New China Daily News. Will you answer the question now?

Mr. MOY. My answer stands.

Mr. MORRIS. It is still the same?

Mr. MOY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Even though the question was the first of a series of questions that had no relation whatsoever to the New China Daily News?

Mr. MOY. My answer stands.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, when did you last communicate with Mr. Chew Hong?

Mr. MOY. I decline to answer on the same ground.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the ground?

Mr. MOY. Of possible self-incrimination.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I don't think we can get any information from this witness. I would like the record to show we made an effort to find out the nature of the New China Daily News.

Senator EASTLAND. And that is even though he claims to be an American citizen. He insists, by his silence, in aiding and abetting a country that is now murdering American boys. I think if he is an American citizen, he is a disgrace to the United States, and the quicker we get rid of such cattle the better off this country will be.

You may stand aside.

EUGENE MOY

410 OCEAN AVENUE

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, April 9, 1952.

INTERNAL SECURITY SUBCOMMITTEE,
SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

(Att.: Robert Morris, Counsel.)

GENTLEMEN: With reference to the hearing in executive session at which I appeared in Senator Ferguson's office on April 3rd, 1952, you asked me whether I had ever endorsed a check whose face bore the signature of Frederick V. Field.

I had no recollection of such endorsement at the time and I therefore answered "no". Since then my recollection has been refreshed, and I now wish to inform you that in December 1948, I endorsed a check which had been signed by Frederick V. Field, made out to cash, for $450.00. I therefore want to correct the record, and ask you to make this part of the record of the hearing in executive session.

Very truly yours,

EUGENE MOY.

Call your next witness.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you get the next witnesses?

Senator O'CONOR (presiding). Will you kindly stand?

In the presence of Almighty God, do you swear that the testimony you give the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mrs. JONES. I do.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, what is your present occupation?

TESTIMONY OF MR. AND MRS. CATESBY T. JONES, BALTIMORE, MD., ACCOMPANIED BY THEIR COUNSEL, JOSEPH FANELLI

Mr. JONES. I am a graduate student of the Johns Hopkins University.

Mr. MORRIS. And what is your residence?

Mr. JONES. My residence is 5413 Falls Road Terrace, Baltimore 10, Md.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, have you ever held a fellowship at the Walter Hines Page School?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you hold that fellowship?

Mr. JONES. From October 1949 to June 1951.

Mr. MORRIS. Who obtained that fellowship for you?

Mr. JONES. Owen Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. How did he do that?

Mr. JONES. I have no idea.

Mr. MORRIS. I mean, did you ask him to?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. He voluntarily obtained the fellowship for you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, testimony has come up in our public record to the effect that you and Mr. Owen Lattimore, Mrs. Lattimore, and Edward C. Carter met in a restaurant, the Aldo Cafe, here in Washington, after a public session of this committee. Did you, in fact, have a meeting in the Aldo Cafe with the persons that I just mentioned?

Mr. JONES. We had dinner in the Aldo Cafe.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the date?

Mr. JONES. To the best of my recollection, the date was August 22, 1951.

Mr. MORRIS. August—what was the date?

Mr. JONES. The 22d.

Mr. MORRIS. And who was the witness before the committee on that day?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Louis Budenz.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Did you attend the meeting that day?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Of this committee? You sat in this room while Mr. Budenz testified, did you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did Owen Lattimore ask you to attend the hearing that day?

Mr. JONES. No, sir, he did not.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you voluntarily attend the hearing?

Mr. JONES. I attended the hearing at the request of Mrs. Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. Of Mrs. Lattimore. And what did you do after you attended the hearing?

Mr. JONES. I went to the law offices of Arnold, Fortas & Porter.

Mr. MORRIS. And what did you do there?

Mr. JONES. I presented the notes that I had taken to Mrs. Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, did you meet Mr. Carter in Mr. Fortas' office?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. What was he doing there?

Mr. JONES. I don' t know, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. But you did meet him?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I met him.

Mr. MORRIS. So, in Mr. Fortas' office that evening there were yourself, Mr. Owen Lattimore, Mrs. Lattimore, and Mr. Fortas?

Mr. JONES. That is correct, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Mr. Fortas present?

Mr. JONES. Oh, oh; excuse me, sir. Mr. Fortas was not present.

Mr. MORRIS. Was any member of the firm present?

Mr. JONES. No senior member of the firm was present.

Senator EASTLAND. No senior member? What does he mean?

Mr. JONES. Well, there were employees. That is the only thing I was trying to cover, Senator.

Senator EASTLAND. Who else was present?

Mr. JONES. Oh, typists.

Senator EASTLAND. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, what did you do at the request of Mrs. Lattimore that afternoon? Will you tell the committee in great detail precisely what you did?

Mr. JONES. That afternoon, I came to this committee room and took notes on the testimony.

Senator FERGUSON. Was Mrs. Lattimore here in the room?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; she was not.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know whether she attended any of the preceding hearings?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I don't know that for a fact.

Senator FERGUSON. Was Carter in the room?

Mr. JONES. I believe he was; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. You knew Carter, did you not?

Mr. JONES. No, at that time I didn't know him.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you at that time a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. FANELLI. You may answer that.

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I was not a member of the Communist Party at that time.

Senator O'CONOR. Had you been before that?

Mr. JONES. And I will add that for the past 10 years I have not been a member of the Communist Party, nor connected in any way with communism, Communists, or Communist activities.

Senator O'CONOR. Had you ever been a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. FANELLI. You may claim privilege.

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer that question on the grounds of the first and fifth amendments and any other constitutional rights that may be available to me.

Senator O'CONOR. Now, previously you said that you had received a fellowship to the Johns Hopkins University through the efforts of Owen Lattimore. That is correct?

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Senator O'CONOR. How long have you known him?

Mr. JONES. I met him in the spring of 1949.

Senator O'CONOR. Did you discuss with him any of your connections prior to 10 years ago?

Mr. JONES. No political connections, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, to what extent.

Mr. JONES. Employment and academic record. That was all that was discussed.

Senator O'CONOR. Do you mean to say that Owen Lattimore recommended you for a fellowship with no greater knowledge than that of your past background and affiliations?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, the fact that you had been a Communist prior to 10 years did not make any difference?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I will respectfully have to decline to answer that question.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, let us put it this way. Did Owen Lattimore ever inquire as to what possible connections you had with the Communist Party?

Mr. FANELLI. You may answer.

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Did you ever volunteer or discuss with him anything as to any of your connections prior to 10 years ago?

Mr. FANELLI. You may claim privilege on that.

Mr. JONES. Sir, I decline to answer that. I respectfully decline to answer that on the same grounds.

Senator EASTLAND. Now, let us see. Will you repeat the question? I did not understand.

Senator O'CONOR. My question is whether or not, even though Owen Lattimore had not asked you as to your possible connections with the Communist Party, you had volunteered to him any information.

Senator EASTLAND. In other words, whether he gave Owen Lattimore information as to whether or not he was a Communist 10 years ago?

Senator O'CONOR. That is right.

Senator EASTLAND. And he declines to answer on the grounds that it might incriminate him?

Senator O'CONOR. Is that right?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. And of course that means that he did, and then Lattimore recommended him.

Mr. FANELLI. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, now, wait. The witness refused to answer that question, as to whether or not he did tell him.

Mr. FANELLI. If you will ask him about the time of the fellowship, I will instruct him to answer.

Senator O'CONOR. I am asking him whether, at or before the time that Lattimore recommended him for the fellowship, he, the witness, had discussed with Lattimore his prior connections if any with the Communist Party.

Mr. FANELLI. You may answer that question.

Mr. JONES. The answer to that, sir, is "No."

Senator O'CONOR. Did you ever volunteer any information to him as to your past possible connections with the Communist Party?

Mr. FANELLI. Senator, at any time?

Senator O'CONOR. At any time.

Mr. FANELLI. On that you will claim privilege.

Senator EASTLAND. We are right back where we were at first.

Mr. FANELLI. But the difference was between at or before, Senator.

Senator O'CONOR. Therefore, I broke it down into two parts.

Mr. FANELLI. He will claim privilege on the second question.

Senator O'CONOR. So that you now decline to answer whether or not you discussed with Lattimore your possible connections with the Communist Party?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. When Owen Lattimore recommended you for the fellowship, did he have information that you at any time had been a Communist or connected with the Communist movement?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator EASTLAND. He had no such information?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. To your knowledge?

Mr. JONES. To my knowledge.

Senator EASTLAND. And you had never given him such information?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, when you met with him subsequent to the hearing in this room, did Owen Lattimore have any information of your possible past connections with the Communist Party?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

(Short recess.)

Senator O'CONOR. The hearing will please come to order.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, this morning in executive session, were you asked the question: "Were you a member of the Communist Party at the time that you, at the request of Eleanor Lattimore, attended the hearings before this committee on August 22, 1951?" Were you asked that question this morning in executive session?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, I believe I was asked that.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your answer at that time?

Mr. JONES. My answer was "No."

Senator FERGUSON. Now, wait. Did you say that you refused to answer on the ground that it might tend to incriminate you?

Mr. JONES. I probably did, sir. I don't know.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you in good faith, this morning, when you answered that question, that on August 22, 1951, you were at that time a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. JONES. This morning no date was mentioned.

Senator FERGUSON. The date was when she talked to you about coming down here.

Mr. MORRIS. That was the date of the hearing that you attended. Were you in good faith when at that time you said you refused to answer on the grounds that an answer would tend to incriminate you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, I was in good faith.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, when that same question was asked you today, this afternoon, why did you give a different answer?

Mr. JONES. I consulted with counsel today.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know, Mr. Jones, that when you claimed your privilege under the fifth amendment by declining to answer on the grounds that it might incriminate you, you were saying to the committee that, in your opinion, if you answered that question it might incriminate you? That is, in your opinion if you answered it truthfully it might incriminate you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that what you meant this morning when you declined to answer that question?

Mr. JONES. I would like to consult with counsel, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. By all means do so.

Mr. FANELLI. May we have a minute, Senator?

(Mr. Jones leaves the room to consult with his counsel, returning shortly thereafter.)

Senator FERGUSON. Now what is your answer?

Mr. FANELLI. What was the question, Senator? I have forgotten.

Senator O'CONOR. The question is whether or not at the executive hearing this morning your answer to the question as to whether or not you were a member of the Communist Party as of the date when you attended the hearing here last August—whether your answer was not that you declined to answer on the grounds that it might tend to incriminate you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, that was my answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. And then the question was, Mr. Jones, if the Chair will permit me, as to whether, in answering in that manner, you intended to tell the committee that, in your opinion, if you answered that question truthfully, it might incriminate you?

Mr. FANELLI. You may answer that.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, how do you reconcile that answer? This afternoon, it does not tend to incriminate you. This morning it did.

Mr. FANELLI. You may answer that.

Mr. JONES. I would like to make that perfectly clear. This morning I answered questions in the way I did in good faith on the advice of counsel. This afternoon, counsel has conferred with me further. The only thing involved this morning was a question of waiver. My counsel has checked up on this question of waiver, and now, on advice of counsel, I am answering more fully.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, your counsel came to the conclusion and told you so, that you were not waiving, that you could claim it on any question?

Mr. FANELLI. You don't have to answer as to what your counsel told you.

Senator O'CONOR. Just a minute, Counsel.

Senator FERGUSON. I cannot ask you what you told him, but there is no reason why he cannot tell me.

Mr. FANELLI. I don't think he has any objection.

Senator FERGUSON. Go ahead and tell me, then.

Mr. JONES. What was that again, sir?

Senator FERGUSON. Your counsel advised you that you could claim privilege on any particular question; is that right?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you did not waive it, if you did answer one question. It would not waive as to another question.

Mr. JONES. In the 10-year period; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, were you a member of the Communist Party on April 1, 1942? That is 10 years and 1 day from today.

Mr. FANELLI. You may answer that.

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you leave the Communist Party, Mr. Jones?

Mr. FANELLI. You will decline to answer that.

Mr. JONES. Sir, I decline to answer that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, we have a situation here in which counsel is telling the witness in advance of each answer as to whether to answer or not to answer.

Senator O'CONOR. Counsel, that is manifestly improper. You are not to make responses to the questions of counsel. The witness, of course, has a right to consult you for your advice, but you are not testifying.

Mr. FANELLI. Mr. Senator, I didn't mean to testify. I am merely indicating advice that is helpful. It is helpful to the committee if I can advise him.

Senator FERGUSON. Could you enlighten us on some testimony that is in this record to the effect that you gave an envelope to Owen Lattimore containing the record in an immigration case? Would you clear that up? Or gave it to Fortas?

Mr. FANELLI. No; not to Lattimore.

Senator FERGUSON. To Fortas?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes; I did.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you clear it up and tell us where the record came from, so that we would know whether it was the official record?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you do that now?

Mr. FANELLI. Certainly. I have no objection, Senator.

Senator O'CONOR. Do you desire to be sworn?

Mr. FANELLI. If the committee is going to ask me just about this, I am perfectly willing to tell it under oath or otherwise, Senator, as you desire. I am glad to accommodate the Senator. There is no secret about this.

Senator FERGUSON. I would be glad to know.

Mr. FANELLI. At the time of the Tydings hearings—it is no longer in my memory as to when those were; it may be a year ago, so I would have to check the date—but at the time of the Tydings hearings, I called Mr. Fortas. I had read in the paper that Mr. Budenz had testified in connection with Mr. Lattimore. There was an accusation of some sort. He might have testified that he was a member of the party. I don't remember that exactly. I wasn't following these hearings closely. I had the copy of the transcript of a deportation proceeding against a Mr. John Santos.

Senator FERGUSON. Which was your client?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, he was. I was cocounsel in that case, as an immigration expert. It happens to be my primary field.

In that proceeding, one of the charges, I think the main charge, against Santos, was that he had been a member of the Communist Party, a charge that he had denied. I was cocounsel in that proceeding, and was given an extra copy of the transcript. I may say that the chief counsel in that proceeding, who had theretofore been counsel for the union, the Transport Workers Union, of which Santos was an officer at the time, was Mr. Harry Sacher, who has achieved some notoriety since.

Senator FERGUSON. He was sentenced for contempt in the 11 Communists trial?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he also receive a copy of the transcript?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes. It must have been, because I was in Washington, and he was in New York, and we were both on the case.

I would like it noted also for the record, Senator, that after the hearings in that case I withdrew from that proceeding. The reason I withdrew is that I was unable to get along with Mr. Sacher. I want to be fair to Mr. Sacher. It had nothing to do with any political difference, although I am sure there must be political differences between him and I. But I just couldn't stand him as cocounsel. Now, that is how I had this copy of the transcript.

Now, when I read in the paper that Mr. Budenz had just testified or was about to testify, I knew I had this transcript, which included a cross-examination of Mr. Budenz. He had been cross-examined in that proceeding.

Mr. MORRIS. By whom?

Mr. FANELLI. By Sacher. Sacher had done all the cross-examining. My function in that case was primarily to advise on questions of law, on immigration law.

In the course of that, he had claimed privilege a number of times. And I called Fortas, whom I know by reason of the fact that I was once at the Interior Department. We are not close friends, but I knew him in that connection. I knew he was Lattimore's counsel. And I asked him whether this material would be of interest to him and to the Tydings committee, and said if so he could have it.

He said he at least would like to look at it. I didn't give it to him in an envelope, that I can recall. He may have sent over for it. Maybe it was in an envelope addressed to him.

Thereafter, it has never come back, and I don't know what has happened to it, except that there have been some little items in the newspaper about it.

Mr. SOURWINE. You said you had an extra copy of the transcript.

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir; two copies were made.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that the Immigration Service had stated that only one copy was given, and that that was given to counsel for purposes of appeal?

Mr. FANELLI. May I say I heard something to that effect here, at one of these hearings within the past week. Or maybe I read it in the paper. I have seen it or heard it stated, that the Immigration Service has said that; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. In fact, you are stating that there were two copies.

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that one was given to Mr. Sacher and one to you?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that the copy which you gave to Mr. Lattimore's attorney for his use before the Tydings committee was not the same copy as that which was given Mr. Sacher?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And do you know that the copy which was given Mr. Sacher for use on appeal was under the restriction that it would not be otherwise used?

Mr. FANELLI. That may be. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was the copy that was given you under any such restriction?

Mr. FANELLI. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who gave you that copy?

Mr. FANELLI. The reporter was requested to give me another copy.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who requested the reporter to give it to you?

Mr. FANELLI. I suppose the presiding official at the time.

Mr. SOURWINE. And it was done without any restrictions?

Mr. FANELLI. No, sir. I may say that was a public hearing.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes; and you understand that you got that transcript without any restrictions?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think that any restrictions which the record shows applied to Mr. Sacher would apply also to you?

Mr. FANELLI. I doubt that there would be any restrictions applicable to him. I don't know, in fact.

Mr. SOURWINE. If there were, in fact, restrictions on him, would they apply equally to you?

Mr. FANELLI. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you felt you had the transcript without any restrictions?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir.

I would like to say this, Mr. Sourwine: I am sure that if the immigration office in New York, that is, the head of that office or one of its officials, informed the committee that the record shows that Sacher only had—or that there was only one copy of this that went to Sacher, that must be the occasion in the record, and they were telling what they believed to be the fact.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you familiar with the rules in immigration cases?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know of any rule with regard to the handling of the transcripts of such cases?

Mr. FANELLI. There is a—it is not a regulation. Usually, almost invariably, let's put it that way, a deportation proceeding is not a public hearing.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right. Do you know of any rule applicable to the transcripts of such hearings?

Mr. FANELLI. Not a rule, but I am going on to answer your question. In deportation proceedings, which generally are not public proceedings—I mean usually they aren't—a transcript is given to counsel for the respondent in a deportation proceeding, and he usually is asked to sign a receipt for that, which states, as I recall it, that he will not make a copy of it, and he will return it. It is a loan.

Senator FERGUSON. And it is for the lawyer alone?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir; in a deportation proceeding, which is a private proceeding, and that is for the protection, as I understand it—it is a receipt. It is for protection.

Senator FERGUSON. You gave this out without the consent of your client?

Mr. FANELLI. Sir, it was a public hearing.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; but you gave it out, though, without the consent of your client?

Mr. FANELLI. There was no consent required. But the answer to your question is "Yes." I gave it out without my client.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are saying that the Santos hearing was a public hearing?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir; it was.

Mr. SOURWINE. And all of the testimony in this transcript was testimony that had been given in public?

Mr. FANELLI. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that you signed no receipt at the time you got the transcript?

Mr. FANELLI. That is my best recollection, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Was it certified as a true transcript?

Mr. FANELLI. Gee, I would have to see it. I doubt it, since mine was a copy, but I am just not sure, Senator.

Senator O'CONOR. All right, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. I think I had asked Mr. Jones if he had been a member of the Communist Party on April 1, 1942.

And you had stated that you were not.

Mr. JONES. I answered "No."

Mr. MORRIS. Now, had you been a member of the Communist Party in April 1941?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I decline to answer.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement that the witness has volunteered in his preceding answers in connection with the questions about his association with the Communist Party, I ask that he be directed to answer that question.

Senator O'CONOR. Yes. The Chair directs that you answer that question.

Mr. JONES. Sir, I still have to decline, respectfully decline, under the first and fifth amendments and any other constitutional rights that are available.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you telling the committee by that declination that in your opinion, if you answer that question truthfully, it might incriminate you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, were you a member of the Communist Party on the first of October 1942?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you a member of the Communist Party on the first of October 1941?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you a member of the Communist Party on January 1, 1942?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you a member of the Communist Party on December 1, 1941?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you resign from the Communist Party or otherwise sever your connections with it?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Senator FERGUSON. How do you resign from the Communist Party? Could you tell us the procedure?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you have never resigned from the Communist Party?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I am not a Communist.

Mr. SOURWINE. I asked you if you have ever resigned from the Communist Party.

Mr. JONES. I would like to consult with counsel.

(Mr. Jones confers with his counsel.)

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Senator O'CONOR. On the grounds that the answer, if given truthfully, might tend to incriminate you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, Mr. Jones, in the light of your previous response that you do not know how a resignation is effected, how, then, do you feel that your answer as to whether you did resign as of a certain date would incriminate you, if you are not aware of the manner or method of resigning?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I am going to have to consult with counsel again. I am sorry.

(Mr. Jones confers with his counsel.)

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer that. I am not competent to answer.

Senator FERGUSON. Wait. What do you mean by "not competent"?

Mr. JONES. I respectfully decline to answer that, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. On what ground?

Mr. JONES. On the grounds that it might tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Jones, did you answer truthfully when you answered Senator Ferguson's question as to whether you knew how a resignation from the Communist Party was effected, when you said "I don't know"? Was that a truthful statement?

Mr. JONES. I will have to consult with counsel.

Mr. FANELLI. Answer it.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. If you had ever resigned from the Communist Party you would know how it was done; wouldn't you?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; not necessarily.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you could have resigned from the Communist Party without knowing how it was done?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator O'Conor. How? Explain your answer on that, Mr. Jones. How could you have taken an action without knowing how that action was to be pursued? How could that possibly be?

Mr. Jones. Memory could fail with all little technical formal things.

Senator O'Conor. Explain.

Mr. Jones. Failure of memory. I don't remember all the details of bookkeeping throughout my life.

Mr. Sourwine. Have you forgotten how you resigned from the Communist Party?

Mr. Jones. I would like to consult with counsel.

(Mr. Jones confers with his counsel.)

Mr. Jones. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Jones, were you a member of the Communist Party on April 1, 1917?

Mr. Jones. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Jones, were you a member of the Communist Party on April 1, 1910?

Mr. Jones. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Mr. Sourwine. Mr. Jones, were you a member of the Communist Party on April 1, 1900?

Mr. Jones. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Mr. Sourwine. Were you alive on April 1, 1900?

Senator O'Conor. How old are you, Mr. Jones?

Mr. Jones. I am 39 years old.

I would like to consult with counsel, Senator.

Senator O'Conor. As to how old you are?

Mr. Jones. I will tell you that. Thirty-nine years old.

Senator O'Conor. If you will listen to the questions, you were asked a minute ago whether you were a member of the party on April 1, 1910. That was 42 years ago. I just want to give you an opportunity——

Senator Ferguson. How could you decline to answer that in good faith and say it might incriminate you, when you were not born yet?

Mr. Jones. I can explain myself, Senator.

Senator Ferguson. All right. Explain. We do not want to make these proceedings foolish with these answers.

Mr. Jones. No, sir; and I am certainly not trying to. I am not a trained lawyer. It is merely a question of a law of privilege, and I have to fall back on the advice of counsel. That is all.

Mr. Fanelli. May we consult a little bit? If we go outside, maybe we can save some time.

Senator Ferguson. We will probably end up with the fact that after he was born he will decline to answer, and before that he will answer.

Mr. Fanelli. Senator, that I don't know.

(Mr. Jones and his counsel leave the room briefly.)

Senator Ferguson. Now, was he a Communist before he was born?

Mr. Fanelli. Might I say I have advised him to answer the question to this committee as to any period prior to January 1, 1936, and claim privilege as to any time thereafter.

Senator Ferguson. Is that right—January 1, 1936?

Mr. Jones. January 1 is correct, sir.

Senator Ferguson. Prior to that, you answer "No"?

Mr. JONES. "No." And as to January 1, 1942, I answered "No."

Mr. SOURWINE. And prior to January 1, 1936, your answer is you were not a Communist?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. At any time prior to that date, you were not a Communist?

Mr. JONES. January 1, 1936; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, is there any date between January 1, 1936, and November 1, 1941, on which you were not a Communist?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the witness be directed to answer that question?

Senator O'CONOR. Yes; you are directed to answer that, Mr. Jones.

Mr. JONES. I am very sorry, sir, but I respectfully have to decline to answer that.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FERGUSON. I would like to go and get these instructions that you had to attend this meeting, when Budenz was testifying.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Senator FERGUSON. I think it is the 22d of August.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Could you give us the instructions that Owen Lattimore gave you?

Mr. JONES. The instructions given to me by Mrs. Lattimore?

Senator FERGUSON. Did you talk to Owen Lattimore at all?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; not when I received the instructions.

Senator FERGUSON. Was it on the telephone that she talked with you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And what did she instruct you?

Mr. JONES. "Would you come down to Washington and help us?"

Senator FERGUSON. Had you talked to Owen Lattimore about the case before?

Mr. JONES. In a vague social way. In no organized way; in a vague social way.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, had you not done some investigation or looked up some matters for them in the case?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. My recollection is not precisely accurate. I didn't discuss his whole testimony.

Senator FERGUSON. You discussed some things of it?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you had agreed in effect to help him?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I had.

Senator FERGUSON. And then his wife called you on the phone and said what?—"I want you"? or "We want you"?

Mr. JONES. I honestly can't recall the difference between "I" and "We" there.

Senator FERGUSON. But they wanted you to come down here and listen?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And what were the instructions?

Mr. JONES. The instructions were to come to room 424 and to take as full notes as I possibly could on the testimony to be given that day.

Senator FERGUSON. By Louis Budenz?

Mr. JONES. I believe that was the man testifying.

Senator FERGUSON. That was the man. And then where were you to go?

Mr. JONES. Then I was to deliver my notes.

Senator FERGUSON. To——

Mr. JONES. To the law office of——

Senator FERGUSON. Abe Fortas?

Mr. JONES. Abe Fortas; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And did she say that she and Owen Lattimore would be there?

Mr. JONES. I don't know whether she made it explicit, but it certainly was implicit.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Did you go from here to the Abe Fortas law office?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And took your notes?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you met whom?

Mr. JONES. I met Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore and Mr. E. C. Carter.

Senator FERGUSON. E. C. Carter. Did you see Carter in this room when you were here?

Mr. JONES. I recall I did; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Now, you went directly from here to the Abe Fortas office?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. How long would you say it took you? You left when they closed the testimony?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. How long would you say, then, it took you to go to Abe Fortas' office?

Mr. JONES. Of course, the answer would have to be approximate, but certainly not over a half hour.

Senator FERGUSON. Not over a half hour. Then there was Owen Lattimore and his wife in Abe Fortas' office?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you saw them. Was Carter there before you?

Mr. JONES. I believe he was, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. He got there before you did. And you went into Abe Fortas' office, and Abe, as I understand it, was not there?

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. And then you had a conference with Owen Lattimore and his wife?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you told them what you had heard up here at the hearing, read it to them or gave it to them?

Mr. JONES. I read it to them and gave it to them, both.

Senator FERGUSON. You read it to them and gave it to them, both. Now, did you stay with Owen Lattimore until you went to the Arbor Cafe?

Mr. SOURWINE. The Aldo Cafe.

Mr. JONES. The Aldo, Senator. I stayed in Abe Fortas' office.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes, and Owen Lattimore was there in the immediate vicinity?

Mr. JONES. That is right, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you and Owen Lattimore and his wife and Carter were there together?

Mr. JONES. Well, there were times when I left the room, and so on.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. You left the room. But they did not leave the office, the whole office?

Mr. JONES. No, the whole suite; no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. So, they stayed in the suite with you during the time until you went to this restaurant?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Oh, just a moment, sir. Just as a point of detail, E. C. Carter left for his hotel before we went to the restaurant.

Senator FERGUSON. He left for his hotel, and he went to the hotel?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And, as I understand it, you suggested the restaurant you would like to go to?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. So, you then, and Lattimore and Mrs. Lattimore, went directly from Abe Fortas' suite of offices to the restaurant?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; we went and picked up E. C. Carter at his hotel.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you went by his room?

Mr. JONES. We went via the hotel.

Senator FERGUSON. Via the hotel. Did you go to his room?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; we met him in the lobby, I think.

Senator FERGUSON. And what hotel was that?

Mr. JONES. My recollection is inexact. It is one of two hotels, either the Lafayette or the Carlton.

Senator FERGUSON. Either one. And you met him there, not in his room, but he was downstairs?

Mr. JONES. Downstairs.

Senator FERGUSON. And then you went directly to this restaurant?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. When you were over at Abe Fortas' office, one of the things which was done by Mr. Lattimore was to prepare an answer to Budenz for the press?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you talked about that answer? You saw it?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I saw the answer. I did see the answer, sure.

Senator FERGUSON. And was that not one of the purposes of getting the testimony, so that they could answer immediately and have it appear in the same story?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And one of the reasons that you took the notes was so that he could prepare his answer?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And be rather accurate?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You at one time had been a newspaperman?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. So that this was to be in order to get the news out to the press?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Before Senator Ferguson pursues that: Was there any reason assigned as to why the statement would be prepared so promptly and issued for publication?

Mr. JONES. Well, it was just a matter of—that is a matter of opinion, Senator.

Senator O'CONOR. No; I am not asking for a matter of opinion. I am asking you for a matter of fact, as to whether there was any reason given or assigned by anyone at the conference as to why the statement should be issued so promptly.

Mr. JONES. No, sir; there was no such explanation made.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, was there any statement made as to when it was going to be issued? Right away, or given out to the press that evening, or later, or when?

Mr. JONES. That evening; yes, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. And who made that statement?

Mr. JONES. I have no recollection, sir. It is just a matter of mechanics of delivering the thing to the press. That is all.

Senator O'CONOR. But it was discussed, as to giving it out that evening?

Mr. JONES. Actually, I cannot recall. I don't know. I assume it was discussed. I mean, it is just reasonable that it should be. But I have no exact recollection of that; no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, do you know whether it was released to the press?

Mr. JONES. As to the hour; no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, was there anything said by Mr. Carter that he had taken notes here of the Budenz testimony? Because he was at the Fortas office when you got there?

Mr. JONES. I don't recall any explicit mention by E. C. Carter of taking notes here.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he have any notes?

Mr. JONES. I honestly don't recall. That is all.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, do you know how you got from this office here that you are in now, the Senate Office Building, to Abe Fortas' office?

Mr. JONES. Certainly, sir. I took a taxi.

Senator FERGUSON. And you went reasonably fast?

Mr. JONES. Through traffic; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Would you have thought that Mr. Carter would have had time to leave here at the end of the hearings and go down to his suite and come back to the office?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no. That is a misunderstanding. He didn't go to his suite first.

Senator FERGUSON. He did not?

Mr. JONES. No, sir. He left the hearing room. When, I don't know, because I wasn't paying—I hadn't met the man at that time, wasn't paying attention to him. He may have left half an hour earlier for all I know. But when I arrived at Fortas' office, he was there.

Senator FERGUSON. He was there. There wasn't any doubt about that?

Mr. JONES. There wasn't any doubt about that; no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Then he left some time that evening before you went to the restaurant, and went to the hotel. You met him in the lobby with Owen Lattimore and his wife, and then you went to this restaurant?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you remember seeing Mr. Sourwine at the restaurant?

Mr. JONES. No recollection whatsoever.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know that your party left so fast that Carter forgot his hat? When you say that the counsel for the committee just happened to be eating at that restaurant? Do you remember that incident?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I don't. As a matter of fact, I do remember that Mr. Carter left his hat.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Yes, I do. That is correct.

Senator O'CONOR. How do you come to remember that?

Mr. JONES. I think because the next day when I was down here, he said—I am under oath, you know.

Senator FERGUSON. Sure you are under oath.

Mr. JONES. I am interested in being explicit.

Senator FERGUSON. You are being truthful.

Mr. JONES. I am being truthful.

Senator O'CONOR. There is no reason for you to falsify as to that.

Mr. JONES. No reason whatsoever. I do remember it, and the reason I remember it I think is because sometime the next day, Mr. Carter said he was put to the inconvenience of going back to Aldo's for his hat. It was a little oddity, something that might stick in your mind.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you have your dinner at the restaurant?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, we did, in a leisurely fashion, too.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you finish it?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, we finished it.

Senator FERGUSON. What time did you get to the restaurant, would you say?

Mr. JONES. Oh, my goodness. Now, here again——

Senator FERGUSON. Well, about. I understand that.

Mr. JONES. 7:30, let's say.

Senator FERGUSON. 7:30?

Mr. JONES. Approximately.

Senator FERGUSON. Then, about when did you leave?

Mr. JONES. About 8:30, maybe not quite that long.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to put in the two newspapers where I found this press release by Owen Lattimore. The one is on August 23, 1951, being the New York Herald Tribune of Thursday, August 23, 1951, on page 3. It is under "Budenz asserts Pacific Institute was Red tool," and the Lattimore statement is in black type.

In reply to Budenz' testimony, Mr. Lattimore issued the following statement. * * *

and then it is quoted. I will ask that be made part of the record.

Senator O'CONOR. It will be made part of the record.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 742" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 742

[New York Herald Tribune, Thursday, August 23, 1951, p. 3]

BUDENZ ASSERTS PACIFIC INSTITUTE WAS RED TOOL—TESTIFIES PARTY LABELED IT "LITTLE RED SCHOOLHOUSE"; IDENTIFIES THREE AS REDS

(By Don Irwin)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.— * * *

* * * * * * *

LATTIMORE'S STATEMENT

In reply to Mr. Budenz's testimony, Mr. Lattimore issued the following statement:

"Budenz has repeated his last year's discredited testimony. He now says that he heard my name mentioned in 1937 as a member of a Communist cell in New York. The fantastic nature of this lie is underscored by the fact that I was not even in the United States in 1937, except between Christmas and New Year's.

"I have already testified under oath that I am not and never have been a Communist, and I am prepared to do so again.

"Budenz is now also suggesting that because in 1945, like a great majority of Americans, I was hostile to the great industrial monopolists who built the Japanese Navy and equipped the Japanese Army, I must have been a Communist. This suggestion will not be much comfort to the thousands of Americans whose sons died to defeat Japanese militarism."

* * * * * * *

Senator FERGUSON. And the New York Times, as of the same day—and these are library papers—on page 7 had also a line or two of his statement.

Senator O'CONOR. They will both be admitted.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, if the Senator desires, there is also here the article which was printed in the final edition of the Washington Star on the evening of the 22d. Would the Senator desire that introduced also?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes. That may give us the time that this was issued.

Mr. SOURWINE. It does not fix it, but it indicates that it did get into the Washington final Star of the 22d, whatever time their deadline may be.

Senator O'CONOR. Yes.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 743" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 743

[The New York Times, Thursday, August 23, 1951, p. 7]

SORGE'S SPY RING HELD COPIED IN U. S.—GEN. WILLOUGHBY TELLS SENATORS OF RED ESPIONAGE IN ORIENT—BUDENZ ACCUSES LATTIMORE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22 (UP)—* * *

* * * * * * *

As General Willoughby testified before the House Committee on Un-American Activities, Louis F. Budenz, former editor of The Daily Worker, told the Senate Internal Security subcommittee that Owen Lattimore and Frederick Vanderbilt Field were described in Communist party councils as key members of a Communist cell in the Institute of Pacific Relations, a private organization that promotes knowledge about the Far East.

Mr. Lattimore, a professor at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, promptly labelled the testimony a "fantastic lie."

* * * * * * *

Mr. Budenz, who broke with the party in 1945 to rejoin the Roman Catholic Church and is now Assistant Professor of Economics at Fordham University, said that in meetings of the party's American "politburo" or top governing body, Mr. Lattimore was "specifically mentioned as a member of the institute's Communist cell under instructions."

Mr. Lattimore said in a statement that this was "a new lie" that Mr. Budenz had added to "his discredited last year's testimony."

* * * * * * *

[Washington Star, August 22, 1951]

LATTIMORE DISCOVERS "ONE NEW LIE" IN BUDENZ' TESTIMONY

Owen Lattimore this afternoon issued the following statement on Louis Budenz' testimony before a Senate subcommittee identifying him as a Communist:

"Budenz seems to have told one new lie about me in addition to his discredited last year's testimony. He now says that he heard my name mentioned in 1937 as a member of a Communist cell. The fantastic nature of this lie is underscored by the fact that I was not even in the United States in 1937, except between Christmas and New Year.

"Budenz had an opportunity to tell this same lie last year under immunity, and did not. His telling it now is merely proof that his memory is inventive as well as elastic.

"I have already testified under oath that I am not and never have been a Communist, and I am prepared to do so again."

Mr. SOURWINE. Might I inquire, Mr. Chairman?

Senator FERGUSON. I wanted to inquire a little more, if I might. Did you have any discussions with Owen Lattimore after you were at that meeting, about you going there, and what you had done here, after you got the press release and had dinner and went home?

Mr. JONES. My impression is not. The conversation at the meal was trivial, as I recall.

Senator FERGUSON. Are you certain that that is the only time you ever had dinner with Mr. Lattimore, Owen Lattimore, and his wife, in that restaurant?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You are positive of that?

Mr. JONES. Positive of that.

Senator FERGUSON. So we could not be mistaken in the record here about some other meeting.

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That was the day that Budenz testified. You remember that?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; August 22.

Senator FERGUSON. August 22, 1951.

Mr. JONES. That was the only time I have ever eaten with the Lattimores in that café.

Senator FERGUSON. So that places the date and the only time.

Now, did you take notes the next day when Budenz testified?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I did.

Senator FERGUSON. And where did you take those notes to?

Mr. JONES. I also took those to Abe Fortas' office.

Senator FERGUSON. And he met you there?
Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.
Senator FERGUSON. That is, Lattimore and Mrs. Lattimore?
Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.
Senator FERGUSON. Was Carter there?
Mr. JONES. I simply cannot recall.
Senator FERGUSON. All right. You don't recall Carter. But you recall them there?
Mr. JONES. Yes.
Senator FERGUSON. Did you give them the notes?
Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.
Senator FERGUSON. And did you go to any restaurant to eat that day, with them?
Mr. JONES. I think not.
Senator FERGUSON. You do not think so?
Mr. JONES. I do not think so.
Senator FERGUSON. At least, you did not go to where these——
Mr. JONES. Certainly we didn't go to the Aldo.
Senator FERGUSON. You only went the one time there?
Mr. JONES. That is right.
Senator FERGUSON. Any other time did you take notes and give them the notes?
Mr. JONES. At one of these hearings? No.
Senator FERGUSON. That is the only 2 days when Budenz testified?
Mr. JONES. That is quite correct.
Senator FERGUSON. Now, the second day, did Lattimore know that you were going to take the notes before you took them?
Mr. JONES. I don't understand the question.
Senator FERGUSON. Did Lattimore know that you were coming back the second day to take the notes?
Mr. JONES. Oh, yes, sir.
Senator FERGUSON. Now, was Lattimore surprised when you came into Abe Fortas' office and had the notes on the Budenz hearing the day you went to eat at the restaurant?
Mr. JONES. He was not surprised, sir.
Senator FERGUSON. No. You had no doubt that he knew you were up here taking the notes?
Mr. JONES. Well, I am being asked to answer——
Senator FERGUSON. Well, was he surprised?
Mr. JONES. There is a little detail here.
Senator FERGUSON. All right. Give us the detail.
Mr. JONES. The detail is that the notes were delivered to his wife. Owen Lattimore was at that time very much preoccupied. He was sitting at a desk, a big lawyer's desk. I came into the room. I gave the notes to Mrs. Lattimore, sitting in a chair, sat down next to her, and talked to her about them. He was writing at a desk. So that is why I can't speak to that.
Senator FERGUSON. Did you not discuss the notes with him? Because he had to make his press release on your notes, did he not?
Mr. JONES. I don't know whether I did discuss them with him or not. I went over the notes in great detail with Mrs. Lattimore; I mean, so that she could understand my handwriting, any amplifications I could make. Now, whether I, as well as Mrs. Lattimore, explained those to Mr. Lattimore, I just don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he not prepare his statement from your notes?

Mr. JONES. Partially; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. So he knew you had made those notes here?

Mr. JONES. Surely. The only detail that I add here is that the man was receiving the assistance of a reportorial secretarial nature, and he might not focus his attention on the person who was doing it.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, you were there and talked to him. He knew you. You were a graduate student, and he had given you a fellowship. Is that not right?

Mr. JONES. Sure. He knew me.

Senator FERGUSON. Sure. Now, the next day, did he come personally and tell you to take the notes and bring them back to him?

Mr. JONES. I can't recall whether it was he or his wife who told me that.

Senator O'CONOR. Was it discussed that you were coming back the next day?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Senator O'CONOR. So he knew you were going to come back for that purpose?

Mr. JONES. Surely.

Senator FERGUSON. And you had no doubts that he knew that you were going to come back for that purpose?

Mr. JONES. I had no doubts, no, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. The second night did he prepare any release?

Mr. JONES. I prepared no release.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he?

Mr. JONES. He may have, but I don't remember that he did.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you go home with the Lattimores that night?

Mr. JONES. No; I took the train home.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you see Abe Fortas that night?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I didn't. I left early. I think if you look at your committee records, you will find the second day of the Budenz testimony did end early. And my little girl was having a birthday party, and she wanted me there, and so I just beat it right up. I didn't hang around. I left them in Washington. So I don't know who they saw.

Senator FERGUSON. And that is the last secretarial service you rendered to Lattimore in this case?

Mr. JONES. The last reportorial service; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. But you did help him, you and your wife, to set up these copies that were delivered of what he was going to say to the committee?

Mr. JONES. The mechanical work.

Senator FERGUSON. The mechanical work.

Mr. JONES. Sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. By "mechanical," do you mean mimeographing?

Mr. JONES. Actually—No, sir. Actually, I mean stapling, to be very precise there.

Mr. SOURWINE. The Senator asked a question about secretarial work. Did you, subsequent to this date of August 22, 1951, perform any secretarial work for Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; not secretarial.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you do any other kind of work?

Mr. JONES. Research; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. You have done that since?

Mr. JONES. Research; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. In connection with these hearings?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Research into what?

Mr. JONES. Oh, I looked up some things in the New York Times, I believe, in the library.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you examined or studied the committee hearings in connection with any work you have done for Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why did you pick the Aldo Cafe on that evening? Had you been there before?

Mr. JONES. Oh, years ago I had been there before.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was not a customary eating place of yours?

Mr. JONES. When I lived in Washington, it was not customary. Occasional, sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you been back there since that evening?

Mr. JONES. No; never.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, did you see Mrs. Lattimore here at these hearings on the 22d of August?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you see her here at the meeting of this committee on the 23d of August?

Mr. JONES. I can't recall, sir. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you see her here at these hearings on any other occasion?

Mr. JONES. No, sir. I haven't been here.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you see Mr. Carter here on any occasion other than the 22d? You did see him here on the 22d, I think you said.

Mr. JONES. The 22d and the 23d.

Mr. SOURWINE. You saw him here on both the 22d and the 23d?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, in answer to a previous question of Senator Ferguson's, I understood you to say that on the evening of the 22d, you had not "met the man," referring to Mr. Carter. Is that what you said?

Mr. JONES. That is not precisely what I said. There should be some clarification here, and I am very glad to make it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just a moment. Was the evening of the 22d the first occasion on which you met Mr. Carter?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; it was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you first meet him?

Mr. JONES. The noon of the 22d was the first occasion.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that at this hearing?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; it was not at this hearing. It was at Mr. Fortas' office. You see, during the noon recess I went over to Mr. Fortas' office.

Mr. SOURWINE. And met Mr. Carter there?

Mr. JONES. I met Mr. Carter there.

Mr. SOURWINE. And who introduced you to him?

Mr. JONES. I cannot recall whether it was Mr. or Mrs. Lattimore, one of them.

Mr. SOURWINE. Either Mr. or Mrs. Lattimore. That was noon on the 22d?

Mr. JONES. That was noon on the 22d.

Mr. SOURWINE. And then you and Mr. Carter both came back to this hearing in the afternoon, did you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; but not together.

Mr. SOURWINE. But not together. Then you both went back to Mr. Fortas' office?

Mr. JONES. Yes; but not together.

Mr. SOURWINE. And then you both came down here on the 23d. And did you see him at Mr. Fortas' office before the hearing at all?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I believe not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you at Mr. Fortas' office before the hearing on the 23d?

Mr. JONES. I don't think I went into the office; no sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then, after the hearing on the 23d, you and Mr. Carter both went back to Mr. Fortas' office?

Mr. JONES. For myself, I can give you a simple "yes."

Mr. SOURWINE. But not together?

Mr. JONES. My memory is not clear enough. If Mr. Carter did, it was unimportant, so I don't——

Mr. SOURWINE. And you don't know whether he did or not?

Mr. JONES. Under oath I wouldn't want to say precisely that he did.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know whether he was there?

Mr. JONES. He might have been. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. If he was there, he had to go back there?

Mr. JONES. Oh, sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. But at any rate, you didn't go there together?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you didn't leave together?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you leave before he did or did he leave before you did?

Mr. JONES. I can't answer that. My memory is not good enough.

Senator O'CONOR. If I can just clear one thing up, you stated that you were together with Mr. Carter at the noon recess on the 22d, and then the two of you came back again to the meeting, although you came back separately, and then you went back again to the office after the hearing that day.

Mr. JONES. That is quite correct, Senator.

Senator O'CONOR. And that Owen Lattimore was there both at noon and in the evening?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Where was he in the meantime? Where did he go in the meantime?

Mr. JONES. I have no idea.

Senator O'CONOR. Was there any discussion of that? Because he did not come down to the meeting here, did he?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; he didn't

Senator O'CONOR. Was not any comment made as to where he would go or what he would do in the meantime?

Mr. JONES. I think not.

Senator O'CONOR. Did you expect to see him when he returned subsequent to the afternoon session?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, sure.

Senator O'CONOR. How did you know you were going to meet him there? Did he say?

Mr. JONES. Not being a lawyer—Of course, I expected to meet one of the Lattimores there, somebody competent to take my notes. So the natural assumption would be that he would be there. I mean, there wouldn't be a thing that you would speculate on.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Jones, I was trying to get the facts here. Why did you not tell me about going back at noon to Lattimore's office and meeting Carter? Because you indicated here in your testimony that in the afternoon, when you went down there and saw him, that evening, you had not seen Carter before.

Mr. JONES. That was a mistake in recollection on my part, a failure of memory.

Senator FERGUSON. You understand, "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth"?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I do.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Did you go back there at noon?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I went back.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, who asked you to come there at noon?

Mr. JONES. Either Mr. or Mrs. Lattimore—oh, it was Mrs. Lattimore who asked me to come there at noon. I can answer that definitely.

Senator FERGUSON. And you and Carter and the two Lattimores talked in Abe Fortas' office at noon?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. There was not any doubt about that?

Mr. JONES. No doubt about that whatsoever.

Senator FERGUSON. And that is the first day, the evening of which you went to the restaurant?

Mr. JONES. Noon of the 22d.

Senator FERGUSON. Noon recess.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. No doubt about that.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You left your notes there with Lattimore and his wife?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Came back and took more notes?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And went back?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, is the story that you told us of going back in the evening a correct story? Or do you want to change it?

Mr. JONES. I would not like to change it, except that the first time I met E. C. Carter was at noon.

Senator FERGUSON. Instead of at night?

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. That is the only thing you want to change?

Mr. JONES. The only thing I want to change.

Senator FERGUSON. You do not want to change it about going to the hotel and picking up Carter?

Mr. JONES. That hotel testimony is to the best of my recollection.

Senator FERGUSON. That is an accurate description of it?

Mr. JONES. Certainly, sir. I regret I can't specify which of those two——

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever read what Owen Lattimore swore to under oath about these meetings?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I haven't read it in full.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you mean that between the time you were on the stand in executive session and the time you came here for this public session, you did not go back over that testimony or have your attention called to it?

Mr. JONES. No, sir. No; I didn't.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not mean that? Or you do mean that? I am not trying to confuse you. I mean, did you have that testimony called to your attention?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Sourwine, I can make this very clear. I have never reviewed the formal transcript. The formal transcripts are not available for a long, long time afterward.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you been told what Mr. Lattimore testified to?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I have been told a small section of it.

Senator O'CONOR. By whom?

Mr. JONES. By Mr. Lattimore.

Senator O'CONOR. In other words, he, after the hearings, repeated to you what his testimony had been?

Mr. JONES. No; he didn't. He just read to me a small section where he had mentioned my name before this committee. That is all.

Senator O'CONOR. What was the purpose of his reading to you his formal testimony in this hearing?

Mr. JONES. Just simply he wanted to get my recollection of it.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, was he trying to coach you or to induce you to say things that were in accordance with his testimony?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. What was his reason for reading you his testimony, then?

Mr. JONES. My name had been mentioned, and he knew that I had received a subpena.

Senator O'CONOR. Oh. It was after you got the subpena that he came to you with his testimony?

Mr. JONES. He didn't come to me. I went to him.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, regardless of the circumstances, when you two met, he then had a copy of his testimony?

Mr. JONES. Yes; he had the copy of the testimony.

Senator O'CONOR. And he read to you the exact version that he had given?

Mr. JONES. Not the full testimony.

Senator O'CONOR. But the part that affected you?

Mr. JONES. Where my name was mentioned there, and, oh, a half dozen questions or answers in that section of the testimony.

Senator O'CONOR. And what explanation did he make for taking that unusual course to read to you from his sworn testimony?

Mr. JONES. He wanted me to know that my name had been mentioned in this testimony.

Senator O'CONOR. Could he not have done that without reading the verbatim testimony?

Mr. JONES. As a matter of fact, I don't think he did read it aloud to me. I think he handed it to me.

Senator O'CONOR. He handed it to you. So that he did make it available to you?

Mr. JONES. Indicating where in the testimony it was. And I don't even know whether it was he. I think it was, again, the missis that handed it to me.

Senator O'CONOR. Was Owen Lattimore present?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I think he was in the house.

Senator O'CONOR. So that Owen Lattimore did know that you were actually refreshing your recollection from his testimony, his sworn testimony in the hearing?

Mr. JONES. In a limited sense; yes. The only reason I say a "limited sense" is that I haven't read the whole testimony.

Senator O'CONOR. Is it not a fact that you rehearsed it so that your two stories would coincide?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. That is what it seems to us, or seems to me. Because I cannot understand why it would be necessary, if you are only anxious to tell the truth and to give your best recollection, for Lattimore to take the unusual step of virtually coaching you by reading or allowing you to read from his testimony.

Mr. JONES. Oh, Senator, I can straighten you out on that.

Senator O'CONOR. Suppose you do, because it is a very important thing, and it is a very unusual thing.

Mr. JONES. I can straighten you out on that very easily. I had no idea why I was called before this committee. That is the simple truth.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, when were you called?

Mr. JONES. Oh, Thursday or Friday.

Senator FERGUSON. Of last week?

Mr. JONES. Last week. That is right.

Senator O'CONOR. Go ahead, now. You said you can straighten me out. You have not done so yet.

Mr. JONES. Well, the subpena read that I was to come down here and tell what I knew about the IPR. All right. I knew it was a Lattimore hearing. The natural thing to do would be to go to Mr. Lattimore. He was available. He was in the same city. And ask him, "What does this mean?"

Senator FERGUSON. Now, is that the first Lattimore had ever told you that your name was mentioned?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes, sir. That was the first occasion I had heard that my name was mentioned in that testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore, neither one, ever checked up with you to find out if you were the person who was with them in the Aldo Cafe on the night of August 22? Is that what you are testifying here?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. They never did come and check with you to see if you were with them?

Mr. JONES. That is correct, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Until after you had been subpenaed here? Are you sure about that now?

Mr. JONES. I am not a hundred percent sure, but I think so; yes. I think so.

Senator O'CONOR. Counsel, I do not want to be discourteous. You indicated you wanted to say something.

Mr. FANELLI. I just wanted to indicate that there was a question Mr. Sourwine asked before which remains unanswered, which I think got lost in the discussion, and I would like to put it again. He asked, if I understood him correctly, whether Lattimore's testimony on this point was rehearsed or gone over in any way.

Mr. SOURWINE. No, my question was whether it had been called to his attention, or whether he had seen it or had it called to his attention, between the time he was in executive session and when he came back. I had not forgotten the question.

Mr. FANELLI. I thought you might have, and I want him to answer it.

Mr. JONES. What was it?

Mr. FANELLI. He still doesn't get it.

Mr. SOURWINE. After we were through with the executive session this morning, did you thereafter refer to Mr. Lattimore's testimony, or did anyone talk to you about it, or tell you what Mr. Lattimore had testified, either actually word for word, or in substance?

Mr. JONES. Between 11 o'clock this morning and 4 o'clock this afternoon? No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was the question.

Senator FERGUSON. How many pages of testimony did you see after you got the subpena?

Mr. JONES. At most three, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Three or four?

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. In your opinion, do you think Owen Lattimore told the truth about your meeting down here and going to the restaurant?

Mr. JONES. It is a very inadequate description.

Senator FERGUSON. Inadequate? I will say you do not exaggerate on that. You know that he did not tell the truth, do you not?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I don't know that.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. Now, you look at it, and you tell us whether or not in your opinion Owen Lattimore told the truth about that meeting. [Handing.]

Mr. Chairman, I think here is a case that indicates clearly that witnesses before this committee have not told the truth.

Mr. FANELLI. Senator, you are not speaking to Mr. Jones.

Senator FERGUSON. I am asking him now. I want him to look at this.

Mr. JONES. Here is something in testimony that just makes no sense to me. It says:

> Mr. SOURWINE. I am just trying to find out what you know, Mr. Lattimore.
> Mr. LATTIMORE. No, I don't remember at all.

Senator FERGUSON. That is not the truth, is it?

Mr. JONES. That is just plain meaningless, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. But it was not the truth. Because you had a meeting. You had gone down there at noon and delivered your notes to him. You had gone at night. He got out a press release. You had gone to lunch, or dinner. The next day you took notes for him.

And he comes in here and tells us he does not remember a thing and does not know anything about it.

Mr. JONES. Well, sir, I don't know how much this "I don't remember at all" covers.

Senator FERGUSON. Read it. You must have read that last Friday or Saturday. Why, he did not even remember your name. It took him another day to get him back here to remember your name.

Mr. JONES. Well, sir, I will say this is neither truth nor a lie.

Senator FERGUSON. What is it?

Mr. JONES. It is just inadequate, meaningless testimony.

Senator FERGUSON. I ask you, if a man is sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, whether or not that is true.

Mr. JONES. This just indicates a confusion and a failure of memory. That is what it indicates to me.

Senator O'CONOR. On what did you base your answer to Senator Ferguson that, in your opinion, Owen Lattimore's description of this particular episode was inadequate?

Mr. JONES. Because of the confusion here.

Senator FERGUSON. Confusion? It is not confusion. Let me read something, here. The question: "I am just trying to find out what you know, Mr. Lattimore." They were talking then about:

"He is a graduate student at Johns Hopkins." That is you?

Mr. JONES. That is me.

Senator FERGUSON. "And I am one of the supervisors of his thesis work." That is referring to you?

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. "Did he come over to Washington from Johns Hopkins with you on that day?" And the answer is: "No, I don't believe he did."

There was not any doubt that you did not come over with him.

Mr. JONES. Sir, I was doing reportorial work. Why should he take interest in me, when he has his full attention focused——

Senator FERGUSON. Answer my questions for a little while. Did you come over with him on that day?

Mr. JONES. No; I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. This is his answer: "No; I don't believe he did. I believe we must have run into him here."

Is that a truthful answer? Why, you were there to meet them down at the place. Now he tells us: "I believe we must have run into him here." Is that a truthful answer?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I would like permission to consult.

Mr. FANELLI. No. There is no privilege. Give him your honest recollection.

Mr. JONES. That is an inadequate answer, certainly inadequate.

Senator O'CONOR. It is a misleading answer, is it not? Because in the one case he gave the committee to understand that his meeting with you was accidental. He said, "run into him." And your testimony is that you came over by appointment and design. The two things are contradictory. Is that not true?

Mr. JONES Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. I am going to read you the next:

Mr. SOURWINE. I am just trying to find out what you know, Mr. Lattimore.
Mr. LATTIMORE. No; I don't remember at all.

You do not think that is a truthful answer, do you?

Mr. JONES. I have no way of judging it, sir. It is a matter of opinion. I don't know how well Owen Lattimore can remember or forget. That is another man.

Senator FERGUSON. The next question: "Do you know how he happened to be invited to that meeting?" The answer: "No. I presume we just ran into each other and went to dinner together."

Is that a truthful statement? Or are you telling the truth now? Which is true?

Mr. JONES. That statement is inaccurate. That is all.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, it is not true, is it?

Mr. JONES. Not the precise truth, but it is not a willful lie, either.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, is yours a willful lie, or is this a willful lie?

Mr. JONES. Mine is the truth.

Senator FERGUSON. Yours is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, Mr. Jones, you are giving us, to the best of your knowledge an accurate, detailed description of what happened that day, and you are not withholding anything, and you are giving the facts?

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Senator O'CONOR. Now, obviously there is a willful omission in his statement, is there not, of the most important happening of that day of your meeting. Your very purpose in being over here was to carry out your mission, to wit, to get the notes together on which he could base his press release. And he has omitted to state that entirely, or even to refer to it. Is that not correct?

Mr. JONES. He has omitted it, but I have no way of judging whether it was willful or not.

Senator O'CONOR. Well, you describe it as inaccurate, do you not?

Mr. JONES. It is imprecise, yes, inaccurate.

Senator FERGUSON. Now listen to another question:

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think it was long enough for a casual meeting and then just a suggestion to go to eat?

Mr. LATTIMORE. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know where you casually met?

Mr. LATTIMORE. Well, we went to the hotel that Mr. Carter was staying at, where we met Mr. Jones. I don't remember.

Now, that certainly is not the truth, if you are telling the truth.

Mr. JONES. That is plainly inaccurate.

Senator FERGUSON. Plainly inaccurate?

Mr. JONES. Plainly inaccurate. And, Senator, it indicates to me a failure of memory.

Senator FERGUSON. I am going to suggest and ask that this testimony be immediately sent to the Attorney General.

Senator O'CONOR. I agree with you, Senator Ferguson.

Senator FERGUSON. Because I think if there were ever flagrant untruths in a hearing, that is indicated here.

Senator O'CONOR. It does call for study and consideration, I think, because the two statements are diametrically opposed to each other, yours and his. His indicates that there was a casual chance happening, not by design or by prearrangement. Yours is that there was a planned meeting or a planned assignment which you carried through from beginning to end.

Mr. SOURWINE. A series of meetings.

Senator FERGUSON. And we cannot function as a committee if we have to take statements like we have in this record on this point.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, there is another statement this witness made which I would like to inquire about, if the Chair will indulge me.

Senator O'CONOR. Go ahead.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember stating a moment ago, and I am not sure if I heard you accurately: "I don't know how well Owen Lattimore can remember or forget"?

Mr. JONES. Under these circumstances, yes; under these particular circumstances.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, you know Mr. Lattimore fairly well, don't you?

Mr. JONES. Not with intimacy. That is a professional——

Mr. SOURWINE. I am not asking you to draw a conclusion. I am going to ask you a series of questions. You don't have to draw one conclusion.

You know him fairly well, don't you?

Mr. JONES. Fairly well; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. How long have you known him?

Mr. JONES. Since May 1949.

Mr. SOURWINE. During how many semesters have you attended lecture courses that he has given?

Mr. JONES. Oh, four.

Mr. SOURWINE. During how many semesters have you attended seminars that he has conducted?

Mr. JONES. Four.

Mr. SOURWINE. During how many months, approximately, have you performed secretarial or research services for him?

Mr. JONES. Oh, about 9 months, I would say.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, is there any question about the fact that you respect Mr. Lattimore's intellect?

Mr. JONES. None whatsoever.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is there any question about the fact that you look up to him?

Mr. JONES. I look up to him as a scholar; yes, sir. As a scholar.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, does that jibe with the statement: "I don't know how well Owen Lattimore can remember or forget"?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; it does. Because an academic matter is very different from a matter of daily life.

Mr. SOURWINE. Haven't you heard Mr. Lattimore give lectures for relatively sustained periods of time, giving names, dates, facts, circumstances, knowing that he was speaking accurately and from memory?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, doesn't he have a reputation with his students for having an unusually good memory?

Mr. JONES. Oh, not superior to others——

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what Mr. Lattimore's reputation among his students is for memory?

Mr. JONES. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know?

Mr. JONES. Not precisely.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what Mr. Lattimore's reputation is among his students for being able to forget?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you don't know how well he can remember. And you don't know how well he can forget.

Mr. JONES. No. I can't give any opinion on Mr. Lattimore's whole mind.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Jones, did I understand you to say before that you were the supervisor of thesis work? Did you say that?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. What was said as to any work that you had in regard to——

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. Lattimore was merely one of the supervisors of my dissertation. That is all.

Senator O'CONOR. I misunderstood you, and I am just trying to get it straightened out, really. Had you been doing any supervisory work for him in the class work there?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. I want to get it straight.

Mr. JONES. No; it was the other way around.

Mr. SOURWINE. In your opinion, Mr. Jones, is Mr. Lattimore's memory as good as yours?

Mr. JONES. That is a question of opinion, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is what I am asking you for.

Mr. JONES. Yes, his memory is as good as mine.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't think you have a better memory than Owen Lattimore?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You haven't any question about the clearness with which you remember these facts and details that you have testified to, have you?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Might I ask: Do you want to make any changes in your testimony that you have given here?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. It is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth?

Mr. JONES. To the best of my ability; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, whatever you are doing here, you are doing willfully, with knowledge.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that not right?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You are testifying willfully?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, where were you born?

Mr. JONES. I was born in New York City.

Mr. MORRIS. From what schools have you graduated?

Mr. JONES. Oh, I graduated from a preparatory school called Hedgehill, Carmel Hill, N. Y., and then I went to the University of Chicago and graduated from there in 1938. I received a master's degree from the University of Maryland in 1949.

Mr. MORRIS. You were in the infantry during the war, were you not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, did you work as a newspaper reporter at any time?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. For what newspapers?

Mr. JONES. The Daytona Beach News-Journal and the Daytona Beach Sun-Record.

Mr. MORRIS. Any other newspapers?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you told us now all the newspapers for which you have worked?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; all the newspapers for which I have worked.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever live in Chicago?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you work for any newspapers in Chicago?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with a publication in Chicago called the Midwest Record?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; I have heard of it.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the Midwest Record?

Mr. JONES. Well, to the best of my recollection, it was a little paper put out there for a few years. I have no very precise memory of it.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you received any other grants or fellowships other than the one you told us about today?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, do you know Philip Keeney and Mary Jane Keeney?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. When have you last seen them?

Mr. JONES. I think I saw them somewhere in New York. I ran into them in New York last year sometime. But I haven't seen them in a long time.

Mr. MORRIS. How frequently had you seen them prior to that time?

Mr. JONES. About a dozen times; no more.

Mr. MORRIS. They are not close friends of yours?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that either Mr. or Mrs. Keeney either is now or was at any time a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; I have no reason to believe that.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you ever known any Communists?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer that question.

Senator FERGUSON. What is the date that you used? January 1, 1942?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. After that date have you known any Communists?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You are positive of that?

Mr. JONES. I am positive of that; nobody I knew to be a Communist; no, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. You did know Mary Jane Keeney after that time?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you any reason to believe that Mary Jane Keeney is a Communist?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Or has been a Communist at any time since January 1, 1942?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, have you performed any act that is overtly anti-Communist that you would like to let this committee know about?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir, I have. In speaking before seminars I have been extremely critical of Soviet Russia.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, is there anything of record that you can give this committee by way of——

Mr. JONES. Unhappily, there is no printed record; no.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever been to the Federal Bureau of Investigation with facts about subversive activity at any time?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. You have never gone to the FBI?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever gone to any other Government agency to give them facts or information that you may have acquired in your experience?

Mr. JONES. No. sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Jones, right in that connection, without asking you to reveal anything that happened, as to your membership, if such there was, between 1936 and 1942, after 1942 did you ever give to the authorities the benefit of any experience that you had prior to 1942 that might have been helpful to this country in regard to the anti-Communist effort?

Mr. JONES. No. sir.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you first learn who Louis Budenz was?

Mr. JONES. Oh, I had heard of him back in the thirties.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, you knew him as a Communist?

Mr. JONES. I never knew the man. I knew he was a Communist; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. You knew he was a Communist. Now, how do you account for Mrs. Lattimore and Owen Lattimore in the afternoon session asking you to come up here and take notes on the testimony of a Communist, one whom you knew as a Communist, and as this record rather clearly indicates was a Communist, and when you had been a Communist at one time—asking you to come, of all people, and take those notes? Was it because Budenz knew you?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You knew Budenz?

Mr. JONES. I didn't. I have never met the man, to the best of my recollection. Never met him.

Senator FERGUSON. But you knew him, to see him?

Mr. JONES. From the press I knew who he was; from the press.

Senator FERGUSON. And you knew he had been a Communist. He is a confessed Communist. Is not that right?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And you, an ex-Communist, coming and taking the notes and taking them back to Lattimore. How do you account for that? Is it just a coincidence?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer that question.

Senator FERGUSON. On the ground that it may tend to incriminate you? Have you ever heard of the statute of limitations?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What is that?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, might I request respectfully that the witness be instructed to answer the question that Senator Ferguson just asked, and which he refused to answer?

Senator O'CONOR. I will ask the reporter to read the question.

(The reporter read the question, as requested.)

Senator O'CONOR. Having consulted with counsel, will you answer the question?

Mr. JONES. I respectfully decline to answer the question.

Senator O'CONOR. The Chair instructs you to answer, and you still persist in your declination?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You know what the statute of limitations means, that a person cannot be prosecuted after a certain number of years. Do you know that?

Mr. JONES. I understand that; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And is it not true that the date that you refused to answer on, in 1942, is a longer period than the statute of limitations?

Mr. JONES. I don't know, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you ask counsel?

(Mr. Jones confers with his counsel.)

Mr. FANELLI. This is a fact, now. It is not a matter of privilege.

Senator FERGUSON. He says he does not know, and I want him to ask you.

Mr. FANELLI. I don't know that there is any statute of limitations on the 1940 statute. You may answer that you don't know and counsel has told you he doesn't know.

Senator FERGUSON. If you do not know, Counsel, that is all right.

Mr. FANELLI. I know of none that applies to that statute.

Senator FERGUSON. Is not the general attitude one that covers it?

Mr. FANELLI. It is not at all clear. The point has never arisen, Senator. At least that is my best opinion and research on the subject, and I have had to advise him in the light of that.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, did you ever tell Owen Lattimore that you had been associated in any way with the Communist Party?

Mr. JONES. I respectfully decline to answer that question.

Mr. MORRIS. I am not asking you now if you ever had been associated in any way with the Communist Party, but did you ever tell Owen Lattimore that you had been?

Mr. JONES. I will still respectfully decline to answer that question?

Mr. SOURWINE. On the grounds that it might incriminate you, Mr. Jones?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you are asserting to this committee, through that claim of privilege, that if you answered that question truthfully, it might incriminate you?

Mr. JONES Yes, sir.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Jones, without telling us what the precise conversation might have been, if such a conversation had been held, did you ever discuss with him any possible membership that you may have had? We do not want what the answer was or what the exact information was that you conveyed to him. But was that a matter of discussion between you two?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Jones, were you a member of the American Student Union?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer.

Senator FERGUSON. On the ground that it would tend to incriminate you? You see, if you do not put that in, that is not sufficient.

Mr. JONES. On the grounds that it might tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether the American Student Union is or was a Communist organization?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer that question.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you ever a member of the John Reed branch of the Young Communist League?

Mr. JONES. Sir, I respectfully decline to answer that question.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, let us get this record straight. When you say that, do you mean that you refuse to answer on the grounds of the Constitution giving you the protection if it would tend to incriminate you?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. So that the record is clear—you just say you refuse to answer that question. And that is not a sufficient claim of privilege.

Senator O'CONOR. We want to understand that, so as to avoid unnecessary repetition. When you say that you refuse to answer, is that what you mean?

Mr. JONES. When I say that, may it be so understood?

Mr. FANELLI. That is his ground. He is not being disrespectful.

Senator FERGUSON. I do not want to keep interrupting him, but the record is not clear on that point.

Mr. SOURWINE. There might be a circumstance in the record or hereafter in which the witness would decline to answer for any other reason, so I think that should be made clear.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you in Europe in 1935, Mr. Jones?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have any contact in Europe in 1935 with any member of the Communist Party of any country?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions of this witness.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have one question. Perhaps it will lead to one or two more.

Have you at any time in the last 10 years been subject to Communist discipline?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you at any time in the past 10 years knowingly and voluntarily collaborated or cooperated with members of the Communist Party for the attainment of Communist objectives or purposes.

Mr. JONES. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. We have Mrs. Jones here, and I can make it a very short hearing, if you want to finish with this case today.

Senator O'CONOR. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Jones, will you give your name and address to to the reporter?

Mrs. JONES. I am Mrs. Catesby T. Jones.

Senator FERGUSON. You have been sworn?

Mr. FANELLI. They were both sworn.

Senator O'CONOR. Yes. I recall that.

Mrs. Jones, will you just speak out loud, so that the reporter can hear you?

Mr. MORRIS. What is your maiden name?

Mrs. JONES. Alice Ratcliffe Gernett.

Mr. MORRIS. Gernett?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Where were you born?

Mrs. JONES. Chicago, Ill.

Mr. MORRIS. What schools have you attended?

Mrs. JONES. You mean grammar school and high school?

Mrs. MORRIS. Well, high school.

Mrs. JONES. Melrose High School, Massachusetts.

Mr. MORRIS. What college?

Mrs. JONES. Radcliffe College.

Mr. MORRIS. What year did you graduate?

Mrs. JONES. 1933.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever do any graduate work?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Where did you do your graduate work?

Mrs. JONES. Columbia University Library School.

Mr. MORRIS. In what year?

Mrs. JONES. Class of 1939, 1938–39.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Have you assisted Owen Lattimore in any way in connection with a statement he may have issued in connection with his testimony before this committee?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What did you do for Mr. Lattimore?

Mrs. JONES. I helped assemble and staple a 50-page statement. That was before this committee? The 50-page statement was before this committee?

Mr. MORRIS. That is within the last month?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And what else did you do for Mr. Lattimore?

Mrs. JONES. I found some mistakes in spelling and helped correct them.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Now, did you assist Mr. Jones in connection with the effort that he made on behalf of Mr. Lattimore back in August?

Mrs. JONES. You mean taking notes? No.

Mr. MORRIS. And is it your testimony that they were the only acts that you performed for Mr. Lattimore in connection with his testimony before this committee?

Mrs. JONES. No; I think Mrs. Lattimore might have asked me to get a book or return a book or look up a date in the newspaper, or something like that, some kind of library research or something. But I did one or two errands, just little dirty jobs it would take time to do—or I don't mean dirty.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you live close to the Lattimores?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How close?

Mrs. JONES. About—I think about 3 miles.

Senator O'CONOR. Your address is 5413 Falls Road Terrace in Baltimore?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you work?

Mrs. JONES. Not outside the home.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no reason to come in contact with Mrs. Lattimore, then, in your normal activities, do you?

Mrs. JONES. My normal activity is as the wife of a graduate student.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does that take you to the campus frequently?

Mrs. JONES. To return books perhaps.

Mr. SOURWINE. When Mrs. Lattimore asked you to do these little favors, would she do that by telephone?

Mrs. JONES. She might do it by phone, or she might——

Mr. SOURWINE. She would not come to see you for that purpose?

Mrs. JONES. Yes; I believe she telephoned me one time and asked me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever telephone her and ask if "there is anything I can do today"?

Mrs. JONES. I believe I have.

Mr. SOURWINE. On more than one instance?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you lived 3 miles away?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you compensated for these little favors?

Mrs. JONES. No. May I say anything more?

Senator O'CONOR. Yes, indeed, if you wish to.

Mrs. JONES. I have a little girl, who likes to take a ride in the country. And she would like to go with me on such a ride.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Jones, have you been married before?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. To whom were you married?

Mrs. JONES. Robert Leroy McLean.

Mr. MORRIS. Where is he now?

Mrs. JONES. He was killed in service, overseas.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you ever a member of the Library of Congress unit of the Communist Party?

Mrs. JONES. I decline to answer on the grounds of the first and fifth amendments and any other constitutional protection that might be available to me.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know a man named David Wahl, W-a-h-l?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What were your associations with Mr. Wahl?

Mrs. JONES. He was an employee of the Library of Congress when I was.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you work for the Government outside of the Library of Congress?

Mrs. JONES. Yes; I did.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you belong to any other unit of the Communist Party while you were employed as an employee of the United States Government other than the one in the Library of Congress?

Mrs. JONES. When?

Senator FERGUSON. At any time. While you worked for the United States Government?

Mrs. JONES. For the last 10 years, I have not been a member of the Communist Party or had any Communist connections or associations or activities. And beyond that, I respectfully decline to answer on the same grounds.

Senator FERGUSON. My question was, while you worked for the Government. You had several appointments with the Government. At any time were you a member of any unit of the Communist Party?

Mrs. JONES. For the last 10 years I was never a member of any unit of the Communist Party.

Senator FERGUSON. Prior to that time?

Mrs. JONES. Prior to that time I respectfully decline to answer on the grounds previously stated.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your last date of employment with the Federal Government?

Mrs. JONES. 1947.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. What position did you have at that time?

Mrs. JONES. Overseas documentation specialist.

Mr. MORRIS. With what branch?

Mrs. JONES. The Libraries and Institutes. I have forgotten the exact name.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. How long have you held that position?

Mrs. JONES. For about 2 years.

Mr. MORRIS. Whom did you give as a reference for that position?

Mrs. JONES. I don't remember.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever give David Wahl as a reference?

Mrs. JONES. I don't remember that.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you remember H. Bowen Smith?

Mrs. JONES. Yes; he was a supervisor of mine at one time.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Did you ever give the name of Philip O. Keeney as a reference?

Mrs. JONES. He was my supervisor. I might have given him in that connection.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever give the name of Edward Stone as a reference?

Mrs. JONES. I believe I did. He was my supervisor for a while.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you last see Mary Jane Keeney?

Mrs. JONES. I think it must have been 2 or 3 years ago.

Mr. MORRIS. Where did you see her then?

Mrs. JONES. In New York.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the occasion of your seeing her at that time?

Mrs. JONES. I was in New York for Christmas.

Mr. MORRIS. And you looked her up?

Mrs. JONES. I believe I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Or did she look you up?

Mrs. JONES. I believe I looked her up.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you work for the War Department in February 1941?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you also work for the Office of War Information?
Mrs. JONES. Yes.
Mr. MORRIS. What position did you hold there?
Mrs. JONES. In the Office of War Information, I was a P–1, and I have forgotten my exact title.
Mr. MORRIS. I mean, did you work in Far Eastern Affairs?
Mrs. JONES. No; not Far Eastern.
Mr. MORRIS. You also worked in the Bureau of Economic Warfare?
Mrs. JONES. The Board of Economic Warfare.
Mr. MORRIS. The Board of Economic Warfare.
Mrs. JONES. Yes.
Mr. MORRIS. Did you subsequently work for the State Department?
Mrs. JONES. Yes.
Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever work for OSS?
Mrs. JONES. No.
Mr. MORRIS. Now, at any time, in applying for various positions, did you indicate that you had been at any time a member of the Communist Party or any organization dedicated to the overthrow of the Government by force and violence?
Mrs. JONES. No.
Senator FERGUSON. When did you work for the State Department?
Mrs. JONES. From September 4, 1945, to June 30, 1947.
Mr. MORRIS. What were your duties in the State Department?
Mrs. JONES. When I first went over there, I was hired individually as an adviser on libraries.
Mr. MORRIS. I see. Who hired you?
Mrs. JONES. A man by the name of Worvill. I mean, he was the supervisor, but then there was a personnel man that interviewed me first. And I have forgotten his name, but I might remember it later.
Mr. MORRIS. Whom did you give as references?
Mrs. JONES. I don't remember, but I suppose I gave the persons who had been my supervisors previously. I mean, I should think I would have done that.
Senator O'CONOR. Mrs. Jones, might I ask you if at any time during your relationships with either Mr. or Mrs. Lattimore, you discussed with them any possible membership you had either in the Communist Party or in any of its affiliated organizations?
Mrs. JONES. No. That is a very long question, but it is "No."
Mr. MORRIS. Were you a member of the Washington Bookshop Association of Washington?
Mrs. JONES. I belonged to the Washington Cooperative Book Shop.
Mr. MORRIS. Were you a member of the League of Women Shoppers?
Mrs. JONES. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Is there such an organization as the Washington Bookshop Association, so far as you know?
Mrs. JONES. I am not familiar with that title.
Mr. SOURWINE. You never belonged to such an organization?
Mrs. JONES. I don't remember any such title as that.
Mr. SOURWINE. You never belonged to such an organization, did you?
Mrs. JONES. My experience is of paying $2 to the Washington Cooperative Book Shop, with the idea of buying books at a discount.
Mr. SOURWINE. I am asking you now about——

Mrs. JONES. Now, I may be wrong, or you may be wrong about the wording. Or I shouldn't say you may be wrong. That other designation may be at variance.

Mr. SOURWINE. Consider the possibility that there is more than one organization with the words "book shop" in it. I am asking you if you ever belonged to an organization called the Washington Book Shop Association?

Mrs. JONES. Well, I would have to say I may have. Do you understand me? You do understand me, don't you?

Mr. SOURWINE. I am not sure that I do, but perhaps I do.

Mrs. JONES. Well, I believe that I belonged to the Washington Cooperative Book Shop.

Mr. SOURWINE. We will let that stand. Did you also belong to an organization called the Washington Cooperative Book Shop?

Mr. FANELLI. Did you belong to one organization, or two?

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Fanelli, if you don't mind, let me ask the questions, please.

Mrs. JONES. I would have to say I don't know, because I am not sure what you mean by the Book Shop Association.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think it is possible that you belong to more than one organization having the words "book shop" in its name?

Mrs. JONES. No; I don't think that is possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you stating that you never belonged to more than one organization having the words "book shop" in its name?

Mrs. JONES. That is my belief.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is all I am trying to ask.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you ever secretary of local 28 of the United Federal Workers of America?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. For how long did you act as secretary of local 28 of the United Federal Workers of America?

Mrs. JONES. I don't remember, but it might have been about a year.

Senator FERGUSON. And when was it?

Mrs. JONES. It must have been in 1937–38.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever tell Mr. or Mrs. Lattimore that you had been the secretary of local 28 of the United Federal Workers of America?

Mrs. JONES. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever relate to them that you were connected with that union in any way?

Mrs. JONES. With the whole union?

Mr. MORRIS. Well, the Federal Workers of America, Local 28.

Mrs. JONES. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were Mr. and Mrs. Keeney, Mary Jane Keeney and her husband, friends of yourself and your husband?

Mrs. JONES. That is a double question.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mrs. JONES. I mean, they were friends of mine.

Mr. SOURWINE. But not of your husand? Do you mean, there was no social intercourse between the two families.

Mrs. JONES. There was the slightest social intercourse.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did visit once or twice?

Mrs. JONES. Once or twice.

Mr. SOURWINE. I note that both you and your husband remembered the last occasion of your meeting, which apparently was in New York some years ago.

Mrs. JONES. Excuse me. Will you repeat that statement? Because I am not sure that I understand the same thing you do.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, it is immaterial. I will start again.

You have stated your recollection of your last meeting with the Keeneys.

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, do you know that your husband has also stated his recollection of the last meeting with the Keeneys?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, would you say Mary Jane Keeney was your friend?

Mrs. JONES. Was? Has been? Is? I haven't kept up with her.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was she your friend?

Mrs. JONES. I believe she was my friend.

Mr. SOURWINE. You think she may still be your friend?

Mrs. JONES. Will you define "friend"?

Senator FERGUSON. Suppose you define it.

Mrs. JONES. To me a friend can be somebody that you go around with, or can be someone who is not an enemy. I mean, to say I used to know her, when I used to work in Washington—I haven't seen her for ages.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you sufficiently interested to know that she had worked for the United Nations?

Mrs. JONES. I read that in the paper.

Mr. SOURWINE. What you read in the paper was that she had been fired from the United Nations, wasn't it?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And did you know why she was fired from the United Nations?

Mrs. JONES. I don't believe that the reason was given. I think it just said she was fired.

Mr. SOURWINE. You didn't note in the paper why?

Mrs. JONES. I believe it was an administrative firing of some sort. I mean, it was a sort of a privileged firing or something. It wasn't detailed.

Mr. SOURWINE. I don't believe Mr. Catesby Jones has been formally excused yet.

Could I address a question to him at this time?

Mr. Catesby Jones?

Senator O'CONOR. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Jones, do you remember reading the newspaper accounts of the firing of Mary Jane Keeney by the United Nations?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, you are a former newspaper man, and perhaps you read newspaper stories carefully. Do you remember anything in those stories about why she was fired?

Mr. JONES. I am very sorry, sir. I don't remember the exact reason. Under oath, I just can't venture something out of my failure to remember the reason. I just don't remember the reason.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Jones, do you know that the United Federal Workers of America has now become the United Public Workers?

Mrs. JONES. Yes; I know that.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any reason to believe that that is a union controlled by the Communist Party?

Mrs. JONES. I will have to give a separated answer. I have not kept up with that union for some years, so I don't know what is going on now. To my knowledge, when I did know anything about it—to my knowledge, it was—now, what was your question again?

Mr. MORRIS. Controlled by the Communist Party.

Mrs. JONES. To my knowledge, it was not so controlled.

Senator FERGUSON. Was it influenced?

Mrs. JONES. To my knowledge, I can't say. I mean, I don't know whether it was influenced or not.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that an answer you have given to this committee in good faith?

Mrs. JONES. I don't know how broad you mean "influence." I mean, if somebody died, it influences the whole community.

Senator FERGUSON. Was there any influence?

Mrs. JONES. Influence in the sense of predominant influence, not to my knowledge.

Mr. SOURWINE. The question was originally: Do you have any reason to believe that this union is a Communist union.

Mrs. JONES. Is a Communist union? Not to my knowledge.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any reason to believe it is a Communist-dominated union?

Mrs. JONES. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know it was expelled by the CIO for Communist control?

Mrs. JONES. The United Public Workers of America? I did not know that.

Can you tell me when? I am just curious.

Mr. MORRIS. I don't know. I am just asking if you knew that.

I have no other questions, Mr. Chairman. I would like to say this.

We had subpenaed here today Robert T. Miller, formerly of the State Department, who has been named as a Communist in our hearings, and we had subpenaed him to give him an opportunity to affirm or deny the allegation made. We received today from Robert T. Miller the following telegram:

Senator PAT MCCARRAN,
Senate Internal Security Subcommittee Senate Judiciary Committee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Informed by my wife that subpena left at my home during my absence calling for my appearance Wednesday. Respectfully request either postponement or new subpena.

ROBERT T. MILLER.

I would like to call your attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that that telegram does indicate that Mr. Miller has notice of the fact that the committee wanted his appearance here today.

Senator O'CONOR. Very well.

Senator FERGUSON. Might I just ask one question of Mrs. Jones?

Did you know anything about the fact that your husband was coming down here on the 22d and 23d of last August at the Budenz testimony?

Mrs. JONES. Will you repeat that question?

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know anything about the fact that your husband was coming down here to take notes or to be present at the Budenz testimony before this committee?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you learn that?

Mrs. JONES. When did I learn what? That he was going to come?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mrs. JONES. I don't remember, but I suppose it would be the day before. I suppose. I just don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not come down with him?

Mrs. JONES. No.

Senator FERGUSON. You do not know anything about the conversation he had with Mr. Lattimore or Mrs. Lattimore about coming down.

Mrs. JONES. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know anything about the work that he did here, the making of notes and taking them there at noon and again in the evening and going to the restaurant?

Mrs. JONES. Not of my knowledge. I mean, I have heard what has gone on today.

Senator FERGUSON. But I mean prior to today, you did not hear about it?

Mrs. JONES. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know that your husband had read the minutes of the hearing last Friday or Saturday?

Mrs. JONES. The hearing last Friday or Saturday? Read that; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. That we had given him the minutes of the hearings last Friday and Saturday and that he read it?

Mrs. JONES. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he make any comments about the testimony that Lattimore had given, about what took place?

Mr. JONES. He must have said something, but I don't remember what he said.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, do you recall at all?

Mrs. JONES. He said, "This must be why they subpenaed me."

Mr. JONES. I did say that.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that about what you said?

Mr. JONES. That is about what I said.

Senator O'CONOR. With that, we will suspend.

The hearing will be adjourned.

(Whereupon, at 6:40 p. m., Wednesday, April 2, 1952, the hearing was recessed, subject to the call of the Chair.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to call, at 2:20 p. m., in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Willis Smith presiding.

Present: Senator Smith (North Carolina).

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

Senator SMITH. Are you ready to proceed, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, Senator.

Senator SMITH. With whom?

Mr. MORRIS. Robert T. Miller.

Senator SMITH. Will you stand up and be sworn, please?

Do you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give in this proceeding being conducted by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. MILLER. I do.

Senator SMITH. Proceed, Mr. Morris.

TESTIMONY OF ROBERT T. MILLER, NEW YORK, N. Y., ACCOMPANIED BY NORMAN S. ALTMAN, ATTORNEY AT LAW

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Miller, will you give your name and address to the reporter, please?

Mr. MILLER. Robert T. Miller, 2731 Palisade Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation?

Mr. MILLER. Public relations.

Mr. MORRIS. In what respect do you engage in public relations?

Mr. MILLER. I am a public-relations consultant.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you work for a particular firm?

Mr. MILLER. I consult for a firm, self-employed, but I consult for a firm.

Mr. MORRIS. For what firm do you consult?

Mr. MILLER. Medical Pharmaceutical Information Bureau.

Mr. MORRIS. Where is that office?

Mr. MILLER. New York.

Mr. MORRIS. Where?

Mr. MILLER. 80 Sixty-first Street.

Mr. MORRIS. What has been your most recent employment, that is prior to that?

Mr. MILLER. With Randall Philleys Associates in New York, a firm which no longer exists, public-relations firm.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Miller, at any time have you ever been a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever paid Communist Party dues at any time?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with Elizabeth T. Bentley?

Mr. MILLER. I knew her under another name.

Mr. MORRIS. What other name did you know her by?

Mr. MILLER. Helen John or Johns.

Mr. MORRIS. What were the circumstances of your knowing her?

Mr. MILLER. She was introduced by a businessman whom I knew in New York in 1940 or 1941.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was that businessman?

Mr. MILLER. A man whom I know as Jacob Friedman.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that Jacob Golos?

Mr. MILLER. So I have learned to believe. I have been shown a picture of this person who used to be him.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Gregory Silvermaster?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you read the testimony before this committee by Elizabeth Bentley to the effect that you were a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. MILLER. I have never read an actual transcript of it; no.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that Miss Bentley has testified before this committee that you were a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. MILLER. As far as actually seeing it in a committee transcript, I haven't, so that to that extent it's hearsay, but I believe she did; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know Mrs. Hede Massing?

Mr. MILLER. Hede Massing? No.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know a man named Julian Gumperz? Do you know a woman who was the wife of Julian Gumperz?

Mr. MILLER. The name means nothing to me. No, I don't know them.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know a woman who was the first wife of Gerhart Eisler?

Mr. MILLER. No; I have never known any such person.

Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony that you do not know of such a person, or you cannot recall such a person?

Mr. MILLER. I do not know any such person.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your association with Gregory Silvermaster?

Mr. MILLER. We were neighbors. We lived in Chevy Chase, just a block or two from there.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you been in his home?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. On how many occasions?

Mr. MILLER. I wouldn't remember. We knew them over a period of at least a year or two.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Miller, were you dropped from the State Department for security reasons?

Mr. MILLER. I resigned from the State Department without prejudice.

Mr. MORRIS. I have noticed in the House hearings, Mr. Miller, that a record was introduced at the time which reads as follows:

Mr. Miller is presently employed in the Department as Assistant Chief of the Division of Research and Publications in charge of the Publications Branch, P–7, salary $7,437.50. The information developed by the FBI in its current investigation of Mr. Miller supports the conclusion that his continued presence in the Department constitutes a strong risk to the security of the departmental functions and to the classified information of this Department. It is recommended, therefore, that his services be terminated in accordance with Public Law No. 490.

Are you acquainted with that, Mr. Miller?

Mr. MILLER. My only acquaintance with that is when Mr. Stripling read it at that hearing. As I said then, I had absolutely no knowledge of it before that whatever.

Mr. MORRIS. Your impression is that your termination of employment with the State Department was brought about by your resignation?

Mr. MILLER. That is my impression. That was actually the case. In fact, I am quite sure I had a paper that shows I resigned without prejudice.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I read the testimony of Mrs. Massing in connection with the witness?

Senator SMITH. Proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. This is the testimony taken before this committee on Thursday, August 2, 1951: (Part 1, p. 243.)

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Massing, did you know a man named Robert T. Miller?

Mrs. MASSING. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe what you know about Robert T. Miller?

Mrs. MASSING. I know not too much about him really. I met him on, I believe, my second courier trip on a boat. He was on his way to the Soviet Union. I didn't know him then. I met him on the boat and we started to discuss politics. As far as I remember, he was anti-Soviet. I tried, as I tried during those years, to convince everybody that the Soviet Union was the solution to all problems in this world.

Mr. MORRIS. What year was this?

Mrs. MASSING. That was probably in 1934. I would not know exactly. It might have been 1935. It must have been 1934. We discussed at great length. He was going on a trip to the Soviet Union quite determined not to like it. I told him that he doesn't understand, that he doesn't know, and I offered to give him a letter of recommendation to Mrs. Louis Fischer, Markoosha Fischer, provided that he take chocolate to the sons of Louis Fischer, who were little boys at the time. There was no chocolate in the Soviet Union and everybody who had a chance to send food in the Soviet Union did, and I told Miller if he would buy a lot of chocolate in Germany, I would in exchange give him a letter of introduction to Markoosha Fischer, who would then show him around in Moscow and explain the Soviet Union. She, being a Russian and the wife of an American newspaperman, was the appropriate person to introduce to him the great secrets of the Soviet Union. He accepted it. He did buy chocolate and he did meet Markoosha Fischer, who took him to the Moscow Daily News, where the indoctrination was completely taken out of her hands because he married an American Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was the American Communist?

Mrs. MASSING. I don't know. I heard her name. I don't know her personally. I wasn't there. He stayed on some time, I understand, and left as a Communist. This is all I know about him. I have never seen him since.

Do you remember such an episode, Mr. Miller?

Mr. MILLER. I certainly don't.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you meet anyone in Moscow whom you subsequently married?

Mr. MILLER. I certainly did.

Mr. MORRIS. Whom did you meet in Moscow?

Mr. MILLER. I met an American citizen named Jenny Levy.

Mr. MORRIS. What was she doing at that time?

Mr. MILLER. She was working as a secretary.

Mr. MORRIS. Of what organization?

Mr. MILLER. She was working for an American business woman.

Mr. MORRIS. In the Soviet Union?

Mr. MILLER. In Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Did she subsequently work for the Moscow Daily News?

Mr. MILLER. She worked for it before that.

I would like to say specifically she wasn't a Communist then or ever.

Mr. MORRIS. You say she was not a Communist?

Mr. MILLER. Was not a Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. Would it be possible to work for the Moscow Daily News without being a Communist, Mr. Miller?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, sure, sure; at least well, I certainly shouldn't speak with such authority, but I believe so; perhaps not now, but I think it would have been then. If you recall, that was the period in Russia when there was a certain amount of friendliness developing toward foreigners.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever meet Mrs. Louis Fischer?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Markoosha Fischer?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you first meet her? Did you have any letter of introduction to Mrs. Fischer?

Mr. MILLER. That was 20 years ago. I don't think so. I have no recollection of any. The way that was was that when a new American arrived in Moscow there were very few others there and everybody met everybody else quite soon.

Mr. MORRIS. And you cannot recall being introduced to Mrs. Louis Fischer, or Markoosha Fischer, with a letter of introduction such as was described by Mrs. Massing in this testimony?

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely not.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with Elizabeth Bentley, is it your testimony you did not at any time pay Communist dues to her?

Mr. MILLER. It is my testimony that I did not.

Mr. MORRIS. And it is your testimony that you were not in the Communist Party and that you did not know her to be a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. MILLER. Was not and did not know her to be one.

Mr. MORRIS. However, you did know Elizabeth Bentley under another name?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Jacob Golos under another name?

Mr. MILLER. So far as his being identified with the picture that I saw, the man I knew under another name, yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask a question? I apologize for being late. Does the record show the other names under which the witness knew these two persons?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Miller's name came up in the IPR files as someone who had conversation with Mr. Edward C. Carter and Mr. Alger Hiss.

Did you ever have a conversation with Mr. Edward C. Carter?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, I had one.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about that conversation?

Mr. MILLER. That was a conversation just about research on foreign affairs and about research in general which I had with him, as I recall, early, probably in January 1947. It was not intended to lead to anything in particular and it didn't. I didn't see Mr. Carter again. We just discussed our mutual interest in that field.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Alger Hiss at that time?

Mr. MILLER. I had just met him.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the letter in question here is a letter from Edward C. Carter, dated February 5, 1947. It is written to Alger Hiss.

It reads:

DEAR ALGER: Yesterday at your suggestion I had a delightful and illuminating talk with Robert T. Miller, whom I hope to see again. He brought me the good news that you had succeeded Dr. Butler as president of the endowment. I hope this will mean frequent visits to New York, if not permanent residence.

Is it your testimony you did not see Mr. Carter again?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And your testimony, as you just described to this committee, refers to this "delightful and illuminating talk" referred to in this letter by Mr. Edward C. Carter?

Mr. MILLER. It must be; but, of course, if it means anything, I had no idea he was going to write Hiss about this. I didn't really know what that's all about.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you ever had a partner named Jack B. Fahey?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. He was a partner in what project?

Mr. MILLER. The Hemisphere project, which published a weekly newsletter of Latin America.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that a Communist publication?

Mr. MILLER. No, indeed. It was subscribed to, I might say on that point, by practically all, or all American diplomatic missions in Latin America, by many banks, by many Government departments, many business firms.

Mr. MORRIS. When you liquidated that corporation, what did you do with the assets?

Mr. MILLER. We transferred those to Washington——

Mr. MORRIS. When you say "to Washington," what do you mean?

Mr. MILLER. The organization was put under contract to the Coordinator of American Affairs.

Mr. MORRIS. And it was taken over by the Coordinator?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there any intermediate step?

Mr. MILLER. It worked under contract for about a year or so and then the whole thing was just merged into the Coordinator's office.

Mr. MORRIS. Who else was associated with you on that project?

Mr. MILLER. Well, the other principal person was Joseph Gregg, who was a friend of Jack Fahey's.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Joseph Gregg a Communist?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly not, to my knowledge, and I would have said not.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you seen any testimony to the effect that he was a Communist, seen or heard of any?

Mr. MILLER. I can't honestly say I remember any; no.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Jack B. Fahey a member of the Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade?

Mr. MILLER. I don't know. I just don't know.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he serve with the American Abraham Lincoln Brigade in Spain?

Mr. MILLER. Yes, he did; but the point I am making is that I don't know whether he joined the veterans of the international brigade of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade, whatever it was.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you had any association with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MILLER. No, sir; other than that one conversation with Mr. Carter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Sourwine, do you have any questions?

Mr. SOURWINE. It may be that this point has been covered. If it has, I do not want to inquire. Has the point been covered, Mr. Morris, as to whether in bringing to Mr. Carter the good news which is referred to in this letter of Mr. Carter to Mr. Hiss, whether the witness was acting at someone's request? Let me go into that a little bit.

Mr. Miller, do you recall telling Mr. Carter of the succession Alger Hiss to the position of president of the endowment succeeding Dr. Butler?

Mr. MILLER. No; I have no recollection of that. I do remember that that fact was around. I gather from this letter—I had completely forgotten the context—that it must have been in the stage of unpublished scuttle butt at that point, but evidently I mentioned it to Mr. Carter. I frankly am surprised that I was the first person to tell him about it.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not know at the time that you were the first person to tell him?

Mr. MILLER. I frankly don't remember it at all. I evidently didn't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know how you learned about that?

Mr. MILLER. I don't. I don't; unless it must have been around the State Department.

You see, Mr. Carter, again, to the best of my recollection—I couldn't be a hundred percent certain of this—but, as I recall it, I talked to Hiss, just within a week or two before or after leaving the State Department, about research in general on the basis that he was going into this new job, to see whether he had any plans where any project of mine might fit, and so on, and in the course of discussing research, he mentioned evidently Mr. Carter. My recollection is that he suggested that he was somebody I should see.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that why you went to see Mr. Carter?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. On Mr. Hiss' suggestion?

Mr. MILLER. That's right.

Mr. SOURWINE. So that it was quite natural for you to mention Mr. Hiss' new job when you saw Carter?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was not a case of Hiss suggesting that you tell Mr. Carter about it as though you went as a messenger, in any sense?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just that you went to Mr. Carter at Mr. Hiss' suggestion?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; and I'm sure that I couldn't have been a messenger, but, again, this is years ago, but I am practically certain there were a number of people in the State Department that knew about Hiss' job at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. And your reason for bringing it up was not primarily that you thought Mr. Carter might have any interest, but because Mr. Hiss was the man that had sent you to Carter?

Mr. MILLER. Roughly, I suppose; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Ludwig Ullman?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I did.

Mr. MORRIS. What were your associations with Ludwig Ullman?

Mr. MILLER. He was living with the Silvermasters at the time we knew them.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you been to Alaska in the last 7 or 8 years?

Mr. MILLER. No; I've never been to Alaska.

Mr. MORRIS. I think they are the only questions we have.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have one general question.

Mr. Miller, do you know anyone in the State Department with respect to whom you have any reason to believe that person to be a member of the Communist Party or a person who knowingly and willingly has collaborated or cooperated with Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. MILLER. No, sir; I do not.

Senator SMITH. Is that all, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, Senator.

Senator SMITH. Very well.

Senator SMITH. Do you have another witness, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. We have Mr. Frank Farrell.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Farrell, will you stand and be sworn?

Do you solemnly swear the evidence you shall give in this hearing being conducted by a Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. FARRELL. I do.

TESTIMONY OF FRANK FARRELL, COLUMNIST FOR THE NEW YORK WORLD-TELEGRAM AND SUN, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Farrell, what is your present occupation?

Mr. FARRELL. Newspaper columnist for the New York World-Telegram and Sun.

Mr. MORRIS. Where do you reside?

Mr. FARRELL. Hotel Weylin, New York City.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the address of the Hotel Weylin?

Mr. FARRELL. Madison Avenue and Fifty-fourth Street.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Farrell, were you a Marine Corps officer during the last war?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, I was.

Mr. MORRIS. What rank did you attain?

Mr. FARRELL. I went into active duty status as a lieutenant and subsequently have been promoted to a major in the reserve.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with your duties in the Marine Corps, were you ever on the prosecution staff in the prosecution of Walther F. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, I was.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could that name be spelled for the record?

Mr. FARRELL. The full name was Dr. Walther, W-a-l-t-h-e-r, middle name was Franz, F-r-a-n-z, last name Heissig, H-e-i-s-s-i-g.

Mr. MORRIS. What was Mr. Heissig's formal position in China, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. Ostensibly he was a university professor and a scholar, linguist, and a Far Eastern expert on the subject of Mongolia.

Mr. MORRIS. How did he make his living?

Mr. FARRELL. As a spy for the German High Command while he was in China.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that as a matter of fact, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes; I have records.

Mr. MORRIS. How did Walther Heissig first come to your attention, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. He was arrested by the United States Armed Forces.

Mr. MORRIS. Where was he arrested?

Mr. FARRELL. China theater. He was arrested in Peking, China.

Mr. MORRIS. Why was he arrested?

Mr. FARRELL. He was arrested because he was a member of the German High Command Intelligence, Sabotage, and Propaganda secret underground in the Far East, and because this corps continued action hostile to the United States and other nations of the United Nations on behalf of the Japanese Armed Forces subsequent to the unconditional surrender of Germany up until the final surrender of Japan.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the date of the official surrender of the German Army?

Mr. FARRELL. May 8, 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Did Dr. Heissig and others continue their resistance after May 8, 1945?

Mr. FARRELL. They continued until the Japanese surrender on August 15, 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. Was this group of which Dr. Heissig was a member collectively arrested?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How many people constituted that group?

Mr. FARRELL. Collectively 27 people were brought into the court room.

Mr. MORRIS. What relative rank within that group did Dr. Heissig hold?

Mr. FARRELL. Outwardly he was a cog in the wheel, actually second in command of the Peking branch of the German High Command Intelligence.

Mr. MORRIS. How do you know that he was associated with the German intelligence?

Mr. FARRELL. Well, in the round up of these people after we acquired information as to what they had been up to——

Mr. MORRIS. You were then with what organization, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. I was on detached service from the First Marine Division on a series of secret intelligence missions in the Far East.

Mr. MORRIS. What particular assignment did you have in connection with the arrest of Mr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. At that time I was attached to the Judge Advocate's Office of the United States Army in Shanghai and my particular assignment with them was chief investigator or chief investigative officer of this Far Eastern network of German high command intelligence, and subsequently was named a special prosecutor on the prosecution staff.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you examine Heissig on the witness stand?

Mr. FARRELL. I personally did not examine him. Colonel Jeremiah J. O'Connor, who was Assistant Judge Advocate conducted the examination.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you act as the assistant prosecutor?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it generally known that Dr. Heissig was in fact a German intelligence officer?

Mr. FARRELL. It was not generally known. It was only generally known that he had some attachment to the consular offices in Peking and among the people in German intelligence they knew he was in some subordinate role, or they suspected he was in a subordinate role.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you come to discover his affiliations with the German intelligence?

Mr. FARRELL. Well, we captured documents, in the first place, a couple of days after August 15 which gave us almost everybody on the staff of what was known as the Bureau Ehrhardt. Senior among the personnel in the branch office at Peking was the name of Dr. Heissig. Subsequently, unknown to Heissig, I uncovered documentary proof that he was much more important in the Far East intelligence network than he posed as, and even much more important than his own German confederates suspected.

Mr. MORRIS. Tell us about that, Mr. Farrell.

Mr. FARRELL. In trying to get rid of records the German embassy in Nanking made one mistake and on account of that mistake some very important papers came into my hands. Among them was one of which I hold a photostat in my hand and a translation in English of the German document.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the witness has described this as a document which was seized by the United States military authorities, a copy of the document seized by the United States military authorities in Peking.

Mr. FARRELL. This document was seized in Nanking.

Mr. SOURWINE. Not a copy, Mr. Morris; a photostat.

Mr. MORRIS. A photostatic copy.

Who made this translation, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. I think the name might be on there. It was the United States Army there. There's no name attached to it, but it's a United States Army translation of the original.

Mr. MORRIS. Was the original of this document one of the documents that was used in the trial in which you were one of the prosecutors?

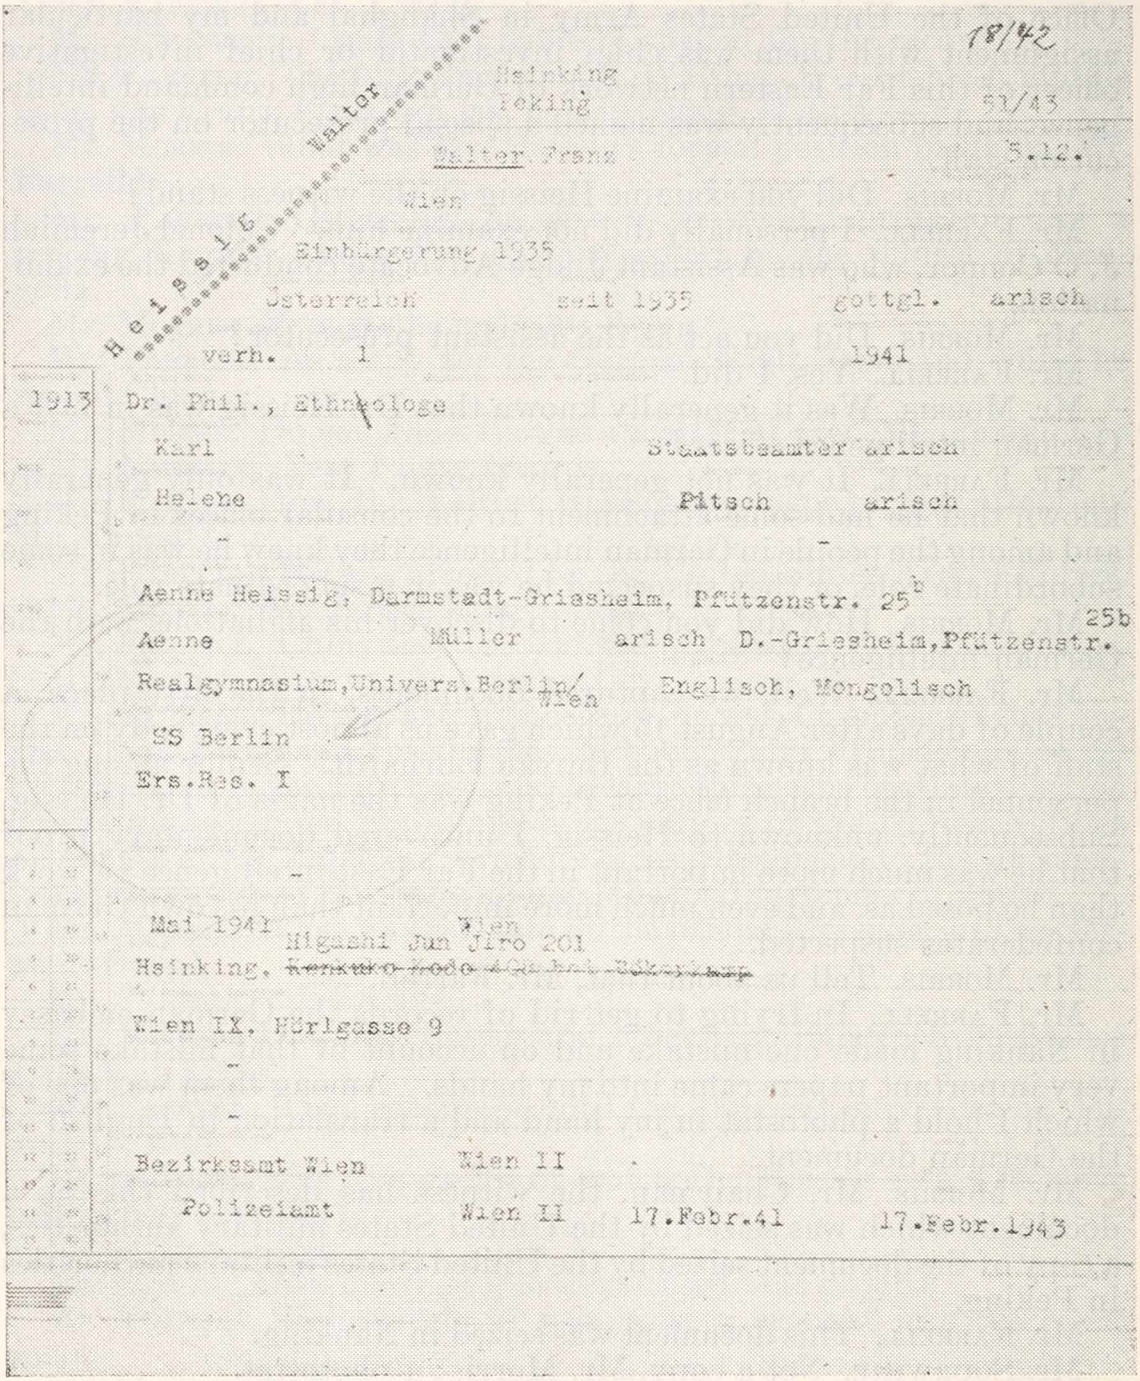
Mr. FARRELL. That is right, and it is part of the court record.

Mr. MORRIS. Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, will you receive this into the record?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 744" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 744



18/42

Helsing
Teking 61/43

Walter Pesno 5.12.

Wien

Einbürgerung 1935

Oesterreich seit 1935 gottgl. arisch

verh. 1 1941

1913 Dr. Phil., Ethnologe

Karl Staatsbeamter arisch

Helene Pitsch arisch

Aenne Helsig, Darmstadt-Griesheim, Pfützenstr. 25b

Aenne Müller arisch D.-Griesheim, Pfützenstr. 25b

Realgymnasium, Univers. Berlin/Wien Englisch, Mongolisch

C5 Berlin

Ers.Res. I

Mai 1941 Wien

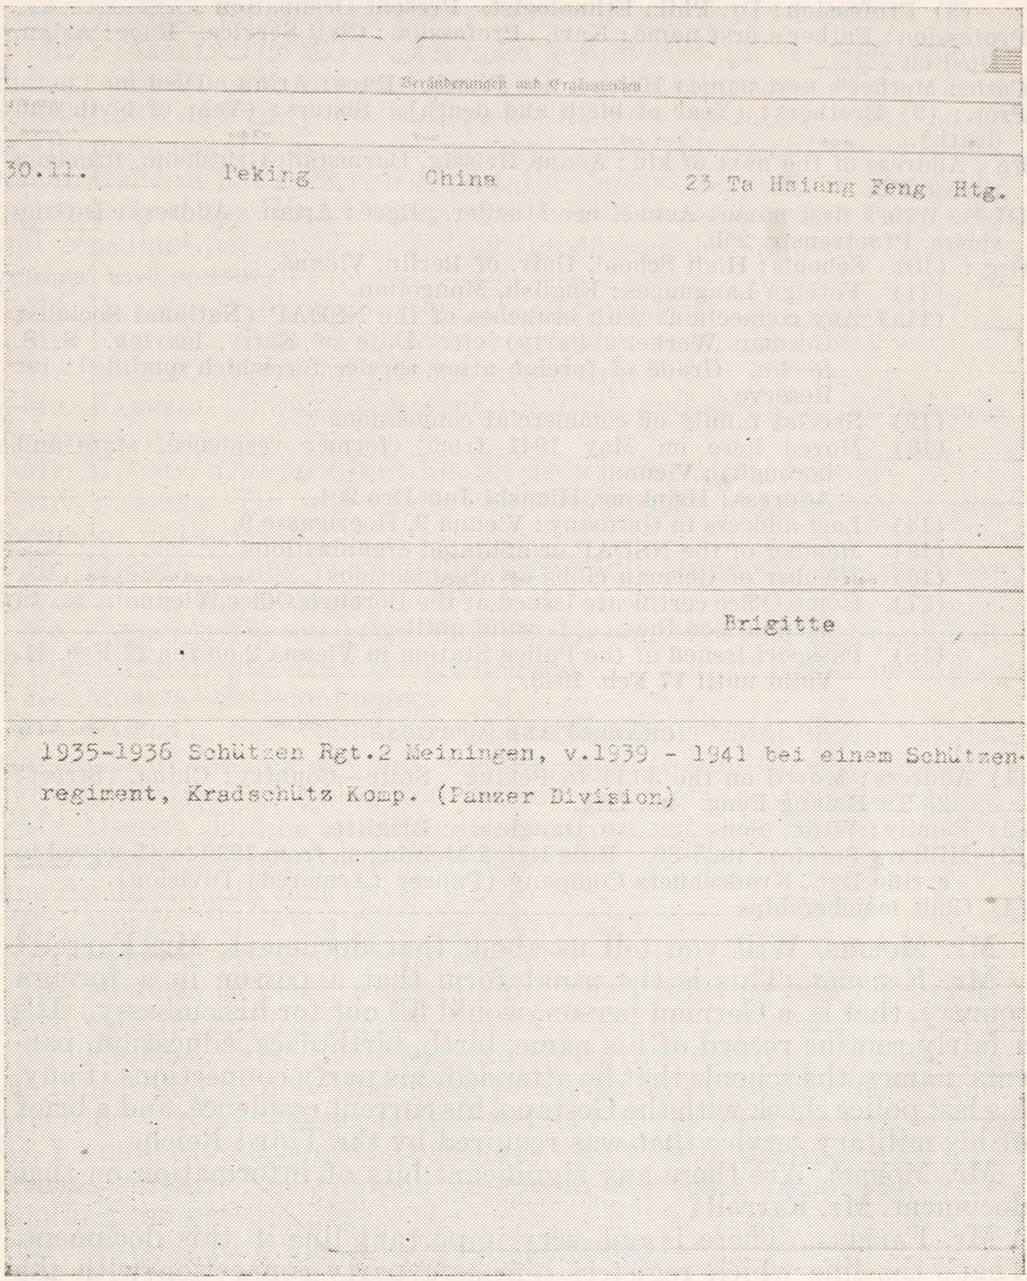
Higashi Dan Giro 201

Hsinking. ~~Kenkuo-kodo 4 Ga bei Nürnberg~~

Wien IX, Nürlgasse 9

Bezirksamt Wien Wien II

Polizeiamt Wien II 17.Febr.41 17.Febr.1943



Consular Office in	No.—
Hsinking	18/42
Peking	51/43

Last name: HEISSIG. First name: WALTER.

(2) First name: Walter. Middle name: Franz.
(3) Birth date: Day: 5. Month: 12.
(4) Birthplace, state _____ Borough _____ County _____
Vienna.
(5) Obtained German citizenship through _____ foreign citizenship.
Naturalization 1935.
Former citizen of Austria. German citizen since 1935.
(6) Religion: Believe in God. Race: Arian.
(7) Family: Married. No. of children: Sons: 1 (Year of birth, or death).
Daughters: 1941.
Year of birth: 1913.

(8) Profession: Dr. Phil., Ethnologist. Present Occupation _____
Profession: Father's first name: Karl. Profession: Civil Service. Race: Arian. Died on _____ Cath.: Mother's first name: Helene, nee Pitsch. Race: Arian. Died on _____ Prot.: (9) Brothers: (Year of birth and death). Sisters: (Year of birth and death).
Pg.: Address of the next of kin: Aenne Heissig, Darmstadt-Griesheim, Pfuetzen Street 25b.
DUF: Wife's first name: Aenne, nee Mueller. Race: Arian. Address: D-Griesheim, Pfuetzenstr. 25b.
Org.: (10) Schools: High School, Univ. of Berlin, Vienna.
(11) Foreign Languages: English, Mongolian.
(11a) Any connections with branches of the NSDAP (National Socialist German Worker's Party) etc. Date of Entry, leaving. S. S. Berlin. Grade of foreign army service for which qualified: 1st Reserve
(12) Special family or commercial connections
(13) Moved here on May 1941 from (former residence, state and borough): Vienna.
Address: Hsinking, Higashi Jun Jiro 201.
(14) Last address in Germany: Vienna 9, Hoerlgasse 9.
(15) Member of the NSDAP or affiliated organizations _____
(16) Member of German clubs or organizations _____
(17) Home Office certificate issued at the Borough Office, Vienna _____ in Vienna 2 on the _____ valid until _____
(18) Passport issued at the Police Station in Vienna 2 on the 17 Feb. 41. Valid until 17 Feb. 1943.

CHANGES AND ADDITIONS

(1) Address: Moved on the 30.11 to Peking. State—Country: China. Street: 23 Ta Hsiang Feng. no. Htg.
(2) Family: Wife. Sons _____. Daughters: Brigitte.
(3) Military Service: 1935–36. Rifle Rgt. 2 Meiningen, from 1939 to 41 served in a rifle Rgt., Kradschuetz Company (Panzer (Armored) Division).
(4) Club memberships _____

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about that document, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. This is the usual form that a person in a foreign country, that is, a German person, would fill out for his embassy. It's a fairly routine record of his name, birth, birthplace, education, parents' names, the schools that he attended, his party connections if any, his last police check with the Gestapo, his current residence, and a brief of his military service that was required by the Third Reich.

Mr. MORRIS. Are there any significant bits of information on that document, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. There is one very important line in this document. That's the line which registers him as a party connection with the Gestapo in Berlin.

Mr. MORRIS. Where is that, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. That is on line 10a, where it says: SS Berlin.

Mr. MORRIS. Does that indicate he is a member of the SS Corps?

Mr. FARRELL. That's right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that Sicherheitsdienst?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes.

In the case which lasted from October 1946 until February 1947, Dr. Heissig generally and specifically set forth that he had no party connection whatever. He posed purely as a scholar and a professor. He belittled whatever espionage efforts he had made in behalf of the German Government.

Under oath on the witness stand he swore that he had never done anything against the United States and absolutely denied that he had any connection with the SS or the SD.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the SD?

Mr. FARRELL. The SD is a German designation for the Sicherheitsdienst, which is the internal corps of SS Intelligence. This was a select group of highly qualified men who were operating under cover at all times, usually as secretaries or attachés, the way Richard Sorge was in General Ott's office in Japan, for the specific purpose of reporting directly to the High Command in Berlin on the loyalty of embassy and consulate personnel, including the ambassador and the consular general and consuls.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you confront Dr. Heissig with that document?

Mr. FARRELL. Colonel O'Connor actually confronted him with it.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you present at the time?

Mr. FARRELL. I was present at the time and straight on through the prosecution.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he admit his SS association at that time?

Mr. FARRELL. He was coldly stunned by the appearance of this document in the trial.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say "he was coldly stunned," exactly what do you mean, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. Up until that time Dr. Heissig was very self-confident of himself and extremely arrogant——

Mr. MORRIS. Self-confident?

Mr. FARRELL. Self-confident and extremely arrogant on the witness stand. As of the moment this was presented to him for identification and explanation, he paled and seemed to be on the verge of faint.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he admit his associations with the SS?

Mr. FARRELL. He subsequently admitted this document was a genuine document and that the——

Mr. MORRIS. That the facts on it were correct?

Mr. FARRELL. That the facts were correct on it.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, he did admit that he had been associated with the SS Corps?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes. He went into no further detail about that. It was interesting to note that upon presentation of this document and revelation that he was actually a member of the Gestapo and of the SD, I would say, most of the prisoners who were in the dock with him were as surprised as German people in the court room who were watching the proceedings.

Mr. MORRIS. How about his co-defendants?

Mr. FARRELL. The co-defendants?

Mr. MORRIS. The co-defendants were surprised at the revelation of the connections of Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. That's right.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he convicted by that military court?

Mr. FARRELL. He was convicted by the military court and sentenced to 30 years at hard labor to be served in our military prison in Germany. I forget the designation.

Mr. MORRIS. But it was in Germany?

Mr. FARRELL. It's the prison where the major war criminals are incarcerated.

Mr. MORRIS. During the course of that particular military proceeding, did Owen Lattimore intervene on behalf of Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. Owen Lattimore's name surfaced in this before the criminal proceedings.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about it?

Mr. FARRELL. As early as 1946 when the question of repatriation of certain Germans who were considered detrimental to the interests of the United States in the Far East was concerned, Owen Lattimore entered an almost immediate plea, as soon as the subject of repatriation came up, and the plea was specific for the exemption of Dr. Walter Heissig.

Mr. SOURWINE. How was that plea entered?

Mr. FARRELL. It first came to my attention verbally through the G–2 of General Wedemeyer's staff of the China theater.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean orally ?

Mr. FARRELL. Orally; I'm sorry. It was hearsay at first and subsequently I got an oral confirmation of it from the G–2 himself that Lattimore was interested in this man's case.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether Lattimore made any representations in writing in that regard at that time?

Mr. FARRELL. At that time, I was under the impression that he had, but I wasn't positive that he had written a letter. Subsequently, according to testimony here, Mr. Lattimore testified before this committee that he wrote one letter and that it was not a very strong letter and under no circumstances could it be considered pressure.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that testimony now before this committee, or before the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. I am not positive of that. I have the file of correspondence.

Mr. MORRIS. The one that you have in front of you there is the testimony of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. FARRELL. That's the file I refer to.

Senator SMITH. Look at the title page.

Mr. FARRELL. I just changed books. Somebody gave me the wrong book on that when I first came in here.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you subsequently seen letters that Owen Lattimore did write on behalf of Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, he did write a number of letters, did he not, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. He wrote a great number of letters, apparently.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about your experiences back in China at the time of the prosecution of this case?

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit me an intervention at this point? "A great number of letters," is very indefinite. What do you mean by that?

Mr. FARRELL. It's certainly more than one and I had very tangible indications from my position in the Far East that if there were not letters outstanding there were other communications. Whether it was cable by way of State Department communications, or cable by way of military communications, or courier, I am not aware, but I became painfully aware of Mr. Lattimore's interference in this case.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many letters or communications did you see from Mr. Lattimore about this case?

Mr. FARRELL. Unfortunately, on my echelon, I have no access to general officers or embassy mail.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not have to say whether it is fortunate or not; just how many did you see?

Mr. FARRELL. Well, it was unfortunate in my case because I wasn't able to ascertain where the brickbats were coming from, but actually I did not see any letter while I was in China.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many letters do you know he wrote or other communications?

Mr. FARRELL. There is a file of numerous letters right here.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean by "right here"?

Mr. FARRELL. In this book.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that the appendix of the reports of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. What pages?

Mr. FARRELL. It starts on page 1881 and continues through 1892, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know anything about those letters beyond what's in that book?

Mr. FARRELL. No; I only know them to be documents submitted by Owen Lattimore, as the file of correspondence that he had in behalf of Heissig.

Mr. SOURWINE. That record will speak with regard to what they are in that record, will they not?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. I simply wanted the record to speak with regard to the great number of communications that you spoke of.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Sourwine, that may be my fault. I was asking him in connection with these things that he had heard back at the time of the prosecution, that letters had been written, and it was I who asked him if——

Mr. SOURWINE. It is no question of fault. You asked the question as to whether there had been more than one and he said "a great number" and I wanted the record to indicate what he meant by "a great number."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Farrell, will you continue to tell us to what extent you had heard that Owen Lattimore was intervening in that case? You have testified that the G–2 did confirm to you that in fact Owen Lattimore had intervened on behalf of Dr. Walter Heissig.

Mr. FARRELL. That's right.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know of any other efforts that were being made at that time on behalf of Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. I did not know at that time what correspondence was outstanding in terms of type of correspondence or actual numbers of letters, cables, or other communications involved. However, from where I was working, I got a great number of indications that there were many more than one communication involved in Mr. Lattimore's imploring on behalf of Dr. Heissig.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what those indications were?

Mr. FARRELL. Well, in the first place, I heard—and this was through G–2 channels—that Mr. Lattimore had employed Doctor Heissig. I subsequently heard that this had to do with the purchase of books on Mongolia, for which Mr. Lattimore had given him money. Then, I learned that this man, who was an enemy national and listed for repatriation as dangerous to our interests in the Far East and who also was the subject of a war crimes investigation and possible trial for same, was bearing a letter of credentials from Mr. Lattimore attesting that he was a representative of Mr. Lattimore and Johns Hopkins University.

Subsequently, I found out that Mr. Lattimore had very carefully arranged for this man to have the privileges of our uncensored Army post office out of China by way of the Army's G–2 office with Colonel Mayer on one occasion, with an OSS officer in Peking on another occasion, and there were other references.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you learn these things, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. Because I was curious to know how Dr. Heissig was maintaining communications with Mr. Lattimore and fulfilling his obligations. It had to be through official channels because a German national did not have the use of either Chinese mail or United States mail in that country at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you know he was communicating with Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. FARRELL. I did not know it. I suspected it at first and then subsequently I found out from an OSS officer in Peking that he was.

Mr. SOURWINE. The question was: How did you find out that he was using these APO facilities, and you told us why you found out, because you were suspicious.

Mr. FARRELL. I told you how I found out, too. I said by way of an OSS officer in Peking.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think that tells us how?

Mr. FARRELL. Well, he told me and he was assisting Dr. Heissig. As a matter of fact, he was one of Dr. Heissig's witnesses in the trial, so I think I could take his word.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was testimony that came to you in your official capacity, then?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is what I was trying to get at.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Farrell, is there any confirmation of that fact that you have just testified to among the letters that you have read by Mr. Owen Lattimore?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes; I notice two reference to it.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what they are?

Mr. FARRELL. Do you want the reference as to the credentials?

Mr. MORRIS. I think if you just read what they are, Mr. Farrell; they are not very long, are they?

Mr. FARRELL. Suppose I read the excerpts that pertain to what I have testified to:

Under date of March 11, 1946, and addressed to Dr. Walther Heissig, at Fu-jen University in Peiping, China, is a letter from Owen Lattimore, in which he notes:

I am not quite sure when this will reach you. I understand that the air mail is now subject to many delays owing to the shortage of crews to fly the planes and therefore I am sure that it is better to wait until I hear of someone who is actually going to Shanghai.

Mr. MORRIS. Who is writing this, now?

Mr. FARRELL. This is Mr. Lattimore writing to Dr. Heissig.

I am also suggesting to Colonel Mayer that he make inquiries to see whether a request can properly be made that you not be deported from China.

And in another paragraph, he wrote that he is sending $200 for some books that he wanted, and then quoting another paragraph:

I enclose herewith a letter certifying that you are empowered to act as my agent for purchases of books and manuscripts.

That is all from that communication.

Mr. MORRIS. Is there any reference to the APO there?

Mr. FARRELL. No, except that he is arranging to send the $200 to Heissig by way of Colonel Mayer.

Let me see this. Here is a reference in this letter which pertains to how he is delivering books:

DEAR DR. HEISSIG: Your letter of February 7 and the first shipment of Mongol books have safely arrived. I have already sent an acknowledgment to Lieutenant Walton, but did not enclose a letter to you because I was not sure whether he would still be China or might have already returned to this country.

Lieutenant Walton was an officer in OSS in the Peking branch.

Mr. MORRIS. Is there not a letter dated December 27, 1946, there, American Embassy, Rome, Italy, from Floyd E. Mastin, attaché, to Owen Lattimore which reads:

Shortly before I left Peiping last spring, I mailed you some Mongolian books, ones which Dr. Walter Heissig said he had purchased for you. The books were mailed through the APO on April 5. Naturally I'm curious to learn if the same ever reached you. I'm returning to China next spring (May). If there are some contacts I can make for you, I would be very happy to help you.

Does that indicate in any way that the APO was in fact used by Dr. Walter Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. That's right.

Mr. MORRIS. At that time did the use of APO obviate the use of censorship regulations?

Mr. FARRELL. At that time it did, because censorship regulations diminished and disappeared shortly after the surrender of of Japan.

Mr. MORRIS. Would the use of an APO insure freedom from censorship to anybody using that APO?

Mr. FARRELL. It would almost guarantee it, unless the package was spot-checked by the United States customs coming into the country. I believe the ratio was something like 1 to 100. There were an awful lot of souvenirs being sent home at that time and the customs opened one package out of every so many.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, if I might ask a question on this point.

Mr. Farrell, you just read a letter which mentioned credentials furnished by Mr. Lattimore to Dr. Heissig.

Are those the credentials which you testified about earlier?

Mr. FARRELL. Not yet; no.

Mr. SOURWINE. You said you had found out that Dr. Heissig had some credentials. I wondered if these were the ones.

Mr. FARRELL. These are the ones that I referred to; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was there anything in these credentials to purport to show that Dr. Heissig was representing not only Owen Lattimore, but also the Johns Hopkins University?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes; it's here, if I may read it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. FARRELL. Owen Lattimore enclosed with the letter of March 11, 1946, which we have just discussed, another letter dated also March 11, 1946. It is addressed:

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that Dr. Walter Heissig is fully empowered to act as my agent in the purchase of Chinese, Japanese, Mongol, Manchu, and other books and manuscripts.

(Signed) OWEN LATTIMORE,
Director, Walter Hines Page School of International Relations,
The Johns Hopkins University.

Mr. SOURWINE. Thank you.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will these letters be inserted in the record?

Senator SMITH. They will be inserted.

(The letters referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 745–A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N, O, P, and Q," and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 745–A

FU-JEN UNIVERSITY,
Peiping, 7th February 1946.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University, North Charles Street,
Baltimore, Maryland, U. S. A.

DEAR SIR: I hope you have already returned safely to the United States. On the very day after our pleasant conversation—for which I wish to thank you once more—I plunged into the business of purchasing books and have already been able to accumulate a small number. At the moment, however, the book market offers a rather meager assortment, because booksellers are holding back until the Chinese New Year festivals are over.

On the 22nd of January I mailed you the first two parcels of books through the kindness of a friend. Their contents you will find on the attached book list. Meantime I have got together, partly through purchases and party from duplicates in my possesion, a complete series of publications appearing in Kailu (given out under the direction of Bokekesik). These I shall dispatch within the next few days. I was also able to lay hands on an extremely rare Koke sudur edition of thirteen volumes, with 1,985 pages. Since those Kailu publications, collectively and individually, were printed in very small editions, they are very scarce and their prices accordingly high. At the next mailing opportunity I shall also send you a set of the Mongolian monthly periodical, Koketuy (Blue Banner), which was published in Manchuria, as well as a few political propaganda magazines from Inner Mongolia.

The purchase and supply of Mongolian prints from Inner Mongolia is complicated and very slow, since this region is still occupied by the Communists and it will be some weeks before direct contact can be made. However, even then it will be difficult to procure successive series of all Mongolian publications, since the Kalgan Press has been dissolved and many books burned.

I have also obtained a big number of new Japanese publications for you and have already included a few small ones in the first two parcels.

I would greatly appreciate it if you could send me some money as soon as possible, since I am now hardly able to cope with the continually increasing book prices with my own small capital. I have made inquiries here and have been given to understand that you can send me any amount of U. S. currency by means of traveller cheques. Please do not send any money through the bank, because then I shall only receive for one American dollar C. N. C. $500.— instead of the official Peking exchange rate of approximately 1300.—.

It would also be of great advantage if you were to confirm, by letter, the fact that you have commissioned me to purchase books for the Johns Hopkins University on this and that scientific field in the Mongolian, Chinese, and Japanese languages. Such a confirmation would not only minimize difficulties when purchasing bigger amounts of books from Japanese, but would also facilitate mailing them and would, likewise, have a certain helpful significance for me.

Many years ago you began the printing of bibliographies in Pacific Affairs with the "Personal Chronicle of the First Manchu Emperor" by Fuchs. May I now contribute thereto with a "Bibliography of Mongolian Publications in Japanese Occupied Areas from 1939–1945," which is on the verge of completion and will be sent you in the near future. It not only contains dry titles but also brief historical introductions to every section.

Of those books already sent you, I would like to recommend to your special attention the last chapter in Mongyol un uysayatan kiged teuke sudur about the autonomic development of Inner and Outer Mongolia, because therein the Japanese viewpoints are clearly recognizable. Also of interest is the Japanese propaganda magazine, "Tabin on-u Qoyinaki mongyol ayimagtan" (The Mongol Tribes after Fifty Years), wherein valuable material for a history on Japanese politics in Mongolia and their plans is contained.

Once again my very best thanks for the interesting conversation in the Hotel de Wagon Lits. Please acknowledge receipt of the first two parcels of books.

In the hope of hearing from you shortly, I remain, dear Sir,

Yours respectfully,

W. HEISSIG.

Contents of first two parcels:

1 Ex. Tusimei-un jasay-un ciqula-yi quriyaysan bicig. (Administration), 36 pg.
1 Ex. Yeke jegun aziya-yin bayiduyan (Propoganda), 67 pg.
1 Ex. Ayimay qubiyaysan jakidal-un bicig. (Administration), 162 pg.
1 Ex. Lu oboytan-u jokiyaysan baya keuked-un ugulel-un bicig (Education), 118 pg.
1 Ex. Gung-un juu-yin gegen-u suryal (Lamaistic), 33 pg.
1 Ex. Yurban bodylya kemeku bicig (32 pg.) (Education).
1 Ex. Tabin on-u qoyinaki mongyol ayimaytan (Pol. Propaganda), 250 pg.
1 Ex. Sine jil-un qous uyangya (Folklore), 36 pg.
1 Ex. Eng-un medel-un jayun setub (Pol. Propaganda), 95 pg.
1 Ex. Boyda-yin suryal-i sengggregulku bicig (History), 162 pg.
1 Ex. Oyirod-un galdan bosuytu qayan-u teuke (History), 16 pg.
1 Ex. Mongyol usug-un yosun i todorqayilan altan toli (Grammar), 18 pg.
1 Ex. Mongyol-un ysayatan kiged teuke sudur (Modern History), 259 pg.
1 Ex. (in Chinese) (Lit. History), 161 pg.
1 Ex. (in Chinese) (Chrestomatie), 82 pg.
1 Ex. (in Chinese) (History), 206 pg.
Total: 16 Vol.——US $11.50.

EXHIBIT NO. 745–B

MARCH 11, 1946.

DR. WALTHER HEISSIG,
Fu-jen University, Peiping, China.

DEAR DR. HEISSIG: Your letter of 7 February and the first shipment of Mongol books have safely arrived. I have already sent an acknowledgement to Lt. Walton, but did not enclose a letter to you because I was not sure whether he would still be in China or might already have returned to this country. I am now writing to tell you how much I appreciate your energy and promptness in sending me such interesting material immediately. I am arranging to send you U. S. $200 through Col. William Mayer, who is an officer on the Headquarters Staff of General Wedemeyer in Shanghai * * *. I am not quite sure when this will reach you. I understand that the air mail is now subject to many delays, owing to shortage of crews to fly the planes, and therefore am sure that it is better to wait until I hear of someone who is actually going to Shanghai. I am also suggesting to Colonel Mayer that he make inquiries to see whether a request can properly be made that you not be deported from China. * * *

In addition to the initial sum of $200 which I am sending I shall of course be prepared to send further funds for book purchases as soon as you let me know the amount you need. The first shipment is excellent in character and shows that you fully understood the range of my interests. I am just as much interested in material of a propaganda character as I am in historical and literary material, since one of my purposes is to attempt to reconstruct as far as possible the Japanese propaganda and political approach toward the Mongols. I am also interested in any statistical and factual material on population, economics, trade, etc.

I enclose herewith a letter certifying that you are empowered to act as my agent for purchases of books and manuscripts.

With regard to bibliographical articles in Pacific Affairs I shall be glad to recommend your "Bibliography of Mongolian Publications in Japanese Occupied Areas 1939–1945" to the present editor of Pacific Affairs. I myself have had no connection with Pacific Affairs since 1941, but of course I am still closely in touch with the Institute of Pacific Relations and I think I can assure you that the present editor will be interested in your material.

Please give my respects to Dr. Fuchs.

Thank you again most cordially for your promptness and energy.

Yours very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

EXHIBIT No. 745–C

MARCH 11, 1946

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that Dr. Walther Heissig is fully empowered to act as my agent in the purchase of Chinese, Japanese, Mongol, Manchu, and other books and manuscripts.

OWEN LATTIMORE,
Director, Walter Hines Page School of International Relations,
The Johns Hopkins University.

EXHIBIT No. 745–D

12 FANG CHIA HUTUNG,
AN TING MEN NEI,
Peiping, June 6, 1946.

DEAR PROFESSOR LATTIMORE: May we ask for your assistance in an urgent matter which concerns all scholars of the Far East. Dr. Walter Fuchs and Dr. Walther Heissig have been ordered deported to Germany and will be interned on June 10, prior to their departure. Local foreign and Chinese scholars are doing everything in their power to have their deportation at least delayed. But after careful investigation we have found that the final decision will, in some curious way, rest with our State Department.

Both Dr. Fuchs and Dr. Heissig have been appointed to professorships at Yenching University: Dr. Fuchs, Professor of Manchu, and Dr. Heissig, Professor of Mongol. President Leighton Stuart has personally appealed to the Chinese authorities to retain both men here.

We have been authoritatively informed that the future careers of these men and their continued usefulness for Far Eastern studies depend upon the opinion which American scholars express to the State Department. We have cabled Dr. William Hung, who is at present at Harvard, and we hope he has already communicated with you. Dr. Hung is fully acquainted with the local situation, and before leaving China in the spring did all he could to help these men. Dr. Stuart's support of them should be ample proof that they in every way deserve the support of American scholars.

We hope that you will intercede immediately with the State Department to forestall this deportation which would deprive us of two outstanding experts. Their inclusion in the deportation list can be based only on oversight or faulty information. It is up to us, their American colleagues, to correct that mistake before it is too late. We have good reason to believe that the State Department will attach great weight to your opinion in this matter, owing to the Department's increased interest in the development of Far Eastern studies.

We are writing on this matter to Professors Goodrich, Lessing, Hummel, and Gardner. If you know of other scholars willing to appeal to the State Department in this matter, we should be very grateful to you for sending this information to them.

Yours truly,

ARTHUR F. WRIGHT.
MARY CLABAUGH WRIGHT.

EXHIBIT No. 745–E

HARVARD-YENCHING INSTITUTE,
Cambridge, Mass., June 19, 1946.

Professor OWEN LATTIMORE,
Walter Hines Page School,
Baltimore, Md.

DEAR PROFESSOR LATTIMORE: I arrived in Cambridge about two weeks ago and shortly after my arrival I received a cablegram from Mr. Arthur F. Wright in Peiping. It was stated that Dr. Walter Fuchs and Dr. Walter Heissig were in danger of immediate deportation from Peiping to Germany. It was suggested that American scholars interested in Far Eastern studies be mobilized to intercede with the American Department of State on the behalf of these two scholars.

Dr. C. S. Gardner, to whom I have shown the cablegram, expresses his kind interest in the matter and has already written to the Secretary of State and will probably communicate with you as well as other American scholars interested in Chinese studies.

I have now received a letter from Mr. Wright dated June sixth, in which he gives more detail about the matter. It seems that Dr. Fuchs and Dr. Heissig were to be interned on June tenth, to be shipped to Tangu and then to Shanghai, until they were to leave China. Chinese and foreign scholars in Peiping have been doing everything in their power to have their deportation at least delayed, "but after investigation," says Mr. Wright, "We have found that the final decision will in some curious way rest with our State Department."

When I was in Peiping I had already heard rumors about the possible internment of Drs. Fuchs and Heissig. I tried to get some of the Chinese authorities interested in these two scholars and I thought they would be safe from then on. The new turn of events is indeed a surprise to me.

I may state that to the best of my knowledge these two scholars had more or less nominal connections with the Nazi Party, but there interests and activities during the period they have been in China were confined only to scholarly pursuits. Dr. Fuchs is a German sinologist especially gifted in Manchu literature. Dr. Heissig is an Austrian Mongolist. He is probably not as well known as Dr. Fuchs. His recent papers are mostly published in Monumenta Serica. According to Mr. Wright's letter. Dr. Heissig's long book on the Genghis Khan Epic appeared on the fourth of June. Of course, I have not seen the book.

Mr. Wright is a Fellow of the Harvard-Yenching Institute. He and his wife were both interned by the Japanese in Weihsien. They were not released until after the Japanese had surrendered.

Dr. Gardner is of the opinion that it would be perhaps better not to have an organized petition to the State Department. In would be better for each scholar interested in the question to write individually to the State Department. I am inclined to agree with Dr. Gardner, and it is my hope that you may do something to help.

With kindest regards,
Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM HUNG.

EXHIBIT No. 745–F

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,
DEPARTMENT OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGES,
Berkeley, Calif., June 19, 1946.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: I enclose a letter I wrote to Mr. Vincent which I hope is self-explanatory. I wonder whether you would join the group of American scholars who are trying to stave off the worst from these two men. I learned today that the repatriation has been postponed for some time so it would not be too late to take action on their behalf.

I understand that you have inquired after Dr. Heissig. All I know about him is contained in the enclosed letter. If you wish to have a list of his publications I can supply it. Today I received a volume of several hundred pages published by him (it is just off the press) entitled, "Bolus Erike." It is a Mongolian chronicle of the 18th century. I am preparing a review of it for the JAOS. Professor Boodberg authorizes me to state that he shares my views regarding the scholarship of both Dr. Fuchs and Dr. Heissig.

I hope that you, Mrs. Lattimore, and David are enjoying the best of health. It would be pleasant to have some news of you.

I am scheduled to give a series of lectures for the Lowell Institute in the last half of October and the first two weeks in November. Following the lectures I plan to go to China on the first ship sailing after November 15th. I will stay in China until August or September of 1947, at which time I shall resume my duties at this University. I am looking forward to the trip to China and hope that the political situation will not interfere with my work there.

With kindest regards to you and all good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

F. D. LESSING.

(1) Author: Rasipung Suy.
Ansd.: 13 July 46, Sydney, N. S.

EXHIBIT No. 745–G

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,
DEPARTMENT OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGES,
Berkeley, Calif., June 17, 1946.

Mr. JOHN CARTER VINCENT,
Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs,
State Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. VINCENT: My colleague, Dr. Woodbridge Bingham, has permitted me to use his name in introducing myself to you.

I have just received a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Wright, dated Peiping, June 6, to the effect that two scholars, Dr. Walter Fuchs, a German, and Dr. Walther Hessig, an Austrian, residents of Peiping, China, are going to be repatriated within a few days. I am anxious to join the group of American and English scholars who have appealed or will appeal to the State Department on behalf of these two men.

I have known Dr. Fuchs for twenty-two years and I have not the slightest doubt as to his scholarly and personal qualifications. I met him first in 1924 when he was an assistant in the Far Eastern Department of the Museum für Volkerkunde in Berlin, where he had a very fine record. Since that time I have followed his scholarly development with growing respect. I have read his many contributions in the field of Sino-Manchu studies and I share the admiration of my American colleagues who have had an opportunity to use these works. Among these persons I wish to cite Professor Knight Biggerstaff, of Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, whose sound judgment can be relied upon.

My personal relations with Dr. Fuchs have been merely sporadic, but I have always regretted that a closer contact was not possible. As to his political activities I cannot make a statement based on personal observation, but I have indirect evidence which leads me to believe that he has never harbored pro-Nazi views. I base this opinion also on my acquaintance with his family. I have reason to believe that his antecedents would have prevented him from siding with the enemy.

I do not know Dr. Heissig personally, but I have received several letters and reprints of his articles from him since December of last year. The letters furnish me with a clear picture of his scholarly achievements and projects so far, and the reprints give me a clear insight into his methods. I am impressed with the soundness and erudition as demonstrated by his writings, and I am sure that we can expect from him many important contributions in a much neglected field. He is about 35 years old. People who know him speak very highly about his moral character and personality.

To send these people back to what was formerly Germany and Austria would be tantamount to wrecking their scholarly careers and depriving American and international scholarship of the results of a highly specialized but very important work in a field in which they are generally recognized authorities. I understand that very few, if any, collections of Oriental books and manuscripts are left in Central Europe for the pursuance of research, and it is imperative for the continuance of their research that they have access to original sources.

I wonder whether it would not be better to secure, in some form or other, their cooperation in the development of Oriental studies in this country, or in an American institution in the Orient. I feel that the problems of the postwar period especially in Orientology are so pressing and the scarcity of experienced workers is so great that no honest, well-trained worker can be spared, and we just cannot afford to waste the life work of anyone qualified and ready to work with us. The very fact that judicious Dr. Leighton Stuart has singled out these two men and appointed them professors at Yenching University should vouchsafe for their reliability and capability.

I trust that it will be possible for you to take immediate action on behalf of these two men.

Very sincerely yours,

FERDINAND D. LESSING,
Agassiz Professor of Oriental Languages.

EXHIBIT No. 745–H

MUSQUASH LAKE, MAINE, 21 June 1946.

Mr. JOHN KULLGREN,
2800 Woodley Road NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN: We are on our way through to Nova Scotia, and yesterday in Bangor we picked up a batch of mail, in which was your letter, mentioning Torgny's MS and also Heissig and Fuchs. I was very much relieved to hear the Obergs had got the money I sent them, and I hope I shall be able to find a publisher for the MS, though on a thing like that you never know. I very much appreciate your taking the trouble to bring the MS.

You must have had a fascinatingly interesting time, staying in Peiping as much as three weeks. I was there only three days, and wasn't nearly satisfied.

About Heissig and Fuchs, I'll write to the State Department. I don't feel that I can give a carte blanche recommendation for the clearance of men when I don't know yet whether the military have cleared them. However, in the case of Heissig I had already cabled Chu Chia-hua, Minister of Education. The Chinese certainly need scholars in Manchu and Mongol; and if Yenching is willing to offer them jobs, so much the better, as their work will also be available to American scholarship.

We'll be back in Baltimore about August 1.

With regards to both you and your wife,

Very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

EXHIBIT No. 745–I

MUSQUASH LAKE, MAINE, June 21, 1946.

Mr. JOHN CARTER VINCENT,
Division of Far Eastern Affairs,
Department of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOHN CARTER: We are on our way through to Nova Scotia, and in Bangor yesterday a batch of mail caught up with us. In it were letters from John Kullgren, who is, I believe, still a civilian employee of the War Department, and from Arthur F. Wright, writing from 12 Fang Chia Hutung, An Ting men nei, Peiping—both writing about the cases of Walter Fuchs and Walther Heissig, the first a German scholar in Manchu (and in several other languages), and the second a German scholar in Mongol.

Both men have been accused of Nazi intelligence activities in the part of China occupied by the Japanese, where they spent the war years. Fuchs, however, has now been offered a professorship in Manchu at Yenching University, and Heissig a professor in Mongol. President Leighton Stuart of Yenching has interested himself on behalf of both men.

Fuchs and Heissig are, however, both liable to deportation from China by the Chinese Government. The question is whether American scholars should show an interest on their behalf, and express their interests to the Department of State.

My feeling is that political clearance of these men depends primarily on the opinion of them formed by the Army's investigators in China. Without knowledge of their views, I should certainly not recommend the admittance of either man to America. On the other hand, I can see good reasons why both men should be allowed to stay in China. The Chinese are seriously short of men trained in the Manchu and Mongol languages. If these two men can be employed at Yenching, their work will be accessible to American scholarship also.

Since Leighton Stuart has already interested himself in their behalf, I believe that a favorable expression of interest on the part of the American Embassy would be appropriate.

Regards to Betty. We'll be back about August 1.

Sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

EXHIBIT No. 745–J

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Ambassador LEIGHTON STUART
American Embassy,
Nanking, China.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: A friend has shown me a clipping from a Shanghai paper, already several months old, indicating that at that time Walter Heissig had not yet been either cleared or sentenced as a Nazi. This news was a surprise to me, as I had earlier heard that he had already been repatriated to Austria. Because I believed he was no longer in China, I had taken no further steps to help him; but if he is still in China, and if you should think that he deserves help, I should be glad to do anything further in my power.

My attitude in the matter is that I do not want to do anything to help any man who was a genuine Nazi. I do not, however, believe in persecuting people who merely because they were in a position where they were under the control of Nazis complied enough to "get by." The newspaper clipping which I saw indicated that you were sufficiently convinced of Heissig's good character to offer him a position at Yenching.

I am glad to have this opportunity to tell you how much I admire the teamwork between you and General Marshall. I am convinced that we may yet see a coalition Government in China in which "coalition" does not consist of the appointment of powerless men who are only nominally not members of one dominating party, and does consist of the grant of proportionate power as well as proportionate representation to all major political movements and regional interests in China.

Wishing you every success.

Yours very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

EXHIBIT No. 745–K

THE FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Nanking, February 7, 1947.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Walter Hines Page School of International Relations,
The Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: I have your letter and am writing at once to explain that I had made active efforts on behalf of Walter Heissig before coming into my present post. This was based on what I had known of him and had learned from others who knew him better. When, however, the American military authorities demanded his detention for investigation because of information they had, there seemed nothing more that I could do. I understand that the inquiry was as thorough and impartial as would be expected under these circumstances, but I have no inside knowledge as to the evidence against him.

Thanks for your kind words about what General Marshall and I have been attempting. It was no slight compensation in all these difficulties to have the opportunity to know him at close quarters. I wish it were possible to discuss these problems with you and in the light of the latest developments benefit by your opinions.

With warm personal regards.

Very sincerely yours,

LEIGHTON STUART.

EXHIBIT No. 745–L

JANUARY 23, 1947.

Mr. FLOYD E. MASTEN,
American Embassy, Rome, Italy.

DEAR MR. MASTEN: Many thanks for your letter of December 27. I am delighted to have this opportunity of thanking you for the Mongolian books which you mailed to me on behalf of Dr. Walter Heissig. I am also glad to know that you are going back to China again. Since you have imperiled yourself by making the offer, I shall almost certainly pester you with requests of one kind or another. After the great difficulty of publishing books and research work during the war in China, a number of good publications are beginning to come out, and I am anxious to get hold of those which deal with Sinkiang, Mongolia, and Manchuria.

I should appreciate it very much if you would write me your frank opinion of Dr. Heissig. He made a very favorable personal impression on me on the one occasion on which I saw him; but it is always possible to be fooled. I have tried to help him as far as I could on the question of being repatriated from China. My feeling is that as a German he was in a position where he had to comply with requests for reports when these were demanded of him. On the other hand, the volume of scholarly work which he produced while in China would indicate that he did not have much time left over for spying. My attitude in such matters is that I see no need for persecuting people whose choice was between martyrdom and stringing along with the Nazis who had control over them. I like to be cautious, however, because I decidedly am not interested in helping to save the skins of people who really believed in the Nazi cause and really worked to make it succeed.

Your very sincerely,

OWEN LATTIMORE.

EXHIBIT No. 745–M

THE FOREIGN SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
American Embassy, Rome, Italy, 27 Dec. 46.

Dr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR PROFESSOR LATTIMORE: Shortly before I left Peiping last spring, I mailed you some Mongolian books, ones which Dr. Walter Heissig said he had purchased for you. The books were mailed through the APO on April 5. Naturally I'm curious to learn if the same ever reached you. I'm returning to China next Spring (May). If there are some contacts I can make for you, I would be happy to help you.

My address in China will be % American Consulate General, Shanghai, China.

Very truly yours,

FLOYD E. MASTEN, Attaché.

(Return address on envelope:) Floyd E. Masten, Am. Embassy #1, P. M., N. Y., N. Y., APO 528.

EXHIBIT No. 745–N

DEARING FARM,
Bethel, Vermont, July 12, 1948.

Dr. WALTHER HEISSIG,
(13b) Landsberg (Lech), Hindenburgring 12,
American Zone, Germany.

DEAR DR. HEISSIG: Your letter of June 9 has reached me safely and I am delighted to be in touch with you again. I am particularly encouraged to know that in spite of all difficulties you are able to some extent to keep up your Mongol studies. I shall of course continue to keep in touch with your case, though I must frankly say that my influence is extremely limited.

I am writing this from the country, where I was working for the summer. Consequently, I do not have most of my Mongol books with me. The Japanese book about Old Stone Monuments in Manchuria may be with some other Japanese books which I lent to a colleague who reads Japanese. I am writing to Baltimore to see if he can identify the book. If so, I shall ask him to have photostats made of the two inscriptions which you need. Otherwise, this may have to wait until I get back to Baltimore at the end of August.

I was out in California 2 weeks ago, and there had a very pleasant visit with Arthur and Mary Wright.

Yours very sincerely,

———— ————.

EXHIBIT No. 745—O

(13b) LANDSBERG (LECH) HINDENBURGRING 12,
June 9, 1948.

Dr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
W. Hines Page School of International Relations,
Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: Thank you so much for your kind letter which I received the other day. I am very thankful that the interest you have shown on my behalf and I sincerely hope that your efforts will prove successful.

I was greatly relieved by your information that you received all books purchased formerly at Peking. That I could not finish my biography of all the Mongol modern publications published during the war makes me feel sorry. But there remained many other things I could not finish. But Lowenthal's information is right: I am able to keep my knowledge intact. I am working in a very limited way during my leisure on the biography of the Lamaist missionary Neyici toyin who was in the seventeenth century the great adversary of Shamanism in eastern Mongolia. I have with me the Peiping xylograph of his Mongol biography and am transcribing and editing it, as well as preparing an English translation. The problems arising from it are fascinating: it is the only Mongol authentic source which tells us about the ways in which the subjugation as well as amalgamation of Shamanism has been done. But as long as I am here nothing final is to be expected.

It might be of some interest to you that Messrs. Roever, Reel, and Donovan, Attorn. Boston, Pemberton-House, Pemberton Square, will file or have already filed a habeas corpus writ for the whole case in which I am involved. Besides that it was sent to Judge Sears, International Institute of Buffalo, 610 Deleware Avenue, Buffalo 2, N. Y., Judge of the Appellate Court of the State of New York and a former presiding judge at Nuremberg, an elaborate statement about the particular phase of the Peiping group. I do not know what Judge Sears undertook, as we have no answer. It may interest you to contact Judge Sears and obtain the brief for further information.

In the last paragraph of your letter you proclaimed your willingness to do something for me. My chief aim is to leave my present whereabouts in order to proceed in my research work. The present ratio of nourishment in Germany does not help to remain fit for work, however. I may ask you in the next weeks to help me in obtaining some material concerning the seventeenth century in Mongolia.

Very sincerely yours,

WALTHER HEISSIG.

P. S.—Amongst the books I have purchased for you was also a small booklet in Japanese language about Old Stone Monuments in Manchuria. It deals about two stone inscriptions concerning early Lama missionaries in Mandju, Mongol-Tibeton, dated 1638 and 1658. Of the text of these two inscriptions I urgently would need fotostates. Could you kindly arrange that for me?

HEISSIG.

EXHIBIT No. 745—P

LANDSBERG (LECH) HINDENBURGRING 12,
14.111.49.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University,
Baltimore.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: I feel ashamed that I trouble you again with a letter within such a short time. Yet I think it necessary to inform you about the present state of my affairs because you showed all the time such friendly interest in my fate.

Developments here in Germany were the following:

(1) Few weeks ago a Reviewing Board under Judge H. Picthford, of the Judge Advocate Office, Munich, reviewed the Nanking Case by order of the War Department as well as of the Judge Advocate General, Heidelberg. The results of this review were: (a) All prisoners convicted in the Nanking case (amongst them I) are not guilty; (b) did not commit any war crime; (c) would not have committed a war crime even assuming all facts charges with were true.

(2) Result of this review were handed over to JAG Heidelberg, where a Colonel Fleischer is the officer in charge of this case. He promised to deal with this case within the next weeks. Colonel Fleischer informed at March 3d, 49, a spokesman of the Evangelical Churches, that General Clay does not intend to intervene in the form of clemency and that instead of it the outcome of our procedures before the Circuit Court of Washington concerning habeas corpus will be waited for.

Development in U. S. A. were the following now:

(1) Our lawyer, Mr. Frank Reel (Roever, Reel, and Donovan, Boston, Pemberton House), filed an appeal against the denial of habeas corpus with the Washington Court of Appeal. There was already one session, in which the president of the court declared that he was much more bothered about the legal situation uncovered there than he had ever expected to be. Final decision is still pending.

(2) In the cause of this procedure our lawyer had to publish all legal material pertaining the question of jurisdiction, etc. Amongst them were some very peculiar documents from the side of the respondents, i. e., Mr. Royall, Forrestal, etc. From these documents, held until now as restricted or secret material, but uncovered now by the course of legal procedure, the following things could be detracted: (a) the trial at Shanghai was held for purely political reasons. Telegram, April 19, 1946, sent by the China Command to Washington asking permission to start a trial against Germans, has the following passus: "Local political situation makes trial by United States military commission in China strongly advisable" (cf. Respondents Exhibit No. 3).

(b) Upon this telegram granted Washington, War Department, with telegram, July 6, 1946, authority to the United States Forces, China Theater, to try "violations of the laws and customs of war and German soldiers, civilians * * * who are charged with violation of the German surrender terms" (cf. Respondents Exhibit No. 4). Authority was granted to try the Germans "provided the Chinese Government acquiesces."

(c) The Chinese Government acquiesced not earlier than November 26, 1946, to try before an American Military Commission war criminals only who had committed crimes against Americans. At that time I and the other men of the Nanking case were already arrested by the American authorities for several months, served with charges, and the prosecution had at that time already nearly finished their part. When at the beginning of the trial in the early days of October a Chinese defense counsel, Mr. Yang, of Shanghai, asked for dismissal of the accused on the basis that no authorization by the Chinese Government could be shown, the court ruled against him, although at that time existed in reality no such authorization. I, furthermore, have to point out, that Washington had made distinct discrimination between "the violations of the laws and war" and "violation of the German surrender terms," and that the Chinese Government at November 26, '46, acquiesced only to trial of war criminals. Yet we were charged with violation of surrender terms, for which no authorization was given by the Chinese and which constitutes no war crime.

(3) When Mr. Frank Reel, our American lawyer, inquired with the War Department about the finding of the Munich Reviewing Board, he was answered that "although action is being considered, probably in the nature of clemency, as yet no final action had been taken," (letter of Mr. Reel, February 16, 1949). To this Mr. Reel gives the following commentary: "My guess is that the opinion to that effect, that the prisoners did not commit a war crime, even assuming all facts charged were true, may never be published, and that instead clemency will be granted so that the habeas corpus remedy ceases to exist."

In spite of the fact that we legally are already for nearly three years imprisoned innocently and unjustified, nobody seems now willing to take the responsibility for set us free. Public opinion seems to be stronger than justice.

I wrote all this in details to you because I think it is now the time to do something about. Already many Senators and leading people took an interest in this case. It will over a long be impossible to prevent leaking the truth out.

The turning point seems to be that the same person who as Judge Advocate of the China Theater conducted the trial in Shanghai, is today in a responsible position in the War Crimes Section of the War Department. But is it justified that the face of somebody is saved for the price of the fate of 18 men who according to the finding of all law experts are not guilty and no war criminals?

It might interest you, that a professor of the Law School of the University of Chicago, Mr. Ernest W. Puttkammer, working on his own about this case, came to the same opinion as the Reviewing Board at Munich. Now Mr. P. has offered his services, as well as that of some colleagues of his of the University of Chicago, to the Judge Advocate General in Heidelberg for making an expert's opinion about the legal situation.

Thus things from the legal point are clear but nobody wants to take the responsibility—and I am still here and wonder how long that shall continue although it is now black on white that I am not guilty and no war criminal.

The facts I presented to you are no allegations; you can find them printed in the booklets presenting the exhibits for the proceedings before the appellate court. Mr. Reel, of Roever, Reel and Donovan, Boston, Pemberton House, will gladly give you access to this.

I beg you to understand me why I wrote you in such a length. I sincerely hope that there is a way to bring this stagnant situation to a solution. To create a legal scandal is in nobody's interest; there must be a way to solve all this mix up.

I hope you received my letter as well as the paper about Nayici toyin. Please let me know what you think about. Once more, forgive me for stealing so much of your valuable time with this my letter.

Sincerely yours,

WALTHER HEISSIG.

EXHIBIT No 745—Q

LANDSBERG (LECH), HINDENBURGRING 12.

Mr. OWEN LATTIMORE,
Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

DEAR MR. LATTIMORE: Thank you so much for your kind letter of April 20th. I am very much delighted about the news that you shall bring my Neyici Toyin edition to print. I hope it can be done. As already announced in my previous letter, I shall forward to you the final manuscript (which contains only minor changes) within the next few weeks. I am, of course, well aware of the fact that my notes—i. e., the English of my notes—need to be brushed up. But I hope that will make not too great a difficulty.

I have to thank you too for your quick consent to the translations of your two books by Mr. Albricht and me. Would you kindly let me know soon of the results of your inquiry about the copyright situation, as I should like to convey this to the interested German publishers. I hope that the copyright situation will not make insurmountable difficulties, because I have learned that in many cases of translations of American books the copyright situation made no difficulties at all.

Your consent for having the books translated by Mr. Albricht and me is for us a good asset in further negotiations with the publishers. In case it should be necessary, I perhaps shall have to ask for a more explicit authorization to do the translations, yet I do not think it necessary.

In the meantime I think you will have heard from my attorney, Mr. Reel, about my legal situation. Since my previous letter I have learned that a Senate committee, consisting of the Senators Mr. Richard B. Russell, Estes Kefauver, and with Raymond E. Baldwin as a chairman, is going to investigate the legal situation of the whole China case.

And now I want to bet you for the favour to get a copy of your newest book—Situation in Asia—which was due for (Ea ar).

Once more, thank you very much for all your kindness, and I hope you will let me know soon more about the possibility of having the Neyic Toyin Monogr. published.

Finally I send you my congratulation to the enlivening of Mongol Studies at your university, which doubtlessly is due to your efforts.

I remain,

Your very sincerely,

WALTHER HEISSIG.

Mr. FARRELL. I was pointing out a series of events which brought home to me that there was pressure and fairly powerful pressure being brought to bear in some very high place in China that caused the amount of curiosity involved in this case, because no sooner was Dr.

Heissig apprehended and confined in the Ward Road jail along with others than a number of propositions were made. One coming directly from Lattimore was one in which it was suggested that Dr. Heissig was a very valuable man on the subject of Mongolia and that he should be released from jail and employed by OSS. I wish to emphasize that this was done in the face of war crime charges outstanding against the enemy national at that time. I wish also to point out that Mr. Lattimore in making this move ignored the fact that this intervention on his part on behalf of Dr. Heissig had to do with the entire war crimes case as it was stacking up because the other enemy nationals who had been arrested and charged as a group would have to be released if we released Dr. Heissig because he was an important enough personality in this general group for us to require his presence in the court room for trial.

There was a letter written to the United States Ambassador in China that came to my attention when I was called up to the Embassy in Nanking by the minister plenipotentiary, W. Walton Butterworth, who informed me that Mr. Lattimore was interested in this case and it seemed complicated.

Mr. MORRIS. Butterworth told you that Lattimore was interested in the case?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Senator SMITH. What was Butterworth?

Mr. FARRELL. He was minister plenipotentiary in the United States Embassy in Nanking at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what positions he subsequently held? Do you know anything about his subsequent movements?

Mr. FARRELL. I had a Christmas card from him in Stockholm. Well, he returned to the United States before I did, and I had a Christmas card from him when he was head of the Far East desk and subsequently I had another card from him when he was in our Embassy in Stockholm, and I haven't heard whether he's changed from there. I don't know his present location.

I explained the case to Mr. Butterworth, and in the strongest terms he asked me to convey a message to the judge advocate in Shanghai to prosecute the case with all vigor.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean by "in the strongest terms," Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. Mr. Butterworth explained to me that he had similar difficulties with Nazi or German enemy nationals in Spain. I don't recall the specific position he had in our Spanish Embassy, but it seems that he was confronted with a problem immediately after the German surrender.

He told me that he could have repatriated every considered dangerous enemy national from Spain back to Germany within the first 2 weeks following the Germany surrender if the Army had given him any cooperation or if the Air Force had given him any cooperation, but failing in that, he was stuck with these people, and the longer they were allowed to tarry in Madrid the more arrogant they became and the Spanish antipathy toward them dwindled coincidentally, so that what originally might have been a justified removal of these people who were going to use Spain as some place not to be extradited from fizzled while he was waiting for transportation, and he intimated that I could expect the same kind of delays in dealing with the Army and that I was not to be discouraged by it, that he would give me any help that he could.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was his attitude one of ordering you with regard to taking certain action with regard to Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. Actually I don't think Mr. Butterworth could have ordered me because this was half in the military province and half in the State Department province and this was an effort to bring the military and the State Department together on one subject.

Mr. SOURWINE. I was asking you about his attitude, because you said he made this request "in the strongest terms."

Mr. FARRELL. He encouraged it in very strong terms, yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. He was urging it upon you?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, he was urging it.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know of any other efforts that Mr. Lattimore made on behalf of Dr. Walter Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. I cannot say for sure whether he communicated with General Marshall, but I gathered on my next trip back to the Embassy that he did, because I was told by Mr. Butterworth that the general had become interested in the case and wanted full particulars on it, and I suggested that perhaps in dealing with the general it would be better for the judge advocate, who was in command of the operation from a military standpoint, to see General Marshall, and that was done.

Mr. MORRIS. And did the judge advocate see General Marshall?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, he did. That was Col. E. H. Young.

May I point out a quick succession of things that happened that also indicated pressure from above on this case?

Mr. MORRIS. If it is in line with the general questions directed toward you, will you tell the committee whatever you know about what efforts Owen Lattimore made on behalf of Walter Heissig?

Mr. SOURWINE. I might insert one question before he begins that testimony.

Were you told anything by Mr. Butterworth as to how he learned of Mr. Owen Lattimore's expression of interest in this matter?

Mr. FARRELL. Not specifically.

Mr. SOURWINE. He did not tell you whether Lattimore telephoned or called someone else, or wrote him a letter or what?

Mr. FARRELL. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. You can answer Mr. Morris' question now.

Mr. MORRIS. You were going to give more evidence in reply to that question.

Mr. FARRELL. I was going to give a similar example of the worry on the part of our senior command officers as to this case, not because of its merits and not entirely because of its complications, but because of somebody higher than them was worried about it and they wanted to know what their footing was. That's what I gathered in talking to Gen. Ray T. Maddocks, who was General Wedemeyer's chief of staff.

Mr. SOURWINE. And Mr. Morris, forgive me if I might interrupt. I think we need a little closer tie.

Mr. Morris' question was about any other instances you know of of intervention by Mr. Lattimore. You have prefaced your remarks by a statement that you were going to tell about other instances of concern by persons in the Armed Forces because their superiors were interested. That is not quite a close enough tie to show that it is responsive to Mr. Morris' question.

Mr. MORRIS. I wish, Mr. Farrell, you would just restrict your answers to evidence that came to your attention directly or indirectly that Owen Lattimore had intervened on behalf of Dr. Walther Heissig.

Mr. FARRELL. General Wedemeyer's staff G–2 at that time was a Colonel Ivan D. Yeaton and he called Colonel O'Connor, the judge advocate's assistant to his office and said in words, to this effect: That this was a hot potato, that Mr. Lattimore was interested in the case, and that it left the Army in the position of taking the words of a marine captain against the word of Owen Lattimore as to whether Dr. Heissig engaged in the things that he was charged with.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you present at this interview?

Mr. FARRELL. No; but Colonel O'Connor reported this to me.

Mr. MORRIS. Was any evidence adduced at the prosecution, Mr. Farrell, that would indicate that Dr. Walther Heissig was guilty of the charges preferred against him?

Mr. FARRELL. May I have that question again, please?

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read the question back for the witness, please?

(Whereupon, the record was read by the reporter.)

Mr. FARRELL. The United States military authorities, that is, the United States military commission which tried the case, believed the evidence presented and Dr. Heissig was convicted and sentenced.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the evidence presented to the court? Will you tell us about it?

Mr. FARRELL. The evidence presented at the court had to do with a description of the functions of the intelligence organization with which Dr. Heissig was connected. I think I can best and most compactly describe these to you by quoting from the Japanese intelligence officers who took the stand and testified as to what kind of intelligence the Germans were collecting for themselves and for the Japanese high command.

Mr. MORRIS. This is the testimony of the Japanese officers who testified at that trial?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is this testimony that you heard, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. This is testimony that is in the court record.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you presenting an authenticated copy of the court record?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, I am. These are original documents from the court record.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you just generally summarize it for us, Mr. Farrell? We don't need great detail.

This is really a collateral matter, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you want those documents in the appendix?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; I would like them introduced in the appendix.

Senator SMITH. They will be received.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 744A" and appear on p. 4439.)

Mr. MORRIS. Will you just very quickly tell us the general nature?

Mr. FARRELL. Here are the general functions: Bureau Ehrhardt, German high command intelligence function in the Far East continued activities in defiance of the German surrender on behalf of their Japanese axis allies. These functions were described by Col. Hidaka Tomiaki, former G–2 in charge of foreign intelligence, China headquarters, of the Japanese Army in Peking.

The principal missions of the organization in Peking were to get all available information on the following:

1. Possible landings of United States forces on the China coast.

Mr. MORRIS. Is this subsequent to May 8, 1945?

Mr. FARRELL. This is before and after May 8, 1945.

They continued in the same operations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Farrell, any acts committed before May 8, 1945, would not have been actionable before your court, would they?

Mr. FARRELL. That is true. These men would merely have been serving their government in the capacity assigned to them.

Mr. MORRIS. So anything prior to May 8 should not go into the record at this time because they would not have been crimes for which they would have been convicted.

Mr. FARRELL. No, sir. The Japanese have testified that this is what they were doing before and after, so in entering these functions this is also what German intelligence actively engaged in subsequent to the German surrender.

2. Movements of the United States Air Forces against north China.
3. United States Naval Fleet movements.
4. United States submarine activities along the China coast.
5. Relations between United States and Russia.
6. Relations between United States and Yenan.
7. The Soviet supply route in Northwest via Lanchow.
8. The supply route of the Chungking Chinese armies via Hsian.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Farrell, without interrupting, what we would like to have would be a very concise statement of what the evidence was to the effect that Heissig did, in fact, carry on his hostile activities against the United States after May 8, 1945.

Could you not give us just a general résumé of that? We cannot go into that much detail. We have to adjourn shortly.

Mr. FARRELL. He and the others concerned with the Bureau Ehrhardt were engaged in the collection of military, economic, and secret intelligence against the United States and its allies in the United Nations.

Mr. MORRIS. And individual incidents and individual acts committed by Heissig were testified to during the court proceeding?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes; as to what his functions were in the organization in Peking; what was he doing.

Mr. MORRIS. Did the military court find him guilty on the basis of that testimony?

Mr. FARRELL. It did.

Mr. MORRIS. And he was in fact sentenced to 30 years?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. During this period, Mr. Farrell, was there any evidence that came to your attention that Dr. Walther Heissig may have been connected with some Soviet organization?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes; there were several instances of that.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about it, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. The first came from the colonel whom I was just referring to.

Mr. MORRIS. This is the Japanese military intelligence colonel?

Mr. FARRELL. Japanese military intelligence chief in Peking, Colonel Hidaka.

He complained somewhat bitterly about Mr. Heissig, looking back after the Japanese surrender, when he realized that for months prior to Russia's entry into the war against Japan in the Far East, Heissig, whom he had counted on as his most reliable intelligence source, had repeatedly assured him that this was entirely out of the question. It must be understood that Heissig was an analyzer of code intercepts and open broadcasts by way of Russia and Mongolia.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you know that, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. This came out in testimony.

Mr. MORRIS. In testimony during the proceeding?

Mr. FARRELL. And the Japanese, through their lighter probing along the Manchurian border, had reason to believe that the Russians were mounting an offensive, but repeatedly looking back on the situation, Colonel Hidaka sized it up as being absolutely deceitful on Dr. Heissig's part that he should have tried to persuade him to believe that not only were the Russians not mounting an offensive, but they were, on the contrary, demobilizing.

Mr. MORRIS. So this Colonel Hidaka told you that Dr. Heissig was giving him misleading advice as to the mobilization of Soviet forces with respect to the Japanese forces; is that right?

Mr. FARRELL. That's right, and he suspected that, if not from the beginning of Dr. Heissig's intelligence operations in the Far East in 1941, then certainly for from 6 to 9 months before the Russian attack across the Manchurian border into Japanese territory, certainly during that time he was in some way playing a double agent on behalf of both Russia and Berlin in the same pattern that Richard Sorge had done in Japan.

There was another instance of this from one of the more prominent members of the German community of China, and that was from Baron Ernst von Reichenau, who was the brother of Field Marshal Walter von Reichenau.

Mr. MORRIS. Is he the man who conquered Poland?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Baron von Reichenau had probed pretty deep into Soviet infiltration of the German communities in China, so much so that, at the end of the war, our intelligence agencies established very close liaison with him to procure the information that he had.

Baron von Reichenau said that he suspected Heissig of being a double agent working for both the Soviet Government as well as the German.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he cite any instances to support his conclusion?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes. He mentioned something about an intercept of information that was made along the camel-caravan route across Mongolia which indicated that Heissig had some clandestine contact with Soviet interests on the other side of the desert that Nazi intelligence knew nothing about. For that reason, a Gestapo man named Schmidt was sent from Shanghai to Peking.

Mr. MORRIS. What is his name?

Mr. FARRELL. Schmidt, S-c-h-m-i-d-t.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is this still part of what Von Reichenau said?

Mr. FARRELL. No; I finished with Von Reichenau.

Mr. SOURWINE. To whom did he say that?

Mr. FARRELL. Mr. Schmidt told this to me.

Mr. MORRIS. The Gestapo agent did tell you this?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What was he doing at that time?

Mr. FARRELL. He had Dr. Heissig under surveillance as a suspected double agent. Beyond that, a French intelligence officer connected with the French consulate——

Mr. MORRIS. Let me see if I understand that. This Gestapo agent, Schmidt, told you that in fact he did have Dr. Walther Heissig under surveillance in connection with a security check that the Nazis were conducting on Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. That's right.

Mr. MORRIS. Which indicated to you that they suspected him of betraying——

Mr. FARRELL. It indicated that the Gestapo chief of either China or Japan was double checking.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did it merely indicate it, or did Schmidt tell you that Von Reichenau had suspected——

Mr. FARRELL. Schmidt had nothing to do with Von Reichenau.

Mr. SOURWINE. You said Schmidt told you about the Von Riechenau story, or perhaps I am confused.

Mr. FARRELL. I'm sorry if I have confused you.

Von Reichenau told me what I testified to.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is what I wanted to find out. I misunderstood you, I guess, because I thought you said that Schmidt told you what von Reichenau had to say.

Mr. FARRELL. No; Von Reichenau gave me his personal observation.

Mr. SOURWINE. And did he tell you then that he did suspect Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes; he did.

Schmidt, I might add, was an unsavory character whom it was generally rumored in the German community in Shanghai had disposed of a German suspect with Soviet connections in the Shanghai community via the American gangster route of being taken for a ride.

After this was done, he had moved up to Peking and when we questioned him there we weren't concerned with what he had had to do with Shanghai police or with his orders as far as the suspected murder in Shanghai was concerned; we were interested in what his regard for Heissig was.

I mentioned also a French intelligence officer in Peking.

Mr. MORRIS. What's his name, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. Lieutenant Leouzon. He informed me that I should look into Dr. Heissig's past, it might involve or prove very interesting because he had a long history of double dealing, and that he suspected that he was a double agent during the—I think it was a year before the final surrender—serving both Soviet and Nazi intelligence but he gave me no tangible evidence that I could investigate further in that except that I went back into Heissig's history and found out that here is a highly intelligent Austrian who served in the Austrian Legion, which was an organization that provoked riots and caused incidents that gave the Ribbentrop command its excuse for moving in to quell disturbances.

Mr. MORRIS. Did that show up on any official document that you introduced into the record?

Mr. FARRELL. It shows up in an interesting way in that this man, besides suddenly changing citizenship as of the date—I don't understand German. Is there an English copy?—besides changing citizenship in 1935 and adopting German citizenship, suddenly turns out to be an SS officer almost overnight, which is according to German thinking his reward for having served and betraying his own country, Austria, to the German high command, or having helped to do it.

Mr. MORRIS. Where is Dr. Heissig now, do you know?

Is he still serving his 30-year sentence?

Mr. FARRELL. I am under the impression that through the intercession of a number of people along with Owen Lattimore, Dr. Heissig, whom I regard as one of the most dangerous international espionage agents that I have ever read about or come across, is now free in our occupied zone of either Germany or Austria.

Mr. MORRIS. How do you know that, Mr. Farrell?

Mr. FARRELL. Because after the Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Shanghai military commission——

Mr. MORRIS. Under which Dr. Heissig was convicted?

Mr. FARRELL. Under which he was convicted—and I am referring to the United States Supreme Court—after the Supreme Court confirmed their convictions and the jurisdiction in the case, in answer to any pleas that came to my cognizance, I believe all the people who were sentenced in Shanghai were released in Germany. I can't say this as a matter of fact, but there again you run into the same thing—if you freed any, you would have to free all, because the sentence in this case ran from life, 30, 20, 15, and down.

Mr. MORRIS. This line of questioning, Mr. Chairman, is directed to what Dr. Heissig is doing at the present time.

Senator SMITH. But now we are getting into a discussion of something else, it sounds like.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you given us your full information, Mr. Farrell, as to the present whereabouts of Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes. I don't know specifically where he is, but I should like to call attention to these letters already in your record without my reading them into this testimony——

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any knowledge bearing on the letters that are already introduced into our record?

Do you have any knowledge that will add to the letters that are in the record?

Mr. FARRELL. I have one observation that might be valuable to you, and that is that in this document [indicating transcript] Mr. Lattimore testified that quite by chance and for only a half hour, he met in Peking, China, a man named Dr. Heissig, and became so fascinated with him for some reason that he has spent an enormous amount of time obviously——

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that what Mr. Lattimore testified to in that record?

Mr. FARRELL. How is that worded again?

Mr. SOURWINE. What did Mr. Lattimore testify to in that record?

Mr. FARRELL. Mr. Lattimore testified in here—when questioned on whether or not he had written a letter or whether he had been intervened in behalf of Dr. Heissig—he said that he remembered writing a letter.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you say you have some comment on that?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, I do.

It is my understanding that this is supposed to be Mr. Lattimore's complete file of correspondence.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean by "this"?

Mr. FARRELL. The letters entered in here.

Mr. SOURWINE. Which we have already by reference inserted in this record?

Mr. FARRELL. All of the pages that we mentioned a while ago.

Senator SMITH. Letters in the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. MORRIS. They are in our record, too, Mr. Chairman.

Senator SMITH. All right.

Mr. FARRELL. This is supposed to be a complete record and this testimony reveals another letter that does not appear in here and it has no date, strangely.

I am curious about the date because it recommends Dr. Heissig's services to United States military intelligence in Germany, a letter addressed to an American general.

Mr. MORRIS. That was General Thorp, was it not? That is the reference to General Thorp in the Lattimore testimony?

Mr. FARRELL. That's right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any personal knowledge of Mr. Lattimore's dealings, if any, with Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. No, I don't.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know if he ever met him and if so, where, and for how long?

Mr. FARRELL. I only know from his testimony that he said he met him for a half hour in Peking.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any personal knowledge as to when he met him, where, and for how long?

Mr. FARRELL. No, I don't.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you told us all the instances of which you have any knowledge of intercession by Mr. Lattimore in behalf of Dr. Heissig?

Mr. FARRELL. All except a peculiar incident that occurred during the trial in which a man, whose name I don't recall at the moment, but who was assigned by the State Department as special adviser to T. V. Soong in Shanghai.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was this?

Mr. FARRELL. During the closing weeks of the trial in either—it probably was December of 1946 or January of 1947.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right; go ahead.

Mr. FARRELL. This man approached one of the members of the United States Military Commission in Shanghai and represented himself as bearing the sentiments of Owen Lattimore and told this member of the military commission that the United States Embassy in Nanking was not in any way interested in this case, and thought the whole thing detrimental to the prestige of the United States in China.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who was the member that he approached?

Mr. FARRELL. He approached Colonel Mallan who was the senior member of the court.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who told you about it?

Mr. FARRELL. Colonel Mallan decided that there was something suspicious about this——

Mr. SOURWINE. Who told you about it?

Mr. FARRELL. I am trying to explain how it came to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. I want to know who told you about it.

Mr. FARRELL. A conference was called by the judge advocate, Colonel Young——

Mr. SOURWINE. I want to know who told you about it. You can explain it afterward.

Mr. FARRELL. Colonel Young. May I tell you the circumstances?

Mr. SOURWINE. Please do.

Mr. FARRELL. Colonel Mallan thought this of such serious and such extraordinary nature that he went to the judge advocate——

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know what Colonel Mallan thought, do you?

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, I do; as a matter of fact.

Mr. SOURWINE. How do you know?

Mr. FARRELL. Because he expressed himself in the group that was assembled. The judge advocate called together the entire prosecution staff and the entire defense staff——

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you hear Colonel Mallan say what he thought?

Mr. FARRELL. I heard Colonel Mallan tell all of us that morning what had happened to him——

Mr. SOURWINE. A minute ago, you said that a man by the name of Young told you.

Mr. FARRELL. Yes, and Colonel Young called us together, and before the meeting Colonel Young told me—after all I was on his prosecution staff—he told me what the prosecution was.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am not trying to hamper you or to hurt your testimony, but if you heard somebody tell what his state of mind was, you can tell this committee what it was. Otherwise you have no way of knowing what a man's state of mind was.

Mr. FARRELL. Perhaps I am approaching it obliquely, but when I tried to tell you in a progression, you interrupted me, and brought me back to Colonel Young.

Mr. SOURWINE. I did that because I do not want this record to indicate a deviation.

Mr. FARRELL. Is it straight now?

Mr. SOURWINE. I hope so.

Go right ahead.

Mr. FARRELL. It is straight as far as I am concerned, I think.

Colonel Young called Colonel O'Connor and myself to his office and told us that somebody had approached one of the military commission, ostensibly with a message from the United States Embassy in Nanking that it was no longer interested in this case, and so forth, and that he was calling a meeting of both staffs in the morning to decide what the various lawyers thought they should do about it, whether there should be a mistrial, or a check on whether this message was correct or not.

Subsequently a courier was dispatched to Mr. Butterworth to check with both General Marshall and Ambassador Leighton Stuart, and reassure the court that there was no such——

Mr. SOURWINE. If you will pardon me, do you know whom he checked with?

Mr. FARRELL. I know that Colonel O'Connor went up to see Mr. Butterworth.

Mr. SOURWINE. And Mr. Butterworth said he checked?

Mr. FARRELL. Mr. Butterworth said that he checked and informed Colonel O'Connor to go back to the court and say that there was no truth at all to that, that the attitude of the United States Embassy had not changed with regard to the trial.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Butterworth said he had checked with both General Marshall and Leighton Stuart?

Mr. FARRELL. That is right.

Mr. SOURWIE. And then you heard from two persons with regard to this matter, two colonels?

Mr. FARRELL. With regard to what, this visit?

Mr. SOURWINE. That's right.

Mr. FARRELL. There was another meeting called the following morning—there was a recess in the trial—and both staffs were present and Colonel O'Connor reported back his conversation with Mr. Butterworth.

Mr. SOURWINE. As to the state of mind that we spoke of just a minute ago, you heard the colonel himself express his state of mind?

Mr. FARRELL. Colonel Mallan?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARRELL. Yes; I did.

Senator SMITH. Is that all?

Mr. MORRIS. I am finished; yes.

Senator SMITH. We will recess, then.

(Whereupon, at 3:45 p. m., Friday, April 4, 1952, the hearing was recessed, subject to the call of the Chair.)

EXHIBIT No. 744A

Secret Intelligence

PEIPING  MAIN OFFICE
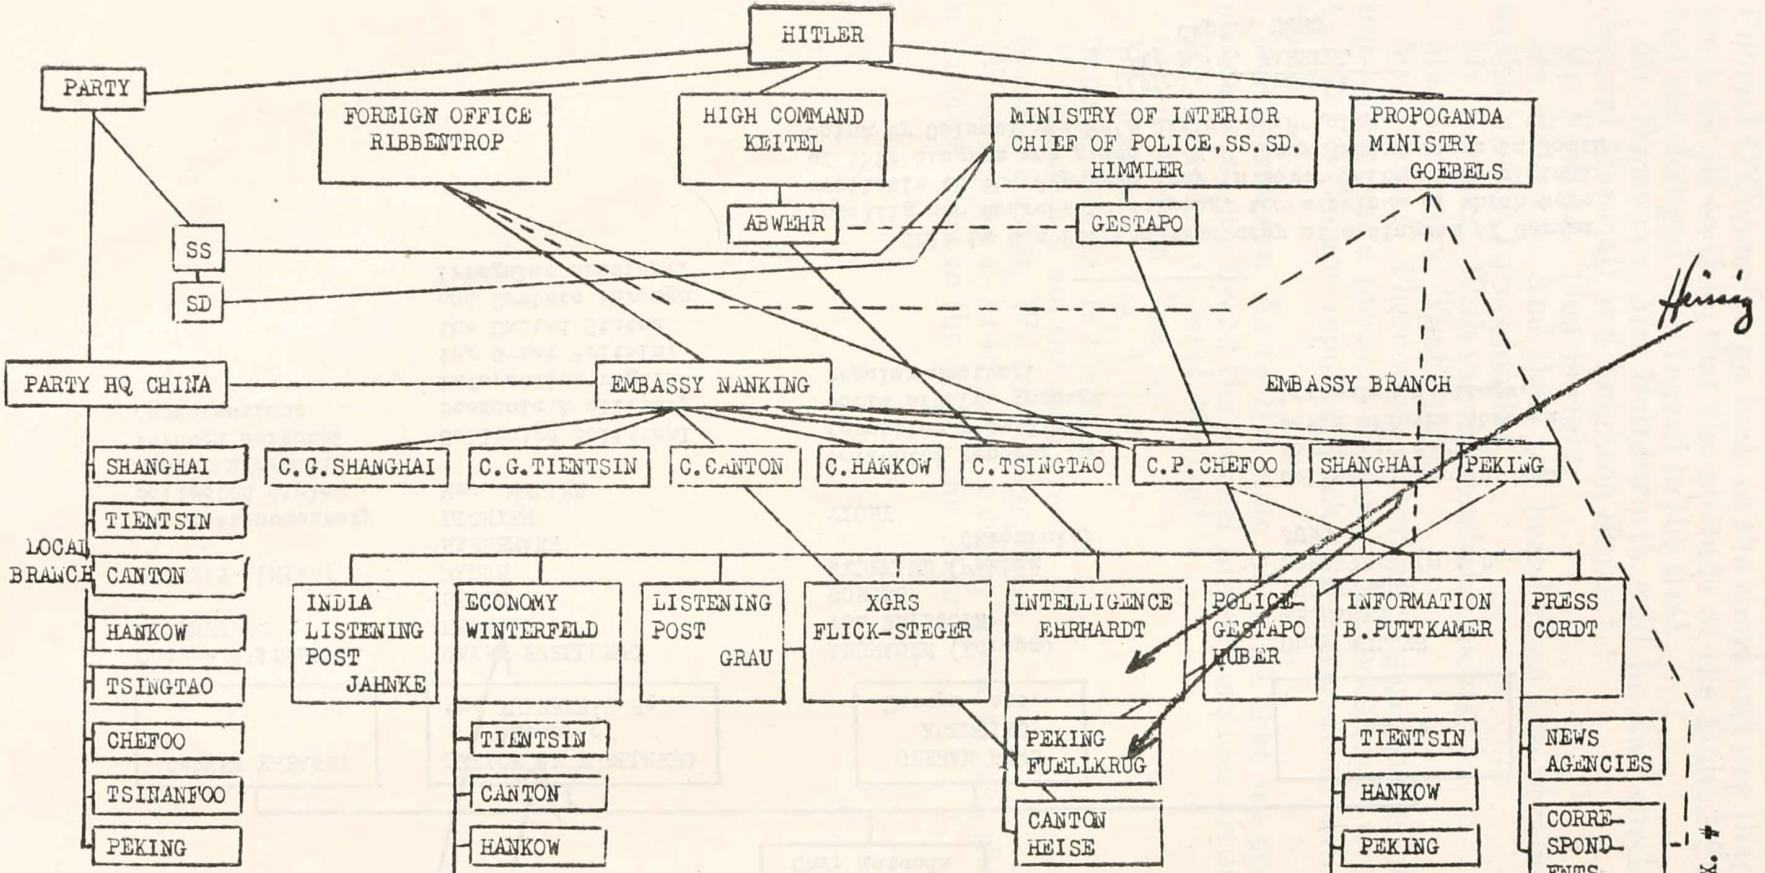
Chief: Col. T. Hidaka
Ass't: Lt. Shimura

UNITED STATES & Gt. BRITAIN
Chf: Natsuda

GERMAN EMBASSY	OFFICE OF FUELLKRUG Agency of the FUEHRER'S Hq.	GERMAN NEWS AGENCIES Europa etc.	D N .B.
Charge d'Affaires ALTENBURG. GUTZEIT (Miss) In cases necessary collected diplomatic information through personal conversations	Chf: FUELLKRUG HEISSIG STOCK MARSH HANSEMANN LICHTER Mrs. MÜLLER Collected political economic & military information regarding Great Britain, the United States and Soviets through irregular meetings.	ABSHAGEN (Europa) von BRIESSEN CORDES WEDEKIND (Peking Chronicle) TICHY Collected general information regarding world affairs through regular meeting.	Chf: MÜLLER ABSHAGEN LUCKENHAUS SPESHNEFF (D.A.Sov.) JUNG Collected general information regarding world affairs through irregular meetings.

This is a certified true copy of a diagram of German intelligence sources in Peiping, the services of which were available to the Japanese Army in North China. The original of this diagram was given to U.S. Army Headquarters in North China by Colonel Hidaka's Office in Peiping.

/s/ F. T. Farrell
/t/ F. T. FARRELL
Capt., USMC



This is my command of chain of command of various offices in China connected with the German Embassy in China. /s/ Franz Huber
Major of Police

Witnessed this date, 3 October 1946, at Shanghai, China, by:
/s/ Marvin M. Gray
USWD

PROS. TRANS. EX. #

STATEMENT

Colonel HIDAKA, Tomiaki, former G-2 in charge of foreign intelligence of China Headquarters of the Japanese Army in Peking, makes the following statement of his own free will and desire and without any payment or other consideration therefor:

At the time of the German surrender in May, 1945, we were advised by Tokyo radio that, in surrendering without notice to Japan, Germany had deserted her Axis partner and should be treated as an enemy.

However, as a matter of actual fact, the Germans in the Far East were treated differently. That is because so many important Germans were willing to cooperate with the Japanese. For instance, German Ambassador Stahmer and the German Gestapo Chief in the Far East, Mr. Meisinger, were extremely pro-Japanese. The German firms such as Defag and Melchers in Shanghai offered us their stocks of merchandise.

When the United States Forces took over Defag in Europe I asked Dr. Haas, head of Defag here in Peking, what his sentiments were. He told me that no matter if Defag officials in Europe cooperated with the U. S. Forces, the Germans in China will continue to collaborate with the Japanese.

The German Embassy office in Peking never announced to the Japanese any formal surrender of Germany. I have an opinion concerning this. In my opinion the Germans believed that it was possible for Japan to carry on the war for an indefinite period. During that period it was possible that the United Nations would split or sue for peace with Japan. In either event since (CHOP) the Germans in the Far East had never surrendered formally to anybody, it was possible for them to consider themselves a German Government in exile somewhat like the DeGaulle Government of France when France was occupied. If the United Nations split, suffered reverses, met (CHOP) defeat by some long chance, or if the United Nations sued for peace with Japan it was possible under this unique device that the Germans in the Far East might have been able to salvage something from the severe terms of unconditional surrender for Germany in Europe.

It is my opinion that Ambassador Stahmer and Mr. Meisinger had something to do with such an arrangment in Japan, and that this was the reason the Japanese did not treat the Germans as deserters, that this was the reason for the German desire to cooperate to a certain extent with the Japanese after the German surrender, and that this was the basic reason behind the fact that the Germans in China never formally notified the Japanese Government of surrender.

Although I do not speak or read English well enough to understand this, I have had it translated for me by my interpreter, Mr. Richard Hiroshi OYAMA, and I fully understand what I am about to subscribe to officially.

This statement consists of two (2) pages.

I swear that the contents of this statement are true to the best of my knowledge and recollection of the facts.

[s] T. Hidaka
[t] HIDAKA, TOMIAKI.
[s] (In Japanese characters)
(CHOP)

Witnessed this 27th day of May, 1946, in Peking, China, by:
[s] F T Farrell
[t] F. T. FARRELL, Capt., USMC.
Pros, Trans. Ex. #.

STATEMENT

(CHOP)

Colonel HIDAKA, Tomiaki, former G-2 in charge of foreign intelligence of China Headquarters of the Japanese Army in Peking, makes the following statement of his own free will and desire and without any payment or other consideration therefor:

(CHOP)

The principal missions of my organization in Peking were to get all available information on the following:

(1) Possible landings of United States Forces on the China Coast.
(2) Movements of United States Air Forces against North China.

(3) United States Naval Feet movements.
(4) United States submarine activities along the China coast.
(5) Relations between United States and Russia.
(6) Relations between United States and Yenan.
(7) The Soviet supply route in the Northwest via Lanchow.
(8) The supply route of the Chungking Chinese Armies via Hsian and Lohoku.
(9) The relations between Chungking and Yenan.
(10) The military intentions of Chungking and Yenan in North China.
(11) How United States assistance to Chungking was progressing via Persia, Armata and the Northwest Route.
(12) Russian shipping via Vladivostok and Petropavlovsk.

Of course, the German intelligence agency in Peking under Mr. Fuellkrug submitted to me any information it obtained on all of the above subjects. However, the principal missions of the Fuellkrug Office were to collect all available intelligence concerning:

(1) Russia and her political and military intentions.
(2) Chungking and her political and military intentions. (Mr. Fuellkrug got his Chungking information by radio interception by use of a head agent who was a former Chinese Government official from Ninghsia who worked agents in and out of Hsian, and from the headquarters of the Bureau Ehrhardt in Shanghai.)
(3) Yenan and the political and military intentions of the Chinese Communist Government.
(4) The Russian shipping out of Vladivostok and Petropavlovsk, ship to shore communications and communication between Moscow and Vladivostok. All Russian coded messages intercepted were sent to the Bureau Ehrhardt in Shanghai to be decoded and analyzed.

By agreement Mr. Fuellkrug's office gave me copies of all intelligence it obtained and was prohibited from collecting any information concerning the Japanese in North China.

Although I do not speak or read English well enough to understand this, I have had it translated for me by my interpreter, Mr. Richard Hiroshi OYAMA and I fully understand what I am about to subscribe to officially.

This statement consists of two (2) pages.

I swear that the contents of this statement are true to the best of my knowledge and recollection of the facts.

Witnessed this 27th day of May, 1946 in Peking, China, by:

[s] T. Hidaka
[t] HIDAKA, TOMIAKI.
[s] (In Japanese Characters)
(CHOP)

[s] F. T. Farrell
[t] F. T. FARRELL, Capt. USMC.

Pros. Trans. Ex. #.

---

11 APRIL 1946.

Major Hidaka, Takashi, former staff officer of the Japanese Chinese Expeditionary Forces in Charge of Information in Nanking, now Liaison Officer between the American and Japanese forces in Nanking, makes the following statement of his own free will and desire without payment or other consideration therefor:

I assumed charge of the information office at the Japanese Army Headquarters in Nanking in April, 1945 and continued in that post until the end of the war.

During that period we received information from ten radio intercepting posts in China, the most important of which were Canton, Shanghai, Peiping and Hankow.

The principal concern of the Japanese was in an American landing on the coast of China and as a result the most important information furnished us was that regarding American Fleet and troop movements.

We received from the Misumi Kikan in Canton much information secured from monitoring American military and naval broadcasts. We were not able to break the American codes so with messages sent in code we kept track of the frequency on which they were sent and kept a record of the number of messages and the number of times they were sent.

During the battle of Okinawa and certain movements of the American Fleet we were able to get reports on the radio conversations between elements of the forces on Okinawa and between warships which were in clear English.

The Japanese did not have high-speed apparatus in Canton so it was not possible for them to pick up much of these American broadcasts. The Germans in Canton under Captain Heise did have this high speed apparatus and furnished us with the intelligence regarding American movements. I never met Captain Heise nor asked him for this information nor expected it after the German surrender. But he continued to furnish the Misumi Kikan with information regarding American Fleet and troop movements.

Upon receipt of this information I would evaluate it and then send it to the Chief of the Second Section (which is concerned with information), who would in turn pass it on to the Chief of Staff. The information would then be given to the Officer in Charge of Operations for action, either in Tokyo or in China. In the event that an intercepting post would get news of immediate importance such as the location of a crippled American airplane carrier in the South China sea, it would send this message immediately and simultaneously to all airfields or battleships who would be in a position to take action.

I neither read nor speak English but this statement has been translated for me by Lt. Kimura, Shoji who reads and speaks both English and Japanese fluently and I understand the meaning of this statement completely.

This statement consists of two pages.

I swear that the contents of this statement are true to the best of my knowledge and recollection of the facts.

[s] TAKASHI HIDAKA.
[s] (In Japanese characters).

Witnessed this 11th day of April, 1946 in Nanking, China, by:
[s] John T. Thompson,
[t] JOHN T. THOMPSON.

Pros. Trans. Ex. #.

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10:40 a. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Arthur V. Watkins presiding.

Present: Senator Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

Senator WATKINS. The committee will resume session.

Mr. Morris, have you a witness to testify this morning?

Mr. MORRIS. Miss Miriam Farley is here to identify two documents, Senator. Miss Farley has just been sworn in executive session.

Senator WATKINS. The record will show that she has been, and you may proceed with the examination.

TESTIMONY OF MISS MIRIAM S. FARLEY, AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS, ACCOMPANIED BY STUART MARKS, ESQ.

Mr. SOURWINE. For this record, Miss Farley, will you give your name and address.

Miss FARLEY. Miriam S. Farley.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your address?

Miss FARLEY. American Institute of Pacific Relations, 1 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York.

Mr. SOURWINE. What is your present employment?

Miss FARLEY. I am a member of the staff of the American Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where do you reside?

Miss FARLEY. In New York.

Mr. SOURWINE. What is your address?

Miss FARLEY. 622 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street.

Mr. SOURWINE. Miss Farley, I hand you a manuscript entitled "Communism and the Hukbalahap," by Henry Wells, and I ask you if you have seen it before.

Miss FARLEY. I have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I might explain that this is a manuscript which is in our records and I ask permission to identify it by our exhibit number for our record.

Senator WATKINS. You may do so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is this a manuscript which you read at some time, Miss Farley?

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are the marginal notations in the manuscript yours?

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. They are in your handwriting?

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, do you desire to tell us anything about the circumstances in connection with your reading of this manuscript, how it came to you, and make any explanation you wish about the marginal notations which you made on it?

Miss FARLEY. I would like to make a very brief statement on that point, if I may. This manuscript was submitted to the Far Eastern Survey in 1949, when I was the editor, by Mr. Wells. I liked the manuscript very much and told Mr. Wells so. I was anxious to publish it. I thought that it could stand improvement at a few points. I made, therefore, a number of suggestions to Mr. Wells for his consideration which I thought would improve the article. Mr. Wells did not reply to my last letter to him, and he eventually published the article elsewhere. I therefore concluded that he was one of those authors who cannot take criticism, even friendly criticism.

With regard to the statement or implication by Professor Rowe that my marginal notations on this manuscript showed a pro-Communist bias——

Mr. SOURWINE. Pardon me. Is this a manuscript concerning which Professor Rowe testified——

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Before this committee?

Miss FARLEY. .Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And have you read his testimony?

Miss FARLEY. I have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead.

Miss FARLEY. I would like to reject the insinuations that there was any pro-Communist bias in the suggestions which I made to Mr. Wells, which I think will be borne out by a detailed examination of the notations on this manuscript, and if I may, Mr. Chairman, I should like to submit to the committee another article which did appear in the Far Eastern Survey on the same general subject as that by Mr. Wells.

Senator WATKINS. Is that about the same time?

Miss FARLEY. About 2 years later.

Senator WATKINS. May I see it?

Mr. MORRIS. Is that on the Huks?

Miss FARLEY. That is on the Huks.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who is the author of this article you have now offered?

Miss FARLEY. Prof. Russell H. Fifield, of the University of Michigan.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was this during your editorship of the magazine?

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Is this a substitute for the Wells article?

Miss FARLEY. No; there was no connection between them.

Senator WATKINS. I understand this was written 2 years later.

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Actually, Miss Farley, you don't know when this was written, do you, but it was published 2 years later?

Senator WATKINS. We will assume it was written probably somewhere near the time of publication.

Miss FARLEY. If I remember correctly, Mr. Rowe stated that I had cut out of Mr. Wells' article everything which identified the Huks movement with the Communists. If I might draw your attention, sir, to the two passages which I have underlined in that article, I would like to put them in the record, if I may.

Senator WATKINS. I do not see a date on this.

Miss FARLEY. It is down at the bottom, sir, in the little box.

Senator WATKINS. That was in January 1951, is that correct?

Miss FARLEY. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I inquire?

Senator WATKINS. You may.

Mr. SOURWINE. Miss Farley, is it your purpose to refute or deny the charge made by Mr. Rowe with respect to what you cut out of this manuscript that you have identified?

Miss FARLEY. It is my purpose, it is my desire, to refute Mr. Rowe's allegation that my editing is biased in a pro-Communist direction, which I deny.

Mr. SOURWINE. You speak specifically of his charge that you had cut out of this article or indicated for deletion all the passages identifying the Huks as Communists.

Miss FARLEY. That is not true.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is what I wanted to get at. You say that is not a true charge.

Miss FARLEY. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. You realize, of course, that the question of what was published in an article 2 years later has nothing to do with that charge, don't you?

Miss FARLEY. I think it bears on Mr. Rowe's testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. But it has nothing to do specifically with the question of what you cut out of this article, does it?

Miss FARLEY. Yes. Well, I did not cut out of this article everything which identified the Huks with the Communists.

Mr. SOURWINE. I wonder if you would point out in that article the passage identifying the Huks as Communists which you did not cut out or indicate for deletion.

Miss FARLEY. There are several of them. Here is one right on the first page of the Wells' manuscript.

Senator WATKINS. Give the first name of this Wells man.

Miss FARLEY. Mr. Henry Wells [reading]:

> In the Philippines, as in China, southeast Asia and the Balkans, the Communists have turned long-standing agrarian troubles to their own advantage. Using familiar Communist techniques of propaganda and of organization, they have won a following in the region—and so forth.

Mr. MARKS. I think Miss Farley neglected to read the whole sentence there.

Mr. SOURWINE. The whole thing is in the record. (Exhibit No. 614, pt. 11, p. 4020.)

Mr. MARKS. As long as you have asked for an illustration——

Mr. SOURWINE. I was asking Miss Farley to point out what she considered to be the passages in this article which identified the Huks as Communists and which she neither cut out or deleted. The choice is hers. We are not limiting her.

Miss FARLEY. There are other examples. I will continue with this sentence [reading]— they have won a following in the region where the peasants grievances (poverty, usury, absentee landlordism) have long been most acute—i. e., in central Luzon, where they control the peasant movement known as the Hukbalahap.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was your marginal comment?

Miss FARLEY. None on this comment.

Mr. SOURWINE. What are the notes written on that page?

Miss FARLEY. That is on the next paragraph.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where does that note appear? Opposite what paragraph does it appear?

Miss FARLEY. The next paragraph, following the one I just read.

Mr. MORRIS. It appears between the first and the second, does it not, Miss Farley? I mean, doesn't the arrow indicate there that it appears between the first and the second paragraph?

Miss FARLEY. It apparently relates, as far as I can tell, to the following paragraph which apparently I suggested cutting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you read that note, Miss Farley.

Mr. MARKS. Before we leave that——

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Marks, if you please.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you read that.

Miss FARLEY. As near as I can tell, from looking at this manuscript, I suggested cutting out the next paragraph following the one I just read.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you read your marginal note?

Miss FARLEY. And substituting the following sentence [reading]:

In one sense, the Huk movement may be viewed as part of the world-wide scheme of Communist expansion. In another sense, it is a product of local conditions.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, because the question has arisen as to where a marginal note appears in the margin with respect to certain language, I ask the Chair to order that in our record this document appear in facsimile.

Senator WATKINS. May I see the record? May I see the manuscript? By that you mean substitute a photostat?

Mr. SOURWINE. We will have it photostated and have it reproduced as plates in the record, sir, because of the difficulty of expressing in the written or printed word the exact relationship between a marginal note and other paragraphs. There is an arrow there which my description would be inadequate to convey a proper appreciation of.

Senator WATKINS. If you put it in as it is, in facsimile, it will indicate just what the markings are, the markings of the arrow indicating that it might possibly apply to the first, but then you have the line drawn, sort of brackets, which takes in the two next paragraphs and you have a long diagonal line, a pencil line, drawn through the two paragraphs below. Of course, the witness would be entitled and should explain just what she intended, if she remembers at all what she intended to cut out, and to have this marginal note appear as the substitute for it.

Mr. SOURWINE. It will be ordered, then, in facsimile?

Senator WATKINS. Yes, you may have it. Do you mean the whole document?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, I believe that is desirable. There are changes all the way through.

Miss FARLEY. I should be very glad to have the whole document with notations in the record.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is the fairest way all around. And I believe that answers the objection Mr. Marks was going to voice.

Mr. MARKS. That is exactly right, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. You will note the position of the arrow here on this marginal note which you have read, and I would like to ask you whether it was your intention that that note be inserted at the point where the arrow is, that is, following the first paragraph of the article itself.

Miss FARLEY. Apparently that was my intention.

Mr. SOURWINE. That would have inserted that note preceding the matter which you read from in the article, would it not?

Miss FARLEY. No; after.

Mr. SOURWINE. After the material you had read from.

Miss FARLEY. After.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right. Would you indicate the other portions of that article, if any, which you feel identify the Huks as Communists and which you did not cut out or mark for deletion?

Miss FARLEY. Yes, one moment. This sentence on pages 6 to 7, I will read it in the form as edited by me with slight verbal changes:

Organized in March 1942, the—

that is, the Huks—

conducted effective guerrilla operations against the invaders and against Filipino collaborators while serving also as an instrument of political and economic change and of Communist propaganda.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, are there any other passages you want to call attention to?

Miss FARLEY. There are several more which I can mention.

Mr. SOURWINE. I think you should have that opportunity.

Miss FARLEY. Continuing from the part I just read:

Communists controlled the Hukbalahap from the very beginning, but they were careful at first to direct their efforts along the lines that would attract a large following.

That is the end of that quotation. I think there was another on page 11. This is perhaps more important than the one on page 11.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was the page of the one you just referred to?

Miss FARLEY. Seven; six to seven. There is one on page 14. This is referring to Luis Taruc, the leader of the Hukbalahap. I am quoting from Mr. Wells:

On August 12 he issued a press release which read in part—

this is quoting from Taruc—

the Communist Party of the Philippines, of which I am a member, besides fighting for the eventual achievement of socialism is also fighting for land for the peasants and other agrarian reforms—and so on.

Mr. SOURWINE. What page is that?

Miss FARLEY. That is page 14.

Mr. SOURWINE. You passed page 11, then?

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. That is material that you say you left in that indicated——

Miss FARLEY. This is material which I left in which Luis Taruc identifies himself as a Communist. There is also a footnote to this quotation which I would like to read. The footnote says "A few weeks later, Taruc stated in a letter released to the press, that in case of war he would side with the Soviet Union which 'represents the cause of democracy, peace, and progress in the world' against the United States which 'represents imperialist aggression, war-making and Fascist tendencies.' "

This again identifies Taruc with the Communist line.

Mr. SOURWINE. The portion that you have read previously, from page 6, at the bottom of page 6, and 7——

Senator WATKINS. Let her finish this, and then go back to that.

Miss FARLEY. I am willing to let it go at that, to save the committee time. I think two or three others could be found.

Senator WATKINS. Never mind the time, if it is important.

Miss FARLEY. If the whole document is going into the record——

Senator WATKINS. It is already in the record, the whole document is in the record. Please do not make any other marks on there. The marks are now in question and we shouldn't put any more on there.

Miss FARLEY. Yes, that is one reason I had trouble in identifying it.

Mr. MARKS. We don't have an extra copy here, and it is difficult to work with.

Miss FARLEY. Is it permissible, sir, to read one or two characteristic notations from Mr. Fifield's article which I did publish?

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Fifield's article has nothing to do with this one.

Miss FARLEY. I think it bears on the question of my editing.

Senator WATKINS. It may bear on that, however it is 2 years later. We will check this article and see whether it is material or not. We are already getting a very large record and if it does not have a bearing, and does not throw light on the inquiry, we probably won't want to put it in the record. But if it does, it will be received. You can make your explanations to why you did what you did, why you struck them out. If you do not tell us why you struck these articles out, we will probably ask you. So if you want to save time, you can indicate why you struck the paragraphs out that you did, or deleted the language.

Miss FARLEY. That is another question.

Mr. SOURWINE. If the Chairman will permit, might I inquire about the instances that Miss Farley has specifically mentioned. Would that be in order?

Senator WATKINS. Yes, and then we can come back and let her explain why she suggested a deletion of these articles or a change.

Mr. SOURWINE. At the bottom of page 6, Miss Farley, you read a sentence. Originally, as the manuscript came to you, that sentence read, did it not—"Organized in March 1942 it"—referring to the Hukbalahop, "functioned partly as an army conducting effective guerrilla operations against the invaders and against the Filipino collaborators, but more importantly as an instrument of Communist propaganda and of political and economic change."

Is that correct?

Miss FARLEY. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you change that sentence or indicate that it should be changed to read "organized in March 1942, it conducted effective guerrilla operations against its invaders and against Filipino collaborators while serving also as an instrument of Communist propaganda, of political and economic change"?

Miss FARLEY. That is not quite right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, correct me.

Miss FARLEY. I read this whole thing before.

Mr. SOURWINE. You read it correctly before.

Miss FARLEY. With Communist propaganda coming at the end of the sentence. That is all.

Mr. SOURWINE. You changed it to read "An instrument of political and economic change and of Communist propaganda."

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. I see. Now, this sentence started that paragraph "The Hukbalahap, ostensibly launched as a resistance movement against the Japanese, was a lineal descendant of the earlier Communist-dominated peasant groups." Is that correct?

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you changed that to read "The Hukbalahap, launched as a resistance movement against the Japanese, was a lineal descendant of earlier Communist-dominated peasant groups."

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. On page 14, you have a note in the margin which appears to read—can you read that note? It is difficult to read on this photostat.

Miss FARLEY. "Taruc denied responsibility. Has Huk responsibility been proved?"

Mr. SOURWINE. What Huk responsibility were you referring to there?

Miss FARLEY. This refers to footnote 12, referring to the murder of Mrs. Quezon.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were questioning whether the Huks were responsible for the murder of Mrs. Quezon?

Miss FARLEY. I was questioning whether it has been proved that they were responsible for that particular atrocity.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the witness desires to make any further comments about her editing of this manuscript, it might be a good time.

Senator WATKINS. If you wish now to explain why you altered or suggested an alteration of the manuscript, or changed it to read differently than it was submitted, please take the time now to do so, and indicate where you are doing it.

Miss FARLEY. Yes. May I point out in the first place that all of these notations on the manuscript, and so on, were suggestions to Mr. Wells to be adopted or not adopted as he saw fit. This is a very usual process of consultation between author and editor.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you convey those suggestions to him?

Miss FARLEY. Partly by letter and partly orally. I believe he came in the office once.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you return this manuscript to him?

Miss FARLEY. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you get it back in the IPR files?

Miss FARLEY. It is not in the IPR files, as far as I know.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Miss FARLEY. With regard to some of these passages, which I apparently indicated should be cut out, to the best of my recollection it was partly because he thought they were largely repetitive, that he had made his point once and there was no use in saying it over and over again. It may also have been simply for the purpose of saving space, though that I do not precisely recall at the moment. But it is clear that I did leave in a good many passages which identified the Huks with the Communists.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you, in editing this article, reduce its anti-Communist tenor in any way, modify its anti-Communist attitude?

Miss FARLEY. I think that would be a matter of opinion.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am asking your opinion as the editor.

Miss FARLEY. In my opinion, no.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions about that article.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no more questions of this witness, except this one letter that has been in the record that I would like to ask the witness for one comment on. I refer to your exhibit No. 95, part 2, page 395, Miss Farley, which is a letter from you to Mr. Holland, written April 8, 1946, from Japan. In your last paragraph of that letter you say:

> I have been put to work doing the political section of MacArthur's monthly report. There will be a sporting interest in seeing how much I can get by with.

What did you mean by that?

Mr. MARKS. May we see that letter, please? This letter is where, Mr. Morris? I see, top of page 396.

Mr. MORRIS. You have seen that letter before, have you not, Miss Farley?

Miss FARLEY. I have seen the stenographic transcript of this part of the hearing. Do you wish me to read the whole letter?

Mr. MORRIS. No, I would like to know what you meant by the last sentence there. Will you read the last sentence.

Miss FARLEY. The one you just read?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. Will you read it for the chairman?

Miss FARLEY (reading):

> I have been put to work doing the political section of MacArthur's monthly report. It will be a certain sporting interest in seeing how much I can get by with.

That is obviously a flippant and somewhat humorous statement in a letter to a friend. It is always very difficult to explain a joke, but I will try.

Mr. MORRIS. You mean that was a joke?

Miss FARLEY. Yes. With the chairman's permission. At that time, quite a number of us who had previously worked for private research institutions, such as the Institute of Pacific Relations, had gone into Government service, and we used to kid each other about being bureaucrats and so on. We did wonder, there was a serious point behind this, about the extent to which, as research workers working for the Government, we would be able to apply the same standards of objective research which we had been trained to use in the IPR and other similar organizations. What I may have had in mind in connection with this, with the monthly report, was certain discussions which I had had quite openly with senior members of Government sections in Tokyo where I was employed.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say, Miss Farley, "what I may have had in mind," do you mean by that that you do not recall this particular episode?

Miss FARLEY. I don't recall writing this particular letter; no. But I am willing to take it that I did write it.

Mr. MORRIS. How can you then testify that it was a joke?

Miss FARLEY. By interpreting it now. I think I can interpret my own words.

Senator WATKINS. Does it bring back any memories of the situation when you wrote it, and what you intended to put in the letter?

Miss FARLEY. It does. It brings back memories of the general situation at that time.

Senator WATKINS. Was there any reason why you should say that you wondered how much you could get by with? What did you have in mind when you said that, even as a joke?

Mr. MARKS. You are explaining it, Miss Farley, I think.

Miss FARLEY. Yes; I was just trying to. What I think I had in mind about getting by with was getting by with what I had been trained to believe were proper standards of objective research. As I was saying, I recall having several discussions on this point with senior colleagues in the Government section with regard to the drafting of the political section of General MacArthur's monthly reports to which I was assigned for a time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Those persons with whom you had had discussions, had they led you to believe, or given you any reason to believe, that there was objection in MacArthur's headquarters to proper standards of objective research?

Miss FARLEY. The discussions as I remembered them were on this line: That I contended that so far as space and our facilities permitted we should give a full and balanced record of what had happened in Japan in the month in question, that when things were going well we should report that and occasionally when they were not going so well we should also report that. My contention was that on the whole the occupation was going very well and the record was a good one and that if we put out a report which had nothing but favorable data, it might hurt the reputation of SCAP, of which I was a member, because such reports would be accused by unfriendly critics of being a whitewash. That idea did not find favor in the higher quarters, however, in SCAP. The tendency was to omit anything which could conceivably be construed as unfavorable.

Senator WATKINS. Is that the instruction of any of your superiors, that you leave out anything that might be considered unfavorable?

Miss FARLEY. I would not say that there was a specific instruction to that point; no; but that was the idea which I gathered, from instructions, from conversations, with my superiors. I discussed this with them quite openly once or twice, and I did not get by with my argument. That was what I was trying to get by with. Following that, I quit arguing and in all the reports which I prepared for SCAP

I followed the instructions as to how such reports should be prepared even when I personally did not altogether agree with the instructions. I considered that my duty.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any more comment that you care to make about this article now before we pass to another matter?

Miss FARLEY. Only that I should like to read into the record just one sentence from a document which I did publish which is an additional example of material which I did not cut out but actually published, which identifies the Huks and the Communists very clearly.

Mr. MORRIS. You do understand this is 2 years later, and at that time the Huks were much more openly Communists than they were in 1949. So the issue isn't the same.

Miss FARLEY. I think the issue of my alleged Communist bias is the same. I have had no pro-Communist bias at any time.

Senator WATKINS. I think the witness will be permitted to read the sentence and comment on it. It will be the question of the weight of the testimony anyway, considering that it is 2 years later. So if you wish to do that, you may proceed.

Miss FARLEY. I would like to offer this whole article for the record as an example of an article on the same general subject as Mr. Wells' article.

Senator WATKINS. That we will decide a little later after we have read it. We have not had an opportunity to read it.

Miss FARLEY. And it was one which I did publish. The general conclusions are similar to Mr. Wells'. The difference, in my opinion, is that Professor Fifield's article is done in a rather more scholarly manner. The general nature of Professor Fifield's article is indicated by these two sentences which I quote:

> The Communist movement in the Philippines, commonly called the Hukbalahap, has not been successfully checked, is spreading in the islands and is now in a dangerous stage of political development.

The second sentence, also on the first page of the article [reading]:

> Although the Hukbalahap movement originated in the long-standing agrarian unrest of central Luzon, the leadership has now been completely captured by the Communists. Its goal is at last openly stated as the overthrow of the Philippine Government by armed force, and the Huks are now an integral part of the general Communist efforts in Asia.

I would appreciate it if the whole article could be put in the record.

Senator WATKINS. We will have it checked, and if we feel it is material at all—it is a rather long article—if we feel it is material, it will all be put in. But it is subject to that checking.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a letter on the letterhead of the Far Eastern Survey, office of the editor, dated February 19, 1952, and purporting to be signed by Miriam S. Farley, with the handwritten name of Miriam. It is addressed to Mr. John P. Fairbank, and it was offered by Mr. Fairbank for inclusion in the record. That request is found on page 6147 of our record. He requested it. I would like to hand it to the witness and ask if that is hers and if that is her signature.

Miss FARLEY. That is my letter and my signature.

Mr. SOURWINE. I ask that this letter be inserted in the record at the point where Mr. Fairbank offered it with appropriate cross-references to this identification in the record.

Senator WATKINS. That may be done.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions of Miss Farley.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions, thank you.

(For the material referred to, see Exhibit 559A, p. 3797.)

Senator WATKINS. Who is your next witness?

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Lattimore.

Senator WATKINS. Give her full name.

Mr. MORRIS. Give your full name and address to the reporter, please.

Senator WATKINS. Have you been sworn before? I am going to swear her, but I would like to have it in the record who we are swearing.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you give your full name?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. My name is Eleanor Lattimore. My residence is Ruxton, Md.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you appeared in executive session before this committee?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I appeared with my husband in executive session last July.

Mr. MORRIS. You were sworn at that time?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I was sworn then.

Senator WATKINS. Are you sure the record shows she was sworn?

Mr. MORRIS. I don't know who the chairman was at that particular session.

Senator WATKINS. Maybe you had better stand and be sworn. You do solemnly swear the testimony you are giving in the matter now pending before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. ELEANOR LATTIMORE, ACCOMPANIED BY COUNSEL, ABE FORTAS

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, I asked Mr. Morris if he would kindly have a subpena for Mrs. Lattimore because she has not been subpenaed, and I assume that you will give that to Mrs. Lattimore after the hearing or at your convenience.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, what would your ruling on that be?

Mr. SOURWINE. What is the purpose of that?

Senator WATKINS. She is appearing at her own request?

Mr. FORTAS. No; she is appearing at the request telephoned to me by Mr. Morris.

Mr. SOURWINE. There is no question about the fact that her appearance is at the request or, if you wish to put it that way, at the order of the committee.

Mr. FORTAS. I would rather have it "order."

Mr. SOURWINE. There is no objection to the record showing that is the reason for her appearance.

Mr. FORTAS. Can't you supply her with a subpena so the record will be clear on this?

Mr. SOURWINE. There seems to be a considerable confusion about subpenas before congressional committees, and as I am sure counsel recognizes, the subpena of a congressional committee is really in the nature of a summons. The question is, Did the witness have notice or knowledge that the committee desired, requested, or commanded appearance at a certain time?

Mr. FORTAS. Is there any difficulty about supplying Mrs. Lattimore with a summons or order in the usual form?

Mr. SOURWINE. None whatsoever; I simply wanted the record to show as to why she desired it at this time.

Senator WATKINS. I simply wanted to know if she was here at her own request. If she would like to have a subpena issued, a subpena will be issued, and it will be dated in time in which she can respond in response to that subpena.

Mr. FORTAS. I telephoned Mr. Morris about this, and asked that she appear, so she is here by order of the committee.

Senator WATKINS. The record already shows it, and if it will help any you can have a subpena.

Mr. SOURWINE. She is, I might say, Mr. Fortas, entitled to her witness fee on the basis of her appearance and response to the committee's request, whether there is a formal request or not.

Mr. FORTAS. At the hearing of Mr. Catesby Jones before committee on April 2, 1952, there were certain comments made by members of the committee that were based, in my opinion, upon an inaccurate or incomplete recollection of the examples of Mr. Owen Lattimore on February 28 and March 21, 1952. For the committee's convenience, I have prepared a memorandum summarizing the record. If you would like me to state very briefly what is in this, I will be glad to.

Senator WATKINS. You may leave it with us, and if it will help us in the analysis of the record, and the record will have to stand on its own feet and the testimony likewise, if it will help us in that we will use it. But I cannot say to you now we are going to include this as a part of the record.

Mr. FORTAS. I merely thought it would be helpful because there was a confusion as to dates and a confusion as to persons referred to.

Mr. SOURWINE. We will try to avoid that confusion today.

Senator WATKINS. Let it be offered and left with us for our information and our staff in checking the matter.

Mr. FORTAS. I thought in particularly Senator O'Conor and Senator Fergusion might like to see that. I believe it is an entirely factual memorandum.

Senator WATKINS. Thank you. We will receive it for that purpose.

Mr. SOURWINE. I might state that Mrs. Lattimore has been asked here, as the chairman knows, specifically for the purpose of attempting to clear up what appears to be contradictions in testimony with respect to the occasion of a meeting between Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore and Mr. Catesby Jones and Mr. Carter on the 22d of August 1951. Mr. Carter has also been asked to come over here to testify with regard to that matter, and will appear subsequent to Mrs. Lattimore's testimony. Is it the Chair's desire that I proceed with the inquiry now?

Senator WATKINS. I think you may proceed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mrs. Lattimore, do you remember the occasion of the dinner which you and Mr. Lattimore had with Mr. Carter and Mr. Catsby Jones at the Aldo Cafe in Washington the 22d of August 1951?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you tell us how it came about that you four had dinner together on that evening?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. To the best of my recollection we were together before the dinner and someone suggested that we go out and eat together, and I believe Mr. Jones suggested this particular cafe which was unfamiliar to us, and we went there.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what Mr. Jones testified before this committee with regard to that matter?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. How do you know that?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I read the transcript of his testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you know, of course, what Mr. Lattimore testified because you were here, were you not?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. On the occasion in question, you have said you were together. Where were you together on that day prior to the dinner?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I said we were together. I didn't say "weren't together."

Mr. SOURWINE. No, I said, "Where were you together prior to the dinner?"

Mrs. LATTIMORE. We were in the offices of Arnold, Fortas & Porter.

Mr. SOURWINE. What were you doing there?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. My husband was preparing a brief statement for the press in connection with the hearing which had taken place here that day.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you there together in those law offices for a matter of several hours?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I think Mr. Jones was there for much less than several hours.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you and Mr. Lattimore were there longer?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do not remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you and Mr. Lattimore come over to Washington on the morning of that day?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't actually remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, did you come over on the afternoon of that day?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mrs. Lattimore, weren't you in Mr. Fortas' office at the noon hour of that day?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Mr. Jones has so testified, and I do not dispute his testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. No, but your own memory.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do not actually remember myself.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't remember whether you were in Mr. Fortas' office during noon hour?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it Mr. Lattimore or was it you who made arrangements with Mr. Jones to come over on that day and attend the hearings before this committee and take notes with regard to Mr. Budenz' testimony?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. It was I.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you do so at your husband's request?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was entirely your own idea?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Lattimore desired to issue a press release on Mr. Budenz' testimony or following it?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was your purpose in seeking to have Mr. Jones take these notes, cover this hearing for you, so to speak?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. There were two purposes: One was that I thought it probable that newspapermen would be calling my husband after Budenz' testimony, asking for a statement. I did not wish to go myself, and so I asked him to go and take notes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had attended a number of other sessions of the committee; had you not?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. At that time, I think I had attended only one. I attended a number after.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why was it you didn't want to go yourself?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I thought it would be a very painful experience.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, did Mr. Jones come over from Baltimore with you or with your husband?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you come over from Baltimore that day?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you own an automobile?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you drive?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Probably.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you go home that night, or did you go home that night?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I am not sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you don't remember how you came or how you went home, whether by train or automobile?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Bus or taxi?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who drives the car, you or Mr. Lattimore? What was the answer?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who drives the automobile, you or your husband?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. We both drive it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Normally, if you were coming over from Baltimore, would there have been any usual arrangement as to who drove?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is, it isn't a case of he usually does or you usually do?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did it happen that you met Mr. Jones in Mr. Fortas' office after our hearings on that day?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. My recollection is that I told him that we would be there and met him there.

Mr. SOURWINE. We; meaning you and Mr. Lattimore?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Lattimore know that Mr. Jones was going to cover the hearings?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I suppose so, but I am not sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. You wouldn't make an arrangement like that without even telling your husband about it; would you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. He knew someone was covering the hearing.

Mr. SOURWINE. He knew that you had arranged to have someone cover the hearing?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. But he didn't know who it was?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I am not sure. He may have known.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Jones was his student; was he not?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was Mr. Jones also a good friend of yours?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you happen to select Mr. Jones for this particular job?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. He had asked a number of times if there was anything he could do for us, and he—I don't remember how I happened to select him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you call him up on the telephone or send him a written communication about it?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I certainly didn't send him a written communication. I probably called him up. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't remember that. Do you think it possible that he might have simply been there at your home at the psychological moment and you told him you wanted him to come over?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't consider that possible? Is there any other possibility other than a phone call that you do consider within the realm of possibility as to how you communicated with him?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I simply don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. That answer is not completely responsive.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. If you want me to speculate, the other possibilities would be that I saw him at my husband's office or at the Page School but I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. You think those are both possibilities?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. If Mr. Jones was at the Fortas law office at the noon recess on the 22d, would that have been because you instructed him to meet you there?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Probably.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any memory as to whether you did so instruct him?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I am sorry; I don't.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do remember that you told him to meet you there in the evening; is that right, after the hearing?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Mr. Sourwine, it is very difficult for me to distinguish between what I actually remember and what I was reminded of by his testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do not remember his testimony, but I am afraid I do not actually remember myself what I said to him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you mean, by that, that, having read his testimony, there is nothing in his testimony to which you take exception?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. There is nothing in Mr. Catsby Jones' testimony which to you sounded unlikely, improbable, or untrue?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. As far as I remember.

Mr. FORTAS. You mean as factual statements?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. I had no reference to any opinion that Mr. Jones might have expressed.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. As far as I remember, there is none.

Mr. SOURWINE. I do want to go just a little further with this question of your own memory. Do you remember being in Mr. Fortas' office on the following day; that is, on the 23d?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do not actually remember it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember seeing Mr. Jones there again on the 23d?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do not remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember at any particular time taking from Mr. Jones any notes that he had made concerning Mr. Budenz' testimony before this committee?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I do not remember taking notes from him; no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Receiving notes from him?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I had notes from him. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you get them?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I would therefore assume I had received them; but, if you ask me if I actually received them, I assume I received them.

Mr. SOURWINE. For all you know, your husband might have handed them to you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Possibly.

Mr. SOURWINE. You just don't know how they came?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. When is it that you remember having those notes in your possession? At what time did you have them in your possession according to your present recollection?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. At some time subsequent to the 23d.

Mr. SOURWINE. At some time subsequent to the 23d. You were the keeper of the files, so to speak; weren't you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And still are?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Senator WATKINS. Did you get an answer to that?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. It would have been the normal and routine thing for such things, if notes, if retained, to have found their way into your hands at some time subsequent to the 23d for the files; is it not?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that what happened?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no further questions of this witness, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask a few questions?

Senator WATKINS. You may.

Mr. MORRIS. Generally, did you have what might be called a team working here in Washington covering our hearing in Washington, Mrs. Lattimore?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I attempted to have someone here at all hearings at which I could not myself be present.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have anybody else working for you, other than someone covering the hearings?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us about that, if you think that is proper testimony at this time, Mr. Chairman?

Senator WATKINS. What is claimed for it?

Mr. MORRIS. Just general information on that general subject of to what extent Mrs. Lattimore has had people working on our hearings in Washington.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I submit that question bears properly on the witness' recollection with regard to the coverage of these hearings. There have been questions with regard to her recollection of the circumstances surrounding Mr. Jones' coverage, and I think it would be interesting for the record to find out what she remembers about other coverage in that nature.

Senator WATKINS. We will let her answer.

Mr. FORTAS. I am afraid the question is not clear. I am not sure that Mr. Morris and Mr. Sourwine are asking the same question.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have anybody working on these hearings other than the one person that you just testified to has been covering the hearings at all times on behalf of you and Mr. Lattimore?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you tell us about them, please?

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Morris, I don't believe you intended your questions to mean that Mr. Jones covered the hearings at all times.

Mr. MORRIS. No. She tried to the best of her ability to have somebody cover all hearings. Did you not?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. As I understand, you want to know who it was.

Mr. MORRIS. No; I don't, Senator. I want to know who else has been working for Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore in connection with our hearings here.

Senator WATKINS. That is what I thought I just said.

Go ahead and answer it.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I will try my best to answer that question, to the best of my recollection. Over a period of 8 or 10 months, a great many people have offered in any way they could and a number of people have been of use to us. It is very difficult for me to remember just who did what.

Senator WATKINS. Well, of course, you have a perfect right to have anybody cover the hearings you want to. These hearings are public. You can come yourself or have your lawyers or anybody else come and cover them for you. It is in connection with Sourwine's statement that I am permitting it to be asked.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I will be more specific. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this letter, please.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated August 4, 1951, addressed to Mr. William Holland, and signed "Eleanor Lattimore."

Mr. MORRIS. I offer you this letter and ask you if you can recall having written that letter. Will you read it for the committee, please, Mrs. Lattimore? Will you read it aloud for the committee?

Mr. SOURWINE. Let me lay a foundation. Is that your signature, Mrs. Lattimore?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. In other words, that is a photostat of the letter.

It isn't the real letter. Let's make it letter because, when we say "Is that your signature?" that is a photostat of your letter.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. That is a photostat of my signature.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you read the letter aloud and tell the committee whether you remember having written it?

Mrs. LATTIMORE (reading):

DEAR BILL——

Mr. MORRIS. That is addressed to Bill Holland.

Mrs. LATTIMORE (reading):

EXHIBIT No. 747

Mr. WILLIAM HOLLAND,
Institute of Pacific Relations,
1 East Fifty-fourth Street, New York City, N. Y.

DEAR BILL: We went over to Washington yesterday morning expecting to find you there with the transcripts of the first two hearings for us to look at. I had understood from Carter and from your telephone conversation with me that you were coming down on Thursday for a few days.

If you have a minute to let us know your plans, we would appreciate it. Owen is anxious to see the transcripts as soon as possible as he feels that he has a great deal of work to do in preparation for his hearing and needs as many early warnings as possible about the accusations he will have to deal with.

One thing he would like to know right away is just what Fred actually said and what Carter said about whether Owen did or did not talk with Currie about Fred's commission. Owen can remember absolutely nothing about this, and as you know, O'Conor has been taunting him about his dodging comment on it. If you do not have the transcript of the second day, or cannot spare it yet, perhaps you have some notes on this part.

If you cannot spare the transcripts within the next few days, perhaps I ought to come up to New York to read them, and see a few people at the same time who might do some useful work for us. I am enlisting some help both in Baltimore and Washington, but I am finding it difficult as everyone we know is out of town. By next week I think I will have a good team in Washington, who could do leg work for you as well as us if you need any help. Be sure to let me know.

We have a lot to tell you when we see you.

All the best from both of us.

Mr. MORRIS. Read the P. S.

Mrs. LATTIMORE (reading):

Could you return my Pacific Affairs file?

Mr. MORRIS. The question addressed to this witness was who made up the team that Mrs. Lattimore had working in Washington that is referred to in that letter.

Senator WATKINS. Let her answer. That is the information you want?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Well, I think, as often occurs in a personal letter, perhaps we aren't very exact in our terminology. There was nothing like an organized team. I used "team" in the very loose sense.

Mr. MORRIS. We would like to know. Whatever it was, Mrs. Lattimore, will you tell us?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. In Baltimore, there were several of my husband's students and colleagues who helped to some extent.

Mr. MORRIS. You mentioned the team in Washington.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes. And I hoped to find people in Washington, but at this moment I can't seem to remember that I did.

Senator WATKINS. At least you had someone here each day, did you not, while the hearings were going on?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. At the hearings we had someone here each day when we thought that it was probable that there would be something come up which had to do with my husband.

Senator WATKINS. A matter of investigating when his name would come up. You never knew.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. So you had to have someone here practically all the time.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. At the beginning we didn't, because we didn't realize how much he was going to be brought into the hearings. But after a half dozen hearings in which he had been brought in we did try to have someone here each time.

Senator WATKINS. You know who the people are who you had come here, generally speaking. If you cannot name them all, you can at least name most of them, can you not, who came to cover the hearings?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. One that came over one day is Mr. Harold Vreeland, who is a colleague of my husband's in the Page School. At a number of the hearings there was always someone here from the Institute of Pacific Relations. So if someone from the Institute of Pacific Relations, such as Mr. Carter, was going to be here, we didn't always try to have someone else. I came to a great many of them myself, after the first few.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I inquire at that point, Mr. Chairman?

Senator WATKINS. Let her finish. You understand what we want now. Try to give us the names of the people you had doing this work for you.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. The only person I remember who came to a hearing at my request was Harold Vreeland.

Senator WATKINS. How many times did he come?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. He came once.

Senator WATKINS. We have had numerous days of hearings. That would not begin to cover it.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No. But I believe Mr. Carter was here at most of the early hearings.

Senator WATKINS. And he was covering it for you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No; but I attempted to see him after each hearing and hear from him what happened. After the first hearings, as I said, I was here most of the time myself. But in this letter I meant not only covering hearings but looking up various things that we needed to know which we could not remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who else worked for you on that, looking up various things you needed to know, or otherwise assisting, so far as you can remember, if you can remember any names?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. My husband's secretary did a great deal.

Senator WATKINS. Give us the name.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Her name is Dorothy Kreger. And I know that other colleagues and students of my husband's did, but I am not just sure. I am sorry; I am sorry that I don't remember more specifically, but this is a very confused time for me and a very painful time, and we were working very hard. I am very sorry that I don't seem to remember more accurately just who did what, but there were a number of people who helped us.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were these people who had come at your request, or with whom you had made arrangements that they should help, these persons whose names you don't remember who were students and associates of your husband? Were they the persons with whom you had made arrangements?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. These are people who had done things for us in Baltimore, I suppose at my request.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember whether it was at your request or your husband's request?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I am sure some of it was at my request.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't remember specifically.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Vreeland, then, and Mr. Catsby Jones are the only two who you remember of being requested to do certain things?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. To come to hearings.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Dorothy Borg here at any time for you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes; she was here for us and also for the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Vreeland make notes for you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he give the notes to you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember that he did?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you can't remember whether Mr. Catsby Jones gave notes to you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I had his notes.

Mr. SOURWINE. But there is a difference there. You remember that Mr. Vreeland did give you his notes?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I remember that I did have Mr. Vreeland's notes. I don't actually remember his having handed them to me, but I remember having the notes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your situation there is the same. After the hearing you did have them, they did go into your files which you were keeping, and you don't know just how they came to you. Is that right?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, if it doesn't interrupt your line of inquiry, I would like to go now to the question of the dinner now, briefly. On the occasion of this dinner at the Aldo Cafe, do you remember seeing anyone in the cafe that you recognized?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Outside of our party?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mrs. LATTIMORE. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. I think that is all Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will that letter which was read by Mrs. Lattimore and identified as having been written by her go into our record?

Mr. SOURWINE. It has been read by Mrs. Lattimore. Would the purpose be served if it is given an exhibit number?

Mr. MORRIS. I think not. There is one other question I would like to ask. In connection with that footnote, they mentioned your Pacific Affairs files. Did Mr. Holland return it to you?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I think he did; as far as I recollect.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you make that available to this committee?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Surely.

Senator WATKINS. The letter will be received into the record.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 747" and was read in full.)

Mr. SOURWINE. Before the witness leaves the stand, here is a formal subpena covering your appearance today, Mrs. Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make arrangements with Mr. Fortas whereby we can obtain the Pacific Affairs files which is mentioned in that letter.

Mr. FORTAS. Yes; my office will transmit it to you as soon as Mrs. Lattimore furnishes it. Can you furnish it next week?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. This file you will give us will constitute the whole file that is referred to in this letter?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. Yes, sir. May I say that this was a file which was prepared for a Tydings committee hearing and which we had still in our files.

Mr. MORRIS. A great part of the testimony of Mr. Lattimore concerned his editorship of Pacific Affairs, and I think as such it is relevant to this inquiry.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have one concluding question, if the Chair will permit.

Senator WATKINS. Wait for Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Fortas will supply it and Mrs. Lattimore now testifies that what she will supply Mr. Fortas will be the whole file which is referred to in this letter.

Mr. SOURWINE. My concluding question is, having read, as you have testified you did, the testimony of Mr. Jones and having been present during Mr. Lattimore's testimony, did you find any conflict therein?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I found no conflict.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you disagree with Mr. Jones with respect to his characterization of Mr. Lattimore's testimony?

Mr. FORTAS. Don't you think, after all, that that is a question that ought to be made very specific. Mr. Jones' testimony is quite confusing in terms of the opinions that he stated.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, I will separate that into two or three different parts. Do you agree with Mr. Jones that Mr. Lattimore's testimony on this point was inadequate?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I don't believe he used that word, did he?

Mr. FORTAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that you consider whether you wish to allow that question. This is a wife that is being asked to comment on a characterization of her husband's testimony.

Senator WATKINS. I will say very frankly it probably would not be permitted in court, but we have rather a broad latitude here.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, may I withdraw that question and rephrase it.

Senator WATKINS. I think you had better withdraw it because I think probably it is not necessary to have that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mrs. Lattimore, is there any comment you desire to make before you leave the witness stand with regard to the completeness, adequacy, or accuracy of Mr. Lattimore's testimony concerning this dinner and concerning Mr. Catsby Jones' presence here?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. I think the difference between Mr. Catsby Jones' testimony and my husband's testimony was that Mr. Jones simply remembered more than my husband remembered.

Mr. SOURWINE. He remembered more than you remembered, too; did he not?

Mrs. LATTIMORE. He remembered more than I remembered. But I think this was quite natural.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is all.

Senator WATKINS. Anything further?

Mr. MORRIS. Nothing further, sir.

Senator WATKINS. Anything further?

Mr. SOURWINE. Nothing further, Mr. Chairman.

TESTIMONY OF EDWARD C. CARTER, ACCOMPANIED BY STUART MARKS, ESQ.

Senator WATKINS. Mr. Carter, you have been previously sworn and have previously testified several times, have you not?

Mr. CARTER. I have, Senator Watkins.

Senator WATKINS. All right, we won't swear you again.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Carter, do you remember the occasion of the dinner at the Aldo Cafe on the 22d of August 1951, present at which were, in addition to yourself, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Lattimore and Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. I remember a dinner. Whether it was August or September I couldn't remember. I have looked up the Journal American and saw that reminded me of some aspects of it, and then I understand that there was some reference to it in one of the reports which I have not seen. I mean, I don't know whether there is a discrepancy in dates in various accounts or not. But I can't remember specifically on what date the dinner was. I know such a dinner—I was one of four at such a dinner.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember eating a dinner with the other three persons named in the Aldo Cafe?

Mr. CARTER. I wouldn't have remembered the name of the Aldo Cafe.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember the grapes which have figured in the testimony here before?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. Late yesterday afternoon when Mr. Morris asked me to come down here, he referred to the Aldo Cafe and that didn't ring a bell. But he said there were grapes hanging from the roof, and then I remembered very vividly a semi-open-air restaurant with a lattice at the top and not phony grape vines but real-life grapes hanging down.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did eat dinner in that restaurant with Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore and Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. Well, until reminded by the Journal American, I wouldn't have remembered the name Aldo Cafe, but I remember the grapes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did eat dinner in the cafe described and identified by the grapes with Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore and Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. I did so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you do so on more than one occasion?

Mr. CARTER. I don't remember a meal at that restaurant at any other time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you been back to that restaurant at any time since?

Mr. CARTER. It was warm weather and I left my hat, and I went back a day or two later to retrieve my hat.

Mr. SOURWINE. That wasn't what I was trying to get at. I meant had you ever been back to the restaurant for another meal since then.

Mr. CARTER. I don't remember any such.

Mr. SOURWINE. In other words, your memory is that you only ate dinner at this particular cafe once?

Mr. CARTER. It was a single feed.

Mr. SOURWINE. That would remove, it would appear, a question as to dates. You do not remember the date but you were there only once, and other witnesses have testified positively with regard to the dates.

Mr. CARTER. Do the witnesses, Mr. Sourwine, agree as to the date?

Mr. SOURWINE. If you please, the record will speak as to what the witnesses agree on. I want to ask you now, Do you remember being present at this committee during the testimony of Mr. Louis Budenz?

Mr. CARTER. I remember being here during part of it. Whether I was here the whole span, I can't specifically answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where did you first meet Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. In Washington. And I just wanted to add, Senator Watkins, that my impression of him was not sufficiently vivid to have remembered what his name was, or I am not certain that I could describe whether he was blond or brunette. If he came into the room, I probably would remember him as the person who ate dinner.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you could have had dinner with Mr. Catesby Jones, a man of his dark complexion, and with his dark mustache, and have been unable afterward to have said whether he was a blond or brunette? You didn't really mean that, did you, Mr. Carter?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I did. He just passed out of my mind.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you tell us where in Washington you first met Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. I can't.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you meet him at the office, the law offices of Mr. Fortas and his partners?

Mr. CARTER. I did, but on what date or what time on that date I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you at those law offices during the noon recess of this committee on the day Mr. Budenz testified, August 22, 1951?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. You might have been?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you there on the afternoon or evening of that day?

Mr. CARTER. I believe that I was either present in the late afternoon or early evening and that at some point there was a discussion, it was the end of the day, of where we should have dinner.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. And I do remember that, as it was a warm night, that I suggested the air-cooled coffee shop at the Statler. I imagine this

Johns Hopkins student graduate suggested something a little more decorative and ultimately we went to the live-grapes joint.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you go in a group?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember. I know we went by motorcar.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know whose car?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember it was—I know it wasn't a taxi. I don't know whether it was the Lattimores' car. I don't know whether Mr. Catesby Jones had a car, and if he did, whether that was the car.

Mr. SOURWINE. You went in either Mr. Catesby Jones' car or the Lattimores' car; is that right?

Mr. CARTER. I would swear to that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember who drove?

Mr. CARTER. I haven't the faintest recollection.

Mr. SOURWINE. You didn't drive, did you?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember whether you sat in the front seat or the back seat?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. After the dinner, where did you go?

Mr. CARTER. I have no recollection.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, you went back out and got in the car you had come in; didn't you?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; and was dropped, presumably, at whatever hotel or home I may have been staying at.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know where you were staying?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, did you take any notes during Mr. Budenz' testimony before the committee here?

Mr. CARTER. Very scrappy. I unfortunately don't take shorthand, and I think they were very rough, abbreviated notes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did take some notes?

Mr. CARTER. Usually someone gives me a pad and I scribble down a few notes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, you said they were very brief, short, scrappy notes. I am simply asking you did you take some notes. Is that correct?

Mr. CARTER. Clearly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, what did you do with those notes, do you remember?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, now, you were up at Mr. Fortas' law office. Mr. Lattimore was attempting to write a press release. Mr. Catesby Jones had provided his notes. Didn't you also provide your notes? As a matter of fact, didn't you give either Mr. or Mrs. Lattimore your recollection of what took place and supplement them with your notes?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember doing so, Mr. Sourwine. At that period I was relying almost exclusively on the Alderson Reporting Co.'s notes, and I remember several times I went to the Alderson office the next morning so that I would have their very accurate record.

Mr. SOURWINE. This was the evening of the hearing that I am talking about, the afternoon.

Mr. CARTER. The reporting company's notes would not have been available the same day. You can't get them until the next morning.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Lattimore was planning to write or was going to write a press release with regard to Mr. Budenz' testimony?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember specifically, but my recollection is that he was at least contemplating it and may have been working on the draft.

Mr. SOURWINE. What were you doing in that office for several hours, if you weren't aiding in the getting out of that press release?

Mr. CARTER. Well, frankly, I was very much interested in Mr. Lattimore because of his long connection as a distinguished colleague of mine in the institute——

Mr. SOURWINE. Of course you were, and you were there to help, and you did help, didn't you?

Senator WATKINS. You can answer that. That doesn't seem to me it should take so long, whether you did or did not.

Mr. CARTER. I was there ready to help. Whether my notes were of any use or not, I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you were there ready to help and you helped to the best of your ability, is that your statement?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly, absolutely.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, you all remained there. Your dinner was delayed until after this press release had gotten out, isn't that correct?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember that.

Mr. SOURWINE. You didn't leave before the press release had been gotten out, did you?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember. I may have gone out to do an errand or I may have stayed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, you have said you were very much interested in this.

Mr. CARTER. Yes. But it was Mr. Lattimore's press release.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. Well, in any event you didn't all go to dinner before the press release had been gotten out, did you?

Mr. CARTER. I assume we didn't.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew that Mr. Lattimore was in charge of getting out this press release, didn't you?

Mr. CARTER. He was the master draftsman.

Mr. SOURWINE. And Mrs. Lattimore had a function or duty to perform in connection with getting it out, didn't she?

Mr. CARTER. She was Mr. Lattimore's chief of staff.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. And you had some function in that regard, did you not?

Mr. CARTER. I was at least a friendly wall flower.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, so it is conceivable to you that you would have all gone off to dinner before that job of getting out the press release was completed?

Mr. CARTER. The gentlemen of the press would know when the deadline was of getting it out.

Senator WATKINS. We are trying to get it for the record.

Mr. SOURWINE. We are trying to ask what your recollection was. I don't know why we should have to fight about this.

Mr. CARTER. I am not fighting at all. I am just trying to remember whether I stayed until the press release was finally composed or whether I slipped out on some errands.

Senator WATKINS. Did you see it and read it before you left?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember.

Senator WATKINS. Did you see that press release before it was issued to the press?

Mr. CATRER. I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is it possible that you slipped out and did not come back and actually didn't go to the Aldo Cafe in this car?

Mr. CARTER. No, I went to the Aldo Cafe, and I must have known the general outline of the press release.

Mr. SOURWINE. You went to the Aldo Cafe with Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore and Mr. Jones, didn't you?

Mr. CARTER. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. From Mr. Fortas' office, didn't you?

Mr. CARTER. That, I can't remember. As I say, some time late in the afternoon of early evening I am almost certain I slipped out. Whether the four of us left Fortas, Porter, and Arnold's office at the same time, or whether they picked me up at whatever hotel I was staying at, and then going to the Aldo Cafe, I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no recollection on that?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, can you tell us whether you went from the morning session of this hearing on the 22d to the office of Arnold, Fortas & Porter?

Mr. CARTER. I can't. I remember some time, in midday, going to one of the hotels near here, where occasionally I stayed, the Congressional or the Dodge, and sometimes going to——

Mr. SOURWINE. We are talking about this particular day.

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember on this particular occasion whether you came back and attended the afternoon session of Mr. Budenz' testimony?

Mr. CARTER. I am almost certain I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, do you remember whether, after that afternoon session you did go to the office of Arnold, Fortas & Porter?

Mr. CARTER. I am sure I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you did there meet Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore and Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were they all there when you got there?

Mr. CARTER. I can't say.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is there any possibility that you went from here to that office with Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. Conceivably.

Mr. SOURWINE. Wouldn't you remember it if you had?

Mr. CARTER. No. Mr. Catesby Jones was not a prominent figure in my life at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you tell us whether you came down here to the afternoon session with Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember. It would be likely, if we had been together in the noon hours.

Mr. SOURWINE. It would be likely. But you can't remember?

Mr. CARTER. Can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, did you come here on the second day of Mr. Budenz' testimony, that is, on the 23d of August?

Mr. CARTER. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you come here with Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. I can't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you, after the conclusion of that morning session, go back to the office of Arnold, Fortas & Porter?

Mr. CARTER. I may have, or I may not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember whether you went there with Mr. Catesby Jones?

Mr. CARTER. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you remember anything about the occasion of writing of the press release or the dinner that you haven't told us about?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, I think at the restaurant there was some kind of very attractive shellfish that we ate or that I ate, and I think that at the Arnold, Fortas, and Porter office, as you now refresh my memory by your questions, I am pretty sure that Mr. Lattimore and Mrs. Lattimore were busily preparing a press release, and I stood around available in case they thought I had anything to contribute. Whether I had anything to contribute or not, I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Carter, as a matter of fact didn't you all have veal scallopini for dinner that night?

Mr. CARTER. That is Italian, isn't it?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I don't remember. I should have sworn that I had some shellfish.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, you had brought up shellfish and I simply wondered. Your memory was good enough to remember what you ate. Were you just tossing in the shellfish or do you remember eating shellfish there.

Mr. CARTER. I couldn't swear one way or the other. I may have.

Senator WATKINS. In fact, the matter is that you do not remember very much about this but you went to dinner?

Mr. CARTER. The grapes.

Senator WATKINS. And it was a joint, as I think you said.

Mr. CARTER. I will edit that in case the manager of the restaurant feels hurt about it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Carter, while you were in the Aldo Cafe on that evening of the dinner, did you see anyone there whom you recognized?

Mr. CARTER. Other than the three other people at the table I saw no one. Apparently some one who identified us was also there but I saw no one. Well, I don't remember seeing any one that I had ever seen before other than the three guests.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did anyone at the table say anything in your hearing about having recognized anybody in the cafe?

Mr. CARTER. I don't remember. They may have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any questions?

Mr. MORRIS. Just one thing. Is it also your testimony that you do not recall the name Catesby Jones? When it turned up in these hearings, that name meant nothing to you?

Mr. CARTER. It meant nothing to me until it turned up in these hearings. When you are introduced to people, sometimes you have a photographic memory, and yet sometimes the introducer sort of mumbles, "Do you know Mr.———."

Mr. MORRIS. But you do have a flair for interesting names, don't you, Mr. Carter?

Mr. CARTER. I didn't have a flair for that name.

Mr. MORRIS. The name Catesby Jones was not interesting for you to remember 7 months later?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you read Mr. Jones' testimony before this committee?

Mr. CARTER. I have not.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have not read it. Do you know what he testified to before this committee?

Mr. CARTER. I saw the story in the April 3 New York Journal American.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that all you know about it?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Holland told me that at another session of this committee if I remember rightly, some reference was made. But I don't remember just what the point was. I think Mr. Holland's point was that maybe this wasn't the whole story and that one should read other parts of the testimony. I had no copies of the testimony covering this period, and haven't looked it up since.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you read Mr. Lattimore's testimony with regard to the occasion of this dinner?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you discussed it with him or with Mrs. Lattimore?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any more questions, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. No.

Mr. Chairman, I do have a few questions by way of identifying documents to address to Mr. Carter in view of the fact that he is here. I have taken up these two matters with Mr. Carter and his attorney. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this document, please?

Mr. MANDEL. This is an original handwritten memorandum from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, with L. E. S. marked in the corner, words looking this——

Mr. MORRIS. Just identify the document.

Mr. MANDEL. There is no date on it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did that come from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. It came from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Carter, I offer you that document and ask you if that is your handwriting there.

Mr. CARTER. It is.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you offering that for the record, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. I want to be sure that Mr. Carter identifies it as his handwriting.

Mr. CARTER. It looks to me, Mr. Chairman, as though it were a piece of scrap paper——

Senator WATKINS. Please do not write on it now.

Mr. CARTER. On which I made two separate memoranda. One is in ink, which appears to read "boarded type" either 10 cents or $1, and then "341 face armory, rent." That is in ink. Then in pencil is "friend of Alger Hiss," and then underneath that line is the name "Robert Miller." And up in the left-hand corner, in pencil, are the initials "L. E. S."

Mr. MORRIS. L. E. S. stands for Lawrence Salisbury?

Mr. CARTER. I should presume so. What he would do with either of these pen scratchings, I don't know.

Mr. MORRIS. Isn't the notation there written that Robert Miller is described as a friend of Alger Hiss?

Mr. CARTER. That could be so interpreted. That line reads "friend of Alger Hiss," the next is "Robert Miller."

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, there has been a conflict of testimony before this committee as to whether Mr. Carter knew Robert Miller and knew him to be a friend of Alger Hiss, and also when we had Mr. Miller on the stand yesterday, Miller did not concede that he was a friend of Alger Hiss. In view of that conflict may this be introduced in the record.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, I don't mean to interfere with the offer of this for the record. I think it should go in the record. But at this point, it should go into the record as a piece of paper coming from the Institute files and as a piece of paper that the witness discussed. The evidentiary value is for the committee to determine.

Senator WATKINS. Go ahead. We will hear your question and the answer, and maybe that will help.

Mr. CARTER. May I ask my attorney for a comment on the question?

Mr. SOURWINE. If you want to consult with your attorney, consult with him.

Mr. MARKS. I was just going to suggest this facsimile procedure. I am not going to talk about any answers to any questions, but the question of how it gets into the record. If this is part of the printed record, may we have this in facsimile, as we did with Miss Farley.

Mr. SOURWINE. I think that should be done.

Mr. CARTER. And I would hope some device would be had for showing that one item was in pen and the other was in pencil.

Mr. SOURWINE. The record shows that the upper item is in pen and the lower item and the initials in the upper left-hand corner are in pencil.

Senator WATKINS. You have so described it accurately and definitely.

Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to ask you if you remember anything about this memorandum.

Mr. CARTER. As Mr. Morris hinted, I think, I forgot even what hearing it was, I was presented with a letter from myself to Alger

Hiss who, at that time, was president of the Carnegie Endowment of International Peace. This was several years ago. And in that letter, if Mr. Morris will refresh my memory, I told Hiss that I had had lunch with Robert Miller. "I had a delightful and illuminating talk." Then I call attention to the fact that he brought me the good news that Hiss has succeeded Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler as president of the endowment and that I hoped Columbia University would be as eminently successful in getting a successor to Dr. Butler as the endowment has been.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is all of that responsive to the question, Mr. Carter?

Mr. CARTER. I thought Mr. Morris asked me to read it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember what the question was? Do you remember?

Mr. CARTER. I asked if I could see the text of the letter and he handed it to me.

Senator WATKINS. There is no question.

Mr. SOURWINE. There is a question pending and the witness has gone far afield. I wonder if the reporter would read the question back so we can all know what it was.

(The reporter read from his notes as follows: "Mr. SOURWINE. I would like to ask you if you remember anything about this memorandum.")

Mr. CARTER. I remember that this letter was introduced——

Mr. SOURWINE. Let's get back to the memorandum, Mr. Carter. We have rambled on to this letter once before. I want to know if you remember anything about this memorandum. It is before you. You have laid the book on top of it. But I want to know if you remember anything about this memorandum.

Mr. CARTER. I see.

Mr. SOURWINE. That book wasn't anywhere near your hands when you were asked that question.

Mr. CARTER. The memorandum had the name of Miller.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. Do you remember anything about that memorandum?

Mr. CARTER. I remember nothing except that Mr. Morris, before this morning's session began, handed it to me and asked me to identify it as to whether it was my handwriting, and I affirmed that it was my handwriting.

Mr. SOURWINE. You remember nothing else of the circumstances on which you made that notation; is that right?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. And has it refreshed your recollection, Mr. Carter, on whether or not you do, in fact, remember Robert T. Miller?

Mr. CARTER. I remember nothing more about Robert Miller other than what I testified here, and my memory at that session was very vague, except that in answer to my question in your office this morning as to who he was, you explained that he was public-relations man, and then you added something——

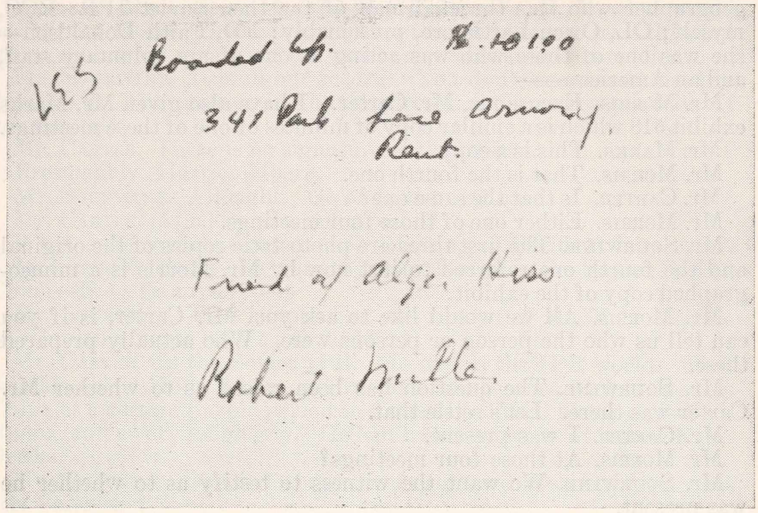
Mr. MORRIS. That he testified he was a public-relations man.

Mr. CARTER. I stand corrected.

Mr. MORRIS. Will this go in the record, Mr. Chairman?

Senator WATKINS. That will be placed into the record in facsimile.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 748," and is as follows:)



Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I give to the witness our exhibits 478, part 9, p. 3136, 485, part 9, p. 3172, and 519 part 10, p. 3323, which are minutes of meetings which took place in Moscow, and ask Mr. Carter if he can recall who actually prepared those minutes?

Senator WATKINS. Are these already in the record?

Mr. MORRIS. They are already in the record, the three exhibits I have read.

Senator WATKINS. All right. Do you want to see them before you try to answer?

Mr. SOURWINE. He has photostats in front of him.

Mr. MARKS. We don't have the exhibit numbers.

Mr. SOURWINE. They have been mentioned for the record. You have the documents.

Mr. MARKS. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Lattimore could not testify, when he was asked, as to who actually prepared those minutes. You were present at those meetings and we are asking you if you know who prepared those minutes.

Mr. MARKS. Has Mr. Carter testified that he was present at the meetings?

Mr. CARTER. My initials are on it.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you look at those minutes and indicate whether or not they can aid you in answering the question, Were you present at those meetings?

Mr. SOURWINE. If there is any question about that we had better clear it up, because Mr. Lattimore has testified that he was present.

Mr. CARTER. It is a meeting of April 6; the year is not given, but I assume that it was 1936 because that was the only year in which Mr. Lattimore, as far as I know, was in Moscow.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that the only year that you were in Moscow?

Mr. CARTER. No, no. I think I have said before I have been there ten or a dozen times. A meeting April 6. Motiliev, that is a Soviet geographer who was the chairman of the then Soviet IPR; ECC, myself; OL, Owen Lattimore, presumably; FD, Faith Donaldson—she was one of those who was acting as one of my voluntary staff, and an American——

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me, Mr. Carter. I have also given Mr. Marks exhibit 518 which is a similar copy of minutes of one of these meetings.

Mr. MARKS. This is a copy.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the fourth one.

Mr. CARTER. Is that the same one?

Mr. MORRIS. Either one of those four meetings.

Mr. SOURWINE. The first three are photostatic copies of the original and the fourth one referred to just now by Mr. Morris is a mimeographed copy of the exhibit.

Mr. MORRIS. All we would like to ask you, Mr. Carter, is if you can tell us who the person or persons were. Who actually prepared these.

Mr. SOURWINE. The question has been raised as to whether Mr. Carter was there. Let's settle that.

Mr. CARTER. I was present.

Mr. MORRIS. At those four meetings?

Mr. SOURWINE. We want the witness to testify as to whether he was present.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I was present at those four.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now Mr. Morris' question.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know what person or persons prepared the minutes of those four meetings?

Mr. CARTER. They probably were different at different times. But I will have to scan them to make certain.

In the April 6 meeting, they might have been recorded on the Russian side by Mr. Harondar, who was a part-time secretary of the Soviet IPR, and an expert in American movies. On our side, either F. D. or H. M. FD, Faith Donaldson, a woman speed champion, and Harriet Moore, who was studying Mongolian problems in Moscow at the time, on behalf of the IPR.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did both of those women write in shorthand?

Mr. CARTER. I don't think either of them did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is there any possibility that minutes prepared by Mr. Harondar would have found their way into the files of the IPR?

Mr. CARTER. I think it is extremely unlikely.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do these appear to you to be and can you identify them as memoranda which were prepared on your side, that is by——

Mr. CARTER. Absolutely.

Mr. SOURWINE. By the American delegation?

Mr. CARTER. Or the international—I was there as secretary general of the Pacific council.

Mr. SOURWINE. They were prepared by someone under your authority who had gone there with you?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, under non-Soviet authority.

Mr. SOURWINE. These are the minutes which were kept for your information and for your files; is that right?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Now we are going to identify the others as to who prepared them.

Mr. CARTER. April 6—the previous one, I have not looked at.

April 2. Mr. Carter; Mr. and Mrs. Lattimore; H. M., that would be Harriet Moore; Harondar, the Russian. I have not read this, but it is a discussion regarding the exchange of books and periodicals.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is in our record. You don't necessarily need to describe it. The question is who prepared it so far as you can tell. If you can tell.

Mr. CARTER. There is no signature at the bottom.

Presumably, Harriet Moore.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right. Go on to the next one.

Mr. CARTER. April 2—you got April 6?

What is the next consecutive one? Meeting on Pacific Affairs, April 8, Motiliev, Voitinski—he was the research man in the Soviet IPR in China—E. C. C., myself——

Mr. SOURWINE. That is your best description of Mr. Voitinski, research man in what was it you said?

Mr. CARTER. In the Soviet IPR. He was in the IPR world. That was his role. He had been out in that role because he had been in China at a certain purple period in Chinese political history, vis-á-vis Russia, and a very tough guy. He had been a prisoner of war in Kamchatka.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you feel the phrase you used adequately describes Mr. Voitinski?

Mr. CARTER. The phrase describes his formal IPR connection. He was chairman of the research committee of the IPR.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead.

Mr. CARTER. E. C. C., myself. O. L., Owen Lattimore. Harondar, the Soviet man. H. M., Harriet Moore. And this was—well, you aren't interested.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who prepared it?

Mr. CARTER. Presumably Harriet Moore.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right, now, the fourth one.

Mr. CARTER. April 12, Motiliev; Voitinski; ECC, Carter; O. L., that is Owen Lattimore; R. M., Harriet Moore; and Harondar.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who prepared that?

Mr. CARTER. Presumably Harriet Moore. I imagine that as she was making the draft she finally showed it to me, to see whether I felt that it gave a fair and balanced impression of what happened.

Mr. SOURWINE. You would say you had approved these as fair and balanced reports of what did happen?

Mr. CARTER. To the extent that I made a few copies and circulated them to a few of my colleagues.

Mr. SOURWINE. You would say they were——

Mr. CARTER. I did not submit them to the Soviet IPR.

Mr. SOURWINE. No, no; but they were for your information and your files, weren't they?

Mr. CARTER. Exactly.

Mr. SOURWINE. There was no reason to submit them to the Soviet?

Mr. MORRIS. If there had been any serious inaccuracies you would have corrected them?

Mr. CARTER. I would hope so.

Mr. MORRIS. And to the best of your recollection, Harriet Moore was a good and active reporter of meetings?

Mr. CARTER. Excellent.

Mr. MORRIS. And Faith Donaldson?

Mr. CARTER. Faith Donaldson had not had the benefit of a Bryn Mawr education that Miss Moore had.

Mr. SOURWINE. In view of the fact that on three of these occasions Harriet Moore was present and Faith Donaldson was not, do you have any feeling as to who actually prepared the minutes on the occasion when both of those ladies were present?

Mr. CARTER. The major drafting would have been done by Miss Moore.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions.

Senator WATKINS. The committee will be in recess.

(Whereupon, at 12:30 p. m., the committee recessed until 2 p. m. Monday, April 7, 1952.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 2 p. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Senator Pat McCarran, chairman, presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Eastland, Smith, Ferguson, and Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Will you be sworn. Do you solemnly swear the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I do.

TESTIMONY OF IGOR BOGOLEPOV

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give your full name to the reporter.

Mr. BOGOLEPOW. My first name is Igor, I-g-o-r. My last name is Bogolepov, B-o-g-o-l-e-p-o-v.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I am a Federal employee in the service of the United States Government.

Mr. MORRIS. You are in service abroad, are you?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I am; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Where were you born, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In the Russian Empire.

Mr. MORRIS. In what year?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. 1904.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you born in Siberia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was.

Mr. MORRIS. What has been your service in the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I graduated from the University of Petrograd, now Leningrad.

Mr. MORRIS. In what year did you graduate from the University of Petrograd?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. 1923. I entered the foreign service of the Soviet Union, the foreign office.

Mr. MORRIS. In that same year, 1923?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. At the end of 1923.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, you entered the foreign service of the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your first position in the Soviet Foreign Office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In the legal department of the foreign office.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you remain in the Soviet Foreign Office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. At that time until 1926.

Mr. MORRIS. Until 1926.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did you have during the period 1923 to 1926?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. First I was secretary of the department and then officer of the department.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you terminate your connection with the Soviet Foreign Office in 1926?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I did for a time.

Mr. MORRIS. Why did you do that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was drafted into the Red army.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you serve, therefore, with the Red army?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, I did.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. First I was a private in the First Rifle Division in Moscow. Then I finished the school for second lieutenants, and in the summer of 1927 I was assigned to the general staff of the Red army.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your rank at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Second lieutenant.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that the extent of your military training at that particular period?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. When did that end, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. As I said, in the summer of 1927.

Mr. MORRIS. In the summer of 1927.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was transferred to the general staff of the Red army.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you remain on the general staff of the Red army?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Until the middle of 1929.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Then what did you do?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was liaison officer between the general staff and the foreign office.

Mr. MORRIS. With what rank?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Colonel.

Mr. MORRIS. The rank of colonel.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Correct.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you remain liaison officer between the Soviet Foreign Office and the Red Army?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. About one-half year.

Mr. MORRIS. One and one-half years?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your next assignment after that, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In that time I participated in the conference on disarmament at Geneva.

Mr. MORRIS. In what capacity?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. As interpreter and secretary of the Soviet delegation.

Mr. SOURWINE. What year was that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. 1927–28.

Mr. MORRIS. That is while you were in military service?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. I was secretary to the military delegation of the Soviet Union.

Mr. MORRIS. That was in 1927 and 1928?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. And that coincides with the period of your military service which you have just described to this committee?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. With the general staff, that is right.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened to you after 1929?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Then I returned back to the Foreign Office.

Mr. MORRIS. In what capacity?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was an officer in the trade relations and policy division first. Then in 1931 I was working for a short time in the press department of the same office.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you retain your military rank during this time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. I was officer of the reserves.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the reserves.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Now will you tell us your further experience in the Soviet Foreign Office after 1931?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. From 1931 to 1937 I was acting as assistant to the chief of the League of Nations division.

Mr. MORRIS. Chief of the League of Nations division of the Soviet Foreign Office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, assistant.

Mr. MORRIS. From the period 1931 to 1937?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, with some interruption for the Red Army again.

Mr. MORRIS. Then in 1937 you say you were impressed into the service with the Red Army again?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In 1937 I was sent to the army armored forces school in Leningrad for 3 months. I learned then the Spanish language, and I was sent with our troops to Spain, where the civil war was going on at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. You used the expression "our troops." You mean the Soviet troops?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I meant Soviet troops.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did you have in the Spanish Civil War?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was liaison officer between Marshal Kulik——

Mr. MORRIS. Will you spell that name?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. K-u-l-i-k. And General Paalov——

Mr. MORRIS. Were you liaison between him and General of the Army Paalov and Spanish Republican General Miaja? Is that M-a-i-h-a?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. M-i-a-j-a. And other Communist and Republican leaders of Spain.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you stay in Spain?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Several weeks only because in December 1937 a special commission from Moscow came to Spain and proceeded to arrest all the generals and the officers.

Mr. MORRIS. Why were you arrested then, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was arrested with all other officers or most of the other officers who were sent previously with me, with two Soviet marshals and then we were sent back to Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. I see. Now will you explain the nature of those arrests, if you know?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In the prison I was first told that I was an agent of General Franco and a Trotskyist.

Mr. SOURWINE. A Trotskyist, you say?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. The same kind of accusation was against the whole group of the Soviet military people.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the real reason? That was the formal reason given, wasn't it?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the real reason, if you know? Will you tell us if you know the real reason for your arrest at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I wasn't told other than what I told you. So I spent several months in Lubianka jail. That is central political prison in Moscow. And then I was released with reinstitution of all my rank and capacity.

Mr. MORRIS. You were reinstated?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Was your arrest at that time connected with the arrest of Marshal Tukachevsky?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Tukachevsky was arrested first in June of 1937.

Mr. MORRIS. When was your arrest?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was arrested in December 1937.

Mr. MORRIS. As far as you know there was no connection between the two?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can't say that. The people who arrested me later were themselves arrested and shot, so I can't say what happened.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you were reinstated in 1938?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did you then hold?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Then I was assigned back to the Foreign Office.

Mr. MORRIS. In what capacity?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was made foreign editor of the publication of the Foreign Office in the French language in Moscow, Journal du Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you spell that for the committee, please?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. J-o-u-r-n-a-l Moscow, M-o-s-c-o-w.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that connected with Izvestia in any way?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, a little bit, but it was not connected with the Foreign Office. It was an unofficial publication of the Foreign Office.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you hold that position?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. About 1 year.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, if you will permit me, I was unable to hear whether the witness said that was an official publication of the Foreign Office or an unofficial one.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. An unofficial, thank you.

Mr. SOURWINE. The Foreign Office controlled it, is that right?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Indirectly.

Mr. SOURWINE. And dictated who should be its editor?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is how you got your job?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. But it was not an official publication?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, it was not an official publication.

Mr. MORRIS. During this period, were you a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, I wasn't.

Mr. MORRIS. Why were you not a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was impossible at that time for people of nonproletarian origin to join the Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. And you were of nonproletarian origin?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; I was descended from a bourgeois family.

Mr. MORRIS. You were descended from a bourgeois family and therefore you were ineligible at that time for membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was your father? Do you have any objection for security reasons to telling us who your father was?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I have no objection because my father is dead now.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us who he was?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. He was a professor, he was a member of Academy of Science of the Soviet Union, he was a member of State Planning Commission, he was a member of the board of directors of the State Bank of the Soviet Union.

Mr. MORRIS. That is in the czarist government?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In the Soviet Government.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever apply for membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you apply?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In 1939.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened when you applied in 1939 for membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. At that time after the 18-party congress, after the big purges when the party and the administrative apparatus and the army were deprived of much of their prominent members, the decision was taken that they should have new members, and so although they formerly rejected people of nonproletarian origin, now they started to drag them into the party. As a matter of fact, my application was done not involuntarily, but I was asked to make application.

Mr. MORRIS. You did not volunteer, but you were asked to apply for membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is correct, but I will add to it that even if I wasn't asked, I did it because it was my long-time intention to get into the Communist Party and to get a prominent position in order to sabotage the party.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bogolepov, what was the first movement on the part of the Soviet authorities to your application, to your formal application for membership in the party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. What do you mean by the first move?

Mr. MORRIS. I mean, did you become a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I filed the application, and they checked the application for several months because I was, as I told you, arrested. It was a rather complicated matter. They had to go through many instances in order to approve. Then I became, according to the rules, a candidate for the party.

Mr. MORRIS. How long were you a candidate for membership in the Communist Party?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Until the time I left the Soviet Union in 1942.

Mr. MORRIS. In 1942.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Right.

Mr. MORRIS. So in the period between 1939, which was the date of your application, until you left the Soviet Union in 1942, your status was that of candidate for membership in the Communist Party.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. I became the candidate in 1940.

Mr. MORRIS. You became candidate in 1940.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you were in the legal office of the Foreign Office; is that right?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. At that time I was already chief of the League of Nations Division of the Foreign Office.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that an extension of your work in the legal office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; that was nothing to do with legal work.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your position then subsequent to 1939?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Immediately after I received the candidate card there was no more instances to my work as it was before. As you have seen, I was merely in a deparment which has no political assignments, the legal department or I was acting as an expert. But now when I became a candidate and was a member of the party, I had the same right and the same opportunity concerning a career in the Soviet Government.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I interrupt, Mr. Morris? If the Chair will permit? Did I understand you correctly, sir, that while you were permitted to work in the Soviet Government before you became an applicant or candidate for membership in the party, up until the time when you did become such a candidate you were kept in nonpolitical jobs?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. And after you became a candidate you are now about to tell us you branched out into or were transferred into political jobs?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were permitted to handle political jobs?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead and tell us about that.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. So after this I was assigned to the job of counselor to the foreign office.

Mr. MORRIS. Counselor to the foreign office.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. That is in the period following 1939?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. In that capacity I was able to attend the meetings of the Foreign Commissar Litvinov and his assistants. I have the possibility of probing in top secret files, to read ciphered telegrams which referred to my immediate task, and my immediate task, consisted again with the problems of League of Nations first and in part with the problems of organization infiltration of our influence on the Western Press, administration, and social life.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you hold that position, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Until Litvinov was dismissed and Molotov came in, and Molotov didn't like Litvinov and his work, so in a very short time, actually in several weeks, he dismissed all people who had been working with Litvinov.

Mr. MORRIS. What year was that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was 1939, in the summer of 1939.

Mr. MORRIS. Did that have anything to do with the Hitler-Stalin pact?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. Litvinov was dismissed because of the coming Stalin-Hitler pact.

The CHAIRMAN. Who succeeded Litvinov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Molotov.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your next assignment?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Then I was transferred to the Radio Moscow system, to that part of Radio Moscow which dealt with the foreign broadcast programs, and I became first the vice chairman of the Soviet Foreign Broadcast System and later chairman of this system. Soviet broadcasts were translated in 18 and later in 21 foreign languages, including English and American. In that capacity I had under me a lot of American people who were working in broadcasts for America, and at the same time I was able to contact the Comintern people.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you did have working under you Americans, and this is the Voice of Moscow, is that right?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you tell us who those Americans were?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, I can't because according to the rules of the organization I knew only the first names of these people.

Mr. MORRIS. So you can't identify them?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. They were John, and so on. Even to me, the Chief of the Service, their real names were not disclosed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether they were native born Americans? Were they people who had been born in this country?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, I didn't ask that question.

Mr. MORRIS. You couldn't tell by their accent? Did they have an accent or did they have all the appearance of being native born Americans?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. There was one Negro, and there was one lady who was dismissed because the American Communist Party sent us a letter saying that our feminine speaker was not very good, that she had not an American but an English cockney accent, and that was the reason why she was dismissed. I guess these people were at least not from South America.

Mr. MORRIS. Not from——

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not from the Southern States.

Mr. MORRIS. Not from the southern part of the United States?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; because I couldn't understand——

Mr. MORRIS. You could understand?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can understand better people from the North.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us for how long you stayed in that assignment, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Until the summer of 1940, 1 year. In June 1940 I was sent with Vishinsky, Zhdanov, and Dekezoniov—Zhdanov was a member of the Politburo then and right hand of Stalin, Vishinsky was then Vice Foreign Commissar, and Dekezoniov was Deputy Foreign Commissar, and at the same time Chief of Foreign Service of the Political Police.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where were you sent with these men?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. To Baltic countries, for the occupation of the Baltic countries.

Mr. MORRIS. By that time the Baltic countries had been taken over by the Soviet Union.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not yet. We came under false names and false passports. They were independent countries.

Mr. MORRIS. Subsequently those Baltic countries were taken over by the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Very soon.

Mr. MORRIS. You were there to work on the sovietization of those particular countries?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Right. I became director of the radio system of the Baltic countries.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you hold that position, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Until the beginning of the war which came, as you know, for the Soviet Union on the 22d of June 1941, for 1 year again.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened at the commencement of the war? What happened to you?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I joined the staff of the northwestern front of the Red Army, defending the Baltic countries and the approach to Leningrad, first under Marshal Voroshilov, later under Marshal Zhukov.

Mr. MORRIS. With the rank of colonel?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The rank of colonel.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about your military experiences commencing on June 22, 1941.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. For about 1 month I was with the retreating army from the borders of the Soviet Union through Latvia and Estonia to the approach to Leningrad. We arrived in August 1941 to Leningrad, but without our army, which surrendered to the Germans; only general officers and commissars, no army. At that time we got new reserves and made a good stand against the Germans on a front around 100 kilometers of Leningrad. At that time I got word from a good friend of mine, General Vlassov, who was one of the commanders around Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. You say he was one of the commanders?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Defending Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Constituting the defense of Moscow.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You got word from him?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I came to Moscow to see him. I talked with him about the political and military situation of the Soviet Union. I knew him pretty well. He knew pretty well myself. We took the decision that the time had arrived to bring about a great change, to use the defeat and the war in Germany for the overthrow of the Soviet Government. The best solution——

The CHAIRMAN. Give me that again, please, that last sentence. The time is ripe for what?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. For overthrow of the Soviet regime in Russia. In this conference with General Vlassov I, with another general, decided that the best way is to go over to the Germans, to join the 4 million Red soldiers and officers already in German hands——

Mr. MORRIS. You say 4 million?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. About 4 million; yes—and to try to convince the Germans of the possibility of turning arms against the Communist regime in our country. General Vlassov surrendered to the Germans in March 1942. I escaped across the front lines at the very beginning of 1942, and I met him again in a German PW camp.

Mr. MORRIS. How long did you remain in that PW camp?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was first in a Gestapo jail, and then after the Germans cleared me—because it was the order of Hitler to shoot all commissars and all Jewish people. First, I wasn't a Jew, and second, I wasn't a commissar. The Gestapo carried me back to the German Army officials, and the German Army officials let me free and proposed that I work on propaganda against the Soviet Union. I agreed to do this, and for about 1 year I was leading a powerful transmitter for the German Government on the outskirts of Berlin, carrying out the anti-Communist propaganda. It wasn't until 1944, due to the political quarrels between different groups of Nazis, the Wehrmacht, the German Army, and the German Propaganda Ministry under Goebbels, that they were ready to help us to carry out propaganda, and so on, and even to organize an anti-Communist army, whereas the Ostministerium, Rosenberg and Hitler himself were against it. One of the results of the struggle between the different cliques of Nazis was that my station was shut down, and I retired.

Mr. MORRIS. This is what year now? You retired in 1944 when your station was shut down?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Then I tried to do some work with General Vlassov, who at that time was also relieved from the camp, but soon I discovered the impossibility to work with the Germans.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you discovered the impossibility of working with the Germans?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. It was not that the Nazis were too bad. When I came over and knew that they were no good. But I didn't know that the Germans were so silly as they are. Here I made my mistake. In 1944 I simply retired to a German farm in Bavaria, working as a manual worker on a German farm and waiting until the American troops came and the war was over, which was in April 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened then in April 1945?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In April 1945 I and many other people like me, the Russians, the French, the Poles, and so on, went to meet the American troops with the first spring flowers as our liberators, but the people from Eastern Europe were obliged to hide from Americans because they started to consider us as collaborators and to turn us over to the Soviet repatriation commission. So from 1945 to the beginning of 1947 I was obliged to keep myself hidden in Germany.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you generally with a group of people with General Vlassov at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. I have the opportunity and the honor to be before you now only because I left the troops of General Vlassov and his organization, because Vlassov troops and the organization of Vlassov who believed the Americans and capitulation which was signed by the general and the surrender were all turned over to the Soviets.

Mr. MORRIS. How many people were involved in that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can't say precisely, but according to the estimates of my comrades there were only a few left. We had had three full divisions, which means around 45,000 people.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bogolepov, are you from your experiences in Moscow acquainted with an organization called the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what you know about the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I have mentioned to you that at the same time when I was working for the Foreign Office I was involved in some literary and scientific activities in so-called Communist Academy or, better to say, in the Institute for World Economics and Politics, whose chief was Eugene Varga.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the Institute for World Communists?

Mr. SOURWINE. World Economics and Politics.

The CHAIRMAN. World Economics and Politics, the official name of the institute?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. As you perhaps know, the Soviet Institute of Pacific Relations was a part of this institute. So actually I was working under the same roof and with the same people who were connected with the American Institute of Pacific Relations. Here was the chief source of my information, which I will give you right now. The second part of my information I got directly from the secret files of the Soviet Foreign Office.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what was the Institute of Pacific Relations as you saw it at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. First, it was not an institute, but a desk or a group of research workers on China, Japan, and other far-eastern countries.

Mr. MORRIS. You say it was a group of research workers on the countries that you just named?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, yes; a Chinese group, a Japanese group, and so on. At that time, I think it was the beginning of the thirties, they did literary research work.

Mr. MORRIS. You say in the early thirties they did research work?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. They worked as Marxist and Communist scholars, but still as scholars. But in the course of time, toward the middle of the thirties, the situation became, in my opinion, changed. First, the people were changed who were working in our Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give us some details on that? You say the people were changed in the middle 1930's. What changes do you know from your own experience?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. From the old people who were working in the twenties and the beginning of the thirties in this body about which I am speaking now, only one person remained. The other sinologists——

Mr. MORRIS. Sinologists? Experts on China?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. On China and Japan—had disappeared and were out then instead of them came in the true Communists who had not very much to do with science, but very much to do with some other matters.

Mr. MORRIS. What other matters do you refer to?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I mean military intelligence and political intelligence.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you tell us who the one person who remained was?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That was Anatole Kantorovich. He was a nonparty man. He was a real scholar and very nice person.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were the people who came in and took the place of the scholars that you just described?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. You want me to call the names?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes; to the best of your ability.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. First of all was a certain Mr. Voitinsky.

Mr. MORRIS. Voitinsky. Will you tell us who Mr. Voitinsky was?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Mr. Voitinsky was known to me in different conferences as a man who in the 1920's was a big wheel, big cog, big shot in Siberia when he liquidated a lot of former officers.

Mr. MORRIS. You say he liquidated them?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. He was vice chief of the Siberian Cheka according to this own words. That is the first name of the secret police.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he a Comintern man?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Just a minute. For this he had the Order of the Red Banner which he displayed often to us. I can't tell you all of this, but at the time when I met him he was already an old hand in the Comintern.

Mr. MORRIS. You say he was an old hand in the Comintern?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. To me he was not a scholar and not a member of the institute with which I had been working, but first a man of the Comintern. He was carrying through the political line of the Comintern, and science was to him only a media to carry out his political Comintern line.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Voitinsky has appeared throughout our hearings as one of the officials of the Soviet Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations. He presided at several of the meetings on which we had considerable testimony here during the last few weeks.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The second whom I remember of this group was Mr. Abramson.

Mr. SOURWINE. Before you go to Mr. Abramson, I would like to ask you a question about Mr. Voitinsky, if the Chair will permit.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was Mr. Voitinsky a research man? Did he himself engage in research?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Will you please repeat the question? I didn't get it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what research is?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Research. Did Mr. Voitinsky do that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, with the help of other people. He didn't work himself. He had a lot of secretaries and assistants to whom he gave directives to get him the data, and he arranged all this or more often it was that he put only his signature on articles which were written by other people.

Mr. Abramson, not unlike Mr. Voitinsky, was a scholar. Of course you must understand that when I use the word "scholar," you can't compare it with your American or western notion of scholar, because in our Soviet country a scholar is a politician who is working in the field of science. He is not a pure scientist. He does not know what objectivity is, and he doesn't care to be objective. He is carrying out the slogan of Lenin even before the revolution, saying that there is no impartial science, that there is only party science. So when I say that Mr. Abramson was a scholar, he was a Marxist and Communist scholar. Sometimes he met Mr. Abramson in a military uniform, not of course in the rooms of the Institute for World Economics and Politics, but outside. He was clad in the uniform of the fourth division of the General Staff of the Red Army, the military intelligence.

Mr. MORRIS. So Abramson was an officer in the fourth division of the Soviet Army which was the military division?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I saw him in military uniform in his bureau in the fourth division of the General Staff.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember his rank? Was the rank indicated on his uniform?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I am afraid I would make a mistake. I don't remember.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he a high officer?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Either a colonel or major.

Mr. MORRIS. To the best of your ability you would estimate him to have been a major or colonel?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was he a field officer? Do you know that he was a field officer?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, he was a staff officer.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were the other people who came into the Institute of Pacific Affairs at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Then I can mention a man who has two names, Abolin, and the second name Avorin.

Mr. MORRIS. You say that is one person?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. One person, yes. In Moscow he was known as Aborin, in Manchuria when he was for a time consul general either in Munkiang or Kirin, I don't remember he was Avorin. He has a surname which I do not remember. Under this surname he was known to me in the same fourth division of the Red Army, but I do not remember how he was called then there. That is about Abolin or Avorin.

This man succeeded Kantorovich. When Kantorovich was arrested and executed, then Avorin took up his functions of secretary general of the Soviet Council of Pacific Affairs.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Mr. Arosev?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Mr. Arosev, yes I knew him personally. He was chairman of the VOKS. That is Soviet for Cultural Relations between Soviet Union and the Western World.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know the nature of the operations they were conducting in the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I am sorry. I would like to add one more.

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me. Go ahead, please do.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I have to mention one more name, that is, a certain Kara-Murza. This man was also intelligence officer, in charge of Mongolian relations. Later when I have to testify about some of the American members of some of the institutes this name would be mentioned by me once more. That is why I bring it up.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know the nature of the operation that they were conducting in the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. As I told you before, with the change of personnel, the nature of the activities of our institute changed, too.

Senator EASTLAND. Military intelligence took it over, did it not? Soviet military intelligence?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Mostly Soviet military intelligence, also the Soviet Foreign Office.

Senator EASTLAND. It became an agency of the Soviet Government.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

I didn't work myself in military intelligence, so I can't tell you precisely what kind of operations the Fourth Division of the General Staff had carried out concerning the Institute of Pacific Relations. I can only guess from indirect facts. For example, in the files of the Foreign Office I met more than once evidence that the people who were working in the Soviet Institute of Pacific Relations had been asked to ask their American counterparts to give some information concerning the fisheries in the Pacific area, and looking into the file I found always that as background for this information was always the request of naval intelligence. So I feel myself better prepared to answer the second part of the question rather than military intelligence activities. Perhaps when you will ask me some questions I will remember some isolated facts.

I got the impression from talks with my comrades working in the Soviet Institute of Pacific Relations, in the Foreign Office, that they considered this institute as a very valuable organization from two points of view. As one of my former comrades expressed it, it is like a double-way track. On one line you get information from America through this institute. On the other hand, you send information which you would like to implant in American brains through the same channel of the institute.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the double-way track that you refer to?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I mean two channels. One was the in-going channel, the second out-going channel.

The CHAIRMAN. What was that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The in-going channel was military intelligence. We extracted military information.

Mr. MORRIS. When you talk about two-way track, do you mean that military intelligence was extracted from outside the Soviet Union through the medium of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. And on the other hand, by the out-way track you mean information that you wanted to impart to the outside world was transmitted through that medium?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. Propaganda, you mean. Soviet propaganda that the Foreign Office desired implanted in foreign minds would be sent through the facilities of the Institute of Pacific Relations. That is what you mean?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is mostly propaganda, but I would say even a little more than propaganda, because not only organizational propaganda but even the organization of a network of fellow travelers in your and other countries.

Senator WATKINS. I want to ask this, Mr. Chairman: I understood you to say that you got this information from talking with your associates.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. Were you free to converse back and forth about what this group was doing?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Certainly not. If I had been free I could give you more information.

Senator WATKINS. How did you get what you did get? Were they not under some sort of surveillance, and not able to talk freely or speak freely as to what they were doing?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Well, when we discussed some common business, necessarily you have to exchange information. Of course it was not a full report about what this or other bodies were doing and what are their functions, but when I had, for example, to deal with the problem of fisheries in the Pacific, necessarily we had to speak about this matter. I gathered information from them and they got some information from me. Besides this, the human relations even in the Communist world are still human relations, and if you have good friends you can always say a couple of words, not so much, but something.

Senator WATKINS. In other words, you could discuss it some.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not too much, but still you can do a little bit, very few, of course.

Senator EASTLAND. You had access to the documents, you said, secret files?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I pause in the interrogation at this point to review our exhibit No. 430, part 8, page 2701, which is one of the many exhibits we have introduced on the questions of minutes taken at Moscow?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the minutes taken in Moscow during the meeting in Moscow?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. This is our exhibit No. 430 used in the open hearings of February 12, 1952:

MEMORANDUM OF INFORMAL CONVERSATION AT THE COMMUNIST ACADEMY, VOLKHONKA 14, MOSCOW, MAY 26, 1934

The following were present: Voitinsky, Abramson, Barnes, Carter. Voitinsky served for a time in revolutionary movement in China. Abramson studied in the university at Vladivostok, has lived in China, and speaks and reads Chinese.

1. Carter and Barnes invited Abramson to write an article for the September Pacific Affairs on the romanization of Chinese. They invited Voitinsky to write for the December issue on the land problems of Soviet China or the land problems of China generally.

I would like to skip down to paragraph 3, Mr. Chairman, and read this paragraph to the witness:

3. Mr. Voitinsky said that he believed the IPR could be of very great help to him in getting information and printed reports on the following subjects:

(a) The inner situation in Netherlands India—the economic interdependence of the peasant and the city worker, and also the interdependence of these on capital and trade in Holland. The whole situation as portrayed in official documents in Netherlands India and in Holland would be of the greatest interest to the Communist Academy. The academy would also welcome information on the nationalist movement in the Netherlands India. At the moment the academy has no Dutch-speaking member, but could easily get all Dutch documents translated.

(b) He would appreciate—

this is Voitinsky again—

all the information the IPR can send him regarding the agrarian movement in Japan and the financial dependence of Japan on other countries. He would like to compare Lenin's theses on Japan, which he feels is stated in algebraic terms transformed into arithmetical terms, through a study of finance and trade. He would like very much more information than is at present available on the evolution of the labor movement and the close relation between the village and the city.

Mr. Chairman, he goes on at length, and it all indicates that Voitinsky, about whom we have been taking testimony, was asking in this meeting for information through the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Is this the same Mr. Voitinsky about whom you have been testifying?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I guess so.

Mr. MORRIS. Does this document reveal anything to you, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I do not remember myself this problem of ours.

Mr. MORRIS. This particular meeting, you mean?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not the particular meeting, but this particular problem which you enumerated here, but it seems to me very familiar because I do remember other occasions when, as I told you, military intelligence, the foreign office or Cominform asked questions of other people to get from their American colleagues.

Mr. SOURWINE. To get what from their American colleagues?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Information. If you would like an example, I remember a question posed concerning some parts of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands.

Mr. SOURWINE. The question was posed concerning parts of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. By Voitinsky to the American members of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why did he do that? Had someone asked him about that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was a command either of military intelligence——

Mr. SOURWINE. Military intelligence wanted that information?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Through Voitinsky?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. From the American IPR?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether he got the information?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. What was the nature of the information that he asked for?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. They mostly asked——

Senator FERGUSON. No; on Alaska.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. On Alaska? Concerning the construction of roads, the food situation, and especially about the climatical conditions for polar flights.

Senator FERGUSON. From whom were they to get this information? You say the Institute of Pacific Relations. Who in the institute?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. Was any name mentioned?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; you have to understand that when names were mentioned, it was the business of intelligence work.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, you made the policy as to what you desired.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. As to who was to do it. That was intelligence.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That was not our business. That was military intelligence.

Senator FERGUSON. Who suggested that the Institute of Pacific Relations might get you the information?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That particular case which I am speaking about was taken from the file on Pacific relations of the Foreign Office, and unless I make a mistake a list of the questions concerning Alaska and the Aleutian Islands was written and presented for approval of the foreign office before it was sent to Voitinsky or who else I don't know, and was approved by the chief of the far eastern division of the General Staff of the Red Army and the far eastern intelligence.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know what year this was in?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not quite precise, but it was 1936 or 1937.

Senator FERGUSON. Where was this conversation?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was not a conversation. It was official correspondence.

Senator FERGUSON. Official correspondence. Where was it written?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was in our foreign office files. There was a copy of a letter of the military intelligence asking us to go through the Institute for World Economics and Politics investigations concerning thus and thus problems.

Senator FERGUSON. That file was in what city?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Moscow, in the foreign office. The military intelligence never asked directly. In this case they asked it through the Foreign Office.

Senator FERGUSON. The military intelligence asked the Foreign Office to ask the institute?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Whose job in the Foreign Office would it be to ask the Institute of Pacific Relations for that kind of information?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The Far Eastern Division of the Foreign Office, which was occupied with the problems of China and Japan.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Morris, don't we have some evidence in the record now showing that they inquired about some economic and geographic information in the Far East?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir. There is considerable on that. I had given this as a sample of that.

Senator FERGUSON. I mean there was some other testimony, was there not?

Mr. MORRIS. Abundant, Senator. I will offer you these, which are documents which we will be coming to soon, if you would like to look at them.

Senator FERGUSON. No. If you are going to put them in the record I know they exist.

Mr. MORRIS. Some are in, and some we plan to put in.

Mr. SOURWINE. If it wouldn't interrupt the train of discussion at this point I have one thing to clean up, Mr. Chairman.

Do you know what the address of Soviet IPR was in Moscow, the Moscow address of the Soviet Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. First it was located at 14 Volkonka, the same apartment the institute was located in.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are sure about that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. And then later I guess when Motylev took over he put the whole business in his own office on Razin Street. I don't remember the number.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it 20 Razin Street?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I don't remember.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you identify that document, please?

The CHAIRMAN. Before you do that, was the American Institute of Pacific Relations and the Soviet Institute of Pacific Relations housed in the same building? Were they in the same building, under the same roof?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Americans?

Mr. MORRIS. When the members of the American Institute of Pacific Relations visited Moscow, did they spend time in the same building as to the Soviet Council of the IPR members spent their time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can't say that, sir, because on only one occasion I saw myself the American members of the Institute of Pacific Relations in Moscow.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a Russian Institute of Pacific Relations, wasn't there, a branch of the American?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they both housed in the same building, the American and the Russian?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. What Americans? I can't understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Institute of Pacific Relations was the international, and there was the Russian branch of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they all in the same building?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, the Americans came only from time to time to Moscow. So far as I am informed, they came not often to Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Whenever they were there they had temporary quarters there?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Temporary quarters, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Since you did mention, Mr. Bogolepov, the fact that you did see some Americans, will you at this time tell us about that meeting?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. All right. But I have to call to your attention that the second part of the activities has not yet been covered.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean by the second part? Tell us about that.

Mr. MORRIS. Tell us about that.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The second part of our utilization as a media for propaganda infiltration of general ideas favorable to the Soviet Union and some particular problems which we would like to implant in American minds according to the aims of Soviet foreign policy. For this aim the members of the Soviet Institute of Pacific Relations by way of their personal meetings, by way of suggestions to solve the problems, by way of sending their own writings and in other ways tried not only to influence the American colleagues of their own but to make of these people media for infiltration of ideas favorable for Soviet foreign policy in the Far East.

Senator FERGUSON. Whose policy was that, the intelligence of the army or was it the Foreign Office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The Foreign Office. In the Foreign Office we have had a special, I think you call it joint committee, where representatives of different branches of the administration were present. In this joint committee we present the members of the Foreign Office, then of military intelligence, executive committee of the Cominform, and a representative from the central committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. This important body was responsible directly to the political commission of the Politburo for carrying out the infiltration of ideas and men through the iron curtain to the Western countries. I have to make the point that the problem which we are discussing right now with you, the problem of the Institute of Pacific Relations, to me in Moscow was only a small and not a greatly significant part of the activities. It was a very big business of ours.

Senator FERGUSON. What was? Propaganda?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The infiltration.

Senator FERGUSON. Infiltration in other countries.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In other countries. Ideological infiltration, the creation of fellow travelers, inducing the western intelligentsia to write books and articles which were favorable to the Soviet Union.

Senator FERGUSON. Was that one of the missions of the Foreign Office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. To get people in other nations to write articles and books in favor of Russia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In favor of the Soviet Union and the Communist Party.

Senator FERGUSON. Did they ever pay any money to get that done?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The singular or the particular character of the situation is that the majority of the Soviet agents outside as well as inside are unpaid workers.

Senator FERGUSON. State that again. I did not quite get you.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I mean it is the general situation that we do not pay the agents. The agents work out of their sympathy toward the Soviet Union.

Senator FERGUSON. How do you get people to write books without paying them subsidies, and so forth?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Why do we have to pay for books? There are American publishers to publish the books and pay for them. Why do we spend our own money?

Mr. MORRIS. At this point, Senator Ferguson, may I offer this letter. I think this is directly in point here. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this, please?

Senator FERGUSON. You don't think, then, that Russia would print any books in Russia favorable to America.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In Russia, but not in the Soviet Union.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I meant, in the Soviet Union.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No.

Mr. MANDEL. This is an original document from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations headed "Report of the visit of the secretary general to Moscow," dated December 20–31, 1934.

Mr. MORRIS. I am reading from page 10 of this document, Mr. Chairman. Here it gives a list of people who were present at the particular meeting which Mr. Carter, the secretary general, attended and apparently was responsible for these minutes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is this document in our record, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. Not yet, sir. I am going to comment on it and ask the chairman if you will introduce it into the record. This is on the 25th of December 1934. I won't read all the names of the people present, but present was Kuliabko, the acting president of VOKS (Arosev was in Paris), Rabbins of the VOKS staff, Carter, Moore, Wingfield Digby, Mitchell, Morris, Mr. Cherniavsky, Miss Linde [reading]:

> Mr. Kuliabko asked Mr. Carter what, in his opinion, would be the most arrangement for distributing VOKS publications in the United States.

It reads just that way.

The CHAIRMAN. What is VOKS?

Mr. MORRIS. The witness has just testified to the nature of VOKS, Mr. Chairman. I would like to read this whole paragraph and then I will go back to this particular thing [reading]:

> Mr. Carter suggested three possibilities, (a) through the medium of the Russian-American Society, (b) through some commercial publisher by having them take a stock on consignment, and (c) through the American Council of the IPR. This last method could not be offered officially until Mr. Carter had consulted the American Council.
>
> Mr. Kuliabko also requested information as to the names and personnel of American societies and institutions in the fields of ethnography, physics, ethnology, and geography with which VOKS should try and establish relationships. Mr. Carter promised to have this information sent from New York.

Will you tell us again what VOKS is?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The name of VOKS, the official translation of this abbreviation is Society for Cultural Relations Between Soviet Union and Foreign Countries. Actually it was one of the cover organizations for, again, these double tracks, getting information from abroad to the Soviet Intelligence, and sending infiltration of ideas and selling Communist ideas to the west.

Mr. MORRIS. He talks here of distributing VOKS publications in the United States. Would that be Communist propaganda?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. Would it necessarily be Communist propaganda?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Certainly. We have no other propaganda.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator Ferguson, I then offer this as an example of a concrete example of what the witness has been testifying to.

Senator WATKINS. What page were you reading from?

Mr. MORRIS. Page 10.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. May I give another example to Senator Ferguson.

Senator FERGUSON. Give another example of what you were talking about.

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me. Mr. Chairman, as such, may this go into the record as a document identified by Mr. Mandel as having been taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Senator WATKINS. What does the document purport to be?

Mr. MORRIS. This is a report of the visit of the secretary general of the Institute of Pacific Relations to Moscow, December 20 through 31, 1934.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom was it compiled? I do not believe we have enough about it.

Senator WATKINS. Specifically, who did it?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Carter was the secretary general. As to who on his staff actually prepared the minutes I am not prepared to answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. Has this been identified by Mr. Carter?

Mr. MORRIS. No, it has not. It has been identified by Mr. Mandel as taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. May I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we ask Mr. Carter if he will authenticate it?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. I would like to have one more link in the authentication of it, who prepared it, whether it was anyone connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations. A fugitive instrument might creep into the files of the Pacific Relations. I think it can be identified.

Mr. MORRIS. On its face, Senator, it is a report of the secretary general, you see.

The CHAIRMAN. On its face it appears to be. Does the secretary general identify it?

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, since this document has been discussed with the witness, would the Chair wish to order it into the record as the document the witness has discussed, subject to future identification by Mr. Carter?

The CHAIRMAN. It may go in the record now. The question as to its weight and as to the admissibility will be finally fixed when, as, and if it is identified by Mr. Carter or someone else.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 749," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 749

REPORT OF THE VISIT OF THE SECRETARY GENERAL TO MOSCOW

December 20th–31st, 1934

The newly formed Soviet Council of the IPR could hardly have begun to work under better auspices. A majority of the members of the Committee (listed on page 2 of the October issue of IPR NOTES.) are members of the Party. All are influential and all are operating large organizations with substantial resources.

Dr. V. E. Motylev, the Chairman, as Director of the Great Soviet World Atlas, has a budget of 12 million roubles per year, a large staff, and the cooperation of every leading scientific institution and library in the U. S. S. R.

Voitinsky, the Vice Chairman, as head of the Pacific Ocean Cabinet of the Communist Academy, likewise has substantial library and staff resources at his command, as well as funds for editing "Pacific Ocean" and other research studies on Far Eastern subjects.

S. S. Joffe, who, together with Schmidt, was the hero of the Chelyuskin expedition, is famous as a mathematician, as an aviator, as well as an explorer. It is commonly said that Joffe and Schmidt are in charge of everything in the U. S. S. R. north of the 62nd parallel, a region which includes vast mineral and timber resources and a population of five million people.

A. S. Swanidze is Director of the Bank of Foreign Commerce which finances all of the foreign trade of the Soviet Union. He is a graduate of the London School of Economics, speaks English perfectly, and is naturally extremely well-informed on the international relations of the U. S. S. R.

Janson, as Head of the Chamber of Commerce, has a large organization at his command, which not only issues information on economic questions, but carries on extensive research work for the improvement of Soviet products.

The Institute of Oceanography is also a very important body. It handles both the economic and the scientific side of the entire U. S. R. R. fish industry. Its work is of great importance to the whole future food supply of the U. S. S. R. and has a direct political bearing on the situation in the Far East because of the constant friction between Japanese and Soviet fishermen, and because of the scientific competition which exists between the U. S. S. R. and Japan in the development of the fish resources.

A. Kantorovitch, Secretary of the Soviet Council, is able, frank, and well-informed and a most efficient administrator. He speaks English rapidly and vigorously. He was a member of the Soviet Embassy in Peiping. His special field of study is American policy in China and he has just completed a book on this subject which will be published shortly.

Kantorovitch has as his assistant Eugene Harundar, who speaks English, French, and German fluently and can take dictation and type rapidly in all. Harundar was recently political, or foreign affairs, secretary to the Commisar of Heavy Industries.

The office of the Soviet Council is housed in the headquarters of Institute of Scientific Publications which is producing the World Atlas. It therefore can make use of the machinery whereby the Atlas staff can draw on every library in Moscow for books and other materials.

During his stay in Moscow the Secretary General had several very full and lengthy discussions with the members of the Praesidium of the Soviet Council, Motylev, Voitinsky, and Kantorovitch, and with Kantorovitch alone, at which the organization of the IPR, the personnel of the different National Councils, the research program, the conference technique, the publications of the Institute, its financial set-up, and many other institutional questions were thoroughly discussed. The members of the Praesidium showed the keenest interest in learning of the activities of the IPR and an obvious desire to cooperate fully with the other Councils and with the International Secretariat in every way possible. Full details of all these discussions are on file in the Secretary General's office. The following is merely a summary of the more important points which developed.

1. Standard of Living Studies

The Praesidium was anxious to know:

(a) What was the purpose of these studies?

(b) What type of studies will be made?

(c) Does the scope of the studies go beyond wages and hours?

(d) How will the final report on standards of living appear?

(e) What is the conference to be held in connection with these studies? Is it regional or international?

Mr. Carter explained the reasons which had led the International Research Committee to select this field of study. It is hoped that the studies will serve, first, to gather more accurate and complete data on the way people in certain selected industries and communities live. The groups selected for study will be chiefly those whose products enter directly into international trade and competition. From the data obtained it should be possible to determine whether there is any scientific method for comparing the living standards among different countries. The eventual aim is help in finding means of raising the standards of living in all countries. The methods used are at the moment largely experimental. Each country is expected to describe, in addition to the usual data on wages, hours, budgets, etc., the factors peculiar to its own standard of living, i. e., its special social and psychological values which play an important part in the question of how the people's needs and wants are being satisfied under present economic and social conditions.

The research conference to be held in Tokyo will be as international as possible and will attempt to work out a common methodology for all future work in this field and Mr. Carter hoped that it would be possible for the Soviet Council to be represented. If possible, he hoped that Mr. Motylev could arrange to advance his trip to the Far East by a few weeks so that he could be present.

Mr. Motylev explained that this might not be possible, but that he would very much like to go if it could be arranged. Meanwhile, the Soviet Council would consult with various specialists in the field of standards of living and would then send to Mr. Carter and Mr. Holland a memorandum embodying the Soviet Council's views on the question of possible research projects in this field within the Soviet Union.

2. Exchange of Publications and materials between the Soviet Council and the Pacific Council, the American Council and the other National Councils of the IPR, especially Chatham House

Mr. Kantorovitch explained that in accordance with the arrangements made by letter with Mr. Carter and Mr. Field, 73 books and magazines have already been sent to New York for the Pacific Council's Russian library now housed in the office of the American Council, with Mrs. Kathleen Barnes as librarian. This consignment does not by any means cover the whole field of modern Soviet scholarship on Pacific problems. There are some fifty more which he could send if desired. There are also a number of more general books on Russian economic and political problems. He asked what books the Soviet Council would receive from the United States in return.

Mr. Carter replied that these could be classified into three categories:

(a) All IPR publications. These would all be sent to Moscow.

(b) All important American books on the Far East and the Pacific area. These books would be sent if Kantorovitch desired it.

(c) General books on American economies, politics and social conditions.

In this third category it was agreed that the exchange should consist of a small carefully selected collection to be decided on directly by Kantorovitch and Field.

Kantorovitch asked whether a similar exchange arrangement could be made with Chatham House. The Soviet Council is prepared to supply Chatham House with all important Russian books on the Pacific area. Mr. Carter promised to take this matter up with Miss Cleeve when he returned to London.

On several occasions Kantorovitch, Voitinsky and Motylev all expressed the wish that some ararngement could be worked out whereby the Soviet Council could be supplied regularly with a list of what the IPR groups in the United States and Great Britain considered the important books appearing in the English language on subjects important to the Pacific area. Such a list, with possibly the addition of such reviews as had appeared in reliable journals, would be of great value in the Soviet Union. If possible such an information exchange might be developed among all the National Councils. The lists when received could be used by the Council receiving them in any way it chose, i. e., for educational purposes, to spur translations, to stimulate an interest in language study, etc.

3. IPR conference

The members of the Praesidium were deeply interested in hearing about the organization of IPR conferences, the "round table" technique, the methods used for guiding the discussion, the work of the program Committee, the round table Chairmen and Secretaries, etc. Mr. Carter explained all these matters very fully and Mr. Motylev expressed satisfaction with this form of organization which he said would be something quite new in Russian experience. He felt that it had many advantages, one of the most important being that it gave each member of the conference an opportunity to express his opinion on the subjects under discussion.

Mr. Motylev also discussed the points raised in the letter sent by the Secretary General to the members of the Institute from Amsterdam on December 18th, 1934. In general he was in full agreement with the provisions contained therein. With regard to a few specific points he felt that it would be better to leave the question of the Status of Manchoukuo for discussion under topic "(e)", rather than follow the suggestion of the American Council that it could be discussed under "(c)" and "(d)." Mr. Voitinsky felt that topic "(e)" was very well formulated and should prove valuable in summarizing the problems brought out during the discussion of the first four topics.

With regard to the data papers which the Soviet Council will prepare, Motylev explained that it had been decided to combine Nos. 4 and 5 into one paper dealing not only with the economic but also with the political struggle in the Pacific. This paper will therefore furnish the Soviet data for the final Round Table.

Motylev raised the question as to whether the National Councils were still to be allowed to prepare an optional paper, as stated in the Secretary General's June 21st memorandum. Mr. Carter said that this provision still held good. Motylev explained that the Soviet group had not decided on any additional paper, but wished to be free to contribute one if international conditions should make it advisable.

Kantorovitch added that the Soviet Council would send a definitive list of data papers to the Secretariat by April 1st, 1935, a list of probably conference members by December 1, 1935.

Mr. Carter told the history of the various suggestions as to the location of the 1936 conference, and said that at present there were three places under consideration, Tokyo, Hongkong and California. The Soviet group much preferred California.

4. International Committee appointments

Mr. Carter explained that each National Council was entitled to representation on the various international committees of the IPR, the Pacific Council, the Program Committee, the Finance Committee, the Research Committee, the Publications Committee, and a correspondent for PACIFIC AFFAIRS. He described briefly the work of these Committees, and the Praesidium agreed to discuss the matter with the Council and to inform Mr. Carter of their nominations.

5. Pacific affairs

The Soviet Council had already received a letter from Lattimore and are willing to cooperate. Voitinsky will try to write his article on the Chinese Agrarian problem sometime in the near future. Kantorovitch is very favorably impressed with the magazine, especially by Toynbee's article in the March issue. He was also eager to work out some method whereby regular Soviet contributions could be assured. Mr. Carter asked that Kantorovitch write directly to Lattimore suggesting possible articles and authors. Lattimore could then choose those which best fitted into his general editorial program. This Kantorovitch agreed to do. He also promised to send a regular Soviet contribution to IPR NOTES.

The Soviet Council also ordered a full set of all back issues of PACIFIC AFFAIRS.

6. The proposed Bibliographical Service

Kantorovitch had noted in the annual report of the American Council a mention of the proposed bibliographical service, and wished to have more specific information about it. Mr. Carter explained the steps which had already been taken, emphasizing that the whole project was still entirely tentative. He then asked Kantorovitch whether it would be possible for the Soviet Council to provide a central staff with a list of, say, the 100 most significant books and articles on the Far East and the Pacific, appearing each year in the Soviet Union, together with a short description and critical comment on each. In answer to Kantorovitch's questions, Mr. Carter explained that the plan, as tentatively sketched, would call for books and articles to be reviewed and criticized, first, by a competent group in the country concerned, second, by competent scholars of a different nationality, and, finally, by the central staff. The service would be either annual or semiannual and would most probably be centered in New York. The reason for the threefold character of the review would be to set a truly qualitative standard, and to get an agreement that the books and articles included were of real international significance. To achieve this form of critical review would, of course, require the voluntary cooperation of scholars in every country. In discussing the question as to what form the final critical note would take, Kantorovitch favored a "symposium review" rather than a synthesis of the various opinions obtained. He felt that two or three short paragraphs of comment, each signed by the author, and representing widely differing schools of thought, would carry greater weight than an impersonal integration of contradictory attitudes and opinions.

With regard to the number of books and articles which should be listed each year, Kantorovitch thought 100 was a rough estimate, and that there would undoubtedly be more articles than books.

At this discussion and at later meetings with the Praesidium some doubt was expressed as to the desirability and feasibility of such a service. In the opinion of the Soviet group there was considerable doubt as to whether it would be possible to make a qualitative judgment on books dealing with controversial subjects, in view of the radically different ideologies among the countries of the IPR.

They felt that a mutual exchange of information among the National Councils, as to what books and articles were appearing, with a brief descriptive comment of each, would be of greater value, and would obviate the need for critical comment.

Mr. Carter explained that there were many among the numbers of the IPR who were anxious to get away from the exhaustive, uncritical type of bibliography, and to work out some method for a qualitative description. Kantorovitch agreed that this was desirable and remarked in this connection that there were two standards of quality which were always employed in the Soviet Union in judging the worth of a new book. First, whether it contained new material, or material presented from a fresh view point. Second, whether the author showed that he was thoroughly familiar with everything that had already been done in his field.

It was obvious that the Praesidium felt that in a bibliographical service conducted from New York or Washington, by a staff which would presumbaly be predominantly capitalistic, it would be difficult to describe either Soviet or other books in a manner which could be regarded as objective by both communist and capitalist readers. It was even more obvious that unless the service included English language publications, it would not be greeted with any very enthusiastic support in the Soviet Union.

7. Exchange of Staff and research workers

On behalf of Mr. Frederick V. Field of the American Council, Mr. Carter extended a formal invitation to Mr. Motylev to send Mr. Kantorovitch to New York for a period of three to six months for the following purposes:

(a) to confer with Mr. Field regarding the establishment of a regular exchange of IPR research workers between New York and Moscow, according to which, for several months each year, a Soviet student proposed by the Soviet IPR would study in New York, and an American student nominated by the American IPR would study in Moscow.

(b) to confer with the American IPR with reference to the whole question of the American study of the language and life of the Soviet Union.

(c) to study the program and methods of the IPR in the United States.

He also extended an invitation from Mr. Field for Mr. Motylev to follow Mr. Kantorovitch's visit with the appointment of a Soviet research worker who will go to New York to pursue some line of study, under the direction of the IPR in Moscow and New York, which could be better carried out in the U. S. A.

Mr. Carter explained that Mr. Field hoped that for an experimental period of three years there can be an annual exchange between New York and Moscow, similar to the present unilateral appointment of Miss Harriet Moore.

Mr. Carter suggested that it might be possible to work out a plan whereby the IPR group in each country would be responsible for the travelling expenses of its representatives, but that all living expenses would be paid by the Council to whom the representative was sent.

Mr. Carter emphasized that this form of bilateral exchange was something in which the Pacific Council was deeply interested, and that as Secretary General he would do everything possible to aid in establishing and extending it.

Mr. Motylev said that he was thoroughly in agreement with the principle involved in the matter of staff exchange. He added that the financial aspect need not prove a handicap. The Soviet Council could, if it desired, send students at its own expense, as it had been given a certain endowment in valuta. The working out of the principle might, however, take time, as the Soviet Council would first have to attract research workers and students interested in the idea of such an exchange.

Mr. Kantorovitch expressed his gratitude at the invitation of the American council. It was, of course, impossible for him to leave Moscow at present but it might be arranged at a later date.

In this connection Mr. Motylev expressed regret that Miss Moore had not asked for more help from the Soviet council. He explained that his Institute had a special department for securing all necessary materials for his staff, and he hoped Miss Moore would make full use of it. He also promised to arrange any special consultations with experts in various fields which would be useful for Miss Moore in carrying out her study. Miss Moore expressed her appreciation of this offer and explained that up till now she had been concentrating on her study of the language and had not yet begun much actual work on her research project.

8. The Language Problem

(a) The Russian language School in the United States.

(b) Experiments with Basic English in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Carter described the work of the Harvard Summer School and the plans for the School at Columbia University in the summer of 1935. He mentioned the need for a second instructor and the fact that Prince Mirsky's name had been mentioned in this connection. The Praesidium knew nothing of Mirsky's qualifications, but saw no reason why he should not be approached if it seemed advisable.

The question of teaching methods and textbook materials for use at the School was discussed, and they agreed to put Miss Moore in touch with someone who could give her the best information on this question, which she could then pass on to Mrs. Barnes in New York.

Mr. Carter then described briefly the IPR's interest in basic English as a method of learning and teaching the language in a much shorter length of time than that required by the usual methods. He told of Litvinova's work and showed Motylev, Krupskaya's letter in PRAVDA, in which she mentions Basic, and urges better language teaching, the leader in PRAVDA which says how bad Russian language teaching is, and third, Litvinova's letter in reply, which was edited to omit any mention of Basic.

Mr. Motylev expressed great interest and promised to get in touch with Litvinova at once.

9. The Proposed Activities of the Soviet Council

(a) The Soviet Council is preparing a catalogue of all Russian materials on Siberia, the Far East, and the Pacific area. This catalogue will be available in the office for use of all students working on any subject in this field.

(b) The Soviet Council has agreed to contribute a section to each of the two international research projects, Status of Aliens, and Communications.

(c) In addition to the data papers for the next conference, the Soviet Council is planning to prepare, in English, a symposium of articles on the foreign relations of Pacific countries. Although the plans for this were not yet definite it will probably include the following:

i. Sino-Japanese relations during and after 1931.
ii. The end of the Washington Agreement and its effect on China.
iii. The unification of China.
iv. Anglo-Japanese Trade rivalry.
v. The ideological preparation for war in Japan.
vi. Internal Economics in Japan.
vii. The Mongolian Problem.
viii. The Silver Policy in the Far East.
ix. Nationalities in the Far East.
x. The great northern sea passage.

In connection with this symposium which is expected to be ready in June 1935, The Soviet Council asked Mr. Carter whether he thought it would be possible to arrange for its publication in either America or Great Britain, as they felt that this would secure a much larger distribution. Mr. Carter said that he would be glad to take up the matter with an American or British publisher when the manuscript was ready.

10. Finance.

At the request of the Praesidium, Mr. Carter described the financial organization of the IPR and gave the contributions which each National Council had made over the last few years. He also explained the financial set-up of the International Research Committee.

Mr. Motylev said that so far the IPR had not proved itself in the Soviet Union sufficiently for him to guarantee a definite financial contribution at this time. It was, however, not a question of principle—the Soviet Group can and wants to participate fully in all the work and responsibilities of the IPR. The question of financial support will be discussed with all the institutions represented in the Soviet Council.

The Secretary General had expressed the desire to visit as many of the members of the Soviet Council as possible in their own organizations in order that he might learn from them of the activities on which they were engaged. Mr. Kan-torovitch accordingly arranged for the Secretary General and his party a number of interviews, brief notes of which are herewith included.

Meeting at the Communist Academy, 25th December 1934

At this informal discussion there were present, in addition to the Secretary General and his staff, Varga, Director of the Communist Academy, Voitinsky, head of the Pacific Ocean Cabinet, A. S. Swanidze, director of the Bank of Foreign Commerce (who interpreted for Mr. Varga), Miss Frieda Utley of the research staff of the Pacific Ocean Cabinet.

Mr. Varga described the organization and program of the Communist Academy, its publications and its main lines of study. Mr. Voitinsky then described in more detail the work of the Pacific Ocean Cabinet which is primarily concerned with the study of China, Japan, and the Far East. The conflicts and contradictions of imperialism as manifested in the Pacific area are being investigated, both in their present stage, and in their historical background. The social problems of Japan and China are also being studied, as well as the revolutionary and counterrevolutionary movements in these countries. The foreign relations of the Far Eastern countries, the role of the S. M. R. in the expansion of Japan, Anglo-Japanese trade rivalry, etc., are other subjects on which research is at present going on. Attached to the staff are translators who study and translate the leading press articles from China and Japan.

In discussing the future of China, Voitinsky expressed the view that the mass of the Chinese people would sink lower and lower as long as they continued to be oppressed by the landlord and militarist classes. The leaders in China were beginning to realize this and to come out with agrarian policies, partially inspired by the challenge of Soviet China. He also felt that it was impossible to reconcile the capitalist and the precapitalist factors in China's economic organization and that it would be better to skip the stage of capitalist organization entirely in favor of some form of agrarian cooperation more suited to the traditional way of life of the Chinese peasant population.

Mr. Carter asked if there had been material economic results in Soviet China. Voitinsky said that the program had been a difficult one to realize and that many mistakes had been made, particularly in the methods used in redistributing the land. He felt however that some definite results had been accomplished and that "Communist China," even if destroyed will prove to be a big factor in the future agrarian policy of any Chinese government.

Mr. Carter asked what solution could be found for the densely populated agricultural regions of China, where the subdivision of land had been carried so far that any method of modern mechanized farming was impossible. Mr. Varga mentioned three possible solutions. (1) There was still a great deal of unutilized land in China. Most of it was elevated and required a new system of water supply to make it available. (2) An improved water supply would also mean that the land at present under cultivation could be better utilized. (3) Inner colonization to Mongolia and the Northwest provinces might do something to relieve the more densely populated areas.

Meeting at VOKS, 25th December 1934

Present: Kuliabko, the Acting President of VOKS (Arosev was in Paris), Rabbins of the VOKS staff, Carter, Moore, Wingfield Digby, Mitchell, Morris, Mr. Cherniavsky, Miss Linde.

Mr. Kuliabko asked Mr. Carter what in his opinion would be the most arrangement for distributing VOKS publications in the United States. Mr. Carter suggested three possibilities, (a) through the Medium of the Russian-American Society, (b) through some commercial publisher by having them take a stock on consignment, and (c) through the American Council of the I. P. R. This last method could not be offered officially until Mr. Carter had consulted the American Council.

Mr. Kuliabko also requested information as to the names and personnel of American Societies and Institutions in the fields of Ethnography, Physics, Ethnology, and Geography with which VOKS should try and establish relationships. Mr. Carter promised to have this information sent from New York.

Mr. Carter mentioned various matters which he thought would be of interest to VOKS. Among these were the CHINESE ATLAS, recently published by V. K. Ting, W. W. Weng, and S. Y. Tseng, the most important piece of cartography ever done in China. A copy of the Atlas was to be in Moscow within a few days, and would be presented to Dr. Motylev in connection with his work on the Great Soviet World Atlas. The I. P. R. was at present exploring the possibilities of having an English edition of the Atlas produced, either in Great Britain or in China. Mr. Carter also described the Russian Summer School and other efforts on the part of the I. P. R. to further the study of the language and contemporary life of the Soviet Union, particularly in the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. Kuliabko then described some of the work which VOKS is carrying on at the present time:

VOKS represents 218 institutions and societies in the Soviet Union, scientific, cultural, literary, musical, and artistic. Its purpose is to establish relationships with similar organizations in foreign countries. It also maintains direct contacts with many universities and schools in other countries. It organizes exhibitions of the work being done in the Soviet Union and brings foreign exhibitions to the U. S. S. R. Its book exchange now amounts to many thousands of books each year. It furnishes facilities to foreign students. It publishes a journal and numerous special periodicals in English, French, and German. It arranged for the American Institute which was held in Moscow last summer and which is to be repeated in 1935 for all English-speaking foreigners, etc.

At the end of the meeting Mr. Carter asked two questions:

1. How can foreign students live honestly and cheaply in Moscow?

Ans.: No general arrangement is possible but ways are always found for meeting individual cases.

2. What relations has VOKS established with the recently formed International Cultural Society in Tokyo, and does political tension make any difference in the amount of cultural cooperation between Japan and the Soviet Union?

Ans.: Political tension has made no difference, and there is a good deal of cooperation between the two countries. No relation has as yet been established with ICR because it has so recently been formed.

* * * * * * *

Moscow Chamber of Commerce

Mr. Carter and his staff had a conversation with Janson, President of the Chamber of Commerce, at its headquarters in what was formerly the Moscow Stock Exchange.

Janson described the research and publicity activities of the Chamber of Commerce; its fortnightly and bimonthly publications on economic conditions in the U. S. S. R.; its efforts to improve the quality of Soviet products; and the meetings which it arranges at which members discuss questions of foreign and internal trade. At present there is a membership of some 200 economic organizations, with branches in all leading cities of the Soviet Union.

Both the export and import trade of the Soviet Union have been greatly reduced in the past two years, as nearly every machine, previously imported, can now be manufactured in the Soviet Union. The future development of foreign trade will therefore depend on the conditions offered by other nations.

A very striking exhibition of Soviet products was being arranged in the building; the resources, principal exports and imports destinations and sources of the foreign trade of the Soviet Union being displayed by means of samples of goods, maps, charts, etc., in a most effective manner.

* * * * * * *

Institute of Oceanography

Mr. Carter had a long conference with the eight heads of the departments of the Institute. Research is being carried on with reference to all of the underlying principles of Oceanography, including hydrography, hydrographical chemistry, ichthyology, the organization and technique of fishing; the economic advantages of mechanization; the economic return from fishing in the open sea and along the coasts; technical problems of packing, salting, and improving the final product.

It is estimated that the Soviet Union's capacity to consume fish will always be greater than the capacity of all the lakes, rivers, and oceans to produce fish, in spite of the enormous gains made through scientific research and the mechanization of the industry.

The Institute presented Mr. Carter with a complete set of all the most important Soviet publications on every aspect of the fish industry to be sent to the Pacific Council library in New York.

INTERVIEW WITH TRININ,* OF THE INSTITUTE OF SOVIET CONSTRUCTION AND SOVIET LAW (20, RAZIN STREET, DECEMBER 28TH, 1934)

Mr. Trinin called to see Mr. Carter at the office of the Soviet Council. Miss Moore and Mr. Digby were also present.

The function of the Institute of Soviet Construction is scientific study of the social, political, and legal questions of the whole U. S. S. R. Mr. Trinin himself is particularly informed with regard to matters pertaining to the Minor Nationalities in the Soviet Union.

In a short sketch of the Nationalities policy of the Soviet Union, Trinin emphasized the contrast with the old regime, under which national minorities had been exploited and oppressed with the present system under which they are given every chance of economic and cultural development, and of acquiring or maintaining national characters. The use of their own language was encouraged, schools have been established, and the economic resources of the various regions developed.

The principle of self-determination is firmly adhered to. The right of secession from the Union by vote is provided in the Soviet Constitution. According to Trinin there was no further danger of secession movements in the Ukraine, which, when it had had an independent government had failed to deal with the agrarian problems of the region. The present Ukrainian government has from 70 percent to 80 percent Ukrainians in it.

Trinin said that minorities within minorities were well protected, e. g., Tartars and Germans in the Crimea.

He thought that the loyalty of the Far Eastern Province to the Union was very strong, owing partially to the fear of Japanese aggression.

* * * * * * *

The Secretary General and his party had expressed a desire to learn more about the agrarian policies and program of the Soviet Union, especially the development of collectivized agriculture. The Soviet Council accordingly arranged a meeting at the Communist Academy at which the following were present:

D. G. Lurie, Director of the Agrarian Institute of the Communist Academy.
J. A. Anisimov, Director of the Institute of State Farms.
A. A. Karavaev, Assistant Director of the Agrarian Institute.
V. Mullin, Scientific Collaborator of the Agrarian Institute.
S. P. Matzkevich, Scientific Secretary of the Agrarian Institute.
Stankevich, Assistant Scientific Secretary of the Communist Academy.
Kubanin, Agricultural Economist.

INTERVIEW WITH LITVINOV AT THE COMMISSARIAT FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS, DECEMBER 29TH, 1934

The Secretary General discussed with Litvinov the founding of the new Soviet Council of the I. P. R. Litvinov expressed himself as extremely gratified that the Soviet Union was to participate fully in the work of the I. P. R. He had always wished for this, but had not felt until the present time that adequate cooperation on the part of scholars in the Soviet Union was possible because they were all so busy with their other activities. Mr. Carter assured Litvinov that he felt confident that the Soviet Council would contribute fully and valuably to the work of the I. P. R. Mr. Carter also expressed his deep satisfaction with the personnel of the I. P. R. group and the splendid way in which they were undertaking their responsibilities as members of the I. P. R.

Mr. Carter also mentioned the talk he had had with Litvinova with regard to her work in teaching Basic to a class at the Foreign Office, one in the Kremlin, and one in the Red Army. He explained the I. P. R.'s interest in Basic as a method for teaching English in a shorter length of time, as one avenue of attack on the language barriers separating the different member countries. Another method by which the I. P. R. was trying to meet this problem was the intensive three months' course in the Russian language which the I. P. R. in the United States had put on in cooperation with Harvard University in the summer of 1934 and which was to be repeated at Columbia University during the summer of 1935. In this connection, Mr. Carter told Litvinov that Mirsky's name had been mentioned as a possible Instructor for the School, and asked whether there would be any difficulty in his getting permission to go to the United States if the offer was made and he wished to accept. Litvinov explained that the granting of passports was in charge of the Commissar for Internal Affairs, but that he did not think there would be any difficulty if Mirsky or any other candidate wished to go.

* (Committee records indicate name should be spelled Trainin.)

In addition to these more formal discussion meetings, there were many opportunities for the Secretary General and his party to talk freely and informally with the members of the Soviet Council and others, both with regard to their own work and to conditions in the Soviet Union, and the foreign relations of the U. S. S. R.

The atmosphere of the entire visit was one of the most friendly hospitality and cordial cooperation. It seemed evident that the Soviet Group has determined to cooperate fully with the I. P. R. both in principle and in fact.

* * * * * * *

SCIENTIFIC PUBLISHING INSTITUTE OF THE GREAT SOVIET WORLD ATLAS

(Director, Dr. V. E. Motylev)

Dr. Motylev is an economist by training, but has a wide background of experience in other social and physical sciences. He was formerly head of the Soviet Encyclopaedia. He speaks English and German well and has traveled widely in both these countries.

At the request of the Secretary General, Dr. Motylev described the program of the Great Soviet World Atlas, and the methods being used in its preparation. He then took the Secretary General and his staff on a tour of inspection of the Scientific Publishing Institute to see the maps in process of preparation, and also the great collection of other Atlases, ancient and modern which Motylev has collected from every country in the world.

The aim of the Atlas is to give a Marxist-Leninist cartographical picture of the world, i. e. a comprehensive picture of the epoch of imperialism and particularly the period of the general crisis of capitalism. The Atlas will be three times the size of any existing Atlas, containing 150 two-page maps of 43x53 cm, and a like number of one page maps of 23½x43 cm printed on the reverse side of the big maps. The Atlas will be divided into three sections, maps of the world, maps of the U. S. S. R. and maps of foreign countries.

In the work of preparation the Institute has enlisted the help of specialists and scholars from every part of the Soviet Union, and has the right to call on any Scientific institution for aid. Extensive research has gone into questions of scale, projections, colour and design and the proper type for the various denotations.

The special interest of the Atlas lies in the special economic and social maps which supplement the more usual maps on climatic conditions, political divisions, hydrography, soils, etc. A few examples of these special maps will show the difficulties of the task which is being attempted, as well as the great interest which the Atlas will have for all students of economic and social conditions. Thus, the section devoted to maps of the world includes maps of agriculture, of raw materials, of international agrarian relations, of fisheries, mining, power and fuel resources, electrification, metallurgy, chemical and textile industries, trade and goods traffic, the struggle for raw materials, the international financial dependence of the countries of the world, the problems of the Pacific area, etc.

In the section on the U. S. S. R. the chief emphasis is on the contrast in economic and social development of the various regions and republics of the Soviet Union with conditions in Tsarist times. Maps showing agrarian development light and heavy industries, power, fuel and mineral resources, foreign and internal trade, communications, schools, literacy, etc. both for the whole Union and for the separate regions, are contrasted with maps illustrating the same factors under the old regime.

In the section on the principal foreign countries, the political and physical maps are accompanied by maps on agriculture, the general economic organization and resources of the country, industrial resources and development, and also by maps showing revolutionary movements, the position of minorities, spheres of influence of imperialist powers, etc.

The general underlying aim of the Atlas is to present as fully as possible the contrasts between the two great systems of the world, capitalist and communist, in their social, economic and political policies, objectives and achievements.

INTERVIEW WITH MRS. V. N. KLUEVA, FROM THE TECHNIKUM OF FOREIGN LANGUAGES

The Technikum provides for the teaching of Russian at Komintern, the Moscow Daily News, the Foreign Workers Publishing House, and for groups at the Technikum itself. None of this teaching is in intensive courses, because all of the students have regular work in addition to their studying.

The method of teaching at the Technikum is called the "synthetic method" (Coblenz method). No text books are used. Each lesson is prepared in connection with the special interests and needs of the group being taught. For instance, the students at the Daily News must learn to talk for reporting while the students at Komintern need a more particularly political and economic vocabulary for reading. Therefore the selection of vocabulary taught to the two groups differs.

The "Synthetic method" is based on the principle that the sentence is the unit of speech and that it is impossible to translate literally, word for word. It is only possible to translate the idea. Therefore in each lesson there is given a "standard." A "standard" is a sentence, such as "I have a book" which is the idiomatic way of conveying that idea and which also provides the idiomatic structure of all similar ideas, such as "he has a pencil." Every "standard" must have: 1. a whole idea. 2. a grammatical aspect. 3. the possibility of being used as the form for expressing another, similar idea.

They teach their students to speak and from the use they learn the grammar. The grammar is never taught separately. After the fifth lesson, the students have to give oral reports. They find that with the nominative, genative, and prepositional cases it is possible to speak intelligibly.

Not until the second year do they do any translation, except in short reviews, and then only from Russian into English.

They have started to compile a minimum vocabulary. They already have the sets of words that they find most necessary for the specific groups with whom they are working. They find that the newspapers provide a good political vocabulary and they use the Komsomol Pravda.

They have done some work on slavic roots, but they do not use them as a teaching method.

The Foreign Workers' Publishing House is also doing some research work on teaching. Some of the military schools and possibly the Institute of Vostokvedenie may be giving intensive courses in Russian, but, of course, these wouldn't be for English Speaking students.

INSTITUTIONS CONNECTED WITH THE I. P. R.

Institute of Scientific Publications of the Great Soviet World Atlas. 20, Razin street.
Supreme Board of the Great Northern Sea Passage. (S. S. Joffe) 12, Razin street.
Voks (All-union Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries) (A. J. Arosev) Bolshaya Gruzinskaya, 17.
All Union Chamber of Commerce (J. D. Janson) Ilyinka, 6.
Foreign Trade Bank (A. S. Svanidze) Neglinnaya, 14.
Institute of Oceanography of the U. S. S. R. (K. A. Mekhanoshin) Krasnoselskaya, 17.
Institute of World Economics and World Politics (G. N. Voitinsky) Volkhonka, 14.
AKO (Kamchatka Company) (Adamovich) Nikolskaya, 6.
Vostokryba (Eastern Fisheries Trust) (J. M. Berkovich) Nikolskaya, 6.

CONFERENCE AT THE AGRARIAN INSTITUTE, DEC. 29, 1934

Volkhonka, 18

D. G. Lurie, Chairman of meeting, Director of the Agrarian Institute, Doctor of Economic Sciences
J. A. Anisimov, Director of the State Farms Institute, Professor
A. A. Karavaev, Assistant Director of the Agrarian Institute, Professor
V. Mulin, Scientific Worker, Specialist of the Agrarian Institute
S. P. Matzkevich, Scientific Secretary of the Agrarian Institute
Stankevich, Assistant Scientific Secretary of the Communist Academy
Kubanin, Professor of Economics of Agriculture

CONFERENCE WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF THE INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY, KRACNOSELSKAYA, 17, DEC. 28, 1934

Prof. Baranov, T. E.
Prof. Chesnokov, M. J., Chairman of meeting (Assistant Director of the Institute)
Prof. Somov, M. P. from Murmansk Branch
Prof. Ilyin, B. S.
Prof. Bogorov, B. G.
Dr. Ambroz, A. J. from Vladivostok Branch
Dr. Iniasevsky, A. N.
Prof. Chugunov, N. L.

CONFERENCE AT VOKS, BOLSHAYA GRUNZINSKAYA, 17

Mr. Kuliabko, Vice President
Mr. Rabbins, Head of the Reception dept.
Mr. Cherniavsky
Miss Linde

INSTITUTE OF SOVIET CONSTRUCTION AND LAW, FRUNZE, 10

Mr. Trainin, Specialist on nationalities

COMBINATE OF FOREIGN LANGUAGES, SRETENSKI BOUL., 9

Mrs. V. N. Klueva

Senator FERGUSON. Now will you give the other example.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. You asked me how they had made——

Mr. MORRIS. Through the Foreign Office you had people in other countries write books favorable to the Soviet point of view.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. One British and one American. You certainly remember the British labor leaders, Sidney and Beatrice Webb, very reasonable people. They visited the Soviet Union in about 1935 or 1936, and the result of their visit was a two-volume work, Soviet Communism and New Civilization.

Mr. MORRIS. That is, after the Webbs got back to England, having been in Soviet Russia——

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. They wrote a two-volume work on Russia or the Soviet?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Now give us an example of Americans.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I didn't finish it yet.

Senator FERGUSON. Pardon me. Go ahead.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The materials for this book actually were given by the Soviet Foreign Office.

Senator FERGUSON. Given to the Webbs.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. They had only to remake a little bit for English text, a little bit criticizing, but in its general trend the bulk of the material was prepared for them in the Soviet Foreign Office.

Senator FERGUSON. In the Soviet Foreign Office.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In the Soviet Foreign Office, and I participated myself in part of this work.

Senator FERGUSON. So you were really preparing it under the Soviet, giving it to the Webbs so they might write it in English so it could be distributed in English.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Anything more on that book?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. An American example. You know perhaps Professor Hazard of Columbia University. He is an expert on the Soviet legal system, as you know. Professor Hazard before leaving the Soviet Union, where he spent 2 or 3 years, was given by the Soviet Foreign Office a bunch of papers concerning the Soviet law system and courts, which were later translated by him into English and published here in the United States as his own research work. Actually a lot of that material was presented to him in Moscow and is either Soviet propaganda or nonsense having no relation to the Soviet at all.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, the Foreign Office was careful to see that the Soviet line, the Communist line, was followed, and they could do that by preparing the information, and the American or the British or the other country's subject would take that and merely translate it and put it into books that would look as if it was the Webbs or the Hazards own material collected as facts, is that correct?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. How large a staff or how large an organization did you have in the Foreign Office to do that kind of work?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It wasn't necessary to have all these people in the Foreign Office itself. It worked this way. For example, we had to write for Hazard concerning the legal system, so we passed the order through the central committee of the party to the Soviet legal experts and they wrote it.

Senator FERGUSON. And they would prepare the material and pass it in to the Foreign Office and you would give it to Hazard?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, yes.

Senator FERGUSON. What did the Webbs, of Britain, write on? What subject did the Webbs write on?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. They described the Soviet way of life, which they found better than the British way of life.

Senator FERGUSON. Where would they find that material? Where would that come from to the Foreign Office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. For example, the chapter concerning the very humanitarian way of Soviet detention camps and jails was written by the Soviet secret police itself.

Mr. MORRIS. You know that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I received it from the chief of one of the divisions of the NKVD, the Soviet secret police.

Senator FERGUSON. You personally received?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Personally I received from him when he came to my office in the Foreign Office, and then I gave this material to the chief of the western division of the Soviet Foreign Office, the vice chief of the western division, Veinberg, who was attached to the Webbs and who proceeded to translate that material.

Senator WATKINS. Did you read the English books after they were published, and you have compared the information with what was given out?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. When I came here to the west, I found this book and I read it with much interest. I found that the material which I prepared was so well done that the Webbs didn't change it any.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, the English people or the American people would take a book like that written by the Webbs, who were at least Socialists at the time, Marxists, and it was in fact prepared by the secret police of Russia.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In that particular part.

Senator FERGUSON. In relation to the jails.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. So, the American people would get the idea that this was a British writing on a subject and, therefore, at least it would be true facts.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That was the idea. Once I read a memorandum written by Molotov in our secret files where the problem was discussed of our participation and utilization of the western press. I have to explain that before 1931 it was a general rule that the Communists should not write in the foreign press. It was a shame. It was a disgrace. But Trotsky was expelled from the Soviet Union and he had written articles against Stalin in the Daily Express, and these articles became very popular because they were written in the British newspaper. This gave the idea to the Soviet authorities that it was wrong to seek only the Communist papers. In the memorandum of Molotov, which evidently laid down the foundation for the new trend of Soviet policy, written in 1931, it was stated [reading]:

> Who reads the Communist papers? Only a few people who are already Communists. We don't need to propagandize them. What is our object? Who do we have to influence? We have to influence non-Communists if we want to make them Communists or if we want to fool them. So, we have to try to infiltrate in the big press, to influence millions of people, and not merely hundreds of thousands.

After this argumentation the position was taken that we had to change drastically our policy, as I said before, and do our best in order to carry out the Communist ideas through non-Communist press.

Senator FERGUSON. The so-called policy or line then was changed in 1931.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. By Molotov's order.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes. It was the Politburo. Molotov made the report, and that completely turned over our policy.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that a part of Molotov's program for seeking recognition of the Soviet Union in the Western World?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No. I can't make a connection between these.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know of any other example of an American coming to Russia and getting material and coming back and its being published?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I do, but——

Senator FERGUSON. You are not rich enough to defend yourself in a libel suit?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I have named one American, and I am reluctant to call any more.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you understand, if you are telling the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth——

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Certainly, sir.

Senator FERGUSON (continuing). Testifying before this committee on question, you cannot be sued for libel?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; I don't know that.

Senator FERGUSON. That is the law. With that in mind, now can you honestly state any other authors?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I can.

Senator FERGUSON. Or any other books?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I can.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you do it now?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Frederick Schuman, Soviet Politics Abroad and at Home.

Senator FERGUSON. What did he write on?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. He wrote a book which, in my opinion, is full of nonsense.

Senator FERGUSON. Outside of its being nonsense, what was it on?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was very important nonsense because, if you learned the wrong things about the Soviet Union, your thoughts are also wrong. That was the idea, to sell nonsense to the foreign newspapers.

Senator WATKINS. Can you give us an example?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Give us an example of what was in the book.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. All right. For example, the book by Frederick Schuman stated that the unfriendly attitude of the Soviet Union toward the Western World was not caused by Communist doctrine or any other consideration on the part of the Soviet leaders themselves, but it was caused by western intervention during the civil war. Mr. Schuman lets the American readers of his book believe that it is only because the American, Japanese, French, and English peoples made their so-called intervention on the side of the Russian national against the Communist that the Communist Soviet Union is now reluctant to have good relations with the British. If you compare Schuman's book with the corresponding page of the official History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union you will very easily recognize that they say the same thing. Frederick Schuman got his ideas from the Soviet propaganda.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know of any others?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I recall Mr. Joseph Davies, the former American Ambassador to Moscow. Mr. Davies was in very good relations to Foreign Commissar Litvinov, in such good relations——

The CHAIRMAN. Joseph Davies?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Davies. [Continuing] In such good relations that some of the instructions which this American Ambassador received from the State Department——

Senator FERGUSON. You mean the American State Department?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. [Continuing] Along confidential lines were simply read by the American Ambassador to Foreign Commissar Litvinov. He received a cable from Washington. He came to the office of Litvinov and he consulted Litvinov on what to do with this cable.

Mr. MORRIS. I don't understand that, Mr. Bogolepov. Will you explain that again?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Foreign Commissar Litvinov told me when I asked him how he happened to know this thing. He asked me directly what to do, and I asked him, "Why do you assume that the Americans will do this?"

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you knew that the Americans were going to react in a certain way on a particular problem?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you remember what problem that was?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; that was the problem of intervention in Spain.

Mr. MORRIS. Intervention in Spain?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And you were speculating with Litvinov as to what the American reaction was going to be on the intervention in Spain?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Litvinov told me, before my going to Spain: "We have to say this-and-this thing." I don't remember all of the details; and, when I asked him "Why do you suppose the Americans would do this thing and not another," he said, "Well, I saw only the day before yesterday the American Ambassador, and he read me the card from Washington, with instructions on this card."

Senator FERGUSON. That was just the reverse of what you have been saying. You said that they gave to the Americans what to write.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. This is a case where you said that it reversed; that Mr. Davies told the Russians what our policy was.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, but I don't know what Litvinov told Davies, and when I read the——

Senator FERGUSON. That is the reverse of what you have been telling us. Do you know anyone else that got the propaganda from the Foreign Office or any Russians to write and did write in American books or in British books or outside books, or outside of Russia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In the same book of Davies I found, for example, his considerations of the trials in Moscow in 1937 and 1938. Now I think about the book Mission in Moscow. There the point of view is represented that this big trial in Moscow should be considered by Americans in a favorable light, because Stalin got rid of the fifth column, and saw the forthcoming disposition against the forthcoming attack. It is not known to me whether Mr. Davies was instructed particularly on this.

Senator FERGUSON. You said "it is not known" to you.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not known to me. But it is known to me. I read myself in the record that this explanation of the program should be implanted in western minds during the year.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know of any actual instructions like you gave on the Schuman book, and the Webb books, and the Hazard book, whether the material was prepared by the Foreign Office and given for writing?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. In the case of the Davies book, Mr. Bogolepov, you only know that you have seen a directive on that idea, and the same idea showed up in Davies' book. You don't know, as a matter of fact, that it was the same.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; in this particular case, I don't know. Well, the first sample I can give you was a book of Kahn and Sayers, two American authors.

Senator FERGUSON. Albert Kahn.

Mr. MORRIS. And is it Manuel Sayers? Michael B. Sayers?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. I do not remember the title of this book. It was something about the spies or aggression against the East; something like that.

Senator FERGUSON. What is that book?

Mr. MANDEL. Conspiracy against the Soviet Union, by Michael Sayers and Albert Kahn.

Senator FERGUSON. All right; go ahead.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The largest part of this book which is known to me was written by a certain Veinberg, who was a vice chief of the southwestern division of the Foreign Office in Moscow.

Senator FERGUSON. What part of the book?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The largest part of the book.

Senator FERGUSON. The largest part of the book?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. I saw myself the Russian manuscript before it was sent to New York to be there.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, it was written by a Russian, Veinberg, who was the fourth secretary.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Vice chief of the southwestern division.

Senator FERGUSON. Of the third?

Mr. MORRIS. And you say you saw the manuscript before it was sent to New York?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The Russian manuscript; that is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Before it was sent over here?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you read the book now?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I looked through it.

Senator FERGUSON. Was it the same as the manuscript?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; it was. They rearranged it, perhaps, but the facts and the ideas are the same. That is why I mentioned it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was the Foreign Office dealing directly with the writers of that book?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, sir. We have had, as in the case of Institute of Pacific Relations, many cover organizations. For these things, on which I talked to Senator Ferguson, we had a special organization which name is Litag. That is the abbreviation for the name literary agent. This was a nonparty organization, independent organization, as you in the west like to have them. Very solid people were in the head of this organization, a Russian professor, and the Foreign Office used this organization in order to contact the foreign scientists, scholars, to give them materials or even, as in the case of the Webb mentioned books, the full text was sent of them.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, you have established here in America and in other countries an agency that Americans can go to and get material in order that they may write books. In other words, we find that Russia's Foreign Office is really ghost writing American books. Do you know what I mean by "ghost writing"?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; not quite.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, having somebody else prepare all of the material and then the writer merely puts it out as his own.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, or even he changes to American taste. But still the ideas and the main facts are given.

Senator FERGUSON. The facts are from Russia. It is the party line, and they just change it enough to make it palatable to the American people. Is that right?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. How much of that is going on?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can say only about the books which I saw myself.

Senator FERGUSON. The ones you saw yourself.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. But did they have a large office there in which they did this work?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can say, sir, it is a big operation.

Senator FERGUSON. It is a big operation.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. A big operation.

Senator WATKINS. What I would like to ask you about is this: You say they prepared these statements and furnished this information for these men who wanted to write books. What about the information? Was it accurate? Was it an accurate picture of what was going on in Russia? Was it the truth?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; it was propaganda. It was perverted.

Senator WATKINS. Let's take the ones, for instance, on Ambassador Davies, the information he wrote in his book. What about the statements about the courts or those trials, those purges?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was completely untrue. It was a mere propaganda, a full perversion of truth.

Senator WATKINS. You understood what was taking place with respect to these purges? Did you know first-hand about those, about the purges?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, I knew about those.

Senator WATKINS. You know the facts?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, I knew the facts.

Senator WATKINS. And you knew that this information that they gave out was not true?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. As I told you, I was myself arrested at that time, and I came through all these proceedings, so I am speaking from my personal experience.

Senator WATKINS. There was one other matter with respect to those conversations between Mr. Davies and was it Litvinov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. You said he read his instructions to him, or was it what was supposed to tell the Russian Foreign Office, or was it the instructions that were given to Mr. Davies personally to govern his conduct?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. He received a cable from the State Department on one particular problem, the conditions in Spain, and instead of speaking, as Litvinov said, discussing with him the problems, the whole background here, he simply took from his vest this document and gave it to Litvinov.

Senator WATKINS. Gave the instructions to him as Ambassador?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. Rather than the material that he was to give out to the foreign office of the Russian Government.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Perhaps these instructions were to go to Commissar Litvinov and tell him this and that and that, but do not tell him this and that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what was in that table?

Senator EASTLAND. In fact, he showed him the telegrams? The telegram stated what the American policy was toward Spain?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. And he gave Litvinov that information?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. And Litivinov, then, was able to advise you how this country would react?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Because he had seen the American Government's secret instructions to its Ambassador to Moscow; is that true?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Were the instructions secret?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I haven't seen myself the instructions, so I can't say that.

Senator EASTLAND. What Americans connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations did you meet in Moscow?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Just one.

Senator EASTLAND. Who was that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Mr. Lattimore.

Senator EASTLAND. Mr. Owen Lattimore?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Senator EASTLAND. Where did you meet him?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I met him just once in Moscow, in Volkhonka 14, in the spring or in the winter, I guess, of 1936.

Mr. MORRIS. That is the headquarters of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Institute of World Economics and Politics.

Mr. MORRIS. But the Institute of Pacific Relations was in the same building.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. At that time.

Mr. MORRIS. What were you doing in that building at the time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. As I told you, besides my work for the foreign office, I was also a member of the institute, a research worker, and I used to work two or three times a week in the library of this institute. In this library, by the way, worked also Mrs. Freda Utley, which name I remember having seen during your investigations. And when I was working in this library one of these mornings, a group of people entered the room, the library, headed by Eugene Varga, who was director of the institute.

The CHAIRMAN. How do you spell that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Varga, V-a-r-g-a. Eugene Varga. There were in this group of people some of them which were known to me and some which were unknown to me. Among the people known to me, I remember Mr. Abramson, Mr. Kantorovich, and Mr. Kara-Murza.

Mr. MORRIS. Let me ask you to pause there. Varga was a Comintern man?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Varga was a member of the executive committee of the Comintern, the highest body.

Mr. MORRIS. What was Kara-Murza?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Kara-Murza was intelligence officer in charge of Mongolian relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Abramson?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Abramson, as I told you, was a member of the Pacific group of this institute, and at the same time also intelligence officer.

Mr. MORRIS. And then you say among them was Owen Lattimore?

The CHAIRMAN. He has not said that yet.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Was two or more foreigners, and among them was Mr. Lattimore. And when they entered the room and while talking, they moved towards me, and I was sitting not far from my big map of central Asia, covering Sinkiang, Mongolia, and a part of Manchuria. Mr. Kara-Murza just returned from a big trip to Mongolia on some other mission.

Mr. MORRIS. Kara-Murza returned from Mongolia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. So the talk started between these people, who went into the room, concerning the Mongolian relations.

Senator WATKINS. Was it in English?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was partly in English, partly in Russian.

Mr. MORRIS. What do you mean by that, partly in English, partly in Russian?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I mean it was in translation. My own English at that time was particularly bad, so I couldn't present myself what the American guests were speaking. But I do understand what kind of answers they were giving in Russian, which were later translated into English. I didn't participate myself in the conversation, for as I have told you I have no connection with the affairs of this Institute of Pacific Relations. I was just witness there, I should say.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you meet Mr. Lattimore there at that time? Were you introduced to him, or did you meet him?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. Mr. Varga said that is Mr. So, and that is Mr. So, and this way. But I didn't speak neither to him nor to any other of the group. My memory retains two topics of conversation: One was discussion of the route through Mongolia from Manchuria, or to Manchuria, I do not remember whether it was discussing the way from the east to the west or vice versa. And while discussing this problem, Kara-Murza, who I mentioned before, observed that showing on this map, this route, saying that "this way is the best one for we are using it always in our relations with the Soviet parts of China."

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, Kara-Marza pointed out the route to the foreign visitors that they were using to deal with Soviet China.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that a secret fact?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Certainly it was not revealed anywhere.

Mr. MORRIS. That was not well known, what route they were using at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; to nobody it was never published. The nature of our relations with the Soviet region of China were never discussed in the press or anywhere. So I little bit wondered when I heard such observations in the presence of foreign visitors. Then Kara-Murza got explanations of how the sovietization of Mongolia is progressing, and he described how they are purging the Mongolian population from the parasitic class of clergymen.

Mr. MORRIS. They are purging the parasitic class of clergymen from the Monogolian people?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. Explaining that our policy there is to get Mongolian people, get them from the feudal state to the communism, passing away this state of capitalism.

Mr. MORRIS. This is Kara-Murza's explanation to the foreign guests?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Lattimore, you say, was present at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. He was present.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he engaging in the conversation?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; they talked. But I give you only the summary of the conversation which I remembered, because I couldn't follow each word. By the way, I was not standing by. I was a little apart, two or three desks further. After the society left the room, I asked Kara-Murza to remain with me, and who were these people, Comintern people or not, bearing in mind that he told a little bit more than is advisable to tell to the foreign visitors. He said that "No, they are not Comintern, not Comintern people, not quite Comintern people, but that is quite all right with him."

Senator EASTLAND. Not quite Comintern, but it is all right?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. What did you say?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I have nothing to say.

Senator FERGUSON. You asked the question?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I only registered the fact and, to say the truth, I had forgotten this fact, because I saw so many people coming to Moscow and getting information, and giving information, that to me it was not a very unusual factor to see.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you had forgotten the fact. For how long had you forgotten that fact?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. How long? It was in 1936. So perhaps 8 months or 9 months in 1937—7 or 8 months, I don't remember—I was reporting on the station of the collegium of the Foreign Office. Collegium, that is the meeting of the Foreign Commissar and his other commissars, five people in all. This Board of Commissars is convened twice a week.

Senator FERGUSON. You were personally reporting to them?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was personally reporting, yes, as every chief of the service is reporting the matter of his interest to this Board of Commissars.

Mr. MORRIS. And this, you say, is approximately, to the best of your recollection, 8 months after you had met Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was in the winter or early spring of 1937. Because in 1937 I left already for military service for Spain.

Mr. MORRIS. So it was sometime before you left.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes. The problem was, which I have to report, of getting the so-called popular Republic of Mongolia into the League of Nations. The Soviet Union was very eager to get one voice more in the League of Nations. Mongolia was, just before the Second World War, just one satellite country of the Soviet Union. In the west there was a strong feeling that Mongolia is not an independent country, not a country at all. And when I reported the information which I received from our delegates to Geneva, then I asked in the meantime, by preparing my own report, the opinion of our Ambassadors in the United States, in Paris, and in London. And, summarizing all these unfavorable reports about the prospective of getting Mongolia as a member of the League of Nations, Litvinov said, "Well, the situation is still not ripe. We have to prepare the terrain."

Mr. MORRIS. Prepare the terrain?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; prepare the terrain for the action.

Senator EASTLAND. You mean you had to prepare public sentiment.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. That is what I would like to say. "It is necessary," said Litvinov, "to mobilize the writers and journalists and other people, to describe for the Western World the progress which is achieved in Mongolian Popular Republic, to say how life is progressing," and so on and so on. This was the first decision which was taken after my report. The second part of decision, the second point, was considering who will make this in different countries, whom we have to charge with this—how do you say, sir?

Senator EASTLAND. You mean the man who will be placed in charge of mobilizing public sentiment in the west?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, whom we have to ask to do the job.

Senator EASTLAND. Who was that man who was decided upon?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Litvinov asked the officer of Mongolian desk of the Foreign Office, who was present——

Mr. MORRIS. What was his name?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Parnoch, P-a-r-n-o-c-h—whom he would recommend, and before Parnoch could give his answer he asked "Lattimore, perhaps?"

Senator EASTLAND. Litvinov said "Lattimore"?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. "Lattimore, perhaps"? yes. And Parnoch answered, "Yes, we will try to do that."

Mr. MORRIS. Was there a formal decision made by that body?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. There was a formal decision which was obliging for the corresponding bodies of the Soviet foreign group to take measures in order to fulfill the decision.

Senator FERGUSON. After that, do you know whether Lattimore did write anything in relation to Mongolia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, sir; because as I told you, in the spring of 1937 I was sent to Spain, and for more than a year I lost any contact with the Foreign Office.

Senator FERGUSON. I will ask the research director now as to whether or not he knows of anything written by Mr. Lattimore after that time on Mongolia.

Mr. MANDEL. Mr. Lattimore has written several books on Mongolia.

Senator FERGUSON. When?

Mr. MANDEL. We can give you the exact title and date.

Senator FERGUSON. I want you to put that in the record.

Senator EASTLAND. I do not want to lead you too far off, but this is something for my information. About how many soldiers did the Soviet Union send to Spain?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. They didn't send soldiers. They sent only generals, officers, and surgeons. As you see now, in Korea, the Soviet Union never fights with his own soldiers in foreign countries. He has always enough——

Senator EASTLAND. Sent officers to train the Spanish Army.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. To train and direct them.

Senator FERGUSON. How many officers and agents did they send to Spain, if you know?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I was in headquarters of the so-called Segrae-Ebro front, in Barcelona.

Senator FERGUSON. You were there yourself?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was there myself; yes. And I was one of a body of approximately 2,000 Soviet officers.

Senator FERGUSON. Were they general officers? What was your rank?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I was colonel.

Senator FERGUSON. You were a colonel?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. How low in rank and how high did they go, these 2,000?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. From sergeant in the tank corps or our fliers, up to the marshals. We had two marshals.

Senator FERGUSON. You had two marshals?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Senator EASTLAND. That 2,000 was on one front?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, in Barcelona only. The bulk of our instructors were on the Madrid front.

Senator FERGUSON. About how many were there?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can't say that, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Thousands?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Thousands.

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know a man named Gustavo Duran in Spain?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Duran?

Senator EASTLAND. Did you know a Durano?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, I don't.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, at this point, Senator Smith has called a meeting of the subcommittee of the alien property investigation. He wants a short meeting. I suggest that we cannot finish with this witness this afternoon, and tomorrow we have another witness, a very important witness. But I think at the conclusion of that testimony we can conclude with this witness.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the other witness is due at 11. Suppose I try to get in touch with him and ask him if he can be here at 10. Perhaps he can finish in the morning and then we can have this witness in the afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have that very much because it is very important to conclude both of these witnesses tomorrow. I might say now, that the witness tomorrow will be Mr. William Bullitt, former Ambassador to Russia.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Mr. Bullitt?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you in the Foreign Office when he was there?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, sir. I remember him in Moscow.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection we will now recess. I think both the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Michigan are on that subcommittee.

Senator EASTLAND. No, sir; I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not? Well, the Senator from Michigan is. I think we will have to go to Senator Smith's office.

Thank you very much.

(Whereupon, at 3:45 p. m., the hearing was recessed until 10 a. m. Tuesday, April 8, 1952.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10:10 a. m., pursuant to recess, in room 424, Senate Office Building, Senator Pat McCarran, chairman, presiding.

Present: Senators McCarran, Ferguson, and Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, director of research.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Bullitt has been sworn in executive session. Inasmuch as a different chairman presided at the session I thought perhaps you might like to swear him again in open session.

The CHAIRMAN. You do solemnly swear the testimony you are about to give before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. BULLITT. I do.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM C. BULLITT, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, will you give your name and residence to the reporter, please?

Mr. BULLITT. William Christian Bullitt, 2447 Kalorama Road NW., Washington, D. C.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation?

Mr. BULLITT. At the present time I write articles, on foreign affairs usually, of one kind or another.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, will you relate your diplomatic experience to this committee, please?

Mr. BULLITT. I think I might begin toward the end of it, otherwise it will be a long document. I was Ambassador to the Soviet Union from the autumn of 1933 until I was appointed Ambassador to France in the summer of 1936.

Mr. MORRIS. You then were the first United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union?

Mr. BULLITT. I was.

I then was Ambassador to France from 1936 to the autumn of 1940. In 1941 I was personal representative of the President with the rank of Ambassador for all countries. Those are the only strictly diplomatic jobs that I have held since 1933.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, yesterday we had testimony from a former official of the Soviet Foreign Office about the connection between Mr. Owen Lattimore and the Soviet Foreign Office. This committee would like to know from you whether, while you were Ambassador to the Soviet Union, you had ever encountered Owen Lattimore.

Mr. BULLITT. Yes. In the end of March 1936 I received a note from Mr. Carter, who was the secretary-general, I believe, of the Institute of Pacific Relations. It was written from a Moscow hotel, and it said that Mr. Owen Lattimore was arriving.

Mr. MORRIS. Excuse me, Mr. Bullitt. May I interrupt at this point? Mr. Mandel, will you identify this letter?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of a carbon copy of a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations dated March 28, 1936, addressed to the American Ambassador, Moscow, with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Mandel, you mean this is a photostat of a document which was in the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that document was a carbon copy of a letter?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, I will ask you if you will look at that letter and tell us whether or not that was the letter that you received from Mr. Carter.

Mr. BULLITT. Yes; that, I believe, is a photostat of the letter that was sent me by Mr. Edward C. Carter with regard to Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. MORRIS. You were testifying on this point, Mr. Bullitt. Will you proceed?

Mr. BULLITT. I received this letter and I told one of the secretaries in the Embassy that I would see Mr. Lattimore after he arrived in Moscow. I also told him to invite Mr. Carter and Mr. Lattimore and the other members of their delegation—I think it can be called a delegation—there were a number of women, if my memory is correct, as well as men—to an Embassy meal at some time, and they did so. In the early days of April Mr. Lattimore asked for a definite appointment, and I received him. He told me that he was there for this meeting of the Institute of Pacific Relations with, I believe, the Soviet section of the institute, and that he wanted to meet the men in charge of Far Eastern Affairs for the Soviet Foreign Office, especially Stomonyakov and Karakhan.

Mr. Morris. Will you spell the names?

Mr. BULLITT. S-t-o-m-o-n-y-a-k-o-v, Stomonyakov; and Karakhan, K-a-r-a-k-h-a-n.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you describe what positions they had in the Soviet Union?

Mr. BULLITT. Stomonyakov was Assistant Commissar in Charge of Far Eastern Affairs, and Karakhan had been for many, many years Assistant Commissar. Indeed when I was sent in to negotiate with the Soviet Government, sent in by the American Government in 1919, he was already an Assistant Commissar. Whether at that particular moment his title was Assistant Commissar I cannot say actually, but he was a man that I knew very well.

I told Mr. Lattimore that I would ask one of the secretaries of the Embassy to attempt to arrange such an appointment or appointments for him.

Mr. Lattimore then began to give me a long description of the situation in the Far East as he saw it. Finally, he said, "I have"—I should rather not make this a direct quotation, but indirect. He finally said that——

Mr. MORRIS. This is Lattimore talking?

Mr. BULLITT. This is Lattimore talking. He finally said that he had one very important matter that he wanted to take up with me, that a most inspiring thing had happened, that the Mongols had at last achieved full independence and he hoped they were once more going to start on the road to being a great nation as they had been many years in the past. He said that in his opinion the so-called People's Republic of Outer Mongolia was fully independent. I asked him if there was no Soviet control of the People's Republic of Outer Mongolia or rather they call it the Mongolian People's Republic. It is in Outer Mongolia, not Inner Mongolia. And he replied that there was no Soviet control whatsoever. I asked him if the Red Army had no control there, and he said no. I asked him if the GPU which at that time was the title of the Soviet secret police, had no control there, and he said they did not, that the Mongolian People's Republic was independent, and that his advice, which he urged me to telegraph at once to President Roosevelt, was that the American Government should immediately recognize the independence of the Mongolian People's Republic.

This to me was a very extraordinary statement, and I therefore questioned him further on it, and he reiterated what he had said and reiterated his advice that the United States should recognize at once the Mongolian People's Republic.

I have said it was an extraordinary statement for several reasons. In the first place, Outer Mongolia, which was ruled at the moment by the so-called Mongolian People's Republic, was under Chinese sovereignty. It was a part of China.

Mr. MORRIS. That is formally speaking.

Mr. BULLITT. Formally. In 1921 the Communists had set up a Communist republic there, as much Communist as anything can be in a country largely inhabited by nomads. Then there had been a series of wars back and forth until 1924, when the Communists got pretty well on top. However, in 1924 the Soviet Government in a note which was signed I believe by Chicherin, recognized the Mongolian People's Republic as a part of the Republic of China, but stated in that note that it enjoyed autonomy. It did enjoy a certain amount of freedom as nomads do, and in the autumn of 1934, if my memory is correct, the Soviet Government got a bit disturbed, and I received information that Karakhan, one of the gentlemen referred to before, had been sent out to Outer Mongolia, the People's Republic, so-called, to finish off any signs of restiveness under Soviet control. When he returned from that trip he came to the Embassy——

Mr. MORRIS. Did he return in 1934?

Mr. BULLITT. He returned toward the end, I believe. Actually on November 27, 1934, there was made a gentlemen's agreement for mutual assistance. In other words, this was a——

Senator FERGUSON. Between what countries?

Mr. BULLITT. Between the Soviet Union and the Mongolian People's Republic. This was kept quiet for a time. Karakhan returned, if my memory is correct, after the signature of that agreement. He came to the Embassy one day, and I said to him—I don't mind testifying about Karakhan because he has since been shot and therefore no harm can come to him from the testimony that I am to give.

Senator FERGUSON. Who shot him?

Mr. BULLITT. By the Soviet Government.

Senator FERGUSON. He was liquidated?

Mr. BULLITT. He was liquidated.

I said to him that I heard he had been out there to finish off the People's Republic of Outer Mongolia or rather any signs of independence in it, and he said indeed he had, but it was a very small affair——

Senator FERGUSON. You were telling Lattimore this?

Mr. BULLITT. No; I never said a word to Lattimore about any of this. I am explaining to you why the statement that he made to me was so extraordinary. He said that he had indeed been sent out to finish it off, but he had only been sent out at the last minute, that the Soviet Government first completely infiltrated the Outer Mongolian Army and police force with GPU agents and that when everything was prepared to liquidate the Mongols that the Soviet Government did not like there, that he had been sent out simply to oversee the operation, that he had gone out, and then he explained, "After all, in a country of nomads there are only 300 or 400 people that count, and all I did on a given night was to have about 400 people seized by the GPU agents in the army and police force, and I had them shot before dawn and installed the people that the Soviet Government wished to have installed and Outer Mongolia is now completed ruled by the GPU"; that is to say, the Soviet secret police.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the substance of whose statement to you?

Mr. BULLITT. Karakhan's.

Senator WATKINS. What position did he occupy in the Soviet Government?

Mr. BULLITT. At that time he was Assistant Commissar for Foreign Affairs.

Senator WATKINS. Do you not think that rather strange, that he would take you into his confidence and tell you what he had done out there?

Mr. BULLITT. I had known Karakhan since 1919, and he was in the habit of talking to me with great frankness. Karakhan had been No. 3 in the Soviet Foreign Office when I was sent in there by the American Government to attempt to negotiate a treaty ending the 21 wars then in progress on the territory of the former Czarist empire. The Soviet Foreign Office at that time consisted of Chicherin No. 1, Litvinov No. 2, and Karakhan No. 3. I had known him since that time and he was a fellow who was in the habit of talking to me with a great deal of frankness.

Senator WATKINS. I wondered about the explanation because ordinarily the Soviet officials wouldn't talk to you with that degree of frankness, would they?

Mr. BULLITT. A great many of them talked to me with considerable frankness. Karakhan at the particular time he was talking to me was at daggers drawn with Litvinov. Litvinov wanted him liquidated and he wanted Litvinov liquidated. After all, even human beings who are engaged in doing nefarious things have their personal emotions, as you see when we get a gang war. They are apt quite often to talk quite frankly. At least they were at that time.

Senator WATKINS. I felt that that situation required an explanation. That is the reason I asked you those questions.

Mr. BULLITT. Yes.

All this preceded Mr. Lattimore's visit to Moscow. On the 12th of March 1936 about a month before Lattimore arrived in Moscow, the Soviet Government and the Mongolian People's Republic Government, controlled by the GPU, signed a protocol of mutual assistance at Ulan Bator, which is the capital of the so-called Mongolian People's Republic. This was not revealed at the moment, but on March 27, before Mr. Lattimore's arrival in Moscow, there was a news dispatch from Ulan Bator saying that this protocol had been approved by the Little Khiral, which is the legislative institution set up there. On the 2d of April 1936, this protocol was officially communicated to the Chinese Government. On the 7th of April the Chinese Government made the strongest kind of a protest against this infringement of the sovereignty of China. On the 8th of April the Soviet Government through Litvinov replied, "Neither the fact nor the signing of the protocol nor its separate articles violate in the slightest degree the sovereignty of China," et cetera.

Mr. Lattimore therefore at the time when the Soviet Government did not yet dare to come out and say that Outer Mongolia was no longer under Chinese sovereignty, was advocating to me that I should persuade the President of the United States to recognize the independence of Outer Mongolia and the cessation of Chinese sovereignty.

I was obliged to conclude that either Mr. Lattimore knew nothing about the subject on which he was supposed to be the leading American expert or that he was deliberately attempting to assist in the spread of Communist authority through Asia.

I left the matter at that, with a question mark in my mind. I had seen him only once. I did not know what sort of man he was.

Senator WATKINS. Of course you did not follow his advice.

Mr. BULLITT. Certainly not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he explain to you his negotiations with the Russians in relation to IPR and getting articles from IPR?

Mr. BULLITT. No.

Senator FERGUSON. He didn't talk over the details of the IPR?

Mr. BULLITT. No; not with me.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I mean. He talked over with you this recognition, is that correct?

Mr. BULLITT. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. There was a witness yesterday who testified that Russia's aim, the Communist line at that time, was to try and show independence of Outer Mongolia, as an indication——

Mr. BULLITT. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. In order that it might become a member of the League of Nations.

Mr. BULLITT. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. And therefore would give to Russia through a satellite another vote.

Mr. BULLITT. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think now, from that testimony and Mr. Lattimore's name being mentioned in relation to the idea of proving to the western world that Outer Mongolia was an independent nation, that that had anything to do with the conversation he had with you about its independence and the recognition by America?

Mr. BULLITT. It was entirely obvious that if we should recognize the independence of Outer Mongolia, since the Soviet Government was in complete control of Outer Mongolia, it would give the Soviet Government another vote in the League of Nations.

Senator FERGUSON. If Mongolia became a part of the League of Nations.

Mr. BULLITT. If it became a part of the League of Nations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may this letter be introduced into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be inserted into the record.

(The letter was marked "Exhibit No. 750" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 750

HOTEL METROPOLE,
March 28, 1936.

The AMERICAN AMBASSADOR,
Moscow.

DEAR BULLITT: To meet my colleague Owen Lattimore, who arrives via the Trans-Siberian from the Far East, I have just arrived in Moscow, and shall be here for at least the next ten days. Since I saw you last I have been again in China and Japan, also British India, Australia, and New Zealand. Lattimore comes fresh from North China and yet another trip into Mongolia.

You are so alive to the relation of the Far Eastern developments to the international situation in general, that I know you will want to get from Lattimore his fundamental analysis of land versus sea power in the whole of eastern Asia. I, too, am eager to see you and talk with you regarding Soviet-American relations, and more particularly facilitating full Soviet participation at the conference of the Institute in Yosemite Park next August. This I want to do fairly soon.

I ought to report to you that Lattimore is accompanied by Mrs. Lattimore and Miss Dolly Tyler, who has been doing in China much the same work on Basic English that Litwinowa has been doing in the U.S.S.R. With me are Miss Harriet Moore, whom you will remember as one of the I.P.R. experts on the Russian Language, and Miss Faith Donaldson, my private secretary.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

Mr. MORRIS. When did you encounter Mr. Lattimore again, Mr. Bullitt?

Mr. BULLITT. As far as I am aware I have seen him only once more, except that I am under the impression that he was at dinner, at that dinner which, as I told you, I told the secretary to arrange for the whole outfit from the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. That is in Moscow in 1936?

Mr. BULLITT. In Moscow in 1936, but so far as I can remember I had no conversation with him on that occasion. I talked mostly with Mr. Carter.

Senator FERGUSON. Could you tell us as to whether or not Mr. Carter or any other member of the delegation explained to you what IPR was trying to do through Russia?

Mr. BULLITT. No, Senator, but it is perfectly possible that they explained to one or another of the secretaries of the Embassy.

Senator FERGUSON. But not to you personally?

Mr. BULLITT. Not to me personally.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I should like, if the Chair will permit, to read two or three pages of the testimony of a previous witness before this committee and ask this witness to comment thereon.

Senator WATKINS. May I ask a question on the matter we have just been discussing? It would be part of your job to find out just what this delegation from Mr. Carter and Mr. Lattimore were doing there, would it not?

Mr. BULLITT. The business of the delegation which arrived there, supposedly at that time and so regarded, was as a scientific organization, organized for the purpose of gathering facts. There was a great deal of business to be done in Moscow at that moment, and I have no doubt that either Mr. Loy Henderson, who was acting as First Secretary at the time, or Angus Ward, who was another First Secretary, or some other one of the Secretaries followed this up and made a report on it, which is perhaps in the Department of State files. But that sort of thing was not followed up by me personally ever.

Senator WATKINS. What I meant was at least the officials of the Embassy would find out what they were doing there and what they were attempting to do.

Mr. BULLITT. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. Because it might involve the United States——

Mr. BUILLIT. That is right.

Senator WATKINS. And its citizens in some difficulties.

Mr. BULLITT. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, might I request that you advise counsel to see whether or not we are able to get a report from our Embassy in Moscow in 1936 in relation to the delegation that was there and what they were doing?

Mr. MORRIS. That is, the report that Mr. Bullitt mentioned that may have been made to Mr. Loy Henderson or Angus Ward.

Senator FERGUSON. Or somebody else.

The CHAIRMAN. Any memorandum or report bearing on this subject. That will be the order to the staff.

Senator WATKINS. That is all I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Sourwine wanted to read from the record already made. From whose testimony did you wish to read?

Mr. SOURWINE. The testimony of Mr. Owen Lattimore, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. SOURWINE. To avoid reading out of context I will read everything from the point where I begin.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. SOURWINE. Page 3634 of part 10 [reading]:

Question. Mr. Lattimore, do you recall having testified here with regard to whether you ever suggested in any of your writings that Soviet Russia might be reaching out for Mongolia or might be planning to take over Mongolia?

Answer. No, I don't recall that.

Question. Do you recall whether you ever did suggest?

Answer. No, not offhand.

Question. Did you ever take the opposite tack, that Mongolia was independent, and that there was no threat of Soviet domination?

Answer. I think I have frequently written that Outer Mongolia is an independent state in the sense of never having been incorporated in Russia; but I have also qualified that by describing it as a satellite state.

Question. You think now it is a satellite state?

Answer. Very much so.

Question. How long have you held that opinion?

Answer. That would be hard to say. I think it would be hard to say particularly, because the expression "satellite" is a postwar expression.

Question. When would you say you first expressed the opinion that Outer Mongolia was a satellite state, if you did ever express it

Answer. Probably about 1945.

Question. Now, prior to that time, did you take the view or hold to the view that Outer Mongolia was an independent state free of Russian influence?

Answer. Not free of Russian influence. I think in the terminology of that time, before people were using the word "satellite" I would have referred to it more as a Russian protectorate or a state under Russian protection, or something of that kind.

Question. Let me rephrase the question, or perhaps I should ask a different question.

Did you ever take the position or argue that Outer Mongolia was an independent state free of Russian domination?

Answer. Yes, I think I did, before the war, describe it as free of domination.

Question. You have changed your view since then?

Answer. I think the situation has changed since then.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is: Have you changed your view?

Answer. I have changed my view, in line with what I consider to be a changing situation.

Question. When do you think the situation changed? Can you give an approximate date?

Answer. No. I should say some time after the war, if I had been able to get to Outer Mongolia, I might have a more sharp opinion on that, but it is very difficult to determine from outside.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is: When do you think the situation changed? If you do not know, you can say so.

Answer. I don't know. Some time after the war.

Question. When did you first reach the conclusion that Outer Mongolia was an independent state and free of Russian domination? Do you know?

Answer. Some time in the 1930's.

Question. Do you know when you first argued that or first expressed that view publicly?

Answer. No.

Question. Can you tell us now when, in fact, Outer Mongolia did become an independent state and free of Russian domination?

Answer. Well, I would say that—I forget the exact year; 1920 or 1921 or somewhere along in there, the Mongols who had previously declared their independence of China came into close relations with Communist Russia, and certainly the Russian influence from that time on was very strong. But my impression was that it was primarily at the request of the Mongols themselves.

Question. You say the Russian influence was very strong from about 1920 or 1921 on?

Answer. That is right.

Question. Now, if I understood you correctly, you said a moment ago that the situation changed after the war. What war did you mean? The First World War?

Answer. No; the Second World War.

Question. How did it change? Did the Russian domination become stronger after the First World War?

Answer. No. I would roughly characterize the 1920's and 1930's as a period when the close relations between Russia and Outer Mongolia could hardly be described as Russian domination, because it was largely or chiefly at the instance of the Mongol Government itself.

Question. There was, however, during that time a large measure of Russian influence. Is that your testimony?

Answer. Surely.

Question. And you recognized that at the time?

Answer. Oh, surely.

Question. And you never argued to the contrary; is that your testimony?

Answer. I don't believe so.

Would you comment on that, sir?

Mr. BULLITT. It is a very long statement to comment on offhand. I can only say that when Mr. Lattimore talked to me he certainly attempted to produce in my mind the impression that there was no Soviet Russian influence in Outer Mongolia.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that was in 1936?

Mr. BULLITT. That was in April of 1936.

The CHAIRMAN. Just so we may get the date straight with reference to the time that you had the talk with the emissary from the Soviet who was sent in to——

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Karakhan?

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Karakhan. When was it that you had the meeting with Lattimore, the conversation?

Mr. BULLITT. The meeting with Karakhan took place more than a year before my conversation with Lattimore, to the best of my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. So, at the time of your conversation with Lattimore you had in mind or had a right to have in mind the statements that had been made to you by Karakhan?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Proceed.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, you started to relate to us other experiences during which you met Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. BULLITT. I have seen Mr. Lattimore so far as I know only once more in my life, and that was when he and I were invited to take opposite sides of debate by the Town Meeting of the Air.

Mr. MORRIS. In what year was that?

Mr. BULLITT. I have here the volume that the Town Meeting of the Air people publish here, and I can give you the exact date. That was January 6, 1948.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened at that time, Mr. Bullitt?

Mr. BULLITT. Mr. Lattimore and I obviously were having a debate, but we also had an argument on a given point inside the debate. Mr. Lattimore stated—I am quoting from the record here—"on the contrary, it has become clearer and clearer that the Communists"—these were the Chinese Communists—"rely mainly upon American equipment surrendered by disgusted, war-weary Government troops."

When it came my turn to speak again I said:

> I should like to ask Mr. Lattimore a question. He states in his address that the Communists rely mainly on American equipment surrendered by disgusted, war-weary Government troops. I spent a very considerable period in China and Manchuria this summer, and I would like to ask Mr. Lattimore if he doesn't know that it is true that there were no Chinese Communists in Manchuria on VJ-day, that the 250,000 were brought into Manchuria and armed by the Russians with the excellent equipment of the Japanese Army.

I don't think you will be interested, perhaps, in the whole of this. If you want the whole text I will be very glad to read it. If I may just be allowed to give you excerpts, you might have it printed later.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. BULLITT. Mr. Lattimore, I thought, dodged the answer to this question in the subsequent reply, so I said again, quoting from myself:

> Again my question has been evaded. I don't want to take up the entire time this evening on that subject, but I should like to ask this: The Chinese Communists moved into Manchuria. They were there equipped with Japanese equipment. The equipment they have today is Japanese equipment. They got that equipment from the Soviet Government. Is that true or not, Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. Lattimore replied: "I don't know. I wasn't there."

Whereupon, I commented:

> You don't know, you weren't there, but everybody who was there knows and the American Government knows and the American Army knows and you should know. You are the head of a school on international relations. You have no right to evade it.

From this extraordinary statement of Lattimore's, the first statement that I read, "that the Communists rely mainly on American equipment surrendered by disgusted, war-weary Government troops," from the fact that Mr. Lattimore made this statement over the air to a Nation-wide audience, when everyone who took the trouble to read the columns of the New York Times or any other newspaper which prints foreign news knew that the equipment of the Chinese Communists in Manchuria was the equipment which had been surrendered to the Soviet Union by the Japanese Army—this led me to conclude that either Mr. Lattimore was once more behaving either as a man who was interested in promoting the conquest of the Far East by the Communists or, as I said before, that he was simply a charlatan who knew nothing about the subjects on which he took positions and that he had no business to be at the head of a school on international relations of a distinguished university.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, one of the trustees of the Institute of Pacific Relations was Mr. Alger Hiss. In your diplomatic experience did you ever hear any suspicion voiced about Alger Hiss, or something stronger than suspicion?

Mr. BULLITT. Once.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about it, Mr. Bullitt?

Mr. BULLITT. In the autumn of 1939 the French Prime Minister said to me——

The CHAIRMAN. Where was this?

Mr. BULLITT. In the autumn of 1939.

The CHAIRMAN. Where.

Mr. BULLITT. In Paris. I was American Ambassador to Paris, and this specifically was in the office of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said to me that he thought I would be interested to know that the French Intelligence Service had given him a report that there were two officials in the Department of State who were Soviet agents. I replied that I would be very much interested indeed and that I would like to know their names. He then looked at a memorandum that he had there, and he said, "They are two brothers named Hiss." When he said this I, in my ignorance, laughed. I said to him that I had never heard of any official of the Department of State named Hiss, I didn't think there was any official of the Department of State named Hiss, and that furthermore Hiss wasn't even a name. It was a noise made by a snake and that I thought he had better ask his Intelligence Service to get better information.

Mr. MORRIS. This was in the summer of 1939?

Mr. BULLITT. This was in the autumn of 1939. It was after the war was on and was approximately October–November.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you convey that information imparted to you by Premier Daladier to any one in the United States Department of State?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes, I did. I was firmly convinced in my own mind, very foolishly, that there was nobody named Hiss in the Department of State, but I was having a very serious conversation one day with Dr. Hornbeck——

Mr. MORRIS. In what year was this, Mr. Bullitt?

Mr. BULLITT. This was in 1940 about the end of February or the first days of March, if my memory is correct. It was a few months after the conversation with the French Prime Minister. I did a great deal of business in Paris with the French Government on the Far East. We attempted to keep the French Government working with us very closely on all far eastern questions. Dr. Hornbeck, who had been a friend of mine for a great many years, we had worked together since 1918, used to discuss with me what should be our policy in the Far East. We were having such a discussion, a very serious one, when the door behind me suddenly opened and I turned around, and there was a nice looking young man who said something to Hornbeck. Hornbeck made a reply, and this fellow said something else, Hornbeck made another reply, and then he walked out of the room. I didn't think that anybody ought to walk in on the kind of conversation we were having, so I said to Dr. Hornbeck, "Who was that?" He said, "That is Alger Hiss." I said, "What? Is there a man named Hiss here in the Department of State?"

He said "Yes." I said, "What does he do?" He said, "He is my chief assistant."

I then said to him, "Has he a brother?" He said, "Yes, he has." I said, "Does he work in the Department of State?" and he said, "Yes, he does."

I then repeated to Dr. Hornbeck exactly what the French Prime Minister had said to me, and I advised him to have an immediate investigation made of the reliability of his chief assistant, Mr. Hiss.

Mr. MORRIS. Did he tell you what Donald Hiss was doing in the State Department?

Mr. BULLITT. No; I don't know that he knew. I don't recall that at all. I may say that nothing that I know reflects on Donald Hiss in any way, aside from that original statement made by the French Prime Minister.

I left Washington at that time. A few days later I returned to my post in Paris where I was Ambassador. That is all I know about Hiss.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did this conversation take place with Hornbeck?

Mr. BULLITT. Dr. Hornbeck?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BULLITT. In his office in the Department of State. He was at the time Chief of the Division of Far Eastern Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Here in Washington?

Mr. BULLITT. His office was on the third floor of the old State Department Building, overlooking the White House, about the middle of the corridor.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, are you acquainted with the operation of the United States Embassy in Nanking in the post World War II period? Were you there at any time?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes. I was in Nanking in 1947 for a considerable period, and I was in Nanking in 1948 on two separate distinct trips, one in the spring and one in the autumn.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you tell us anything about the operation of the Embassy at that time as to who operated it and who were in control?

Mr. BULLITT. Could you be more specific? I would be glad to answer any question.

Mr. MORRIS. Did we have an Ambassador in Nanking at that time, Mr. Bullitt?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes. Dr. Leighton Stuart was our Ambassador.

Mr. MORRIS. Did Solomon Adler have a prominent position in the Embassy at that time?

Mr. BULLITT. Solomon Adler was, if my memory is correct, financial attaché, and a very intelligent and clever fellow.

Mr. MORRIS. How about Raymond Ludden?

Mr. BULLITT. Raymond Ludden, in 1947 when I arrived, was the ranking diplomatic officer in the chancery. His title, I believe, was first secretary, but there was at that time no counselor of embassy present, and he was therefore the ranking diplomatic officer.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Leighton Stuart exercising his functions of Ambassador at that time?

Mr. BULLITT. Oh, yes. He, however, was not in the habit of going down to the chancery, but of doing his work in his residence, and, as he had a Chinese constantly with him in the residence, the chancery was not in the habit of sending up to him telegrams of a highly secret nature.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, on page 215 of George Bundy's book, The Pattern of Responsibility, the statement is made that you submitted a memorandum to the October 1949 round table conference.

Mr. Chairman, we have had considerable testimony in the past on the make-up of the individuals attending the October 1949 conference. Twenty-some people have been identified in varying degrees with the Institute of Pacific Relations. This book reports a fact that doesn't seem to square with the testimony about that particular episode. It says here, "Among those submitting memoranda were such men as Joseph W. Ballentine, William Bullitt, Joseph C. Grew, Roger Lapham, and Admiral Yarnell."

Mr. Bullitt, did you submit a memorandum at that time to the Department of State?

Mr. BULLITT. I received a letter written to me August 18, 1949, by Philip C. Jessup, Ambassador at Large. This is the letter [indicating]. I don't think it is worth while to read the whole thing. Perhaps it is:

EXHIBIT No. 751

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 18, 1949.

DEAR MR. BULLITT: As you doubtless know, the Secretary of State has requested Mr. Raymond Fosdick, Mr. Everett Case, and myself, in conjunction with the officers of the State Department concerned with far eastern affairs, to review United States policy toward the Far East as it is affected by current developments there. In making this survey we are seeking, insofar as time permits, the views and guidance of those Americans who have either had extensive personal experience in the Far East or have made the area or some part of it the field of their special study.

We should very much appreciate it if you could find time to draw up and send to us at the earliest possible date a summary of your views as to the objectives which United States policy should pursue and the methods which it should employ at this time either in the Far East as a whole or in that part of it with which you have been particularly concerned. A contribution from you will be most helpful and will assist us materially in providing for our survey the broadest possible base of expert knowledge and advice.

Sincerely yours,

PHILIP C. JESSUP,
Ambassador at Large.

To that I made—do you wish that?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, I think, Mr. Chairman, we would like to have that in our record.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibits Nos. 751 and 752" and were read in full.)

Mr. BULLITT. To that I replied from the country, R. F. D., Conway, Mass., on the 28th of August 1949. This is my letter to Hon. Philip C. Jessup, Ambassador at Large, of the Department of State:

EXHIBIT No. 752

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Your letter, dated August 18, asking for my "views as to the objectives which U. S. policy should pursue and the methods which it should employ at this time" in the Far East, has finally reached me at the above address.

I am reluctant to reply. The Department of State's publication of its White Book on China, after the appointment of Mr. Fosdick and Mr. Case but before their report, seems to indicate that those distinguished gentlemen, for whom my respect is high, have been summoned not for the purpose of inventing effective policy but in the hope that some of the weight of the Far Eastern Albatross, which now hangs on the neck of the Truman Administration, may be shifted to their shoulders.

The White Book prejudges the case. By half-truths culled from reports of incompetent public servants it produces a picture so remote from reality that its chief interest lies in its proof of the lengths to which our government officials will go to protect their vested interest in their own mistakes. To publish an inquest on a faithful ally—not yet dead but fighting in despair to preserve its national independence—is incompatible with any standard of decent conduct. And our Department of State has done this not to serve a national American interest but to serve domestic political expediency.

Furthermore, Mr. Acheson, in his Letter of Transmissal, has written:

"The unfortunate but inescapable fact is that the ominous result of the Civil War in China was beyond the control of the Government of the United States. Nothing that this country did or could have done within the reasonable limits of its capabilities could have changed the result; nothing that was left undone by this country has contributed to it."

One may say politely that this statement is somewhat doubtful or one may say impolitely that it is an outrageous lie. In any event, it shows a condition in Mr. Acheson's mind which will wreck any effort by anyone to protect the remains of our vital interests in the Far East. For nothing effective can be done so long as Mr. Acheson endorses the acts of the men who have thrown away the security which was won for us by our soldiers, marines, sailors, and aviators who fought and died in the Pacific area. Thanks to the policies of the Department of State, we now face a threat on the Pacific side far more dangerous than the threat of Japan ever was. The men responsible deserve ill of their country. Mr. Acheson endorses them and their acts.

Yet to all the yellow races they smell of death. The most frequent remark I heard in both China and Japan last December was: "Your government is making it too dangerous for anyone in the Far East to remain a friend of the United States." Thanks to the White Book on China, the nationalist leaders in Indochina, Burma, and Siam will now expect similar inquests before their countries too are dead. And they will not begin to recover confidence in our government until all the men responsible for our Far Eastern policy shall have been dismissed from government service. These men although underlings persuaded their superiors, who were ignorant of the Far East, to base American policy on the illusion that the Chinese Communists were somehow not quite Communists and that we—and the Chinese government—could get along with them very nicely. They are the gravediggers of our national security on the Pacific side. Their influence in the Department of State is still great. Mr. Acheson thinks well of them.

For these reasons I consider it useless to add new recommendations to the scores I have made to officials of the Department of State during the past two years—none of which have been followed.

Nevertheless, I have no desire to put the Department of State in position to say that my advice was asked and that I refused to give it. I enclose, therefore, the text of my last public statement on the subject. An address to a joint session of the Texas Senate and House of Representatives on April 27, 1949. And I reiterate four statements which I have made frequently to officials of our Government Departments.

1. Adequate economic and financial aid, and military supplies, should be given at once to all Chinese Government centers of resistance; and the utilization of this aid should be controlled by competent Americans.

A. Chungking: This aid should be given with a view to maintaining nationalist resistance and preventing the Chinese Communists from reaching the borders of Indochina and Burma.

B. Formosa: Adequate economic and financial aid and military supplies should be given at once to the nationalists in Formosa to be utilized under American supervision. Competent American military and naval officers, like Admirals Cook and Badger, should be detailed to advise on defense of the island and enforcement of the nationalist blockade of Communist China.

C. Arms and ammunition and military advisers should be flown at once to the Generals Ma.

D. General Chennault should be helped effectively to build up an air force to supply and defend the Chinese Northwest and the other areas of resistance.

2. Indochina: The French—two years late—have taken more or less the right line in Indochina. But I met no one in Indochina who believed that the country could be defended successfully if the Chinese Communists should reach the borders of Tonkin. Southwest China is the key to both Indochina and Burma. But it is the policy of the Department of State to do nothing to prevent Communist seizure of Southwest China. If this policy should be reversed, an American representative of the highest ability who speaks French fluently should be sent to Saigon.

3. Hong Kong: No commitment should be made by the American Government for defense of Hong Kong. If the Communists take Kwantung the position of Hong Kong will become economically untenable—except on terms which will make Hong Kong an asset to the Soviet Union. Hong Kong lives on legitimate trade and smuggling to and from China. If the Communists should cut off the trade and smuggling of Hong Kong, the city would die rapidly. Furthermore, the white British residents in Hong Kong, who number less than 10,000, have been able to rule 1,000,000 or more Chinese—there are no reliable population statistics—by keeping the highly unionized Chinese divided into Kuomintang and Communist groups hostile to each other. The drift from Kuomintang to the Communist side is now rapid. Strikes by United unions controlled by Communists could strangle Hong Kong swiftly.

These facts are well known to British bankers and businessmen in Hong Kong, and their only hope of economic survival lies in the possibility that they may be able to make themselves so useful to a Communist Government of China that they will be permitted to go on making money. Their dream now is to become compradores for a Communist China. Their fear now is that the Communists may not want their services and that the American Government will consider it contrary to our national interests to permit them to render such services. If the entire coast of China should fall into Communist hands, Hong Kong would be able to earn its own living only by serving the Communists to their entire satisfaction.

4. A personal representative of the President for the Far Eastern area should be appointed at once, with orders to devise ways and means to protect our vital interests. Nothing effective can be done to stop Communist conquest of the mainland of Asia and the islands of the Western Pacific without the presence of one man of high integrity and ability, clothed with authority. General Wedemeyer would be an appropriate choice.

His instructions should be the exact reverse of those given General Marshall. He should be forbidden to attempt to produce reconciliation between Communists and Nationalists, and should be ordered to use all available means to stop further Communist advance.

Secretary Acheson, in his letter of transmissal of the White Book on China writes: "The Communist leaders have foresworn their Chinese heritage and have publicly announced their subservience to the foreign power, Russia." They did that 22 years ago. But the officials of the Department of State, including Acheson, have just discovered the fact. And their errors have permitted the Soviet Government to add such areas, races, and resources to its war potential that it will feel strong enough to attack us in its own good time. Our Department of State has thus prepared the ground for a third world war. In our Army, a general who loses a division through incompetence is court-martialed. In the State Department and the foreign service, officials who lose whole countries and endanger the survival of the United States are promoted—if they know the right people.

How much in blood and freedom the people of the United States will have to pay for the prolonged and incomplete education of Secretary Acheson and his associates remains to be seen. Perhaps Mr. Case and Mr. Fosdick can do something to reduce the cost. In any event, they have every good wish from,

Yours very sincerely,

WILLIAM C. BULLITT.

Senator WATKINS. When was that letter sent?

Mr. BULLITT. That letter was written to Mr. Jessup in answer to his letter to me. It was mailed on the 28th day of August 1949 from Conway, Mass.

Senator WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions raised by what Mr. Bullitt said in this memo. I notice you made some recommendations. I thought I got them. There was a reference to Formosa.

Mr. BULLITT. Yes, sir.

Senator WATKINS. Have you recently been in Formosa?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes. I spent the month of last December in Formosa. I arrived I think on the third day of December, and I left the last day of December.

Senator WATKINS. Had you been there previous to that time?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes, I had been. I went down to Formosa in the spring of 1948. I went all over the island at that time. That was before the Government was down there.

Senator WATKINS. What was the purpose of your visit there?

Mr. BULLITT. When; in 1948?

Senator WATKINS. No; the last time.

Mr. BULLITT. I wanted to see what was going on. I have attempted to keep up with what has developed in China for some years, and I wanted to know exactly what conditions were in Formosa at the present time.

Senator WATKINS. With respect to the recommendations you made in this memo to Ambassador Jessup, what changes, if any, would you make in those recommendations as of today after you have made this recent visit to Formosa?

Mr. BULLITT. When I wrote that letter to Ambassador Jessup in response to his letter, the mainland of China was by no means fully occupied by the Communists.

Senator WATKINS. Where were the battle lines at that time?

Mr. BULLITT. The battle lines were in the south and in the west. The west was still being held by the anti-Communists and the south and southwest also. It was a period in which there were large forces of anti-Communists on the mainland. At the present time there are no forces of anti-Communists on the mainland except the guerrillas. There are a number of guerrillas scattered through the countryside in small bands or larger bands, but there is no organized army fighting against the Chinese Communists in continental China. The only free forces of China are those that are either on Formosa or on the large island of Auemoy, which is at the mouth of the harbor of Amoy, and on various other islands up the coast and down south of Formosa. The main body is in Formosa today. There are about 600,000 men in Chiang Kai-shek's armed forces.

Senator WATKINS. About 600,000?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. Are they fully armed?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes. But they are badly armed. There are about 320,000 of them who are ground troops and the others are in the air force and the navy. Of the equipment which we promised to send to them by the 1st of July 1951, only 38 percent had been delivered by the 1st of January 1952. Their armament is by American standards entirely inadequate. They have rifles and machine guns and small artillery, and they have one or two pieces of heavier artillery. In the navy they have six DE's.

Senator WATKINS. They do have a navy?

Mr. BULLITT. Oh, yes. As a matter of fact, it has been quite an efficient force, although it is forbidden to act in any way by fiat of our Government which has given orders to our fleet to prevent it from stopping the Communist supply ships going up to Korea. They sail right by Formosa, loaded with Soviet munitions put in the Polish Communist ships in Gdynia. They come all the way around and go right by Formosa and sail past there taking those munitions up, taking those weapons up to be used to kill American soldiers in Korea, and by order of our Government the Chinese Navy is flatly forbidden to stop them on their way up there.

Senator WATKINS. Would the Chinese Navy have the power, except for that order, to intercept them and capture them?

Mr. BULLITT. Certainly, without question, without question.

Senator WATKINS. That was the result of your observation? You know that from your own observation?

Mr. BULLITT. I know that of my own knowledge.

Senator WATKINS. With respect to your recommendation that you made in that memo to Ambassador Jessup, as of today what changes, if any, would you make by reason of the changed situation?

Mr. BULLITT. The situation as it exists today is this: Stalin is engaged in pushing a long-term project to take over the whole of Asia. The first step in that was the conquest of China. He now has recently had built down to the northern border of Indochina a new railroad from Nanning to a point opposite the Lang-son Gap. He has also had three new airfields built there just north of the border. He also has had the Chinese Communists station 250,000 troops there. They are there, poised to strike. The war in Indochina——

The CHAIRMAN. When you say the border, Mr. Bullitt, what border, please?

Mr. BULLITT. The border between China and Indochina. They are on the Chinese side of the border. The war in Indochina is a bloody stalemate. The thing has gone on now for more than 5 years. The French lose there annually as many officers as they graduate from their military academy, St. Cyr. They have out there an enormous proportion of their officers and of their noncommissioned officers. They have about 175,000 men in the French Army there, and they have about 110,000 in the Vietnamese army who are their allies, of course, and they have in addition about 70,000 Vietnamese auxiliaries. At least those figures are approximately correct. I don't say they are absolutely correct because they change from day to day.

On the other hand, Ho Chi Minh, who is the Communist leader in Indochina, has about 300,000 men. They are now very well trained. Their officers have been trained in China by the Chinese Communists and Russian instructors, and they are receiving a very considerable quantity of military supplies of all sorts from Communist China.

The consequence is that if these Communist Chinese troops north of the border should come across the border and attack as "volunteers" in the manner that they did—"volunteers" in big quotes—the way they did in Korea, they probably would wipe out the French and the Vietnamese. If they were able to take Indochina, the fall of Siam and Malaya would be extremely rapid and the fall of Burma would also be very rapid. Indonesia would go and finally India. That is what Stalin is playing for in my opinion at the present time. When you get that, life becomes absolutely impossible for Japan unless she accepts Stalin's economic and political terms for trade for the continent of Asia. Japan cannot live except on trade with the continent of Asia. She depends on raw materials from the continent of Asia and selling her finished products there. Therefore, the defense of Indochina is vitally important to the United States.

Senator WATKINS. Where does Formosa fit into that?

Mr. BULLITT. It fits in in a very simple manner. The French cannot be reinforced adequately unless they take every single battleworthy division they have in Europe away from Eisenhower's troops and send them out there. The British will send nothing. And I personally trust no American ground troops are going to be sent to Indochina. It is ideally ill-adaptable to American physique and to American ways of fighting. Actually, in those swamps, in those rice paddies where that malaria mosquito is all over the place, and where prickly heat is also prevalent—which you get no matter how hard you try not to get it—a yellow soldier is much more effective than a white soldier. The white soldier requires 15 times the amount of supply that the yellow soldier requires. Therefore, I trust no one will be foolish enough to send American ground troops to Indochina.

There is only one force that can be used there, and that is the Chinese Nationalist force on Formosa. That force can strike on the flank of any Chinese Communist army going down to conquer Indochina, and I believe that if we do not intend to have that whole area go into Mr. Stalin's hands, it is essential for us to give adequate arms, adequate supplies, to the Nationalist army, navy, and air force on Formosa. I tried to make it brief, but it is too long.

Senator WATKINS. Of course, with reference to Indochina you made that explanation. How about the Korean situation? We are talking about what has happened in the past on the far eastern policy. Now what about the present policy? What about the use of these Nationalist troops on Formosa in Korea?

Mr. BULLITT. Obviously, Chiang Kai-shek offered to send 30,000 troops immediately, just as soon as the attack of the North Koreans took place. Our Government refused to accept them. He not only offered 30,000, he also offered to send as many more as we wanted. I would have taken a great quantity of them. I think if you had taken them, and put them into the fight, we would have won it in the very early days, before Stalin sent an air force out there, and before the Communists came in.

Senator WATKINS. As of January, when you were over there, or as of now, you are talking still about the past, what could have happened if we had had them in a hurry.

Mr. BULLITT. Senator, all I can say is this: With regard to Korea, there you have an extraordinarily complicated military problem. The air force does not want to use what good bombers it has.

Senator WATKINS. You say they do not want to use them?

Mr. BULLITT. They don't want to use them because they think they have to keep them to bomb the Soviet Union in case the Soviet Union should attack us.

Stalin has so many MIG–15s, and we have so few F–86s, that this lot of MIG–15s he sent out there, just as a side issue to the Chinese

Communists, to use in Korea, outnumber our F–86s to a fantastic degree. I don't think it is wise to try to give accurate figures. But to a fantastic degree. The question is now of what we can do, if I may say so. We are caught in this Korean thing, and my own personal instinct is that you don't go to war unless you intend to win the war, and then you use every means you can to win it as rapidly as possible. Whether that is today feasible under the conditions in which Stalin has built up his military strength so much faster than we have built up ours, I don't know.

Senator WATKINS. What about the replacement of our soldiers with some of these Nationalists from Formosa?

Mr. BULLITT. It could be done, and the Nationalists would be delighted to do it.

Senator WATKINS. What is the state of their morale?

Mr. BULLITT. That is the most extraordinary thing because their morale is very high. But it is very high for just one reason: That the Chinese all love their homes and their country, especially their villages, very much. The idea of living permanently exiled from their own native land, their own home, their own village, is intolerable to them. They live with just one passionate idea, which is of being able to fight their way back to their own country. They know they can only go back to their own country as victors. If they go back under any other conditions, they will all have their throats cut because they all went as volunteers to Formosa.

The consequence is that you have this absolute determination to fight their way back, and they would prefer today rather than tomorrow to begin the attempt. In my opinion they would require a period of equipment before they could be used effectively, because although each one of them is equipped they are not equipped with enough modern weapons. Such planes as the Air Force now has are completely antiquated, just as our World War II planes can't live in the air for more than 1 minute with a MIG–15. So that they would need equipment right down the line.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you through, Senator?

Senator WATKINS. Yes. We asked Admiral Cooke a number of questions. He had also been over there. I thought we might bring this inquiry as to our far eastern policy up to date.

Do you have any suggestions or recommendations with respect to that far eastern policy?

Mr. BULLITT. Yes. I think that we ought to instantly equip the forces, Chinese Nationalist forces, on Formosa so that they can fall instantly on the flank of any Chinese Communist attacks going southward. And if they become good enough, I would risk, certainly, sending them back again. They have a perfect right to fight their way back into their own country if they can do it, and with the present discontent in Communist China, which is absolutely enormous, where you have not only the guerrillas but you have an enormous number of peasants who would like to throw the Communists out, and there is a very good chance that a Chinese Nationalist invasion of the mainland in a well selected spot and with proper preparation would snowball rapidly——

Senator WATKINS. Is there any considerable body of Asiatics who are anti-Communist other than these Nationalist troops in Formosa?

Mr. BULLITT. Who will fight, you mean?

Senator WATKINS. Yes, who will fight.

Mr. BULLITT. Well, the Vietnamese, who are fighting on the French side, they fight beautifully. But they are already drawing on them to the extent of about 180,000.

Senator WATKINS. That is only a small force compared to the 600,000.

Mr. BULLITT. The difficulty there is training officers, also.

Then you have a number of other peoples who would like to resist but they are not too good. I mean the Siamese certainly don't want to be ruled by Chinese Communists. Actually, the Burmese don't either, although a lot of their country is in the hands of Communists today; and so on. The Malayans very feebly resist a few Chinese Communists that there are in the jungles of Malaya. The only force out there at the present time that is ready to act is the Nationalist force on Formosa.

Senator WATKINS. That is what I have been told, and I was wondering whether that is true.

Mr. BULLITT. It is true.

Senator WATKINS. That is the only force that is ready of the Asiatics themselves?

Mr. BULLITT. That can be used. And I would infinitely prefer to see fighting on the continent of Asia done by Asiatics rather than I would by American soldiers.

Senator WATKINS. It would be at least making it somewhat different than a white man's war against the yellow people.

The CHAIRMAN. I think Mr. Sourwine had some matters he wanted to put into the record.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I have one or two things here which should go into the record in order to make it complete. First of all, here is a letter addressed by the Chairman to the Secretary of State, under date of February 20, 1952, asking for a copy of a letter addressed by the Secretary of State, under date of April 18, 1947, to Senator George, with which was enclosed a memorandum entitled "Analysis of Allegations Against Mr. John Carter Vincent."

What I have is the carbon copy of that letter of the Chairman to the Secretary. I have the original reply signed by Carlisle H. Humelsine for the State Department. He is Deputy Under Secretary. It is to the Chairman, transmitting what Mr. Humelsine says he believes to be the letter requested. Then we have the full text of the letter as requested.

Without attempting to tie this into the record now, Mr. Chairman, I will say that it contains the statements made by the Secretary of State in 1947 with respect to a number of matters which have since been the subject of testimony before this committee, and I believe it should be a part of our record. I offer these three document for the record.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be inserted in the record.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 753, 754, and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 753

FEBRUARY, 20, 1952.

Honorable DEAN ACHESON,
Secretary of State, Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Information has come to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee with respect to a letter which you addressed, under date of April 18, 1947, to Senator George, with which you enclosed a memorandum entitled "Analysis of Allegations Against Mr. John Carter Vincent".

It is respectfully requested that a copy of this letter and memorandum be furnished to the Internal Security Subcommittee.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

EXHIBIT NO. 754

DEPUTY UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, February 27, 1952.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: With reference to your letter of February 20 to the Secretary, I am happy to transmit herewith a copy of what is believed to be the letter you requested; namely, a letter from Secretary Acheson to Senator George, dated April 18, 1947, with which was enclosed a memorandum entitled "Analysis of Allegations Against Mr. John Carter Vincent Made in Memo Transmitted With Letter From Senator Bridges of April 7, 1947, to Senator Vandenberg."

Sincerely yours,

[s] CARL HUMELSINE
[t] CARLISLE H. HUMELSINE.

Enclosure: As stated.

APRIL 18, 1947.

The Honorable WALTER F. GEORGE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR GEORGE: I refer to Senator Bridges' letter of April 7, 1947, to Senator Vandenberg, which you transmitted to me, and in which Senator Bridges encloses a memorandum submitted to him by someone whose name is not given setting forth a number of charges relative to the policies and record of Mr. John Carter Vincent, whose nomination for the promotion to Career Minister is under consideration by the Foreign Relations Committee. Although Senator Bridges does not express any opinion on the credibility or validity of the memorandum, he believes that an investigation into Mr. Vincent's fitness for the post is warranted.

I have made a careful investigation of all the charges made against Mr. Vincent and believe that they are wholly groundless.

I attach a point-by-point analysis of the allegations against Mr. Vincent. For the sake of convenience I have divided Senator Bridges' memorandum into 12 numbered paragraphs and have followed each paragraph with my answer or comments on the allegations contained in it. I have, in some places, rearranged slightly the text of the memorandum in order to shorten it and to make the charges stand forth more clearly. Inasmuch as the chronology and itinerary of Mr. Vincent's assignments and movements are substantially correct, I have omitted any reference to them from my summary.

I have known Mr. Vincent well throughout my service in the State Department. I recommended him for his present post and have worked intimately with him during my service as Under Secretary during which period he has reported directly to me. Increasing knowledge has brought increasing respect for his judgment and admiration for him as a gentleman and a disinterested and loyal servant of our Republic. He is a man of the finest intellectual quality and the highest character.

I am enclosing two copies of this letter, together with the analysis which you may want to submit to Senator Vandenberg.

Sincerely yours,

[t] DEAN ACHESON, Acting Secretary.

ANALYSIS OF ALLEGATIONS AGAINST MR. JOHN CARTER VINCENT MADE IN MEMO TRANSMITTED WITH LETTER FROM SENATOR BRIDGES OF APRIL 7, 1947, TO SENATOR VANDENBERG

I. It is alleged that "the actions, advice, and recommendations of Mr. Vincent" have been coordinated with the steps outlined in two official Communist documents:

1. "The Program of the Communist International and its Constitution." Workers Library Publishers. 1928. 3d American Edition, 1936.

2. "The Revolutionary Movement in the Colonies and Semi-Colonies," adopted as a resolution by the 6th World Congress of the Comintern, Sept. 1, 1928.

Comment.—Mr. Vincent advised me that he has never even read the two Communist documents under reference. I have never read them myself. I state categorically that any advice given by Mr. Vincent or any action taken by him was not coordinated, either intentionally or coincidentally, with these documents. The author of the memorandum presented to Senator Bridges does not quote from the documents and does not cite any specific instances in which Mr. Vincent's policies and actions have paralleled the supposed Communist line. The effect of citing these documents at the outset of a bill of particulars against Mr. Vincent is tendentious and unfair.

II. It is charged that while at the Embassy in Chungking in 1941 Mr. Vincent "expressed dislike for Ambassador Gauss," "a general dislike of the Chinese," and "an anti-Japanese viewpoint (prior to adoption of the Russo-Jap nonaggression pact in mid-April 1941)," and that he "expressed sympathy for Communist aims and ideology" and dislike for "alleged American exploitation of cheap Chinese labor."

Comment.—The allegation regarding Mr. Vincent's personal feelings toward Ambassador Gauss or vice versa bears on Mr. Vincent's fitness for this promotion only in its imputation of disloyalty. The contrary is the case. Mr. Vincent lived with Ambassador Gauss for two years (from 1941 to 1943), and their relation appears to have been close and amicable. I discover in the record only loyalty on the part of Mr. Vincent, both to the person of Ambassador Gauss and to the policies and actions advocated by him.

The allegation that Mr. Vincent has expressed a "general dislike of the Chinese," I find wholly untrue. Mr. Vincent has dedicated a great part of his life to friendship with the Chinese, the betterment of conditions in China, and toward good relations between that country and the United States of America.

With respect to his alleged "anti-Japanese viewpoint" it is quite true that from the beginning of Japanese aggression—and entirely unaffected by the Russo-Japanese arrangements in 1941, a wholly tendentious insinuation—Mr. Vincent and many others, among whom I include myself, were actively advocating measures to counteract that aggression.

Mr. Vincent has no "sympathy for Communist aims and ideology" and I am willing to state that he has never expressed any such sympathy directly or indirectly.

Mr. Vincent tells me that he knows of no instances of American exploitation of cheap Chinese labor and has never discussed the subject.

III. It is charged that, in 1945 while Mr. Vincent was first Chief of the Division of Chinese Affairs and later Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, personnel in the State Department engaged in private correspondence with personnel of the Embassy in Chungking, via diplomatic pouch, and that this private correspondence was "leaked" to the Communists. It is stated that General Hurley's resignation came two months later.

Comment.—The implication is that Mr. Vincent conducted or permitted, a clandestine personal correspondence on official matters undermining the policies of General Hurley. It is further implied that the substance of this unapproved correspondence was being illicitly conveyed to the Communists. It is further implied that this was the cause for General Hurley's resignation.

In 1945, Mr. Vincent was at the San Francisco Conference from the middle of April to the end of May, at the Potsdam Conference from early June to early August, at the Moscow Conference from early December to the end of the year.

The entire subject of this alleged unofficial correspondence and contact with the Communists was thoroughly ventilated in the hearings of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee during December 1945 on the charges brought by former Ambassador Hurley against the loyalty of certain Foreign Service officers. Secretary Byrnes said before the Committee:

"The other complaint of Ambassador Hurley is that some official or employee did not merely express a different view of his superior officer, but advised someone associated with the Communist forces that the Ambassador did not accurately represent United States policy. For such action there would be no excuse. I would be the first to condemn it and to dismiss the person guilty of it. But Ambassador Hurley has not furnished me, nor do I understand that he has furfurnished this Committee, any specific evidence to prove that any employee was guilty of such conduct."

The Committee took no action whatsoever on General Hurley's charges and failed to find the matter worth a published report. Furthermore, Mr. Vincent has at no time engaged in or countenanced private correspondence on official matters. I think, therefore, that we may consider the case as without foundation.

However, for whatever interest it may have, I should like to point out that on the basis of records available to us, Mr. Vincent's name appears to have been mentioned only three times in the course of these hearings, and not at all in connection with the question of the alleged clandestine correspondence. Ambassador Hurley referred once to a letter addressed to the President by Mr. Maxwell Stewart finding fault with Mr. Hurley, which Mr. Vincent acknowledged on reference from the White House without commenting on the substance of the letter.

Secretary Byrnes in his testimony referred to a report from General Hurley, dated December 24, 1944, and said that "there was a message signed by Mr. Stettinius with the initials of Mr. Vincent in the corner stating that the position of Hurley was sound."

There was only one other reference to Mr. Vincent during the hearings. Ambassador Hurley stated that he did not know Mr. Vincent well in spite of the fact that he and Mr. Vincent shared an office in the Department for a month in the spring of 1945 and went on to say that Mr. Vincent was in sympathy with George Atcheson (now Ambassador and Political Adviser to General MacArthur) and the others who were trying to undermine U. S. policy in China.

IV. It is stated that "a statement issued by President Truman on December 15, 1945, at the time of the appointment of General Marshall as Ambassador, presumably drafted by Vincent, entirely overlooked the principles of the Open Door, made no mention of the November 26, 1941, note to Japan, and in brief invited the Republic of China to 'agree to the Communistic terms for a coalition government or get no more aid from us.' This constituted a repetition in China of the policy so disastrously followed in Yugoslavia and Poland previously."

Comment.—This paragraph is a criticism of the policies enunciated in a statement issued by President Truman on December 15, 1945, and its apparent intent as well as the intent of the entire memorandum is to imply that Mr. Vincent had improperly exerted his influence to compel the Chinese authorities to incorporate Communists in the government. This implication is entirely false.

As to the Presidential statement, it was not drafted by Mr. Vincent, or under his supervision. It was prepared under the direction of Secretary Byrnes, General Marshall, and myself. It was revised and approved by the President. Mr. Vincent was in entire agreement with its contents.

The statement at no place indicates that Chinese Communists must be brought into the Chinese Government. The Communists are mentioned only twice. It is stated that the United States Government believes it essential that "a cessation of hostilities be arranged between the armies of the National Government and the Chinese Communists * * *" Further on in the document it is stated that "the existence of autonomous armies such as that of the Communist Army is inconsistent with, and actually makes impossible, political unity in China." Incidentally, I note that in the above-quoted paragraph of the memorandum under discussion, an internal quotation appears of which the source is not given. If this is intended to summarize the purport of the President's message, it is clearly a misrepresentation.

As is well known, the subsequent course of events prevented the establishment of internal unity in China. When General Marshall arrived in China in December 1945, he found that provision had been made by the National Government for a People's Consultative Council made up of representatives of the National Government party (Kuomintang), the Communists, and two other minority parties. There were also a number of nonparty members. This Council had not met due to inability of the authorities to arrange for a cessation of hostilities. General Marshall immediately exerted his influence to bring about a truce and was able to do so as of January 10. On the same day the People's Consultative Council met. This Council of its own initiative and with the approval of Chiang Kai-shek drew up a series of resolutions and agreements providing for representation by all parties in a State Council (the National Government party retained control over the Council), for the adoption of a constitution, for abolition of one-party government and representation by other parties in the government on a minority basis, and for unification of all armed forces in a nonpolitical national army. It was these resolutions and agreements, freely adopted by the Chinese, which General Marshall used as his guide in his subsequent efforts to assist the Chinese toward peace and unity. He became a member of a 3-man committee (a National Government representative, a Communist representative, and himself) to supervise a truce agreement and prepared for the amalgamation of the armed forces.

Subsequent developments in China gradually undermined and finally wrecked the chances of bringing about peace and unity in accordance with the People's Consultative Council resolutions and agreements. General Marshall has set forth clearly in his statement of January 7 the reasons for this disappointing development.

V. It is stated that "in September 1946, six members of the Military Affairs Committee of the House, visited General MacArthur in Tokyo. They issued (PM, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1946) 'an alarming statement about Soviet intentions in the Far East.' The next day General MacArthur issued a warning about the danger of communism in Japan. This 'was deeply resented by John Carter Vincent.' "

Comment: Mr. Vincent has given me the following account of the incident to which this paragraph apparently refers:

"The story regarding my alleged resentment over a statement made by General MacArthur is as follows: On September 2, 1946, a newspaperman (New York Herald Tribune) called to ask me what I thought of the statement that had just been issued by General MacArthur. I told him I had not read the statement. He asked whether there had been any change in policy regarding Japan. I told him there had been one and went on to explain that American policy towards Japan was expressed in the Potsdam Declaration, Terms of Surrender and certain papers of the State-War-Navy Committee that had been made public. The newspaperman manufactured out of whole cloth the story that 'an official of the State Department' took exception to General MacArthur's statement. The story was untrue; the newspaperman subsequently apologized to me. The fact that he was eventually discharged by the Herald Tribune proves nothing in this connection."

VI. It is charged that:

(a) Mr. Vincent presented a draft statement to Secretary Byrnes "in the fall of 1946" which "recommended withdrawal of all aid to the National government." Senator Bridges' document then indicates that this alleged draft by Mr. Vincent could be compared to the act of the Soviet Union in continuing aid to the Communists in China despite its undertaking to support the Central government in the Sino-Soviet pacts of August 14, 1945.

(b) Mr. Vincent on November 11, 1946, while Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, delivered an address in which he said that it was "unsound to invest private or public capital in countries where there is widespread corruption in business and official circles; where a government is wasting its substance on excessive armament, where the fact or trend of Civil War exists."

The memorandum in reference characterizes this speech as an "indirect expression of American foreign policy in China" and points to the editorial disapproval of the speech as expressed in the New York World Telegram and approval given it by the Daily Worker, the Chicago Star and Communist party dailies.

Comment.—As to (a), I have not been able to find any record of any such recommendation or draft prepared by Mr. Vincent or anyone else. The only draft presented by Mr. Vincent to the Secretary in the fall of 1946 was the paper which subsequently became the basis of the President's statement of December 18, 1946. It was prepared at my request and approved by the Secretary of State, the Secretaries of War and Navy, and by General Marshall. In no draft of the statement was there any recommendation that we withdraw all aid to the National Government. On the contrary, the statement provided, in a paragraph drafted by Mr. Vincent, for aid to China under the indicated conditions: Mr. Vincent has consistently advocated the extension of credits to China when conditions in China are such that the credits can be effectively utilized to improve economic conditions and promote a revival of American-Chinese business relations. He was, furthermore, active in supporting the grant by the Export-Import Bank of the $500,000,000 credit to China in March 1946. This was in accord with the expressed view of General Marshall.

I believe that the best comment on the allegation in paragraph (b) above is the text itself of Mr. Vincent's speech. I attach a copy.

There are also attached for your information copies of two letters, one from the National Foreign Trade Council and the other from the China-American Council of Commerce and Industry, the two trade organizations most actively interested in commercial relations with China. You will note that the President of the National Foreign Trade Council states that Mr. Vincent's "enunciation of the attitude and policies of the United States with respect to our interests in the Far East was most impressive." The President of the China-America Council states that Mr. Vincent's speech was discussed at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Council and "appreciation expressed for the clear-cut statement of policy of the Department of State as presented in his address." In addition to these two statements of approval, there have been received in the Department a large number of letters from businessmen, who heard or read Mr. Vincent's speech, expressing their appreciation and approval.

As to press reaction to Mr. Vincent's speech, criticism appears to have been confined to the Scripps-Howard press. It is reported that certain Communist dailies approved this speech but I might add to the list of those expressing approval the following: New York Journal of Commerce, New York Herald Tribune, Washington Post, Washington Times-Herald, etc.

VII. It is stated that Mr. Vincent accompanied "Owen Lattimore, member of the Editorial Board of Amerasia, pro-Communist magazine on Asia," and Henry Wallace on his trip to China in 1944. Mr. Wallace's report of his journey is said to have been "prepared with the direct assistance of Mr. Vincent" and it is alleged that it "should be examined for further indications of Mr. Vincent's approval of the Communist program in China, opposition to the support of the Nationalist Government and furtherance of extension of the influence of Russia in China."

Comment.—Mr. Vincent was assigned by the Secretary of State to accompany Mr. Wallace, the Vice President of the United States, on the journey mentioned. Mr. Vincent did not prepare or assist in the preparation of the report and does not know what recommendations it contained. Mr. Vincent had never met Mr. Wallace prior to the trip to China, saw him only a few times on official business after their return, and has had no contact with him since his resignation from the Government.

VIII. It is alleged that "examination of the top secret and secret documents required by General Hurley, and passing between the State Department (Mr. Vincent) and General Hurley at the time of his incumbency, would prove revealing of the policy and aims of Mr. Vincent, contrary to the best interests of this country and contrary to its avowed Foreign Policy in China."

Comment.—The allegation does not cite any particular document or reference to support the charge that the aims and policies of Mr. Vincent were contrary to the best interests of this country and contrary to its foreign policy in China, and indeed could not do so. At no time have the policy and aims of Mr. Vincent been contrary to our best interests in China or to our foreign policy. No documents ever went directly from Mr. Vincent to General Hurley and any documents from the Department to General Hurley were prepared or approved by Mr. Ballantine, then Director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs, or Under Secretary Grew who were responsible for the formulation of policy with regard to China at that time, subject to the close review of the Secretary of State and the President.

IX. It is charged that "at the Potsdam Conference in July 1945, Vincent, aware of the secret Yalta agreement with respect to agreement that Russia was to have certain rights in Manchuria, failed to properly advise Mr. Byrnes of this text, made a great show of opposing Russian demands with respect to China, and furthered a final agreement (which still remains secret) which gave Russia even more than agreed at Yalta. Under date of Oct. 31, 1946, Mr. John M. Patterson, Acting Assistant Chief, Division of Public Liaison, Department of State, replied to the request of the American China Policy Association, Inc., for release that 'No secret agreements concerning China were concluded at the Potsdam Conference.' It is thought that Mr. Vincent instructed Mr. Patterson in the writing of this letter (Why did Mr. Vincent conceal (if he did) from President Truman and Secretary Byrnes at Potsdam, the precise nature and extent of the previous secret Yalta commitments? It would seem that only the Russians could have been benefited by the concealment, as they were thus able to squeeze more concession from our negotiators who were ignorant of the exact terms which had been squeezed from President Roosevelt).

Comment.—Mr. Vincent had no knowledge of the Yalta Agreement until he reached Potsdam. Moreover, Mr. Byrnes was fully informed concerning the Yalta conversations. He attended the Conference and was thoroughly familiar with the full text of the Yalta Agreements before he departed for the Potsdam Conference. It is therefore absurd to suggest that there was anything which Mr. Vincent could have withheld from Mr. Byrnes even if he had known it.

As you are aware, the full texts of the Yalta and Potsdam Agreements have now been made public. The Potsdam Agreement does not contain any "final agreement which gave Russia even more than agreed to at Yalta."

Mr. Vincent does not know Mr. John M. Patterson and gave no instruction to him in the writing of any such letter as that referred to.

X. It is stated that "in late July or early August 1945, Ambassador Hurley finally secured clearance to show the Yalta text to the Chinese. He then exerted every effort to force T. V. Soong and Foreign Minister Wang Shi-hsueh to go to Moscow. When they got there, the Russians made additional demands and the Chinese Government appealed to Hurley to mediate. 'Somehow or other Washington learned of this' and Hurley received a cable believed to have read somewhat as follows: 'You will not advise, you will not mediate, you will not assist in Chinese Russian negotiations.' It was signed 'Grew,' but it is believed that Under Secretary Grew, who was then being forced out, did not compose it."

Comment.—This allegation is completely inaccurate. There is no record of information reaching the Department at the time cited of any "additional demands" made by representatives of the U. S. S. R. during the Sino-Russian conversations nor of any appeal by the Chinese Government that General Hurley "mediate." The Chinese Government had been informed a year prior to that time that the United States did not desire to place itself in any position in which it might appear as a "mediator" between China and other countries and Ambassador Hurley had been apprised of this as early as six months prior to the alleged time. This policy had the full approval of Mr. Grew and of the President.

XI. It is charged that apparently in the summer of 1945 "Henry Luce of Time-Life-Fortune, who was represented in China by Theodore White, a strong pro-Communist, became uneasy about 'angled' dispatches and applied for a passport to fly out and see for himself. The State Department refused it. He appealed to General Hurley who cabled recommending the issuance. In reply Hurley received a reprimand advising him not to interfere. Mr. Luce finally obtained an official invitation from Chiang Kai-shek which brought the passport, investigated, and fired White for pro-Communist propaganda. White is a great admirer of Vincent and, like him, has been connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations."

Comment.—Mr. Vincent has never been consulted or informed with respect to any grant or refusal of travel permission from Mr. Luce.

XII. It is charged that "during the past two years, the Far Eastern Division of the State Department has been denuded of its former heads who were not pro-Soviet. Hornbeck, former Far Eastern Division head, who has been advanced to Political Adviser to the Secretary, was packed off as Ambassador to the Netherlands; Grew was forced to retire, as was Dooman, Drumright, and the Chief of China Section was sent to London. Now in control of the Far East Division, Lattimore and Vincent (Lattimore having no official connection although he lectures to Department personnel, and to the War College, and is known to advise Dean Acheson and President Truman as well as Vincent) have sent to General MacArthur, as well as to China, men and women of Red sympathies. A few names sent MacArthur are John S. Service (ardent pro-Communist, arrested in 1945 for turning State Department papers over to Communist Philip Jaffe of AMERASIA), Theodore Cohen (Labor Adviser), Miriam Farley, and T. A. Bisson of the Institute of Pacific Relations, listed as a Communist front by the Dies committee of 1944, of which Vincent and Lattimore are both trustees). Lattimore, close friend and associate of Vincent, is reported to have loaded the OWI with Reds (both Chinese and American) and helped to secure the appointment of a man without qualifications (also without a Communist record) as head of UNRRA for China and helped him staff this division of UNRRA with pro-Communists."

Comment.—This allegation seeks to suggest a purpose and design behind the various personnel changed and transfers referred to which, I can say, from personal knowledge did not and does not exist. Insofar as Mr. Vincent is concerned he had nothing to do with the transfer of Mr. Hornbeck or the retirement of Mr. Grew and Mr. Dooman. Mr. Drumright had long desired an assignment to London which he eventually received.

I do not recollect ever having met Mr. Owen Lattimore; he has never advised me nor has he ever had anything to do with the operations of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs. I do not care at this time to go into the charges made against him which, in view of the above, are irrelevant to the present inquiry.

Mr. Vincent had nothing to do with the assignments of any of the persons whose names are listed as having been sent to General MacArthur. With respect to Mr. John S. Service, whose name is included, I would point out that, prior to his assignment to Tokyo, he was cleared of all charges which had been made against him.

Mr. Vincent is not a trustee of the Institute of Pacific Relations. He was elected to the post in 1944 with the permission of his superior, Mr. Joseph Grew. He was never able actively to serve in that capacity and was not reelected in subsequent years. It might be pointed out in this connection that such substantial citizens as Mr. Walter F. Dillingham, Mr. Henry F. Grady, Mr. Paul G. Hoffman, and Mr. Robert G. Sproul are trustees of the institution.

NATIONAL FOREIGN TRADE COUNCIL,
26 BEAVER STREET,
New York 4, N. Y., December 20, 1946.

The Honorable JAMES F. BYRNES,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: We wish to record with you the appreciation of our Council, and of the Thirty-Third National Foreign Trade Convention, of the attendance and participation of the Government officials, as listed in the enclosed list of over twenty-one hundred delegates at the Convention.

We also have the pleasure to enclose a copy of the Final Declaration which includes "A Proposed Foreign Economic Policy for the United States," and Recommendations in support of this Foreign Economic Policy.

It is also most highly appreciated that the Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, the Hon. William L. Clayton, addressed the Convention, on the occasion of its annual dinner, on the subject of "The Foreign Economic Policy of the United States."

It is also particularly gratifying to refer to the constructive addresses of the Secretary of Commerce, the Hon. W. Averell Harriman, and Mr. John Carter Vincent, Director, Office of Far Eastern Affairs, whose enunciation of the attitude and policies of the United States with respect to our interests in the Far East was most impressive.

This annual convention of leading representatives of Government and foreign trade interests of the United States as a recurrent opportunity for conferences and conclusions has been of the utmost value to a mutual understanding of the problems and policies affecting our foreign commerce.

Sincerely yours,

E. P. THOMAS, President.

cc. Mr. John Carter Vincent.

CHINA-AMERICA COUNCIL OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY, INC.,
December 17, 1946.

The Honorable WILLIAM L. CLAYTON,
Department of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CLAYTON: At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Far East-American Council yesterday, the address of Mr. John Carter Vincent at the Far East Luncheon of the National Foreign Trade Council on November 12th was discussed and appreciation expressed for the clear-cut statement of policy of the Department of State as presented in this address.

I take this occasion, therefore, to bring the foregoing to your attention with the thought that the Council's approval as above noted may thus be made a matter of record in the Department and may further be brought to the attention of other officials concerned with international trade policy matters.

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR B. FOYE, President.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that Mr. John Carter Vincent testified at length before this committee with regard to certain memoranda which he had prepared in connection with or antedating the directive which was given to General Marshall on December 15, 1945. Mr. Vincent identified as his draft the memorandum which was signed by the Secretary of State and which became one of the enclosures that was a part of that so-called directive. The directive, the committee will remember, consisted of the President's letter of transmittal, this memorandum of the Secretary of State—to which I have referred—a statement of policy with regard to China by the President, and a press release with respect to that statement of policy.

Mr. Vincent, as I say, identified the memorandum signed by the Secretary of State as his draft. He also said that he had drafted a two-page memorandum which he said he had given to General Marshall, and which had never been returned to the State Department files. He then spoke of a document which he had drafted under date of November 28, 1945, and said he had discovered a copy of that in the Far Eastern Division files, although there was none in the general State Department files, and suggested the committee could get that document if the committee asked for it.

The record appears to indicate some confusion—at least, the record reads as though perhaps the November 28 document was in fact the two-page memorandum which he said he had written and given to General Marshall.

The chairman wrote to the State Department requesting this November 28 document, and I ask, Mr. Chairman, that there may be inserted in the record at this point the letter of the chairman in that regard, which quotes from our record.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 755," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 755

MARCH 14, 1952.

Honorable DEAN ACHESON,
The Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On February 2, 1952, in public session, Mr. John Carter Vincent on the stand, the record of the Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary was, in part, as follows:

"Mr. SOURWINE. I also ask permission, Mr. Chairman, to offer for the record a letter under date of October 3 addressed to Senator McCarran and signed by Mr. Humelsine of the State Department.

"Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

"(The letter referred to was admitted as Exhibit No. 390, and was read in full as follows:)

"Mr. SOURWINE. I would like permission to read this letter.

"'MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Further reference is made to your letter of September 19, 1951, requesting "A Draft of General Marshall's directive which he took with him when he went to China in 1945" referred to by General Wedemeyer in his testimony before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, September 15, 1950; and also the names of individuals who prepared this directive. According to your letter of September 19, General

Wedemeyer testified that he saw the initials "J. C. V." on the requested directive.

" 'I am enclosing a photostat of the Department's file copy of the memorandum to which, I believe, General Wedemeyer referred.' "

Parenthetically, Mr. Chairman, I want to state that this photostat which has just been offered for the record is the photostat which was submitted with this letter from the State Department.

" 'This memorandum was one of the enclosures of the President's letter of December 15, 1945, to General Marshall. As you are aware, the President's letter of December 15, 1945, and its enclosures constituted General Marshall's written directive for a China mission.

" 'A search of the Department's files reveals that none of the other documents of the Presidential directive which General Marshall took with him to China in 1945 bears the initials "J. C. V." or the name of Foreign Service Officer John Carter Vincent.

" 'As to the authorship of the enclosed memorandum, it would be impossible for the Department to provide a list of all those who contributed to or edited the memorandum. At the time the memorandum was drafted, Mr. John Carter Vincent was the director of the Office of Far Eastern Affairs and hence the responsible subordinate officer for the drafting of the memorandum. It should be pointed out, however, that in important memoranda of this kind, it is generally the case that many officers participate in the drafting, even though the record copies (such as the enclosed) only show the name of the responsible subordinate officer. Since this particular memorandum was addressed to the War Department and since it was signed by Secretary Byrnes and approved by the President, it is entirely possible that in addition to Mr. Vincent and other State Department officers, military officers as well as Secretary Byrnes and even the President may have a hand in the drafting.

" 'In this connection, Mr. Acheson's detailed account of the drafting of General Marshall's directive is contained on pages 1848 and 1849 of part 3, hearings before the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, 82nd Congress, First Session.

" 'Sincerely yours,

" 'CARLISLE H. HUMELSINE.' "

So presumably the two-page memorandum which was handed to General Marshall was never returned to the State Department file? Would you assume that from this letter?

"Mr. VINCENT. I would assume that from this letter.

"Mr. SOURWINE. That memorandum did bear your initials or your name; did it not?

"Mr. VINCENT. It did.

"Mr. SOURWINE. But it was not in the State Department files in October, so presumably it never came back to the State Department?

"Mr. VINCENT. The original never came back to the State Department, but let me testify here that in my search after I came back from leave this time I found a carbon copy of this November 28 document to which I refer, which was in the Far Eastern office files and had never gone into the regular State Department files.

"Mr. SOURWINE. How would you identify that so that we might request it?

"Mr. VINCENT. I could identify it by date and I could describe it.

"Mr. SOURWINE. Would you do that?

"Mr. VINCENT. I will put it this way: You don't have to identify it, because I would like to have it now to complete this record of all the difficulty there has been about the draft.

"Mr. SOURWINE. I am sure we all would because there has been a lot of confusion.

"Mr. VINCENT. It would be well to have it in. I would like to have it. If you would write the State Department, there will be no difficulty in identifying it as the document concerning which Mr. Vincent testified here.

"Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think there will be any difficulty in getting it?

"Mr. VINCENT. I can't promise that, sir.

"Mr. SOURWINE. You at least are anxious that we should have it?

"Mr. VINCENT. I would like to have it now. That, I think, would clarify one other thing in General Wedemeyer's testimony, what document did General Wedemeyer see with my initials on it, and I am inclined to think that what he saw was my November 28 memo when he testified that he saw something over my initials."

If the above-quoted portion of the record makes possible identification of the document referred to, the two-page memorandum written by Mr. Vincent which formed a basis for the subsequent six-page directive to General Marshall, it is respectfully requested that the Department furnish the Internal Security Committee with a true copy or photostat of the document in question. (A photostat would, of course, be preferable.)

You will note Mr. Vincent's testimony that very recently he found a copy of what he refers to as the "November 28 document" in the files of the Far Eastern office. If this "November 28 document" is not the two-page memorandum hereinabove requested, it is further respectfully requested that a copy of this "November 28 document" also be furnished to the committee.

Kindest personal regards.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

Mr. SOURWINE. A reply has been received from the State Department, again signed by Mr. Carlisle Humelsine, and enclosing a photostatic copy of the November 28 document referred to by Mr. Vincent in his testimony. This is a four-page document, Mr. Chairman, so it still leaves some uncertainty as to the whereabouts or the identity of the two-page document which Mr. Vincent also said he wrote and gave to General Marshall.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this letter and the text of the document may be inserted in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be inserted in the record.

(The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 756" and is as follows:)

(See p. 2207, pt. 7, for the November 28 document.)

EXHIBIT NO. 756

DEPUTY UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, March 24, 1952.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I refer to your letter of March 14 to the Secretary in which you request a true photostatic copy of a "November 28 document" concerning which Mr. Vincent testified before the Internal Security Subcommittee on February 2, 1952.

Enclosed is a true photostatic copy of what is believed to be the memorandum you seek.

Sincerely yours,

(s) CARLISLE H. HUMELSINE.

Enclosure: Memorandum, Outline of Suggested Course of Action in China, drafted by John Carter Vincent on November 28, 1945.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, Mr. Chairman, because Mr. Vincent had testified in terms which were not completely clear as to their import, but had testified that he had drafted a statement which—and he did not like the word "basis"—which had been incorporated into the President's statement on foreign policy, the staff of the committee has attempted to make an analysis of this document, a copy of which has been furnished us by Mr. Humelsine, the so-called November 28 document, which would compare it with the statement of policy by Mr. Truman on December 15, 1945. That comparison has been made in the form of a two-column, parallel placement of identified paragraphs from the two drafts.

Now in order to see how that has been done, Mr. Chairman, and I believe it is important for the record, I respectfully suggest that the text of the President's statement, the text of Mr. Vincent's memorandum, both be inserted with the paragraphs numbered as indicated here, which was the basis for this staff study, and that it then be ordered into the record the study itself showing the parallel columns with the numbered paragraphs placed opposite one another. That will mean a duplication in the actual printing of the text, but it will be done in such a way that the record will show how the studies were made.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the ultimate object?

Mr. SOURWINE. The ultimate object is to show, and it is the opinion of counsel that this does clearly show, that as Mr. Vincent has testified his memorandum was incorporated in the President's statement, that everything in his memorandum got into the President's statement, and that there is not anything in the President's statement that is contrary to what was in his memorandum.

The CHAIRMAN. What part did the President's statement play?

Mr. SOURWINE. This is the statement of policy on China which became a part of the directive to General Marshall.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. It will be inserted into the record.

(For the document referred to see p. 2208 of pt. 7.)

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, those are the only two matters that I have for insertion at this time. I should like to ask, if the Chair deems it not improper, that the insertion with regard to the November 28 document and this analysis of it might be physically placed in the record at the time when Mr. Vincent testified about it, when he identified it as being in the State Department files, and suggested that the Chair write to it.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done. The January report is out, I think, and in galley-sheet form.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, sir; it is in galley form. It is a physical printer's problem. It could be laid in, if the Chair will so order.

The CHAIRMAN. If it can be done, that will be the order.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bullitt, did you know John Carter Vincent?

Mr. BULLITT. No. The only time I ever saw John Carter Vincent in my life, so far as I can remember, was at a large banquet given in Switzerland in 1948, I think it was.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you add anything from your experience to these series of letters introduced into the record by Mr. Sourwine?

Mr. BULLITT. No; I can't. I don't know anything about Mr. Vincent.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I pose this question for the Chair's consideration: The directive that went to General Marshall, as I have indicated, consisted of four documents, a letter of transmittal, a memorandum signed by the Secretary of State, a statement of policy by the President, and a press release with regard to that statement of policy.

The white paper issued by the State Department carries the full text of three of those documents, and omits the full statement of the press release with the statement that the press release was subsantially the same as the statement of policy.

Just as a cross check, the committee has obtained from the White House a copy of that original press release. I might say that, on a comparison—not a detailed comparison but a hurried comparison, because it came up this morning—it does appear to be precisely what the State Department white paper said, substantially the same as the policy statement. Does the Chair desire that this document, which is not printed anywhere so far as I know, should be included in our record, or is this statement with regard to it sufficient?

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a part of the transaction?

Mr. SOURWINE. It was a part of the transaction; yes, sir. It was included in the directive to General Marshall.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it should go into the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 757" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 757

HOLD FOR RELEASE

DECEMBER 15, 1945.

Confidential: The following statement by the President on United States policy toward China MUST BE HELD IN CONFIDENCE Until released.

Note:

Release is for SUNDAY morning (December 16, 1945) newspapers.

Release by radio commentators, news broadcasters, etc., NOT EARLIER THAN 7:00 P. M., E. S. T., SATURDAY, December 15, 1945.

CARE MUST BE EXERCISED TO PREVENT PREMATURE PUBLICATION.

CHARLES G. ROSS,
Secretary to the President.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD CHINA

The Government of the United States holds that peace and prosperity of the world in this new and unexplored era ahead depend upon the ability of the sovereign nations to combine for collective security in the United Nations organization.

It is the firm belief of this Government that a strong, united and democratic China is of the utmost importance to the success of this United Nations organization and for world peace. A China disorganized and divided either by foreign aggression, such as that undertaken by the Japanese, or by violent internal strife, is an undermining influence to world stability and peace, now and in the future. The United States Government has long subscribed to the principle that the management of internal affairs is the responsibility of the peoples of the sovereign nations. Events in this century, however, would indicate that a breach of peace anywhere in the world threatens the peace of the entire world. It is thus in the most vital interest of the United States and all the United Nations that the people of China overlook no opportunity to adjust their internal differences promptly by methods of peaceful negotiation.

The Government of the United States believes it essential:

(1) That a cessation of hostilities be arranged between the armies of the National Government and the Chinese Communists and other dissident Chinese armed forces for the purpose of completing the return of all China to effective Chinese control, including the immediate evacuation of the Japanese forces.

(2) That a national conference of representatives of major political elements be arranged to develop an early solution to the present internal strife—a solution which will bring about the unification of China.

The United States and the other United Nations have recognized the present National Government of the Republic of China as the only legal government in China. It is the proper instrument to achieve the objective of a unified China.

The United States and the United Kingdom by the Cairo Declaration in 1943 and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by adhering to the Potsdam Declaration of last July and by the Sino-Soviet Treaty and Agreements of August 1945, are all committed to the liberation of China, including the return of Manchuria to Chinese control. These agreements were made with the National Government of the Republic of China.

In continuation of the constant and close collaboration with the National Government of the Republic of China in the prosecution of this war, in consonance with the Potsdam Declaration, and to remove possibility of Japanese influence remaining in China, the United States has assumed a definite obligation in the disarmament and evacuation of the Japanese troops. Accordingly the United States has been assisting and will continue to assist the National Government of the Republic of China in effecting the disarmament and evacuation of Japanese troops in the liberated areas. The United States Marines are in north China for that purpose.

The United States Recognizes and will continue to recognize the National Government of China and cooperate with it in international affairs and specifically in eliminating Japanese influence from China. The United States is convinced that a prompt arrangement for a cessation of hostilities is essential to the effective achievement of this end. United States support will not extend to United States military intervention to influence the course of any Chinese internal strife.

The United States has already been compelled to pay a great price to restore the peace which was first broken by Japanese aggression in Manchuria. The maintenance of peace in the Pacific may be jeopardized, if not frustrated, unless Japanese influence in China is wholly removed and unless China takes her place as a united, democratic and peaceful nation. This is the purpose of the maintenance for the time being of United States military and naval forces in China.

The United States is cognizant that the present National Government of China is a "one-party government" and believes that peace, unity and democratic reform in China will be furthered if the basis of this Government is broadened to include other political elements in the country. Hence, the United States strongly advocates that the national conference of representatives of major political elements in the country agree upon arrangements which would give those elements a fair and effective representation in the Chinese National Government. It is recognized that this would require modification of the one-party "political tutelage" established as an interim arrangement in the progress of the nation toward democracy by the father of the Chinese Republic, Doctor Sun Yat-sen.

The existence of autonomous armies such as that of the Communist army is inconsistent with, and actually makes impossible, political unity in China. With the institution of a broadly representative government, autonomous armies should be eliminated as such and all armed forces in China integrated effectively into the Chinese National Army.

In line with its often expressed views regarding self-determination, the United States Government considers that the detailed steps necessary to the achievement of political unity in China must be worked out by the Chinese themselves and that intervention by any foreign government in these matters would be inappropriate. The United States Government feels, however, that China has a clear responsibility to the other United Nations to eliminate armed conflict within its territory as constituting a threat to world stability and peace—a responsibility which is shared by the National Government and all Chinese political and military groups.

As China moves toward peace and unity along the lines described above, the United States would be prepared to assist the National Government in every reasonable way to rehabilitate the country, improve the agrarian and industrial economy, and establish a military organization capable of discharging China's national and international responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and order. In furtherance of such assistance, it would be prepared to give favorable consideration to Chinese requests for credits and loans under reasonable conditions for projects which would contribute toward the development of a healthy economy throughout China and healthy trade relations between China and the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, that is all of Mr. Bullitt.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Bullitt, the committee is indebted to you for your presence here, and we are grateful to you for your very intelligent statement.

Mr. BULLETT. Thank you very much.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we do have another witness. When is it your pleasure to hear him?

The CHAIRMAN. We have the witness that we did not conclude with yesterday. I thought we would go on with him this afternoon.

We will recess now and reconvene at 2 o'clock.

Mr. MORRIS. We will have Mr. Bogolepov here at 2 o'clock, Senator.

(Whereupon, at 11:35 a. m., the hearing was recessed until 2 p. m. the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

You may proceed, Mr. Morris.

TESTIMONY OF IGOR BOGOLEPOV—Resumed

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you identify that document, please.

Mr. MANDEL. I have here a photostat of a document from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, headed "Meeting, April 9." No year is given. Institute of Oceanography, and initials.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read several paragraphs from this document which has been identified by Mr. Mandel as a document taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and I would like to ask a few question of this witness on this document.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Perhaps he can identify it better.

Mr. MORRIS. This, Senator, purports to be a meeting or the minutes of a meeting held in Moscow April 8, which is one of a series of meeting which took place in 1936. The first two paragraphs read:

> Mekhanoshin said that they had received the books sent them from America. They were very useful and he apologized for not thanking us for them sooner.
>
> Mekhanoshin said that the general outlines of their work had been explained to Mr. Carter last year, but in 1935 certain changes and reorganization had been effected. The fishing industry needed more scientific work and the biological and oceanographical character of the work had not been satisfactory. Now this work has been improved. Previously they did not know the whole cycles of the life of the fish, but now they are studying it. Their new method of study is to make detailed studies of small regions where the fish are caught. They are now working in the north Caspian on an intensive survey. The study of the physics and chemistry of the sea are brought into practical application. On a basis of their year-round studies they are able to publish bulletins every 5 days during the fishing season telling where the fish are to be found, etc.
>
> They are now doing new meteorological work, making climatic maps of the fishing regions.

Mr. Bogolepov, do you know Mekhanoshin?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. May I see the name, myself?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Mekhanoshin is the right name. Yes, I know him.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was he?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Which year is that?

Mr. MORRIS. 1936.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. 1936? If I make no mistake, at that time he was the vice chief of naval intelligence of the Soviet Union.

The CHAIRMAN. Vice chief of——

Mr. MORRIS. Of naval intelligence of the Soviet Union. Mr. Chairman, we have had considerable evidence up to date in these hearings on the extensive efforts made by IPR personnel in connection with their fisheries project, and this is another document along the same lines; namely, about the fact that they were working on this fishing project. We have asked this witness to identify the man who seems to be in charge of this over-all project, at least the man whose name appears on this particular document, and ask this witness to identify him and to place him as a man who was associated with naval intelligence.

The CHAIRMAN. But he was a Russian.

Mr. MORRIS. He was a Russian.

The CHAIRMAN. And do you propose to connect up that he was connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations, of the Soviet Union?

Mr. MORRIS. Well, Mr. Chairman, these are minutes of the meeting, and he was the—it says here "April 9, Institute of Oceanography, ECC, Mr. Carter, OL, Owen Lattimore, Harondar," who has been identified, and the next name is Mekhanoshin, head of the institute.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is there anything in our record to connect the Institute of Oceanography with the Soviet Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MORRIS. This is a meeting at which all these people were present.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, but is there any indication in here or in our record that the Institute of Oceanography had anything to do with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bogolepov gave testimony on that subject yesterday.

Mr. SOURWINE. We know that E. C. Carter, Owen Lattimore and Harriet Moore were connected with the International Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations. But the Institute of Oceanography might simply have been a Soviet institute and yet they might still have had a meeting with them. Does our record show anything yet as to anything about this particular fisheries project?

of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MORRIS. May I ask the witness at the outset whether he knows anything about this particular fisheries project?

Mr. Bogolepov. Yes, of course. There were two different organizations, this institute where Mekhanoshin was in charge, and the Institute of Pacific Relations. But, as far as American members of the Institute of Pacific Relations called a meeting with the member or the chief of this institute, or another institute, it looks to me all things were connected together. And whether there was no or any formal connection between these two organizations, the facts that the man who was actually working for naval intelligence asked some information from American members of the Institute of Pacific Relations, to me showed that formally or nonformally but still the American Institute of Pacific Relations had something to do with the naval intelligence.

Mr. SOURWINE. Of course, it had something to do with them. Now, as a matter of fact, this only looks as though they had something to do with them. There is nothing here that would indicate that the Institute of Oceanography of the Soviet Union had anything to do with the Institute of Public Relations, is there?

The CHAIRMAN. Except that the initials indicate that members high in the ranks of the Institute of Pacific Relations are on the heading of the letter.

Mr. MORRIS. That is right, sir, and this has all of the appearance of being minutes of the IPR meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is minutes of a meeting taken by some IPR people who were over in Russia.

Mr. MORRIS. Let me read one paragraph of this.

ECC asked if they would be interested in the research to be done by the American and Canadian groups on the penetration of the Japanese in the fishing industry. They said that at the moment the situation in regard to the Japanese was not serious for them. However they were interested in it and would probably do some research on it in the future.

Mr. Chairman, I am presenting this document in order to show exactly what the connection is from these minutes between the people who were engaged in the work of the Institute of Oceanography and the people who were interested in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. You are offering it for the record?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it may be admitted. I think the question is rather, again I say, as to the weight of the evidence. Whether it has any bearing or not is a matter of inference.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 758" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 758

MEETING: April 9, Institute of Oceanography; ECC; OL; HM; Harondar

Mekhanoshin—head of Institute
Chugonov
Chesnokov
Bogorov—Specialist on Plankton
Il'yin
Yansan—head of the Far Eastern filial of the Institute
Freiman—Specialist on sea animals
Klemova—Specialist on sea geology

Mekhanoshin said that they had received the books sent them from America. They were very useful and he apologized for not thanking us for them sooner.

Mekhanoshin said that the general outlines of their work had been explained to Mr. Carter last year, but in 1935 certain changes and reorganization had been effected. The fishing industry needed more scientific work and the biological and oceanographical character of the work had not been satisfactory. Now this work has been improved. Previously they did not know the whole cycles of the life of the fish, but now they are studying it. Their new method of study is to make detailed studies of small regions where the fish are caught. They are now working in the north Caspian on an intensive survey. The study of the physics and chemistry of the sea are brought into practical application. On a basis of their year-round studies they are able to publish bulletins, every five days, during the fishing season, telling where the fish are to be found, etc.

They are now doing new meteorological work, making climatic maps of the fishing regions.

The information on the Far Eastern fishing regions is very inadequate, especially in view of the fact that the industry is growing very rapidly there. The demand for far eastern fish products, especially crabs, is growing. Next summer an expedition is to be sent there to study for two years—to do special regional studies such as are being done in the Caspian.

They are also working on improving the technique of catching fish, getting new instruments, etc. For the first time they are collaborating with the Aero-hydrodynamics Institute (one of the biggest scientific institutes). This work is very important, because fishing technology is very backward and they need to develop cadres of engineers in the fishing industry.

They have started submarine research. Previously the fish were studied from the surface, but now they are constructing special means of studying below the surface.

They have experimented in using electrical currents in fishing. By creating electrical fields in the water they can concentrate the fish in one place, and prevent them from going into other electrical fields. This experiment has now reached the stage where it can be applied on a commercial scale. They have tried it at Murmansk. It is a very important development especially for fishing in gulfs and inlets. Previously they have had to block the mouths of gulfs with nets, which were very expensive and often were destroyed in storms. This idea will probably be used by other countries also.

Last year an institute of studying the preparation of fish products, etc., was added to the institute, and therefore the institute now covers all branches of the industry.

This year there are to be several additions to their investigation fleet,

In Murmansk they have two new ships, in the Far East is a new trawler, and three new ones on the Caspian. They also have an airplane on the Black Sea. They now have 60 investigations of fishing regions. 16 are in the Caspian directing the survey. They have 23 stations in various places. In the Far East they have branch institutes in Vladivostok, on Kamchatka, and Sakhalin, and smaller units in other places along the shore. In the Far East sections there are 471 workers of whom 115 are scientific workers.

The demand for fish in the U. S. S. R. is unlimited. At present the demand of the Kholokhoze is growing particularly rapidly. The supply in the sea is likewise unlimited, but in internal waters is more complicated. The development of new hydraulic works and of irrigation effects the water conditions internally. But, since all these projects come under government control, the fishing industry will be protected and they expect that in the long run the fishing in internal waters will be improved in connection with this construction.

There is little scientific information on the question of the extermination of fish. However they are taking measures to prevent this possibility, especially in connection with the Far Eastern crabs.

The new Volga canal could be disastrous for fishing, but measures will be taken to prevent this. The delta of the Volga will be greatly improved. They have made investigation to find new fishing grounds, both in the internal waters and in the open sea. Each year they are now able to give a forecast of where fish are to be caught and how big the catch will be. These forecasts have become very accurate.

The report that the fishing catch on Kamchatka was low for the first quarter is of no significance, because the season does not really begin until June. The low catch in Murmansk is due to the fact that the herring did not come in to the shore. Likewise the weather was very bad there and the gulfs froze, which is most unusual. In the trawling fishing they are having better results than ever before. The herring didn't come in, because their feeding period in the open sea was much longer than usual. This happens fairly frequently, and makes the industry very irregular. Therefore they are trying to develop "active fishing" which means that they find where the fish feed in the open sea and catch them there, instead of waiting for them to come in to the shore.

They are working on experiments to acclimatize fish in new regions. They have already brought Far Eastern crabs to Murmansk. This is a very complex problem, because they have to select the right species, etc., in order not to upset the feeding complex in the new region.

ECC asked if they would be interested in the research to be done by the American and Canadian groups on the penetration of the Japanese in the fishing industry. They said that at the moment the situation in regard to the Japanese was not serious for them. However they were interested in it and would probably do some research on it in the future.

They also study whales, seals, etc. Most of the whale hunting is done in the antarctic where the new Norwegian methods are causing a real decline in the supply. In the Pacific, where the supply is not as great, the catch is also lower. It is stabilized around 40,000 per year and the balance is maintained. However, in European waters there is real danger of extermination.

The seals which they hunt are migrating entirely within Soviet waters. There are two groups, one of which goes to Alaska and the other to the U. S. S. R., after breeding in the open sea, near Wrangel Island. Each year they estimate the number of seals, by aerial photography. The fur of these seals is not important. In 1929–30 there was a big expedition to the Far East to study sea animals. This was the first thing of its kind, as there is little scientific work on Far Eastern waters. They are very interested in the work that is being done in the U. S. in this connection.

They exchange information with Scripps Institute in California and with Woods Hole. Prof. Vaughan at Scripps; Prof. Bigelow at Woods Hole; Prof. Kafoid at the University of California, San Francisco.

They are interested in getting more of the IPR literature. They plan to study more carefully the problems of the IPR this year. They consider themselves as active members of the IPR. They are also interested in the work done in America in connection with fish hatcheries, with studies of the Great Lakes, etc.

Yanson asked that ECC visit their Far Eastern Branch.

In 1913 the total catch of Russia was 13 million centners; in 1929, 9 million and this year 15 million. The Japanese have the largest catch and the U. S. S. R. comes second, USA third, and Norway fourth.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, if I might comment on that, with the Chair's permission, if in fact this was a meeting held by Mr. Carter and the IPR people who were with him, with representatives of the Institute of Oceanography of the Soviet Union, and that institute actually had no connection with the Soviet Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, this would be an extremely important document for this record.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I refer back to exhibit No. 37, part 1, p. 189, which is a document which was put into the record on that day, which was——

Mr. SOURWINE. Exhibit No. 37, Mr. Morris, indicates that Mr. Mekhanoshin was one of the founders of the Soviet Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations; isn't that correct?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. But this document which has just been admitted into the record does not show a meeting with Mr. Mekhanoshin as a founder with the Institute of Pacific Relations. It purports to show a meeting with the Institute of Oceanography, does it not?

Mr. MORRIS. Apparently, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you are drawing too fine a line there. Again, I say it is a question of weight to be given to the instrument itself, and merely shows association of certain parties along a certain venture.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I ask this witness a couple of questions, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; surely.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether the names which follow that of Mr. Mekhanoshin are those of officials or employees of the Soviet Institute of Oceanography? Do you recognize any of those names as such?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I don't know the people who were working in the institute, so I can't answer the question.

Mr. SOURWINE. No; I mean, do you know those names?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. Now, just at this point, I want to revert to a matter the witness testified to yesterday. It has been troubling me to some extent. On yesterday the witness testified to a matter that was related to him by a Russian authority, whose name I can't recall. He was high in the councils of the Soviet Union. And in which it was related by the witness that this man had told him that Mr. Joseph Davies showed him, the Soviet authority, a certain communication. I think that that matter should be cleared up if there is anything more that the witness has to relate as to that incident. It should be cleared up because it is hearsay and extremely remote. I would rather have it cleared up now, if it can be cleared up, if there is anything more to sustain it. Some question should be propounded to this witness as to what more, if anything, he knows, or what more was said to him to tie the parties together, or what was in the communication. Something should be done to clear that situation up.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bogolepov, will you tell us in more detail than you did yesterday about this incident? The question that came up yesterday was casual, Senator, a collateral issue, and was asked by one of the Senators.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. But, to stand there in the record, it is just the same. And that is the reason it has troubled the chairman ever since.

Mr. MORRIS. We would like to reexamine you, Mr. Bogolepov, on the question of Joseph Davies, the United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union. Will you tell as specifically as possible, and with as much detail as possible, what you know about Mr. Joseph Davies.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. You asked me the question not pertaining to this particular incident I reported yesterday. But you want me to say to you all I know about the activities of Mr. Davies?

Mr. MORRIS. About yesterday, in the first place. You say that he turned over a dispatch, a United States State Department order to him, to a Soviet official; did you not?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not quite.

Mr. MORRIS. What did you say?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I said only that Mr. Joseph Davies, while visiting the Foreign Commissar Litvinov, read to him the contents of the dispatch which he received from the State Department in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. That is right. Now, you got that information from Mr. Litvinov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Himself; that is right, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, could you tell us anything more about Mr. Davies that might cast some light on that particular incident? I think you said yesterday that you did not know that the telegram or the dispatch which Mr. Davies received from the United States State Department was secret.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. You did not know that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I didn't know that.

Mr. MORRIS. You didn't know that it was not secret, but you did not know that it was secret?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know anything else about Mr. Davies that might cast light on that act?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. This incident I reported yesterday to the committee wasn't extremely amazing to me, because I was informed about the very close and good relations which existed between the Foreign Commissar Litvinov and the American Ambassador, and which, in my appreciation, had gone beyond the official relations which should exist between a foreign ambassador and the Foreign Secretary of the Soviet Union.

Mr. MORRIS. You say the relations went "beyond" that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. They went beyond that.

Mr. MORRIS. What led you to make that conclusion, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. At that time—I mean 1936 or 1937 Mr. Davies was persona grata.

Mr. MORRIS. You say he was persona grata?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Persona grata in the Soviet Foreign Office. He called the Soviet Foreign Commissar more often and more informally than any other foreign ambassador could do. At that particular time it had come to my attention that we more than often had in our files photocopies of papers of the State Department of the United States as well as of American Embassies in Moscow and in Paris.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me get that clear. At that time it came to your attention that there were in the files of the department of the Soviet Government in which you operated papers from the State Department of the United States?

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you say "photocopies"?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Photocopies.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you attempt to link that up with Mr. Davies?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; I do not. I just only state the fact—two facts: the friendship between the American Ambassador and the Soviet Foreign Commissar and the ease with which our Foreign Department could get the papers of the State Department. I have not had any opportunity to link these two facts. I merely relate it to you. Coming back to the person of Mr. Joseph Davies, I know from Foreign Commissar Litvinov himself that on many occasions Ambassador Davies consulted with him about these trips that he had to make as American Ambassador, or some of the points in his report to Washington which he was supposed to write, asking Mr. Litvinov to clarify some points, and his advice on what he had to write to his superiors in the State Department.

Mr. MORRIS. There would be necessarily nothing improper about that, though; is there, Mr. Bogolepov? I mean, was there anything about that fact that you have just testified to that would seem improper?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. You ask my opinion now?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I find it was improper.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, will you give us your reason for it, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I don't think that any foreign ambassador has to ask the government to which he is accredited what he has to answer for his own government, and that was the case with the American Ambassador asking Litvinov what he has to report about the Soviet Union; whereas, in my opinion, he must have his own conclusions made on these points.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you think of a particular example of such procedure?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was all routine business that was rather difficult for me to remember particular conditions of.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, may I ask a question with the Chair's permission?

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is it your testimony that Mr. Litvinov told you that Mr. Davies had asked him, Litvinov, what he, Mr. Davies, should answer in response to a communication that he had received from the American Government?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. Or better to say Litvinov told me that on several occasions, especially during the Moscow trials, Mr. Davies was asking him how to understand this or another thing, and the interpretation of Mr. Litvinov was inserted in the reports of Mr. Davies going to the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Litvinov say he knew that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I know that, because I read the reports of Mr. Davies later in photocopies.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you have access to those?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In photocopies.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean that Mr. Litvinov would tell you what he had told Mr. Davies was the proper interpretation, and you would subsequently see photocopies of Mr. Davies' reports containing that interpretation?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is what I mean; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. That is your testimony?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is my testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. That clears the matter up to some extent. Standing out as it did yesterday, being brought out here by just an off-hand question which led the witness to make the statement, I didn't like it without further implementation.

Mr. MORRIS. Is there anything else, Mr. Bogolepov, that you might add to this now before we close this collateral issue?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I would like to state only that in all the facts reported by me now, and concerning the personality of Mr. Joseph Davies, I have had and I still have no evidence which linked him intimately with the pro-Soviet activities. I merely stated the several facts which I reported to this committee, which in my opinion shouldn't have taken place in normal relations between a foreign ambassador and foreign government.

The CHAIRMAN. All right; you may proceed now, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have here a document that was our exhibit No. 1 in executive session with Mr. Edward C. Carter on June 15, 1951, and was authenticated by Mr. Carter at that time. I will have Mr. Mandel identify it again for the open record, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of a document from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated January 16, 1935, addressed to "Dear Fred," with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter. It is a photostat of a carbon copy of the letter.

Mr. MORRIS. And it has been acknowledged, Mr. Chairman, by Mr. Carter as a document—that is what it purports to be on its face—namely, a letter from Mr. Carter to Field.

The CHAIRMAN. It has a number now in our files.

Mr. MORRIS. As of this time in our open hearing, no. It was our exhibit No. 1 in our executive session. Mr. Carter writing to Mr. Field, in January 1935 [reading]:

DEAR FRED: From copies of letters which I have already sent you, you must have realized by now that the U. S. S. R. group could not have begun to work under better auspices. A majority of the members of the committee are members of the party. All are influential; all are operating large organizations that have very substantial funds.

Motilev, the chairman of the committee, for example, has budget of 12 million rubles a year for the World Atlas. Voitinsky, the vice chairman, as head of the Pacific Ocean Cabinet of the Communist Academy, has a large staff, a large library, and ample funds for publishing the new magazine, The Pacific Ocean.

Joffe, together with Schmidt, the hero of the Cheliuskin expedition, is famous as a mathematician, as an aviator, as well as an explorer. It is commonly said that Joffe and Schmidt are in charge of everything in the U. S. S. R. north of the sixty-second parallel. This does not simply mean millions of acres of ice and sea between the Atlantic and Pacific and tens of millions of reindeer and polar bears; it also means immense mineral and timber resources and 5,000,000 people.

Swanidze is head of the Bank of Foreign Commerce, is the head of the Soviet State Bank, which finances all of Russia's foreign trade. He is a graduate of the London School of Economics; speaks English perfectly; does not look as if he was over 35. Although one of the busiest men in the U. S. S. R., he took it as a matter of course when he was asked to translate for us at a 2-hour session on December 25 with the great Varga at the Communist Academy.

It goes on to list more individuals who are active, according to Mr. Carter, in the Institute of Pacific Relations. A later paragraph, Mr. Chairman, which I am now reading from, paragraph 8:

I am sending you a list of all of the fisheries publications which the Institute of Oceanography is receiving from the United States. I would be grateful if you would have this checked through to see whether there are any important publications not on this list which they should secure. Would you send this bibliographical information to them through Kantorovich. They would also like to get from you reports from the private commercial firms engaged in every aspect of the fish business in the United States and Canada. I told them that you and Mrs. Barnes would do your best to get these, but that the scientific work of American business corporations are not always very extensive and that their financial statements were sometimes intended to obscure rather than reveal the economic basis of commercial activity. It will, however, pay you to dragnet the two countries to get the reports of the various fish companies, for, about the time you get this letter, your library will receive about a cubic yard of the most important Soviet publications on every aspect of the fish industry. You should immediately notify the principal fishing authorities in Washington and elsewhere of the existence of this priceless and unique collection on your shelves.

Mr. Bogolepov, judging by what I have just read to you, does that seem to be the same project that you have given testimony about before? Namely, that the Soviets were using the IPR to collect information of interest to the Naval Intelligence under the cover of this fishing study?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It looks like so.

Mr. MORRIS. I mean, can you develop that any further?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. May I see the document, please?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, both Mrs. Barnes and Mr. Field, who are being asked to collect this information, have been witnesses before this committee and have refused to say whether or not they were Communists on the grounds that their answers might tend to incriminate them.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Well, sir, perhaps the best I can do is just to tell that from nine people mentioned here in this document, in this letter from Frederick Field to Mr. Carter——

Mr. MORRIS. That is from Mr. Carter to Mr. Field.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I am sorry; that is right. [Continuing.] There are only three names which I can identify as having something to do with research work. All of the rest of them are members either of Military Intelligence or of Comintern.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you identify them for the record, please?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Motilev, Professor Motilev, the Red professor, a party member charged by the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union for leading the project of Council for Foreign Relations; Voitinsky, member of Comintern. Joffe—I would be reluctant to say anything about Joffe because there is no first name and I knew five Joffes in Moscow; so, I don't know about whom you are speaking. Swanidze, who is said to be a director of some kind of bank, in reality was one of the Chiefs of the Foreign Administration of the Soviet secret police, NKVD. Varga, one of the most important people on this list, was the member of the executive committee of the Communist International. Eugene Harondar, who is assigned here as being a secretary of the Soviet Council for Foreign Relations, actually is a man of Political Intelligence—I mean, of the secret police. Janson was also a member of the Foreign Administration of NKVD. And the last person mentioned in this list, Kantorovich, as I told you yesterday, was a nonparty man and a real scholar. They introduced him in order to have somebody who could speak about some research work.

Mr. MORRIS. Is there any doubt in your mind that if Mrs. Barnes and Mr. Field, at the suggestion of Mr. Carter, obtained this information from the American commercial firms that it would repose in the files of the Military Intelligence of the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I guess so.

Mr. MORRIS. The question is, do you have any doubt?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No doubt.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this letter, please.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostatic copy of a letter from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, dated September 12, 1937, addressed to Mr. Owen Lattimore, with the typed signature of Edward C. Carter. It is a photostat of a carbon copy of the letter.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, this is Mr. Carter writing to Mr. Lattimore, on September 12, 1937. This has been identified by Mr. Mandel as a letter taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. The first paragraph [reading]:

DEAR OWEN: This is to report on my conversation with Motylev regarding your trip to Mongolia. Motylev is as eager as ever to have you make the trip. He wants to arrange things so that you and he can go together. Because of exceptionally heavy pressure on him in connection with completing the next stage of the Atlas, this year is quite out of the question for him to go to Mongolia. Had he been free he would have come to the Soviet Far East to meet me, but Atlas pressure tied him to Moscow. He sent Bremman, the secretary general of the U. S. S. R. council, who speaks Japanese, and Krasavtsev, who speaks Chinese. As one is a party member and one a nonparty member and each has had the richest kind of personal experience both in the Soviet Union and in the Far East, they made an exceptionally useful, delightful, and informing combination.

Mr. Bogolepov, do you know either of those two men?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The first one by name, simply.

Mr. MORRIS. Bremman?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Bremman.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know what the regulations were to foreigners going in to Mongolia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The same as for the Soviet citizens—no admission.

Mr. MORRIS. You mean Soviet citizens were not allowed to go to Mongolia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know from your own experience that that was the case?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. How do you know that, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Because there is no cases when somebody of the Soviet citizens on private business could go to Mongolia. To Mongolia we send only people in charge of military missions, of intelligence or on party duties, and then only on official missions. But no one, private citizen, no scholar, nobody else could go to Mongolia, and certainly no foreigner.

Mr. MORRIS. And you say, to your knowledge, that no foreigner was allowed to go into Mongolia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. For a short time, approximately 1936, when I was obliged to work on the problem of admission of Mongolia to the League of Nations, I was rather closely connected with Mongolian matters. I read a lot of things in our Far Eastern Division of the Foreign Office, and this confirmed, in my opinion, that the Mongolian border was closed to anybody else, save the people on highly official missions.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you allowed to go to Mongolia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I didn't ask about it. If I would ask on my proper interest, certainly I would be rejected.

Mr. MORRIS. You think you would have been rejected?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Certainly. If I would be sent by the Soviet Government, that is another thing. But if I, for my own proper interest, would like to go to Mongolia, certainly the answer would be "no."

The CHAIRMAN. From whom would that rejection come, from the Soviet authorities or from the Mongolian authorities?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. There is not and never was such a thing as Mongolian authority, sir. There is only Soviet authority which commands that.

The CHAIRMAN. It would have been the Soviet authorities which would command your entry into Mongolia?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. If, as a private citizen, I would like to go there; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Is this a significant sentence: "Motylev is as eager as ever to have you make the trip"? That is Carter writing to Lattimore.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. What is the date?

Mr. MORRIS. September 12, 1937.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Approximately a couple or 3 months after the incident I reported yesterday to you, when Lattimore was assigned with a mission to prepare the terrain.

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. Will you tell us about that with a little more detail? We had not quite finished that episode yesterday. Will you tell us again, stretching as much as possible the details, about that decision which you now refer to?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. You would like me to repeat what I said yesterday?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. All right. As I reported already, in the collegium session of the Foreign Minister and his deputies, which was held twice a week in the building of the Foreign Office in Moscow, the question was discussed about the necessity and ways to bring so-called Popular Republic of Mongolia into the League of Nations, in order that the Soviet Union would obtain one more voice and assume more support.

While making this report, going from the point of view of the statute of the League of Nations and how Mongolia could be accepted, I reminded the negative impression which was received on that particular point from our ambassadors in foreign countries, including Washington, who say that it looks like it is quite impossible.

Mr. MORRIS. You say that all your foreign offices advised that it would have been impossible for Mongolia at that time to be admitted to the League of Nations?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, because nobody in the West considered Mongolia as an independent country.

Mr. MORRIS. Because nobody in the West considered Mongolia as an independent country?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Then we discussed a little bit what we have to do on that particular case, and Litvinov said that in that case we have to make some arrangement so that the opinion of the West would be changed in our favor, and he asked that we have to put to work some—I don't remember his expression—did he say the people are on our side or our people—I am not sure on the correct expression of him, but he said that we have to put people to work for us and to make the situation more favorable before we should take any official and formal statement.

While discussing this point, he made the suggestion that some of the foreign scholars and writers, et cetera, in foreign countries—and in the first place in England, France, and the United States—would be put immediately at work on that line.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say these people would be put on that particular assignment——

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Would they be subject to the Soviet Foreign Office direction?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No. As I explained yesterday, the Soviet Foreign Office merely elaborated the suggestions—what would be preferable to do.

You have to understand, gentlemen, that there is a big difference between the Soviet Foreign Office and the State Department, for example, for the role foreign policy of the Soviet Union isn't carried by the Soviet Foreign Office only but through other organizations, first of all through the Executive Committee of the Comintern, through the Soviet Secret Police, and other organizations.

We were working in the Foreign Office only in the diplomatic field which does not correspond always with the political field.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, policy is not always set by the Foreign Office?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No.

Mr. MORRIS. More likely by the Executive Committee of the Comintern or by the military police?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. All important suggestions which we make in the Foreign Office had to be submitted to the so-called political commission of the Politburo. This political commission took the decision and then assigned who was to fulfill, to carry out in life this decision, either the Foreign Office itself or the Secret Police, or the Comintern, and so on. And on that particular matter which I am reporting now—I mean, making the people to do some propaganda in our account—that was not the Foreign Office in charge, but some other organization; in the first place, Comintern and intelligence.

So all we did, we made our suggestion that the public opinions in the west must be worked out, must be changed in our favor.

And as far as concerns the United States, Litvinov's own suggestion was to put on this business Mr. Owen Lattimore, who was known to us as one of America's outstanding experts on the far eastern matters. And so this decision was taken. How it was carried out or whether it was carried out, I don't know.

Mr. MORRIS. You say the decision was made. Was there an actual decision made by that body which convened at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you describe that yesterday, Mr. Bogolepov—that body that was there convening, that group that was meeting at that time?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is the Foreign Commissar and his deputies, and they took the decision that Mr. Lattimore should write an article, a book, I don't know what about—I don't know what—about Mongolia which makes the situation favorable for the aims and problems of the Soviet Union.

Mr. SOURWINE. You called that the Collegium yesterday; did you not?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Under the circumstances, would Mr. Lattimore have been under Soviet direction to carry out such an undertaking as you stated at that meeting?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I didn't get the question.

Mr. MORRIS. Would it have been necessary for Mr. Owen Lattimore to be under the Soviet direction if he were to carry out the assignment which was agreed upon at that meeting which you are now testifying to?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. In other words, you are asking me whether Mr. Lattimore was obliged to carry out the decision or not?

The CHAIRMAN. He interprets your question just about right. That is not the way you intend it, maybe. He is keen enough to see your point.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you explain it, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I still don't understand what you want me to answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. To put it another way, Mr. Bogolepov, could this decision which was made by the collegium have been a decision merely to seek to hire an independent American writer to do something, or was it in the nature of a decision to send orders to a man who was subject to the orders or instructions of the collegium?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Would you please tell me, Mr. Sourwine, if you will ask me, for example, that I have to kill somebody else, and you will do me this proposal, do you think if you make this proposal I am not prepared to do this business?

Mr. SOURWINE. I am sorry, that is not an answer to the question. There is no proposal here that anybody kill anyone.

I would like to have you think over that thing and see if you cannot give us an answer to it which is more responsive to the question than that.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Perhaps I took not a very good example.

Mr. SOURWINE. No, you did not.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. But what I mean is that Litvinov proposes somebody to do some kind of business. Evidently he meant that this business will be done. That is what I mean. It was not a question that "we will go to Mr. Lattimore and ask him to be so kind and write this story, and maybe he will say "No."

In my opinion, it was said so short and in such a categorical form that there was no slightest doubt left to me that Mr. Lattimore was the right man who was to take this assignment. Does that answer it?

Mr. SOURWINE. That answer is responsive.

Mr. MORRIS. And, Mr. Bogolepov, we will get back to the second sentence in the letter of September 12, 1937, on which you were giving me an answer, and on which you referred back to this episode which you have now elaborated upon.

The sentence is:

Motylev is as eager as ever to have you make the trip.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. To me, the sentence in the letter you have worded looks like logical development of the story I just reported to the committee. If Motylev was eager to get Lattimore going to Mongolia—you must understand it was not his personal wish and interest because a member of the party has no personal wish or interest. He is acting always on the directive of higher organizations, and so, to me it looks, at least, like a carrying out of the directive of the collegium, at which I was present myself, in Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Does it indicate to you that Mr. Lattimore was acquiescing to this project?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Acquiescing?

Mr. MORRIS. Agreeing?

The CHAIRMAN. Your question there is pretty deep, pretty conclusive. I think you better let the witness testify. He is an intelligent witness.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I call the witness' attention to the P. S. in this letter, which reads:

P. S.—Perhaps I ought to add that Motylev may not find it easy to get permission for you to go to Mongolia. It took him weeks finally to get permission for me to go to certain parts of the Soviet Far East and I gathered from what he said that he anticipated even more effort would be required in the case of Mongolia. But he is so definitely committed to getting the permission so that he and you can go together that nothing further needs to be except to leave everything in his hands.

Would you comment on that postscript?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, I can. Perhaps you will think that the difficulties or the troubles which the project of getting Lattimore going to Mongolia, which you are referred to do not corroborate with my statement. But I have to draw your attention to the fact that if you think that in the Soviet Union, in that totalitarian police state, everything is O. K., you are certainly mistaken. There is a struggle between the authorities. There is competition between the authorities. One of the greatest enemies of the Foreign Office in the field of internal policy or relations between the different branches of administration was always military intelligence and political intelligence, secret police.

In this case, this particular case, the Soviet Foreign Office would let Lattimore go to Mongolia. But it looks to me like military intelligence didn't like him to go to Mongolia. And so some kind of a struggle was behind the doors on that particular case, but nothing more.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions on that particular letter, Mr. Chairman. May the letters be inserted into the record?

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. They will be inserted into the record.

(The letters referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 759 and 760" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 759

Copy: W. L. Holland. Please do not publish this letter and do not make any reference to the financial basis of the U. S. S. R. I. P. R. This letter should not be shown to others but you can share its more general information with the officers of the Japanese Council orally.

E. C. C.

SS "CHITRAL,"
Port Said, 16th January 1935.

FREDERICK V. FIELD, Esq.,
129 East 52nd Street, New York,
U. S. A.

DEAR FRED: From copies of letters which I have already sent you, you must have realised by now that the U. S. S. R. group could not have begun to work under better auspices. A majority of the members of the committee are members of the party. All are influential; all are operating large organisations that have very substantial funds.

Motilev, the Chairman of the Committee, for example, has a budget of 12 million roubles a year for the World Atlas. Voitinsky, the Vice-Chairman, as head of the Pacific Ocean Cabinet of the Communist Academy, has a large staff, a large library, and ample funds for publishing the new magazine, "The Pacific Ocean."

Joffe, together with Schmidt, the hero of the Cheliuskin expedition, is famous as a mathematician, as an aviator, as well as an explorer. It is commonly said that Joffe and Schmidt are in charge of everything in the U. S. S. R. north of the 62nd parallel. This does not simply mean millions of acres of ice and sea between the Atlantic and Pacific and tens of millions of reindeer and polar bears; it also means immense mineral and timber resources and five million people.

Swanidze is head of the Bank of Foreign Commerce, is the head of the Soviet State Bank, which finances all of Russia's foreign trade. He is a graduate of the London School of Economics, speaks English perfectly, does not look as if he was over 35 although one of the busiest men in the U. S. S. R. took it as a matter of course when he was asked to translate for us at a two-hour session on December 25th with the great Varga at the Communist Academy.

Janson, as head of the Chamber of Commerce, has a big organisation at his beck and call, has moved from the old building in which you and I saw the Chamber of Commerce when it was under the direction of Bunsch-Osmolovsky. The new building is the famous old headquarters of the Moscow Stock Exchange. It houses the offices of the Chamber and also its very strikingly arranged exhibit of Soviet products.

The Institute of Oceanography is similarly a very important body. It handles both the scientific and economic side of the entire U. S. S. R. fish industry. Its work is of immense scientific importance to the future food supply of the U. S. S. R., and has a direct political bearing on the situation in the far east because of the constant friction between Japanese and Soviet fishermen and because of the scientific competition that exists between Japan and the U. S. S. R. in the development of the fish resources.

When, for example, I asked to meet the head of the Institute on Oceanography, a group of the eight principal heads of departments came for a long afternoon conference. There were experts from the Bering Sea, the Arctic, the Black and Caspian, and from the rivers. Research is going on with reference to all of the underlying principles of Oceanography, including hydrography, hydrographical chemistry, ichthyology, the organization and technique of fishing, including the type of vessel; the life of the nets; the economic advantages of mechanisation; the economic return from fishing in the open deep seas and along the coasts; technical problems of finishing, salting, packing, and improving the quality of the final product.

I am sending you the list of all of the fisheries publications which the Institute of Oceanography is receiving from the United States. I would be grateful if you would have this checked through to see whether there are any important publications not on this list which they should secure. Would you send this bibliographical information to them through Kantorovich. They would also like to get from you reports from the private commercial firms engaged in every aspect of the fish business in the United States and Canada. I told them that you and Mrs. Barnes would do your best to get these, but that the scientific work of American business corporations was not always very extensive and that their financial statements were sometimes intended to obscure rather than reveal the economic basis of commercial activity. It will, however, pay you to dragnet the two countries to get the reports of the various fish companies for, about the time you get this letter, your library will receive about a cubic yard of the most important Soviet publications on every aspect of the fish industry. You should immediately notify the principal fishing authorities in Washington and elsewhere of the existence of this priceless and unique collection on your shelves.

The tale of the work of the Institute of Oceanography could be written into a thrilling "Pacific Affairs" article. The mechanisation of the fish industry, the transplanting of small boats with trawlers, the maintenance of motorboat stations, the diversion of fishermen to other industries as the result of mechanisation, altogether a most impressive story.

It is interesting to know that it is estimated that the Soviet Union's capacity to consume fish will always be greater than the capacity of all the lakes, rivers, and oceans to meet the demand, in spite of the enormous gains made through scientific research and the mechanisation of the industry.

Kantorovich, the Secretary-General, is able, frank, well-informed, and speaks English rapidly and vigorously. He was a member of the Soviet Embassy in Peiping. He is not a member of the Party but would never have been made Secretary-General if he was not trusted implicitly by Party members. His special field of study is American policy in China. He has just finished a big book on this subject which will shortly go to the printers. He knew, personally, a great many of our mutual Chinese and foreign friends in China. He has got an excellent critical faculty and is a really first-class administrator. The speed and precision with which he made engagements for us while we were in Moscow was in striking and refreshing contrast to the delays of former visits.

Kantorovich's office is in the office of the World Atlas. His office assistant is Eugene Harondar, who speaks English, French, and German perfectly and can take shorthand in several languages and types rapidly in all. He gives half time to the I. P. R. and the other half is given to deciding what of all that is appearing in the movies magazines in the world in various languages, is worth translating into Russia. He was recently political, or Foreign Affairs Secretary of the Commissioner of heavy industries. He is in close contact with everyone in the Movie, Ballet, Theatrical, and Operatic world.

The housing of the I. P. R. in the office of the World Atlas is appropriate from many points of view. The Atlas is able to draw on every library in Moscow; thus Kantorovich and Harriet Moore have automatically a machinery for bringing to their desks, every needed book and periodical. Molitev himself is an economist, a professor in one of the Universities and was until recently head of the great Soviet Encyclopedia. He has travelled widely in England, Germany, and France. Both his English and his German are excellent. He is likely to go to China and Japan this summer. We are hoping that he will go early enough to attend the Tokyo meeting. He has a gold limit for the U. S. S. R. I. P. R. of four or five thousand gold roubles. If this is not enough for this year's expenses he is prepared to appropriate an approximately equivalent amount from his Atlas budget. He is determined that no necessary piece of work which the U. S. S. R. I. P. R. should do, shall fail for lack of funds.

You have already had the list of the Russian books which the Soviet I. P. R. is sending to the joint Russian library which is now being established in New York under the auspices of the American and Pacific Councils. The list of the books that you are sending is much appreciated. I have just one comment on the list which you have sent. From one of your first letters I gathered that you were going to send quite an important collection of American books that had not been published by the I. P. R. If it possible for you to carry out your plan in this connection it would be enormously appreciated. There are many books coming out in America which are not directly on the Pacific, but which nevertheless are essential in a Pacific library, e. g., the recent books of Alsberg and Hutchins on America's International Economic Relations; the four Brookings Institution books on America's capacity to produce and consume, etc.

I am asking Harriet Moore to write you at length as to her ideas as to what New York should sent to Moscow in response to what Moscow is sending to New York.

You will be glad to know that in accordance with a request I have made, Motilev is going to present to the I. P. R. library in New York, not only the twelve volume small edition of the Soviet Encyclopedia, but the entire big edition, which will ultimately be some 66 volumes. Some of the earlier volumes are out of print, but he is having a search made so that a full set of the volumes already published will be sent and copies of the volumes still to be published will be sent to New York as they appear. These two gifts in themselves are so generous that I hope your plan of a presentation of American books to Moscow can be developed on an equivalent scale.

I think I have already told you that von Valree, the head of the Amstal Bank and head of the Pacific Institute in Amsterdam is going this month to Moscow on an unofficial trade mission from the Netherlands, and is to establish direct contact with Motilev. I have already urged you to get Wu to Moscow before Miss Moore leaves.

I have given the British and French groups a fairly adequate picture of the development of the I. P. R. in Moscow. At the meeting of the French group, when I did this, Hirschfelt, the Councillor of the Soviet Embassy in Paris, was present. He has followed the work of the I. P. R. with interest and is glad that so competent students as Mrs. Barnes and Miss Moore are continuing to labour in the Russian field.

Motilev and Kantorovich will secure every facility that Miss Moore can get from any source. They are highly pleased with the way she has gone about her job. The only criticism has been that she has not made more demands on them.

I saw Litvinova and he, as usual, was frank and cooperative. He said that he had hesitated to urge the formation of the Moscow group when it first proposed it because the Soviet Union was so short of personnel that he did not favour Soviet participation in the I. P. R. until the Soviet contribution could be adequate. He hoped that we would not expect too much at this early stage as they are still short of personnel.

I was told by Motilev that my visit to Litvinova in Geneva last summer had been a decisive factor in the favourable decision.

In connection with our discussions of the language problem and the emphasis on Russian studies in England and the United States, it was possible to take steps which would put Motilev in touch with Litvinova in the matter of Basic English. As you know, Litvinova is teaching classes of Basic English in the Red Army, the Kremlin and the Foreign Office.

The Praesidium informed us the last day that the Soviet group would prepare chapters for the studies on the status of aliens and communications. This was a sort of supreme yardstick of their willingness to cooperate in every major project, because Mackenzie had supplied us as models of what he desired for these two studies; samples which in one case were unfinished and another inaccurate. They were quick to notice absence of editorial mastery which Mackenzie's samples exhibited, but were willing nevertheless to provide their own materials.

Their official hospitality was discriminating and yet overwhelming in its abundance. They realised that our main job was serious discussion, but their provision for entertainment was a striking demonstration of the fact that the whole machinery of the State and of the scientific world was at the disposal of the Secretary-General.

This letter, as you will note, is a mixture of personal impressions and I. P. R. information. It is not, therefore, for general circulation.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

HONOLULU, HAWAII

SS "CHITRAL,"
Port Said, 16th January 1945.

FREDERICK V. FIELD, Esq.,
129 East 52nd Street, New York, U. S. A.

DEAR FRED: With reference to paragraph 2 on page 3 of my letter of this date, there is one other very minor comment which I have to make, namely, that you have given titles without authors on your list, so that it is a little difficult to identify just what you are sending.

Sincerely yours,

(s) Edward C. Carter
EDWARD C. CARTER.

(Handwritten:) The enclosed may be shown to all in the office who are interested & to Jerome Greene. You will know better than I whether Baker & Escott Reid would like to see it. I guess you better not show it to Reid because of the mention of McKenzie. Do not have any reference made in print to the financial basis of the U. S. S. R. I. P. R.

EXHIBIT No. 760

HOTEL RICHMOND, GENEVA, September 12, 1937.

OWEN LATTIMORE, Esq.,
33A Ta Yuan Fu Hutung,
Peiping, China.

DEAR OWEN: This is to report on my conversation with Motylev regarding your trip to Mongolia. Motylev is as eager as ever to have you make the trip. He wants to arrange things so that you and he can go together. Because of exceptionally heavy pressure on him in connection with completing the next stage of the Atlas, this year is quite out of the question for him to go to Mongolia. Had he been free he would have come to the Soviet Far East to meet me, but Atlas pressure tied him to Moscow. He sent Bremman, the Secretary-General of the U. S. S. R. Council, who speaks Japanese and Krasavtsev who speaks Chinese. As one is a Party member and one a non-party member and each has had the richest kind of personal experience both in the Soviet Union and in the Far East they made an exceptionally useful, delightful and informing combination.

As I think you know, Motylev arranged for me to go to several places in the Soviet Far East to which no non-Soviet citizen has ever been invited. The people in the British and American Embassies in Moscow were most envious and wanted to use my visit as a precedent to get permission to go to places like Komsomolsk themselves. It seems that the justification for my going was as the chief executive of an international organization in which a representative Soviet scientific organization is an active member.

Motylev had been planning to go the Nanking meeting of the Pacific Council and was hoping that if this were possible he might be free soon after to go to Mongolia with you.

Now, of course, the war situation makes the future for him and the Institute most uncertain, so that for the time being it will be a good scheme for you to make your plans for next year in such a way that if Motylev can go to Mongolia and if the war situation makes it possible for him to get your permit and for you to go, a Mongolian trip would be a possibility. But until we know more than we do now as to the duration and consequences of Chinese resistance and Japanese endurance and Soviet involvement there is nothing to do but keep plans flexible as you and I have formed the habit of doing during recent years.

With reference to PACIFIC AFFAIRS the atmosphere was totally different from that which characterized our discussions when you and I were in Moscow. At that time, you will remember, Motylev was on the offensive, particularly because of the Isaacs article and relationship. This year Motylev and Bremman were not even on the defensive. They humbly admitted that they had not carried out their promises to you and me and their obligations to the Institute and that there was no use of their offering the excuse that it was difficult to get Soviet citizens to write for PACIFIC AFFAIRS when neither of them had themselves found time to write articles. They wanted me to explain to you that they were thoroughly ashamed of their failure to send articles and they made the most solemn kind of resolves to themselves write and send you something in the near future.

I told them that both you and I wished that the Voitinsky article had been sent to PACIFIC AFFAIRS instead of being published in TIKHII OKEAN. I said that we both felt that it was precisely the kind of article that we wanted in PACIFIC AFFAIRS, whereupon Motylev meekly admitted that Voitinsky had written the article especially for PACIFIC AFFAIRS, that Bremman and Voitinsky were keen to have it sent to you, but that Motylev felt that the other Councils would regard it as too provocative and tendencious and so had it shifted to TIKHII OKEAN. Bremman, of course, was delighted that you and I sided with him. I think that the incident has this value that Motylev now has a concrete example of what we all would like from the Soviet Council in PACIFIC AFFAIRS.

Brennan, who at that time had only seen the first issue of AMERASIA, felt that the policy of the magazine promised to be defeatist, and that instead of educating American public opinion in the realities of the Far Eastern situation, it was likely to intensify the ostrich-like attitude of the American people and the American Government. I told him that I felt sure that both you and Fred would welcome incisive criticism of AMERASIA, in case they wished to contribute an article on the subject of PACIFIC AFFAIRS. I cabled Fred to send Motylev the whole file of AMERASIA from the beginning.

I read between the lines that they welcomed my suggestion that if they didn't think the time had come for them to be the first Council to come out with an article analysing Japanese policy, they might render a very great service by an article analysing either American or British policy.

You will have gathered by now that the Soviet I. P. R. extended to me every possible facility and courtesy throughout my stay in the Soviet Union. The members of no Council have made more comprehensive plans for a visit of an officer of the International Secretariat or incurred as great expense.

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD C. CARTER,

P. S.—Perhaps I ought to add that Motylev may not find it easy to get permission for you to go to Mongolia. It took him weeks finally to get permission for me to go to certain parts of the Soviet Far East and I gathered from what he said that he anticipated even more effort would be required in the case of Mongolia. But he is so definitely committed to getting the permission so that he and you can go together that nothing further needs to be done except to leave everything in his hands.

Copies: W. H. Holland.
Harriet Moore.

Mr. MORRIS. Now I would like to refer to our exhibit No. 499, part 9, page 3243, which was introduced at the open session of March 1, 1952. This is a letter from Mr. Carter to Mr. Motylev, and it is dated February 10, 1936 [reading]:

This is to confirm our interchange of cables, as follows:

"Lattimore and I propose visit Moscow March Twenty-nine to April seventeen. Please cable whether convenient for you.

"CARTER."

"Will be glad see you. Lattimore suggested time.

"MOTYLEV."

It was delightful to discover that the dates which I proposed would be convenient, for I know Lattimore for a long time has been anxious to meet you, to visit Moscow, and to advance his knowledge of the affairs and ideas of the Soviet Union. After the Yosemite conference he hopes to learn the Russian language with a view of a more extended visit of the U. S. S. R. in 1937. But as a preliminary to all that, the visit which I have proposed in my cable, will, I am sure, greatly facilitate all his future studies of Soviet affairs. As you know, Mongolia is one of his areas of concentration but his interests are wide.

Does that suggest anything to you, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Would you let me see it?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The last paragraph, in my opinion, is very interesting.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the last paragraph?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV (reading):

The American Council desires that I raise with you the question of arranging for the Soviet IPR representatives to meet influential groups of American citizens in New York, Washington, Chicago, Denver, and San Francisco.

To me, it looks like this organization was used by the Soviet Government as a channel to bring people to the United States who otherwise, perhaps, might have some trouble in getting in under the cover of research work and scholarship, and under the sponsorship of one of the American leading scholar organizations. It would be easier to get American visas. And I know, from my experience, that it was the way on which we have been working, not only on this particular case. We were always trying to put our people not directly but through somebody else, through other channels as neutral as possible, and for this particular thing we plant agents in foreign organizations whose representation was particularly well fitted.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, that letter is already in our public record.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you identify this next document, please?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a photostat of a document from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, marked "Confidential, not for distribution outside the office." It is not dated. There are 11 pages.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read one paragraph of this letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is it signed by?

Mr. MORRIS. This is an unsigned memorandum, Mr. Chairman, taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations. It is entitled: "Report on Soviet Relations With the Institute of Pacific Relations, Confidential, Not for Distribution Outside the Office."

The CHAIRMAN. You do not know by whom it was made?

Mr. MORRIS. No, sir. It was a letter taken from the files of the Institute.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Paragraph midway on page 3, reads:

> The fiction is even more potent in the Soviet Union than, for example, in Japan, but it is quite apparent that the Soviet Union itself is going to maintain it. Several Soviet organizations, such as VOKS, the Society for Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries, and TASS, the Soviet News Agency, have been established with very careful legal autonomy. Whether the Soviet council of the institute is established under VOKS, or as a separate organization, the institute would do well to regard it in correspondence, etc., as an entirely independent and unofficial organization.
>
> Such a policy would have advantages outside of the field of institute relations with the Soviet Union. It is fairly important to take safeguards against any circumstance arising which might provide ammunition for those non-Soviet members of the institute who may suspect Bolshevik propaganda in the work of the Soviet council. If a clear distinction is established and maintained in institute circles between the Soviet council and Narkomindel, it will help in any such contingency."

What is Narkomindel?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. The foreign office.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you any comment to make on those two particular paragraphs?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I don't know whether I should, because it is so completely clear.

Mr. MORRIS. What does it mean to you?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It means to me, first of all, that when they are speaking about some legal autonomy of one or the other Soviet organizations, it means that they do not know anything about the Soviet conditions.

Secondly, and what is yet more important, that all the organizations which are mentioned here, this VOKS and TASS of the Soviet Union, besides their direct work, are cover organizations for Soviet intelligence.

Mr. MORRIS. You know that from your own experience?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I know it from my own experience. In other words, when this document, this confidential document, wants these organizations as very respectable and legal, it means to me, as I told you, either they don't know anything about Soviet realities, or they help this subversive organization to be whitewashed in foreign countries.

Mr. MORRIS. Are there any other questions on that document?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions on that document, but I think there is a loose end hanging, if I might revert to something before you go on to another question, with the permission of the Chair.

We had some discussion earlier at today's session with regard to this meeting on April 9, 1936, of certain IPR people with the Institute of Oceanography, and I believe I inquired at that time whether there was anything in our record to show that the Institute of Oceanography was connected with the Soviet council of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

I believe the record is not clear on that point, and I would like to ask now, is it not a fact that our record does show that when the Soviet council of the Institute of Pacific Relations was founded in 1934, one of the organizations which joined in founding that Soviet council of IPR was the Institute of Oceanography, and that the Institute of Oceanography was at that time represented by Mr. Mekhanoshin, who has been here identified, and whose name appears on these minutes?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, I believe I read that from our previous exhibit, No. 37, part 1, page 189, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. So the Institute of Oceanography is, then, or was, at least in 1936, at the time of this meeting, an affiliate of the Soviet Institute of Pacific Relations; is that correct?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. According to our records.

I would like to ask this witness a question: Did you know of the existence of an organization called the Institute of Oceanography in Soviet Russia in 1936?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that an official organ of the Soviet Government?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; in so much as all organs are official in the Soviet Union. There are no nongovernmental organs.

Mr. SOURWINE. In other words, there are no private, independent research organizations in the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And Mr. Mekhanoshin, concerning whom you have testified here, held a position in naval intelligence, did you say?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. So while he is identified here as head of the Institute of Oceanography, he was also, to your knowledge—what did you say his position was?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Vice Chief of Naval Intelligence.

Mr. SOURWINE. Vice Chief of Naval Intelligence of the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, with respect to that last document, may that be introduced into the record as the document concerning which I questioned the witness, and may I also take up with Mr. Carter the possible authentication of that document?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. And there was another one yesterday.

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

I think if we keep them all together we can do it in one operation.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me that this could be identified in a more satisfactory manner. Perhaps, if you hold off until Mr. Carter is brought back on the stand, you can identify both of them—everything you have on that. The only identification now is that each was taken from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. That is all, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I will withhold the ruling on it until you bring Mr. Carter or somebody else to identify it.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make reference to our exhibit No. 485, part 9, page 3172, which was introduced into the open record on February 29, 1952. This is a memorandum on a meeting in Moscow at which the following people were in attendance: Motylev, Voitinsky, Carter, Harriet Moore, and Mr. Haronder.

Paragraph 4 reads:

Owen Lattimore said that he would like to meet the Soviet suggestion as far as possible in re having a more definite opinion expressed in PA. He has not been able to do this before because he has not had close cooperation from the various councils. He said that if the Soviet group would start on such a line, he would be able to make the others cooperate more fully. Voitinsky said that the main trouble was that the articles in PA did not come out against the aggressor, and the aggressor was not analyzed from within. Therefore, there was no indication of the internal weakness of the aggressor. OL asked for an article on the structure of the Japanese Empire. This might bring out the point that continental aggression was not antithetical to maritime aggression, but the two supplemented each other. Voitinsky said that this would probably be possible. He also suggested that there should be an article on aggression against Outer Mongolia, as this was so important now.

Do you know the importance referred to in those two paragraphs?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. 1937?

Mr. MORRIS. No, 1936; April 12.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, certainly. Starting with 1932 and 1933, the Soviet Government was pretty well concerned with the defense of Mongolia as well as the Soviet Far East against possible Japanese aggression. It was the time, I remember, when in the high Soviet organizations the mood was rather close to panic because all thoughts indicated that the Japanese might every day start the attack against the Soviet Far East and Mongolia. Whereas, the particular military measures were taken at that time by the defense commissariat, the NKVD was to mobilize the public opinion of the West, especially in England and the United States, in order to make pressure on the Japanese Government and to create an international atmosphere which would disturb the Japanese plan of attack on Outer Mongolia and the Soviet Far East.

So the passage you quoted here and which perhaps might look to you as a discussion between two scholars actually was the carrying out by the Soviet of the political directive of the Soviet Government.

Mr. MORRIS. It says here that this was so important. Voitinsky said that was important—that was important to the Soviet Union.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Important to the Soviet Union.

Mr. MORRIS. In the next paragraph, I read here:

OL said that this had been done in regard to the article on the Chinese land tax. A Chinese version of the article had appeared, but this was revised to meet the needs of a non-Chinese audience. The material was the same, but differently organized. OL said that he would like about six articles a year from the Soviet council. Voitinsky said that they would do one on Outer Mongolia to be ready for the next issue, to be mailed on May 20, and then one on Korea and one on the Japanese Empire. He said that he would like to write an article in reply to White's article. OL said that they would make it possible to have two Soviet articles in one issue. Voitinsky said that these articles would be done on the basis of the material which had already appeared in Tikhii Okean, but would be polished for export.

Did you know anything about such a procedure?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. At the beginning of the operation infiltration, as I can call the big program of poisoning the western mind with the Soviet propaganda, about which I have spoken yesterday, the trouble arose because our people were rather cumbersome. They were accustomed to speak to the Communist-minded people in very rough and political language, and so our first effort to send abroad the article written by Soviet authors failed mostly because of the improper language, and the western reader couldn't digest the Soviet propaganda done in the same way as it is done inside the Soviet Union.

So the question arose, as it is said in this document, to polish our documents which are sent for publication abroad.

And so there developed in the course of time a big branch of propaganda industry—I mean, the preparation of the propaganda material specially designated for western tasks. The quotation which I hear right now is just one of the examples of this kind of business. I can understand from hearing this paper why the Soviet delegates were insisting on bringing the material in the American magazines.

What I can't understand is why the American members were eager to get Soviet propaganda.

Mr. MORRIS. It goes on to say here:

He said that the articles would have to be translated here—

"here" being Moscow.

What is the significance of that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is perhaps only taking a point, as far as I understand it.

Mr. MORRIS (reading):

es
the OL brought up the question of editing the vocabulary in left and Soviet articles.
In regard to the Asiaticus article, he had to revise the vocabulary considerably or otherwise the article would have been discounted as propaganda. In the de Kantorovich article, OL had edited out a number of things but the New York office had put them back in. Voitinsky said that that would be impossible with their articles because they cannot give in on their point of view. No such editorial changes could be made without their approval. He said that he understood the problem of PA and knew what sort of thing they would have to write for it.

Have you any comment on that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can say that you heard that an editor is editing the articles, not the author. But in this particular case it is the author who dictates to the editor what to do. That looks to me that way.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have quite a few minutes which have already been introduced into the record. Would you like the record to show their being interpreted by this particular witness based on his expert knowledge of the situation in Moscow at that time?

It might take a little time, and I do not know to what extent we should go into that, Mr. Chairman. They are along the same lines as we have been discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that not a matter for the conclusion of the committee? As a matter of fact, are we not capable of forming our own conclusions?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, if you think that this particular witness cannot add to it——

The CHAIRMAN. He might add to it, but I think it is pretty clear.

Mr. MORRIS. May I go on, then, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. As regards this exhibit that you have offered here and the one that you offered yesterday, it is possible that the present occupant of the chair might not be in the chair at some other meeting and this matter will be up here.

It seems to me that they could be admitted with the understanding that they are to be identified later on. I understand they can be identified by Mr. Carter or by his attorney.

Mr. SOURWINE. I was going to ask Mr. Morris if it was not true that there is a stipulation, an arrangement with Mr. Carter's attorney for a stipulation, of Mr. Carter about the files of the IPR which are authentic.

Mr. MORRIS. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know what the stipulation is.

Mr. SOURWINE. Only that he will, in cases which we offer him for the record and which are authentic, and which he knows to be authentic, stipulate to that effect without going back on the stand.

The CHAIRMAN. And if he does not stipulate to it, then this will go out of the record. Is that right?

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right, at the Chair's order.

The CHAIRMAN. All right, then; the exhibit offered yesterday and the one today will be admitted under those conditions.

(Documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 761," which is as follows, for "Exhibit No. 758" (see p. 4555).)

EXHIBIT No. 761

CONFIDENTIAL—NOT FOR DISTRIBUTION OUTSIDE THE OFFICE

REPORT ON SOVIET RELATIONS WITH THE INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

The three folders of documents, which form part of this report, are divided as follows:

1. U. S. S. R.—Pacific Council (this contains correspondence and other papers in reference to the formation of a Soviet Council of the I. P. R.).
2. U. S. S. R.—Research (this contains letters and reports in reference to the centers of research activities in the Soviet Union which have an interest in the Pacific).
3. U. S. S. R.—American Council (this contains correspondence and other papers in relation to the attempts of the American Council to develop and encourage Russian studies in this country).

Whatever the composition of the recently formed Soviet Council, the I. P. R. will have to continue its direct interest in this field for some time. It is unlikely that the new council will be prepaid at once to assume an independent role, direct encouragement will have to be given in the particular projects in which the I. P. R. is interested, and, finally, there is a very large field in connection with Soviet studies, as with Japanese or Chinese studies, in which the Institute and its various councils can do effective work without reference to the national council concerned.

In the past, this activity has been carried on by the American Council on behalf of and in cooperation with the Pacific Council. The ideal solution would be to concentrate it entirely in the hands of an international secretariat. For the present, it would seem to be imperative that the American Council continue to lead in the work, if possible by sharing personnel and resources, such as library materials, etc., with the International Secretariat. Only one of the reasons for this recommendation is the fact that in no other country on the Pacific could a full program be developed in this field at the present time with no fear of legal difficulties.

Because of this situation, the following report will embody recommendations addressed both to the American Council and the Pacific Council. Activities recommended, except under I. below, could most profitably be carried out by a staff located in New York, supported jointly by the American Council and the Pacific Council, until such time as the International Secretariat has a permanent working base adequately equipped to take them over.

I. SOVIET MEMBERSHIP IN THE I. P. R.

A. Pacific Council.—The Soviet Union accepted membership in the I. P. R. in 1931. The committee which was formed existed only on paper. More recently, a new attempt has been made to organize a Soviet Council, much more promising of success. The formulae of international cooperation are difficult for the Soviets to master, and our chances of getting the full substance of cooperation will decrease in measure as we put emphasis on the constitutional and organizational problems involved.

The Secretary-General, on his trip to Moscow in the fall of 1934, should be able to determine who are the four or five most active members of the Soviet Council, who is the titular head, and how far the services of VOKS will have to be used as a clearing house. As has been the case in China, the best results are likely to be secured by direct cooperation with the individuals and institutions represented on the Soviet Council. It is extremely unlikely that VOKS, or the titular head of the Soviet Council, will serve adequately as a clearing house, like Chatham House for example. The Soviets are not likely to object to any arrangement by which, for instance, projects might be organized directly with individuals in the Soviet Union, copies of the correspondence being forwarded to VOKS or the office of the Chairman of the Soviet Council.

In the past, many of the Institute's contacts in Moscow have been made with Narkomindel, the Commissariat of Foreign Affairs. Several I. P. R. official invitations have been extended to the Soviet Union through this department. In the future, it is recommended that the Institute be punctilious in treating the Soviet Foreign Office as it would the Japanese or British. This means that it is legitimate to cultivate it, and to make every effort to secure its unofficial support. At the same time, it would be well to recognize the same fiction of independence as in other countries.

The fiction is even more potent in the Soviet Union than, for example, in Japan, but it is quite apparent that the Soviet Union itself is going to maintain it. Several Soviet organisations, such as VOKS, the Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries, and TASS, the Soviet news agency, have been established with very careful legal autonomy. Whether the Soviet Council of the Institute is established under VOKS, or as a separate organisation, the Institute would do well to regard it in correspondence, etc., as an entirely independent and unofficial organisation.

Such a policy would have advantages outside of the field of Institute relations with the Soviet Union. It is fairly important to take safeguards against any circumstances arising which might provide ammunition for these non-Soviet members of the Institute who may suspect Bolshevik propaganda in the work of the Soviet Council. If a clear distinction is established and maintained in Institute circles between the Soviet Council and Narkomindel, it will help in any such contingency.

B. Research.—Instead of snowing the new organisation under with the many projects which the Institute has under way at the moment, it would be vastly more effective to concentrate energies on a few. One of the first tasks of the secretary or other staff worker assigned to this field should be to attempt to secure some study for MacKenzie's Status of Aliens coordination and/or for his Communications project from the Soviet Union. The Secretary General should be equipped before his approaching visit with definite suggestions along this line to hand over as the first official Institute request for cooperation.

The Secretary General should also present to the officers of the new Council a short, clear statement of the Standard of Living program with some indication of what kind of contribution from the Soviet Union would be desirable. This is likely to make a special appeal to the Soviets, but a definite effort will have to be made to get them to go beyond the simple accumulation and presentation of whatever studies have already been made in this field. The initial request should be for such a bibliography, and the staff worker assigned to this field could then prepare definite suggestions, to be supported by a grant as in the case of the other national councils, for further work.

C. Program and Conference.—It is difficult to predict whether the Soviet Council will be very much or very little interested in this aspect of the Institute, or to decide which would be the more to be deplored. At first, there would be little to be gained by worrying them about this, beyond short discussion of time and place and assurance of the demand for Soviet representation. In reference to data paper presentation, the Secretary General should describe the kind of brief document on the Five-Year Plan with special reference to Siberia which would be desired. With this, as with the other recommendations made above, presentation of a request officially by the Secretary General will be enormously strengthened by the subsequent sending of short, clear, and simple written statements, both to the titular authorities and to the principal scholars concerned.

II. SOVIET RESEARCH INSTITUTIONS INTERESTED IN THE PACIFIC

As in any other country, the ultimate strength of Institute suport depends on the activity and interest of the research and educational institutions which have been drawn into the work. The present favorable sentiment in the Soviet Union towards the Institute is based more than anything else on a questionnaire addressed this summer to the more important of these institutions by VOKS. It is extremely important that this interest be strengthened and extended. In part, over a period of years, this will be possible only by visits on the part of the Secretary General and other staff members. A great deal, however, can be done by intelligent correspondence.

The reports in the attached folder cover the more important of these institutions, with each of which some sort of legitimate contact has at present been made. In addition, the office has now acquired complete published biographical volumes on all the scientific workers of the Soviet Union. The increasing relaxation of antiforeign feeling and the increasing readiness and ability of Soviet scholars to correspond are factors enhancing the possibility of success. Here, as in other correspondence, every effort should be made to establish a basis on which all letters are written in the language of the country where they are written. For this purpose, a Russian-reading staff member is essential. In the Soviet Union letters in English are adequate except where some special importance or diplomatic courtesy warrants their translation into Russian.

Special comment is necessary on the use of letters of introduction, particularly by the Secretary-General or other officers using them officially rather than personally. Big shots and stuffed shirts should be sent to their opposite numbers in the Soviet Union, and not to the Communist Academy or the Institute of Orientology. Students should be sent only with selection and with restricted appeals to the good nature of the addressees. Tourists should not be given letters at all.

The two most important institutions in the Soviet Union for cultivation are the Institute of World Economics and Politics, which is a part of the Communist Academy and which is itself a sort of holding company for the Institute on China, and the Library of the Communist Academy. These are separate institutions. Their advantages over other organizations are principally two: (1) They have the best of the available personnel and equipment; and (2) they are politically not afraid to move and to take responsibility. As soon as the Institute of Pacific Relations is in a position to show some concrete measure of help, such as a research grant, or possibly a little later an offer for staff exchange between Moscow and some other IPR office, it would be very useful to take advantage of it to strengthen our relations with these two institutions.

III. AMERICAN COUNCIL ACTIVITIES IN THE SOVIET FIELD

Because of the reasons stated in the introduction to this report, a great many activities are listed below which would serve in some respects other councils than the United States. If the American Council does not undertake them, it would still be worth while for the International Secretariat or some other National Council to consider doing so. From whatever center they are organized, their results could be made available, if there were a demand for them, through regular Institute channels to the other councils.

A. Exchange of publications.—The shortage of valuta in the Soviet Union and the high legal price of rubles to foreigners makes exchange almost the only practicable way of building up resources in books and periodicals about the Soviet Union. Arrangements for exchange of Pacific Affairs and the IPR memoranda are listed in the attached folder. A special file in Miss Austern's charge contains full details of exchange arrangements. With three or four organizations, such as the Institute of World Economics and Politics, the Communist Academy Library of Moscow and the Communist Academy Library of Leningrad, rather fuller exchange relations have been established, covering printed books and documents. This is carried out by the periodical exchange of lists and the rough balancing of orders against each other, with no cash payments.

The only libraries in the Soviet Union which are at present to be considered in any sense as IPR depositories are the Library of the Communist Academy in Moscow and the Library of the Commissarriat of Foreign Affairs. As the position of the IPR grows stronger in the Soviet Union, it might be desirable to substitute the Lenin Library of Leningrad for the latter of the two mentioned above. Both of those mentioned have received complete sets of the Banff papers and have accumulated substantial collections of earlier IPR publications.

B. Establishment of a Research Library.—Except for the New York Public Library, there is no effective Russian library in New York. Especially on questions of current interest and involving the Pacific, there is really no good library at all. Such a library would not be hard to develop over a period of years and the demand for it would be very large. The present collection of the American Council constitutes an excellent nucleus. It has been built so far by exchange and gift, and very little support would be needed to catalogue it and enlarge it.

The possibility of the Soviet authorities endowing or supporting a New York library to the extent of making it a depository for a very large number of Russian publications has been discussed frequently in recent months. If the American Council wished to pursue the idea, and were in a position to provide the necessary staff, there is no reason why it should not be made such a depository for books on international economic and political relations, on Siberia, etc. Such a move would have to be made jointly by the American Council in New York and Washington and by the Secretary General in Moscow. A good staff worker on a full-time basis could probably manage such a library at least in the initial stages. On a half-time basis, any library plan would have to be more modest.

C. Clearing House for Research Projects.—There is at present no organization in the United States which collates or even files record of the research projects which are being undertaken in the field of Soviet studies. The Institute has been requested to do so by many of the specialists in the field, and a beginning has been made, documents concerning which are included in the attached folder.

Organization on a better basis and continuation of this work would have advantages for the Institute in constituting a record of what is being done and would fill a real need of American scholarship. Any staff worker engaged in this field would necessarily be in contact with the very few organizations where such projects are important, and it would require relatively little effort to keep a file or card catalogue up to date. The quarterly publications of the learned societies in the humanities and the social sciences provide the best record available at present, but those are scattered, difficult of access, and seldom up to date.

D. Russian Language Teaching.—In 1934, through funds secured from the Rockefeller Foundation, a special experiment in the intensive teaching of Russian was begun under the auspices of the American Council at Harvard University. A list of the thirty students admitted to this school is included in the attached folder. A separate folder contains a full record of the school.

It may be considered at the end of the first trial that the experiment is not worth repeating. This does not at present seem likely to be the case. The University of California and Columbia University have officially invited the Institute to cooperate in the establishment of similar summer schools next year, and the attitude of the Rockefeller Foundation toward requests for further assistance is likely to be receptive, although no commitments have been made. Although the American Council should perhaps not engage in the educational field itself, this seems to be a case where an initial project serves to encourage and establish a legitimate activity which otherwise might never have started. As is the case with Chinese and Japanese studies, the Russian field cannot even be adequately surveyed without some initial work on the development of a linguistically trained research personnel. In this sense, continued interest for at least one more year in this project would seem to have much in its favor.

E. Coordination of the Entire Field of Russian Studies.—There is no single organization in the United States comparable to the Ost-Europaisches Institut in Berlin or the School of Slavonic Studies in London which serves to center and head up work in the whole field. A small conference of specialists called by the American Council in November 1933, a report of which meeting is included in the attached folder, urged this function on the American Council and specifically recommended a rather wide range of activities, such as coordination of library purchase plans, readjustment of university curricula, establishment of fellowships, etc.

In view of the central function of the American Council, such a policy as would be required to achieve this would have many heavy liabilites. A great, even preponderant, share of Soviet problems are not in the first instance Pacific problems. The field is relatively new and politically dangerous. Finally, it is a function which could only be performed legitimately and well by a large university. The conference in question was eminently successful in charting an immediate plan for American Council activity. In the future, however, it would seem to be very much wiser to confine activities in this field to specific, limited, and fairly concrete projects. In the first instance, it may be necessary to undertake some projects, such as the Harvard Russian Summer School, which do not appear to have immediate Pacific implications. As they develop, however, they should be turned over more and more to other organizations leaving the American Council free to concentrate its modest resources on the problems of most direct concern to it.

F. Bibliography on Russian and Soviet Problems.—There has emerged from time to time a demand for a bibliography or reading list in this field which would be comparable to but better than Quigley's pamphlet on the Far East. The attached folder contains a draft memorandum on the subject prepared in this office in 1933 and now out of date, and a copy of the bibliography used by Professor G. T. Robinson at Columbia.

There is no question but that such a bibliography would be a real addition to the work the American Council has done. Its priority in a crowded program is a different question, and some effective way might be found of checking in advance the extent of the demand for it. The preparation, however, of such a list could be effectively done by the staff member in charge of this work along with other work his job would involve.

G. Exchange of students.—One of the specific activties urged on the American Council by the conference called in this office in 1933 was the elaboration of some plans for facilitating the living, archive, financial and other problems of American students going to the Soviet Union for study. A series of documents in the attached folder indicate the reasons which can be adduced to support a negative attitude on this proposal. The difficulties involved, the fate of such projects as the Anglo-American Russian Summer School, and the vastly more pressing urgency of other things point to the desirability of leaving this field strictly alone. Professor Cross, Dr. Duggan, and other American educators who have recently been in Moscow, have reached this same conclusion although they were committed beforehand to some attempt to work at the problem.

For serious students who have already equipped themselves with some command of the language and who are prepared to make the living adjustments necessary, there is a very real service which the American Council can and at present does perform. The only guides to archive material which are available in the East are in the American Council office and are being used by quite a few different outside students. In suggesting centers of research activity and methods of getting the maximum advantage out of them to qualified advanced students, the taff of the American Council could perform a legitimate service.

H. I. P. R. Memoranda and Book Reviews and Articles for Pacific Affairs.—Although Soviet contributions to Pacific Affairs are likely to grow in number and quality, the Soviet Council cannot be relied upon to do the necessary work in orienting I. P. R. publications properly in the Soviet field. This applies to some monograph studies, but primarily to the I. P. R. Memoranda and to Pacific Affairs. There is no field, not even the Japanese or Chinese, which is so open and unexploited at the present time, and both the American Council and the Institute stand to gain prestige and reputation by their work in it. The development of an adequate library and particularly the employment on the staff of a well-trained research worker who reads Russian readily and follows the work of others in the field are prerequisites. Without these two, it would be safer to leave the field alone.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bogolepov, how well did you know General Varga?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. How well?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Very well.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us how well?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Well, I met him in the Soviet Union in Moscow before he left for China. He left for China in 1938 or 1939. I do not know precisely the date. He left as a military adviser to Chiang Kai-shek.

Mr. MORRIS. He was the military adviser to Chiang Kai-shek assigned by whom, the Soviet Military Intelligence?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. By the Soviet Government. He was a regular officer of the army. I mean General Vlassow. And he went to Chungking.

Mr. MORRIS. Spell that, please.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Chungking, the capital of China. In Russian, it is quite different spelling, so I was having difficulty.

After this, I met him during the war, in the fall of 1941, when General Vlassow was commanding one of the section of the front, defending the approach to Moscow. I had flown to him, from the headquarters of the Soviet troops on the Leningrad front, and I discussed with him the military situation and political situation, too.

We agreed that the time had become ripe for doing anything for a change in the Communist regime in our country. I remember that he and some other people who were present and whom I wouldn't like to identify, because they are still in the Soviet Union now, holding high positions in the Soviet Army, were speaking about the ways in which we can use the confusion which certainly would arise in the case when the Germans would take Moscow.

After this talk, I returned back to the northwestern front, near to Leningrad, and toward the end of the same year, I heard that General Vlassow, after having beaten the Germans at the gates of Moscow, was assigned to the task to pierce through the German lines in order to get across the Baltic countries to the Baltic Sea, at the head of a special second army group created for this purpose.

He attacked with his army, but was defeated. His army was dispersed, and he himself, several weeks later, was captured by the Germans.

Shortly before, I went myself over the front lines to the Germans with some other officers and, as I told you yesterday, we tried to convince Germans to use the many millions of Russian PW's in German camps as a Russian army of liberation. But very soon after our talks with German military and political leaders we discovered that this was not the German object, to make Russia liberated from communism. They wanted to have Russia, Communist or not, as their colony, to enslave our people and to ruin our country.

So there was nothing left to talk with the Germans about. The talks were brought out. I landed in the Gestapo jail in Berlin.

As I told you yesterday, only with great difficulty, with the help of some of the higher officials of the German Foreign Office which were known to me during my work in Moscow, I escaped something worse, and for the third time, I met General Vlassow in Germany already at the beginning of 1943.

We had talked about the possibility, still the possibility, of organization of the Russian anti-Communist Army with the German help, with the German assistance, bearing in mind that first of all we have to get rid of Communist regimes, and then we will see how we could liberate ourselves from the enemy number two—I mean, from the Germans.

During all these talks and conversations, once I discussed with General Vlassow the problem of his China experience in Chungking, and General Vlassow, among other things which are of no immediate interest to this committee so I will not quote them, had spoken about the fact of his intelligence activity in China capitals.

Mr. MORRIS. This is General Vlassow's intelligence activities in the Chinese capital, of Chungking?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right. He had some intelligence officers, and certainly he had to carry out all of the intelligence activities.

While speaking about his impressions, I asked him whether it was very difficult for him to do this special work because there were high British and American missions around. He said that, "yes, the British people were rather uncooperative."

Mr. MORRIS. Did you say were uncooperative?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Uncooperative, yes. And I asked, and said, "The Americans?" And he laughed and said, "The Americans were the best channels for my activities."

Mr. MORRIS. What Americans did he refer to there?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Americans—I don't know who. He didn't mention the names, or perhaps he mentioned them and I don't remember yet. But the Americans who were there in Chungking with the American military mission or other organizations working for Chiang Kai-shek.

The meaning of his words was that during his political and intelligence activities, he did get a great deal of assistance from the Americans. Nevertheless the fact that his political and intelligence activities were directed not in the favor of the United States or China but only in the favor of the Soviet Union——

Mr. MORRIS. And there were was no further indication of the general classification of what these Americans were? That is, of what general classification they were? Did they work for the United States Government?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; they were officials of the United States Army and the United States Government, which was this mission in Chungking at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bogolepov, did you know General Feng Y'hsiang?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I knew him—better to say—for he is dead now.

Mr. MORRIS. That is what I mean. Will you tell us what you knew about General Feng Y'hsiang?

Mr. Chairman, along these lines, when Mr. Lattimore was a witness before this committee we asked him to what extent he knew General Feng Y'Hsiang, and he has testified in the following fashion on that subject:

> Did you know General Feng Y'Hsiang?
>
> Mr. LATTIMORE. General Feng Y'Hsiang, I met first in Chungking when he was one of the deputies to Chiang Kai-shek, and I met him afterward in this country.
>
> Mr. MORRIS. Was he ever a guest at your home?
>
> Mr. LATTIMORE. He stayed overnight at my home once.
>
> Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever travel in the United States with him?
>
> Mr. LATTIMORE. Let me see. I think I traveled from Philadelphia to Boston with him. I had gone up to Bryn Mawr, where I was requested to act as a translator in a speech he gave at Bryn Mawr College.
>
> Mr. MORRIS. Is it your testimony that you did not know or had no reason to believe that he was a Communist?
>
> Mr. LATTIMORE. I had no reason to believe he was a Communist; anything but.

What do you know about General Feng Y'hsiang?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Well, he was not a Communist, of course, but he got the money from the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. What do you mean by that?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I mean by that, that is the Chinese Marshal Feng Y'hsiang, as we say in Russia, was one of the biggest and more important agents of the Soviet Government in China.

Mr. MORRIS. You say he was an agent of the Soviet Government in China?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. A paid agent, I should say, for I know from Mr. Borodin.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Michael Borodin?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right—who makes business with Feng Y'hsiang first, that he is a very expensive agent. This Marshal Feng Y'hsiang got in connection with the Soviet Government already at the beginning of the twenties, and he got a regular fee from the Soviet Government in order to carry out the line which was prescribed to him by the Soviet Government.

In the vaults of the Soviet office, especially in the files of the Far Eastern Division and in the personal files of the Deputy Foreign Commisar, Karakhan, which was mentioned today by Mr. Bullitt, I saw on many occasions, I remember, that Marshal Feng Y'hsiang was still a paid agent of the Soviet Union.

My last connection with these matters relates to 1937, I guess.

After this, I didn't hear about him any more, save the short notice in Soviet newspapers 2 or 3 years ago that he found accidental death in the Soviet Union.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Bogolepov, did you know Anna Louise Strong?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I did know Anna Louise Strong.

Mr. MORRIS. What did you know about Anna Louise Strong?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not very much, because she was a noisy, nice person in Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she a Communist?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; she was a Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. What can you tell us about her?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Not very much, sir, because I didn't work in any close connection with her. For the last time, I saw her in the office of Michael Borodin, which was just before the war. Michael Borodin was editor in chief of the Moscow Daily News. That is a Soviet publication in English language, published in Moscow. And Anna Louise Strong was working as his deputy editor, I guess. At that time, I know also that the doors of the Foreign Office were closed for Anna Louise Strong when she came in. She talked too much and it was impossible to get rid of her. So there was a strong directive not to let her go in the Soviet Foreign Office, for we have to work, and she took off of it too much time of ours.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean, this was during the time that she was deputy to Michael Borodin, or did you say deputy editor?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Perhaps deputy editor she was. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. She was closely associated with, and under, Borodin at the time the doors of the Foreign Office were closed to her?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Wasn't that a little unusual?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; it wasn't unusual because Michael Borodin was also out of the Foreign Office. He was in disgrace at that time. And I know also that she married a Russian Communist by name Shubin.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could you spell that name for the reporter?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. S-h-u-b-i-n; who was formerly, I mean, in the twenties, working in the press department of the Foreign Office but later on, also coming into disgrace, and acted, I guess, as a free-lance journalist in Moscow.

So, as a matter of fact, as you see, I saw this person, I met her on several occasions. But she was not a persona grata in Moscow because I think that there was not much use of her which somebody could extract.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Constantine Oumansky?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes; I knew him.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Constantine Oumansky an intelligence man?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can't say whether he was an intelligence man during his stay in the United States and Mexico.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you can or cannot?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I can't. I don't know. I know only that he came to the Foreign Office directly from the intelligence school, military intelligence school.

Mr. MORRIS. He came to the Foreign Office from the military intelligence school?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know him personally?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I know him pretty well personally.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read one paragraph from an exhibit that we introduced at the executive session on June 21, 1951, when the witness was Kate Mitchell. This is a letter written to Mr. Holland, dated March 12, 1936. Miss Mitchell wrote in the last paragraph:

> Carter and I spent about 4 hours with Oumansky at the Soviet Embassy on Saturday and got quite a lot of interesting sidelights on the Moscow trials, particularly with regard to Romm.

Can you cast any light on that paragraph for us, Mr. Bogolepov?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. Michael Romm——

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Michael or Vladimir?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I am sorry. I make mistake on the first name. Maybe I am wrong. He was officially one of the big shots in the Soviet press agency, going the world around. But he and the second big shot in Soviet journalism, Rogov, these two men were also key people in military intelligence.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that Romm and Rogov were both key men in Soviet intelligence?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is right; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did I hear you to use the words "free-lance newspaperman?" Did you say somebody was a free-lance newspaperman in the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes. There are still the remnants of capitalism.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean there are, or were, free-lance newspapermen in the Soviet Union?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Very few of them; but they still existed; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. How recently?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Well, for the last time, I saw these people just before the war, 1941.

Mr. SOURWINE. When you say free-lance newspaperman, do you mean by that an independent newspaperman who need not be a Communist, who can write what he pleases, for whatever publication he pleases?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No, sir; certainly not. I mean only those who are not employed officially in one of the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you mean by free lance, then?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. That is perhaps right. You have, maybe, another understanding of the word.

Mr. SOURWINE. I do not mean to quibble with you, sir. Just what do you mean by it?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I mean that these people were not employed in one of the newspapers, Soviet newspapers, but simply wrote articles for them. But, of course, they were obliged to write only in the matters which are in the lines of set policy of the Communist Party.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did a man have to be a Communist to be what you call a free-lance newspaperman?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; mostly it was nonparty people who couldn't get a position in Pravda or Izvestia.

Mr. SOURWINE. For instance, would a foreigner be permitted to come in and write as he pleases?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. No; only Soviet citizens living in Moscow, and they were not important people because all important people were assigned to the staff of the papers, Pravda or Izvestia. But those who, because of their nonparty affiliation, couldn't work in the newspaper, they were just writing some chronicle or some little articles from time to time. Perhaps I use the term not correctly.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to have his comments on some of these documents, but it would not necessarily require any open session.

Could he be instructed to stand by and work with the staff a few days on some of these documents?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; he is going to have to stand by anyway. He is under subpena and will have to stand by anyway.

What is his status? Is he in the custody of the sergeant at arms?

Mr. MORRIS. He is in the custody of the sergeant at arms of the Senate. And several of the United States intelligence services have asked us if he would do certain things for them in the next few days. After that, maybe we can go back and review some of these things in executive session.

The CHAIRMAN. I think so.

Mr. MORRIS. I have just a few more points.

You had said that you knew Rogov and Romm to be intelligence agents?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you continue with that comment on this paragraph:

> Carter and I spent about 4 hours with Oumansky at the Soviet Embassy on Saturday and got quite a lot of interesting sidelights on the Moscow trials, particularly with regard to Romm.

Do you wish to add anything more to that comment? What happened to Mr. Romm, do you know?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. He was shot in Moscow.

Mr. MORRIS. Why was he shot?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Because he was affiliated with opposition inside the Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you any comment on the fact that Edward Carter and Kate Mitchell spent 4 hours with Oumansky at the Soviet Embassy on Saturday? Is that an unusual amount of time to give a foreign visitor?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It means that these people were considered by Ambassador Oumansky as important people. He had lost 4 hours to give them his instructions.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to finish the identification of some personnel who have turned up in our IPR hearings from time to time.

Michael Borodin?

Mr. BOGOPELOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what his role was in the Soviet organization?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. His role in the twenties was a great deal known. He was the chief engineer of the first Chinese revolution. He was assigned with the duty of conducting the revolution which happened in China in the early twenties into a Communist one. He failed to do this because Chiang Kai-shek, in the very last minute, in 1927, destroyed the Communist plans. This point makes Borodin a lost man. He was called back from China to the Soviet Union. He was under investigation for many, many months, and, as I told you today, the position which he held with the Soviet Union up to the outbreak of war was not a very important one, an editor of a not very important English-speaking newspaper in Moscow. So actually he was a finished man, far from the politics.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have one more document here. I am afraid it will have to be in the classification of the other two. It purports to be a memorandum on the Communist Academy and its China Institute, dated April 1934.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is it taken from?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, will you authenticate that document?

Mr. MANDEL. This is an original document from the files of the Institute of Pacific Relations, headed "Communist Academy, Volkonka 14, Moscow, U. S. S. R." It is dated April 1934, and is a carbon copy, which is taken from the Institute of Pacific Relations' files.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read one excerpt from a paragraph here, and then ask a few questions of this present witness.

I—

The author of this document—

mentioned Chen Han Seng, found that Abramson knew him very well personally, that while they think him still a little nearsighted they consider him the best man in China in his field and a man with a very real future. I referred to the pamphet he wrote for Banff and was told without a quiver that they not only knew, it, but that it had been translated and would appear, with suitable editorial notes pointing out its inadequacies, in the next issue of Problems of China

Did you know what the Communist Academy was?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. What was it?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was the highest scientific organization in the Soviet Union. If you speak of the science in the Soviet Union, you understand only the Marxist and Communist science. So it was the program where the Marxist theory was developed, where the Marxist scholars were prepared for different branches of Soviet administration, for Comintern, for different branches of Intelligence, for journalistic fields, and so on.

It was a very important organization which has been preparing the people for work in Soviet administration.

Mr. MORRIS. I read you again this sentence:

I mentioned Chen Han Seng, found that Abramson knew him very well personally, that while they think him still a little nearsighted they consider him the best man in China in his field and a man with a very real future. I referred to the pamphlet he wrote for Banff and was told without a quiver that they not only knew it, but that it had been translated and would appear, with suitable editorial notes pointing out its inadequacies, in the next issue of Problems of China.

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. I am sure that if a Communist says this man is the best one, it is to take to granted he is the worst one, from our point of view.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may we submit this to Mr. Carter under the arrangements for stipulation?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be admitted with the same ruling as the other two. The other letters will also be admitted.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit Nos. 762 and 763," and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 762

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

Amsterdam—Honolulu—London—Manila—Moscow—New York—Paris—Shanghai—Sydney—Tokyo—Toronto—Wellington

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

MARCH 1, 1937.

DEAR BILL: Thanks for your letters of the 24th and 25th. I checked with Ishii and found him convinced that Fred had concurred in having the book issued under Institute auspices. I checked with Fred and found that Ishii had been in with his page proofs to show Fred last Friday; that Fred thought you had agreed to have the thing issued under American Council auspices and therefore O'Kayed the text of Ishii's note to that effect on the title page. Fred has now written Ishii explaining the mistake and I have cabled P. S. King as you suggested. Ishii was perfectly nice about it, but naturally a little puzzled because of his recent conversation with Fred.

Fred sent you the Spykman outline last week so I assume it has now arrived. With regard to Waldheim, I'm certainly against giving him another assignment, but it seems to me that Alsberg's letter to him of February 13th is practically a definite promise of at least a two-months job on the shipping study. However, maybe I'm reading it in the wrong way.

The other points raised in your letter have, by implication at least, been answered in Carter's telegram to you.

I have sent the Windett manuscript to Macmillan's but have of course heard nothing from them as yet.

Carter and I spent about four hours with Umansky at the Soviet Embassy on Saturday and got quite a lot of interesting side lights on the Moscow trials—particularly with regard to Romm.

My best to Doreen, and happy voyagings.

(Signed) KATE.

(Penciled in:) P. S.—What did you and R. L. P. agree on with regard to the page proofs of Problems? Chapter III is presumably coming to N. Y. I would also welcome a chance for a final look at Chapter V—Is a cable needed?

STANFORD UNIVERSITY,
March 6, 1937.

DEAR KATE: This is to answer your letter of March 1 and your wire of March 5. I agree with your suggestion of having the index and page proofs of the proceedings done in London. I was about to suggest the same thing and I suppose we should be ready if necessary to pay Oxford up to about $50 for the indexing (but only if they raise the question of payment, of course!).

I have still have the following manuscript to send (next week) to Oxford: some additional pages to Chap. II; four or five pages on economic adjustments which, with your permission, I should like added as a tail to your Chap. V; four or five pages of Introduction to the whole book; the Preface which I shall send after showing it to Mr. Carter. I shall send all of this to you for forwarding to Oxford, except the material for Chapter II which I shall send direct, sending you a complete carbon copy of the whole chapter.

I'm telling Oxford to set the remainder of Chap. II direct into page proof as I won't have any further changes. I would suggest that you tell them to do the same with the Preface, Introduction, and balance of Chap. V. I will not want to see proofs of my chapter.

It seems to me that you need do no more from now on except look over the final page proof of the whole book.

Yes, certainly, make any changes you want in the China chapter. I've no doubt there is room for further editing in addition to the considerable changes I made. The chapter is still written in a different key from the rest of the book but I don't know that that matters very much and don't see how we can change it to correspond completely with the other chapters.

I'm intrigued by your tantalizingly brief remark about Umansky's comments on Romm. Do tell. Thanks for fixing up the Ishii affair.

Yours,

W. L. H.

EXHIBIT No. 763

COMMUNIST ACADEMY

Volkhonka 14

MOSCOW, U. S. S. R.

APRIL 1934.

VARGA.
KHMELNITSKAYA.
VOITINSKY.
ABRAMSON.

The Communist Academy is the citadel of the faith in Soviet Russia. It is charged with the task of training leaders for the next generation, and it is inevitable that these leaders should be trained essentially as political leaders. The theoreticians and the dogmatists are both trained here. It has of course immense political power, can commandeer funds or people more easily than any other research or educational organization, has access to materials and documents elsewhere unavailable.

It has had almost since its inception a section which dealt with China. It has been variously named and organized, according to the political fortunes of its leaders. At present it retains its old name of the China Institute, but is also known as the National and Colonial Sector of the Institute of World Economics and World Politics, which is itself a part of the Communist Academy. The set-up within the Academy is not very clear; evidently there are so-called subject cabinets, and an effort is obviously made to keep the stratifications from growing frozen.

Primarily concerned with China, Japan and the Far East at the moment there are about nine men, with a dozen or more secretaries and translators attached to them. In addition to these, however, there are of course many other experts, on silver, on foreign trade movements, on agriculture, etc. It is difficult to find out who is chief, or how responsibility is divided.

Varga is and has been for many years one of the principal theoreticians on foreign affairs in the Soviet Union. Voitinsky is a theoretician only by virtue of the refusal of the Chinese to make him an executive; he has a long and interesting career behind him in China. Khemlnitsky seems to be the lady who keeps things going around the office of the Institute, although she herself is a person of importance. Abramson is a young fellow, who speaks and reads Chinese, speaks English slowly and makes the best impression possible of an able, well-educated young Marxist.

The staff is floating. Men are called from here for more responsible work, and sent back here for periods of further study. Galkovitch, who was Troyanovsky's right hand man in Tokyo and who is now Consul-General in San Francisco, is one of these perapatetic staff members.

Most of the really good and serious stuff which appears on the East in Russia, outside of the more academic research done by specialized institutes, comes either from or through this organization. It started publishing Materials on the Chinese Problem in 1928. Sixteen numbers appeared under this title. It then became Problems of China, thirteen numbers of which have appeared. Back numbers of both of these are very hard to get. Number 11 of the latter has a good cumulative index. A new journal has recently been started, called Colonial Problems, two numbers having appeared. Finally the first number has been issued of a journal called Contemporary Japan which may or may not be continued. The regular periodicals for the Academy, which are numerous, can also be used for articles on the East.

The more important work is published in monograph form. To list these would be to make a good bibliography of Russian materials on China and Japan. Mif's book on Chinese politics, Madyar's two works on Chinese economics and agriculture, Safarov's history of China, Erenburg's Manchurian Problem, Skatchkov's really good bibliography on China (a continuation of which is being worked on at present)—these are some of them. Then there are the more current and popular books, like Terentiev's Danger of War in the Far East or Skladyar's Manchuria. On Japan, Popov is writing a further study, Avarin is completing his work on the economic relations between Japan and Manchuria (first volume already published). Two of the largest projects at present being done are a study of America and China which will be very long and pretty good, and the 33rd volume of the Large Soviet Encyclopedia, which will be on China and which has been turned over entirely to this outfit to be written. The place hums with activity, gives every evidence of being extremely efficient and well-informed. They have a library of over 10,000 books on the Far East, possibly the best in the Soviet Union, which is kept apart from the regular Communist Academy library.

They are very much interested in a dozen other projects. One is the latinization of Chinese. Abramson has worked out an alphabet together with a group of Chinese scholars, and it has been slowly passed through a great many official bodies for approval. It is at present being applied in Khabarovsk, Vladivostok, and other sections of Siberia, but has not yet been officially adopted. In 1933 they had a conference in Vladivostok, which they claim was attended by representative Chinese, and it was decided to postpone a full international conference on the subject until the results of some practical experience with it could be presented. He claims that a great many sinologues outside of Russia are interested in the proposal, but that it will never get across except against the scholars. Alexeief, the greatest sinologue in Russia, a pupil of Elyssiev's before the war, has finally given a grudging approval, but probably for political reasons, and the Academy does not expect any Chinese scholars ever to support the proposal whole-heartedly. One of Alexiev's students, named Drogunov, has worked with Abramson on it. They are convinced that the problem would not even arise were it not for the enormous illiteracy of China. Since there is no vested interest in the ideograph alphabet except among a closed society of professional scholars, they see no reason to stick to it if an improved alphabet of thirty-eight letters could serve as well. They know a lot about the 1,000-character system but reject it as being typical of the middle class assumption that the poor do not really need to know a great deal after all. They have a paper appearing in Khabarovsk in the new script every other day, and have published a small number of short books in it.

They are very cordial towards the Institute and are eager to cooperate, but we shall have to have concrete proposals before we accomplish anything. They get our publications at present, either through exchange or by direct purchase, and think fairly well of them. Abramson sat down one afternoon and discussed China with me for two or three hours. He referred himself to Buck, Remer, Clark, Fong, Orchard, and a half-dozen other books, knew of our relation to them, and made extremely good criticisms of each of them. Naturally, they are intolerant of much of what we do, but they find other parts of it useful. Remer has been translated in part for office use, and they are at present considering translating the whole book for publication. The last number of their magazine contains a scathing review of Sokolsky's Tinder Box of Asia. I mentioned Chen Han Seng, found that Abramson knew him very well personally, that while they think him still a little nearsighted they consider him the best man in China in his field and a man with a very real future. I referred to the pamphlet he wrote for Banff and was told without a quiver that they not only knew it, but that it had been translated and would appear, with suitable editorial notes pointing out its inadequacies, in the next issue of Problems of China.

They speak with more reserve, but with evident willingness to explore the matter, of articles for Pacific Affairs. If we will give them concrete proposals, length, title, etc., will do their best, and if they can get something they are not ashamed of themselves, they will be glad to let us have it. Book reviews are a little more difficult, and they made the suggestion that we send books to them for review in one of their magazines, printing our own translation of the review at the same time, since the magazines are not likely to compete in any public in the world. One of the principal difficulties here is an old one in the Soviet Union, too few qualified people and too much work. Everyone there is quite obviously overfreighted with work, and they are naturally reluctant to take on new commitments. I think that if possible we should give them a very definite list of articles we want, and then send them, fairly early in the spring, a half dozen good books for review. If we could once get some of their material in Pacific Affairs, and a check in payment in their hands, we would find further development relatively easy.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know that the Soviet organization used the Institute of Pacific Relations to collect information not only in the United States but on other countries, such as Japan and China?

Mr. BOGOLEPOV. It was my impression that, at that time—I mean before the war—when I was in the Soviet Union, the Soviet Intelligence was more interested not in the United States of America, but in Japan and other countries which were in direct conflict with the Soviet Union.

It was also my impression that the Institute of Pacific Relations was merely used by Soviet Intelligence in order to get, via America, the information on Japan and China and Great Britain.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Senator Ferguson asked, I believe yesterday, for writings of Mr. Lattimore on Mongolia. Mr. Mandel has compiled quite a few of these, and I would like them to go into the record at this time.

Mr. MANDEL. We have received from the Library of Congress a list of the writings of Owen Lattimore. It shows that prior to his visit to Moscow in November 1930, he wrote Political Conditions in Mongolia and Chinese Turkestan, for the Annals of the American Academy, and that further he wrote Mongol Journeys, published in 1941; Mongols of Manchuria, written in 1934; and, also, in his book Solution in Asia, published in 1945, there are a good many passages on Mongolia. I offer three samples for the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that in response to Senator Ferguson's request?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right. May they go into the record?

The CHAIRMAN. They will go into the record.

(The documents referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 764" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 764

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE SERVICE

WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

[SEAL]

WRITINGS OF OWEN LATTIMORE

SELECT LIST

Books

America and Asia; problems of today's war and the peace of tomorrow. Claremont, California. (Published by Claremont College for the three associated colleges at Claremont) 1943. 52 p. D767.L3.

China (resumen historice). Mexico, D. F. Ediciones Minerva, S. de r. l., 1945. 209 p. DS735.L3815.

China; a short history. New York. W. W. Norton and Co., Inc. 1947. 218 p. DS735.L38 1947.

The desert road to Turkestan. Boston. Little, Brown and Co. 1929. 373 p. DS793.M7.L3 1929.

The desert road to Turkestan. London. Methuen and Co., Ltd. 1928. 331 p. DS793.M7.L3.

Eclipse of the rising sun by Richard Hart with a statement by Owen Lattimore (pp. 88–90). New York. Foreign Policy Association. 1946. 96 p. E744.H43 No. 56.

The Gold tribe "Fishskin Tatars" of the lower Sungari. Menasha, Wisconsin. The American Anthropological Association. 1933. 77 p. GN2.A22 No. 40.

High Tartary. Boston. Little, Brown and Co. 1930. 370 p. DS793.E8.L16.

Inner Asian frontiers of China. London, New York. Oxford University Press. 1940. 585 p. DS706.5.L3 1940 A.

Inner Asian frontiers of China. New York. American Geographical Society. 1940. 585 p. DS706.5.L3.

Kolossen Asien. Paa dansk ved Iver Gudme. Køblenhavn, Gyldenal. 1947. 132 p. DS518.8.L312.

The making of modern China. London. G Allen and Unwin Ltd. 1945. 212 p. DS735.L38 1945.

The making of modern China. New York. W. W. Norton and Co., Inc. 1944. 212 p. DS735.L38.

The making of modern China. Washington. The Infantry Journal. 1944. 178 p. DS735.L38 1944 A.

Manchuria; cradle of conflict. New York. The Macmillan Co. 1932. 311 p. DS783.L3.

Manchuria; cradle of conflict. Rev. ed. New York. The Macmillan Co. 1935. 343 p. DS783.L3 1935.

Mongol Journeys. London. J. Cape. 1941. 284 p. DS793.M7 L32 1941 A.

Mongol Journeys. New York. Doubleday, Doran and Co., Inc. 1941. 324 p. DS793 M7 L32.

The Mongols of Manchuria; their tribal divisions, geographical distribution, historical relations with Manchus and Chinese, and present political problems; with maps. New York. The John Day Co. 1934. 311 p. DS783.7 L3.

Ordeal by slander. Boston. Little, Brown and Co. 1950. 236 p. E743.5.L36 1950.

Pivot of Asia; Sinkiang and the inner frontier of China and Russia. Boston. Little, Brown and Co. 1950. 288 p. DS793.S62.L3 1950.

The situation in Asia. Boston. Little, Brown and Co. 1949. 244 p. DS518.1.L315 1949.

Solution in Asia. Boston. Little, Brown and Co. 1945. 214 p. DS518.8.L3.

Solution in Asia. London. The Cresset Press. 1945. 143 p. DS518.8.L3 1945 B.

Solutions in Asia. Washington. The Infantry Journal. 1945. 138 p. DS518.8.L3 1945 A.

Articles

Korea ; we win a round. Nation. July 21, 1951. p. 44.
What kind of peace for Japan? New Republic. June 11, 1951. pp. 13–14.
When Japan has a treaty. Nation. August 4, 1951. pp. 88–89.
Asia reconquers Asia. United Nations World. March 1950. pp. 21–24.
Japan is nobody's ally ; excerpts from Situation in Asia. Atlantic. April 1949. pp. 54–58.
Lattimore strikes back ; excerpts from statement before Senate Hearing. New Republic. April 17, 1950. pp. 17–21.
Our failure in China. Nation. Sept. 3, 1949. pp. 223–226.
Point four and the third countries. Annals of the American Academy. July 1950. pp. 1–7.
Rebuilding our policy in Asia. Atlantic. January 1950. pp. 21–23.
We need Asia. Nation. December 16, 1950. pp. 556–559.
What shall we do about China? (interview). U. S. News. December 15, 1951. pp. 19–21.
Challenge of the bridgehead. New Republic. July 28, 1947. pp. 14–15.
Chessboard of power and politics. Virginia Quarterly Review. April 1948. pp. 174–86.
Czeck exception disproves the rule. New Republic. September 22, 1947. pp. 6–7.
Opening of Asia. Atlantic. March 1949. pp. 29–33.
Spengler and Toynbee. Atlantic. April 1948. pp. 104–5.
International chess game. New Republic. May 28, 1945. pp. 731–733.
Issue in Asia. Annals of the American Academy. July 1946. pp. 49–54.
Our new frontier with Russia. Colliers. November 3, 1945. pp. 18–19.
Outer Mongolian Horizon. (Bibliography.) Foreign Affairs. July 1946. pp. 648–660.
Weeks work. Colliers. November 3, 1945. p. 96.
Bailie boys of Indusco. Asia. February 1945. pp. 106–107.
New road to Asia. National Geographic. December 1944. pp. 641–676.
Political pressures in Asia. Atlantic. February 1945. pp. 56–61.
Sacred cows of Japan. Atlantic. January 1945. pp. 45–51.
Sinkiang's place in the future of China. Asia. May 1944. pp. 196–201.
Asia in a new world order. Foreign Policy Report. September 1, 1942. pp. 150–163.
China opens her wild west. National Geographic. September 1942. pp. 337–367.
Fight for democracy in Asia. Foreign Affairs. July 1942. pp. 694–704.
How to win the war. American Magazine. June 1942. pp. 14–15.
Yunnan, pivot of southeast Asia. Foreign Affairs. April 1943. pp. 476–493.
A. E. F. gets a chief. Time. July 7, 1941.
America has no time to lose. Asia. April 1941. pp. 159–162.
American Responsibilities in the far east. Virginia Quarterly Review. April 1940. pp. 161–174.
Stalemate in China. Foreign Affairs. April 1941. pp. 621–632.
Kimono and the Turban. Asia. May 1938. pp. 272–275.
My audience with Chingghis Kan. Atlantic. July 1937. pp. 1–10.
Rising Sun, falling profits. Atlantic. July 1938. pp. 22–26.
On the wickedness of being Nomads. Asia. October 1935. pp. 598–605.
Political conditions in Mongolia, and Chinese Turkestan. Annals of the American Academy. November 1930. pp. 318–327.
Camels and camel pullers. Atlantic. January 1929. pp. 68–77.
Caravans of the winding road. Asia. December 1928. pp. 984–989. January 1929. pp. 38–44.
Desert road to Turkestan. National Geographic. June 1929. pp. 661–702.
High Tartary. Asia. February 1930. pp. 112–117. May 1930. pp. 334–340. June 1930. pp. 430–435.
Leave taking. (poem). Atlantic. January 1930. p. 86.
(Source : Readers Guide to Periodical Literature.)

STEPHEN A. LANGONE,
History and General Research Section,
December 4, 1951.

THREE SAMPLES OF WRITINGS ON MONGOLIA BY OWEN LATTIMORE

"In Asia the most important example of the Soviet power of attraction beyond Soviet frontiers is in Outer Mongolia. It is here that we should look for evidence of the kind of attraction that Russia might offer to Korea in the future. Outer Mongolia may be called a satellite of Russia in the good sense. That is to say, the Mongols have gravitated into the Russian orbit of their own accord (and partly out of fear of Japan and China) ; they have neither been subjected to a military conquest nor sold to the Russians by traitors among their own people. They have gone through their own revolution. They have taken away the titles, revenues, and powers of the hereditary princes and aristocrats; but the sons and daughters of these aristocrats are full citizens with full equality of opportunity, including government service."

(Source: Solution in Asia. Owen Lattimore, pp. 141–142. 1945.)

"Soviet policy in Outer Mongolia cannot be fairly called Red imperialism. It certainly establishes a standard with which other nations must compete if they wish to practise a policy of attraction in Asia. Russo-Mongol relations in Asia, like Russo-Czechoslovak relations in Europe, deserve careful and respectful study."

(Source: Solution in Asia, Owen Lattimore, p. 144. 1945.)

"It was not until after the Soviet Union had been formed in 1924 that Bukhara and Khorezm voted to become socialist and applied to join the Soviet Union. Their application was accepted in 1924 and ratified in 1925, and they became the Republics of Uzbekistan and Turkmenia.

"They were influenced in their decision by the Soviet power of attraction for the majority of the people."

(Source: Solution in Asia, Owen Lattimore, p. 136. 1945.)

THE JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY,
WALTER HINES PAGE SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS,
Baltimore, Md., April 29, 1952.

Mr. ROBERT MORRIS,
Internal Security Subcommittee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRIS: Herewith I am returning the list of my writings which you asked me to verify. I note that this list was compiled by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, using as source Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature. As such, the list appears to be fairly representative. It should be noted however that the entry on page 4, "A. E. F. Gets a Chief," from Time, July 7, 1941, refers not to something that I wrote but to a news story about me.

Yours sincerely,

Owen Lattimore,
OWEN LATTIMORE.

OL: c

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, if you will instruct the witness to work with the staff under the arrangement we mentioned a while ago, I think we can adjourn for the day.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

You will hold yourself available, please, to work with the staff of this committee.

When we recess we will recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Some Senator will share the hearing because the chairman will probably not be here.

We will stand in recess until the call of the Chair.

(Whereupon, at 3:55 p. m., Tuesday, April 8, 1952, the hearing was recessed, subject to the call of the Chair.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS, OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to call, at 3:30 p. m., in room 424, Senate Office Building, Hon. Homer Ferguson presiding.

Present: Senators Ferguson and Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel; and Benjamin Mandel, research director.

Senator FERGUSON. The meeting will come to order.

Doctor, will you raise your right hand? You do solemnly swear in the matter now pending before this committee, being a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. YERGAN. I do.

TESTIMONY OF MAX YERGAN, OSSINING, N. Y.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you give your name and address to the reporter, please?

Mr. YERGAN. Max Yergan, Pines Bridge Road, Ossining, N. Y.

Mr. MORRIS. What does that "doctor" stand for?

Mr. YERGAN. Doctor of humanities; also an honorary LLD.

Mr. MORRIS. Where did you obtain that?

Mr. YERGAN. Lincoln University.

Mr. MORRIS. What is your present occupation, Doctor Yergan?

Mr. YERGAN. I am self-employed at present as a student of racial and colonial questions.

Mr. MORRIS. How recently have you been abroad?

Mr. YERGAN. Last year. About 8 or 9 months ago I went off to East Africa and to India.

Mr. MORRIS. Under what auspices?

Mr. YERGAN. I went to India under the auspices of the American Committee for Cultural Freedom. I went to East Africa under the invitation of some Government officials and African educational leaders. I went to Europe after my return to America from Asia. I went back to Europe during the sessions of the UN for purposes of conferring with Africans and with Government representatives there who carry an administrative responsibility in Africa.

Mr. MORRIS. Doctor Yergan, where were you born?

Mr. YERGAN. Raleigh, N. C.

Mr. MORRIS. Have you been an executive of the Young Men's Christian Association?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. From 1916 to 1936, I was an executive of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Mr. MORRIS. What position did you hold in that organization?

Mr. YERGAN. I was secretary for the student interracial division here in America for the first year. In 1916 I was sent out to India as an educational secretary to work among Indian troops. In 1917 I was sent to east Africa to carry on educational work among Indian and Indian and other troops. Then, in 1920 I was sent out to South Africa as the national executive secretary in charge of the work of the YMCA for southern Africa, including the Union of South Africa and Rhodesia.

Mr. MORRIS. What was your highest position in that organization?

Mr. YERGAN. I was what was called the senior secretary of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you associated at any time with the National Negro Congress?

Mr. YERGAN. I was. I was back in America on furlough the year the National Negro Congress was organized, which I think was 1936, and I was at its opening meeting in Chicago. I was elected president of the National Negro Congress, I think, in 1940.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, was the National Negro Congress a Communist-controlled organization?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And you knew that at the time, did you not?

Mr. YERGAN. Not at the very beginning.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you explain the circumstances leading up to your becoming involved with the National Negro Congress?

Mr. YERGAN. As I said a moment ago, I went out to the meeting where the congress was organized—I think it was 1936—in Chicago, along with several hundred other Negroes who were interested in all of the questions affecting Negroes here in America. There were Communists present at that meeting, but I paid no particular attention. I did not know them too well.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were these particular Communists that you mentioned at this time?

Mr. YERGAN. James W. Ford was there. Earl Browder was there. I remember there was quite a furor due to the fact that there was a strong feeling in the city of Chicago against Browder speaking and, as I remember, he did not speak.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you come back from Africa, Doctor?

Mr. YERGAN. In 1937.

Senator FERGUSON. 1937?

Mr. YERGAN. 1937.

Senator FERGUSON. At that time did you become acquainted with any Communists?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you tell us what the Communists did when you came back, you having been a worker among the colored people and for their betterment and welfare? Just what did the Communists do?

Mr. YERGAN. I came back from Africa in 1937. I left the work of the YMCA because I felt that a new committee at that time was needed which could deal much more directly with the issues then developing in Africa. They were political and economic. I thought that the American public needed to be informed in a way which I could not do too well under the YMCA. Now, the Communists made a strong plea for me when I came back. I knew James W. Ford. I had known him as a student. I think he must have been one of the Communist leaders who was told to make a strong plea for me. I was invited to speak at meetings which ostensibly had the interests of Africa as their purpose.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you later find that this interest was not genuine; that they had Communists rather than the people of Africa in mind?

Mr. YERGAN. Without hesitancy, my experience in these organizations led me as early as 1947 to the conviction that the Communists as such are not interested really in improving the conditions of Negroes or any other minority. They are certainly, I discovered, not interested in improving the conditions of hitherto underprivileged colonial peoples. They are interested in exploiting their conditions. They are interested in exploiting their grievances. They are interested in stirring up strife and in really preventing the solution of the problems along democratic lines.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, you find that they wear the cloak of humanity but, in fact, they are not for it at all; they have their own selfish and political interests in mind.

Mr. YERGAN. That is my conviction, sir. Anyone who looks to Communists for moral leadership or for wise political guidance looks in vain.

Senator FERGUSON. When you came back from Africa, will you tell us some of the people that won your friendship and came to you?

Mr. YERGAN. I mentioned James W. Ford.

Senator WATKINS. At that time what position did he occupy that would identify him as a Communist?

Mr. YERGAN. I think even at that time he was sort of a perennial candidate for some office in the Communist Party. He was a member of the national committee, I think, at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. Whom else did you meet and did they have meet you?

Mr. YERGAN. Benjamin J. Davis, I knew. I knew him when he was a student. That was before I went out to South Africa. They had me meet Earl Browder.

Senator FERGUSON. What about William Z. Foster?

Mr. YERGAN. I met him later.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Dennis, the secretary of the Communist Party?

Mr. YERGAN. I met him later, not during the early years.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you meet Gates, who was editor of the Daily Worker?

Mr. YERGAN. I met him at a later date, also.

Senator FERGUSON. But they did have these Communists meet you and in effect take you under their wing?

Mr. YERGAN. They made it possible for me to meet them. I think an accurate description is that I was cultivated. I was sought after. I say that with a degree of modesty. I made some record as one really interested in working out some sort of solution of what we spoke of then as the racial problem here in this country. I was certainly tremendously interested in the colonial question, as I had studied it and observed it in Africa at that time. I had been given certain awards which Negroes who accomplish things receive, and so they made a plea for me. They made a beeline for me and sought to capitalize my interest in these questions.

Senator FERGUSON. And in effect did they really take you over?

Mr. YERGAN. Not in the sense that I was made a member of the Communist Party, but I suppose I was the victim of their flattery to some extent. I was identified with many of their organizations.

Senator FERGUSON. Did they get to use your name in their organizations?

Mr. YERGAN. Oh, yes; my name was placed on a number of their organizations.

Mr. MORRIS. May I just break in there? You were actively associated with Communists during that period, were you not, Doctor?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. It was not as if you did not know the nature of the organization in which you were operating. I mean, you knew the general nature of it?

Mr. YERGAN. Oh, yes; I think so.

Mr. MORRIS. In fact, you were acquainted enough with the Communist organization that you had access to their headquarters?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And you have been on more than one occasion at Communist Party headquarters?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You have been in the office of the Daily Worker?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And you met all the Communist officials that Senator Ferguson has mentioned here today?

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. In fact, did they not in some cases take you more into their confidence than they did some actual party members?

Mr. YERGAN. I think that is true.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, how long did this period exist? You say it roughly commenced in 1936. By 1940 you had become president of the National Negro Congress, and how long did this confidential relationship exist?

Mr. YERGAN. It continued up to 1947.

Mr. MORRIS. What happened in 1947?

Mr. YERGAN. In 1947 I began to see clearly the nature of the Communist apparatus in the organizations to which I belonged. For instance, in the National Negro Congress I saw how constantly they shifted from one issue to another, which revealed to me the lack of any fundamental interest in improving the conditions of Negroes. I saw, secondly, the absence of ordinary democratic methods. Decisions were taken by a board on which there were Communists and non-Communists. The executive staff very often failed to carry out those decisions and when inquiry was made I was told that the decisions were not carried out because Communist headquarters had advised to the contrary.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, the Communists were running the thing and they put things down on paper as the object of the organization, but paid no attention and did only what they wanted to do?

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. And did they make decisions and bring them in already made and just force them through?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. That is an example of the absence of democratic procedure. Instead of having questions thoroughly discussed, an already decided matter was brought in and instructions given to the executive staff to carry out those instructions.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you now believe those to be Communist decisions?

Mr. YERGAN. I believe them to be decisions, yes, in which the Communists had the major voice and which were a reflection of their interest and of their line at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. You mentioned that you were associated with several organizations at this time that were controlled by the Communists. I wonder if you would list three or four of the more notable ones at this time, and I want you to include the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy because, as you know, this committee is concerned primarily with the Communists in the far-eastern field.

Mr. YERGAN. I will begin with that. The Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy in the Far East——

Mr. MORRIS. When was that formed, Dr. Yergan?

Mr. YERGAN. 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. When was your first hearing of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Senator FERGUSON. I do not know whether you ever said whether or not you ever met Frederick V. Field.

Mr. YERGAN. I am just about to say that now, sir. Frederick Field asked me to attend a meeting at his house.

Mr. MORRIS. At this time you knew Frederick Field quite well, did you not?

Mr. YERGAN. I knew him well. Our offices were in the same building and I saw him frequently.

Mr. MORRIS. In fact, when you purchased some property a deed on record shows that Mr. and Mrs. Field and you were the owners.

Mr. YERGAN. That is right. I represented the Council on African Affairs.

Mr. MORRIS. You in your representative capacity and they in their individual capacities were the owners of the building.

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, at 23 West Twenty-sixth Street.

Mr. MORRIS. What is that known as today?

Mr. YERGAN. It is known as the home of subversive organizations.

Mr. MORRIS. I mean the general formal name for it.

Mr. YERGAN. 23 West Twenty-sixth Street?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes. Does that building bear a name?

Mr. YERGAN. It doesn't come to me right off.

Mr. MORRIS. You were talking about this organization, Doctor.

Mr. YERGAN. Field came to me and said that he was under instructions, by way of making clear to me the importance of the project in hand, from Dennis——

Mr. MORRIS. That is Eugene Dennis?

Mr. YERGAN. Eugene Dennis.

Mr. MORRIS. Was he then the head of the Communist Party?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know what his office was in the Communist Party?

Mr. YERGAN. Eugene Dennis?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. YERGAN. At that time he was the general secretary of the Communist Party. Field was under instruction to set up a committee and it was very important and urgent, and he asked would I meet with a group of individuals at his home. I said "Yes."

Mr. MORRIS. This meeting is going to be in furtherance of the directive Eugene Dennis gave to Frederick Field to form an organization?

Mr. YERGAN. That is a very clear inference to which I subscribe.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what Field told you, that Dennis instructed him to form this organization?

Mr. YERGAN. He did, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And he was calling this meeting to form the organization?

Mr. YERGAN. That's right.

Mr. MORRIS. This, then, is the first meeting of that organization to be formed and the meeting is being held in the home of Frederick V. Field?

Mr. YERGAN. This is the organizational meeting, I suppose you would describe it.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is more than an inference, then, is it not, Doctor? You knew as a matter of fact before the organizational meeting that it was being called by Mr. Field pursuant to the directive given him by Mr. Dennis?

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct; yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us who were present at that meeting?

Mr. YERGAN. As far as I can remember, there was Field; a man named Epstein.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that Israel Epstein?

Mr. YERGAN. Israel Epstein and his wife.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she known as Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. And then Mr. Stewart Maxwell.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you mean Maxwell S. Stewart?

Mr. YERGAN. Maxwell Stewart. There were two meetings. At one of them was the wife of Mr. Snow, Mrs. Edgar Snow.

Mr. MORRIS. Was she also known as Nym Wales?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. A Miss or Mrs. Pruitt.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Ida Pruitt?

Mr. YERGAN. That's right.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Rose Terlin present?

Mr. YERGAN. Rose Terlin.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Talitha Gerlach present?

Mr. YERGAN. And Miss Gerlach.

Mr. MORRIS. I am now reading, Mr. Chairman, from the names given by the witness in executive session this morning.

Senator FERGUSON. You were sworn in executive session and that testimony you gave in executive session was true?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. So Mr. Morris is taking the names from that testimony.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, was Mrs. Maxwell S. Stewart present at that first meeting?

Mr. YERGAN. She was present at one of those meetings, I know.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, there was a subsequent meeting of the same group and it is your testimony that Mrs. Maxwell Stewart, who is Marguerite Stewart, was present at the first or second meeting?

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the relevancy of the testimony today about these people that have attended this meeting is that they have turned up time and again as people involved in the Institute of Pacific Relations. Mrs. Maxwell Stewart at this period of time was the secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and I mention that, Mr. Chairman, having in front of me the Windows on the Pacific, the biennial report of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, 1944–46.

Senator FERGUSON. Was not Field also connected with the Institute?

Mr. MORRIS. Frederick V. Field had been secretary of the organization up until 1940 and was a member of the board of trustees until 1947, but there is other evidence in the record to show that his interest continued beyond that. Marguerite S. Stewart is listed as secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations in this 1944–46 report. Israel Epstein was the editor of a publication put out under the auspices of the international secretariat of the IPR in 1949; Notes on Labor Problems in Nationalist China, by Israel Epstein. Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley was a member of the secretariat of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and there has been some association with some of the other people.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever hear mentioned the Institute of Pacific Relations from any of these people?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, there was reference made at one of these two meetings to organizations that were interested in these same issues that this proposed committee was interested in, and the Institute was among those organization referred to.

Senator FERGUSON. The Institute was mentioned as one of the organizations that was interested in the same cause; is that right?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, I would say that is right, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, these organizations had the same outlook and the same approach to the questions being discussed by the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, the same interests and the same outlook. I am not quite sure about the same approach, but the same interests, the same outlook, the same sphere of interest. Reference was made, for instance, to some of the Institute's literature and there was interest expressed in that literature.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, this group approved the literature that had been put out by the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. YERGAN. There was no formal action of approving but there was interest in it.

Senator FERGUSON. And it was discussed?

Mr. YERGAN. It was discussed, that is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was the prevailing officer at this meeting, Dr. Yergan?

Mr. YERGAN. Field was the prevailing officer, Frederick Field.

Mr. MORRIS. In the discussions that took place at that time, was there general agreement on the part of all those people participating in the meeting?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. I don't recall any conflict of views on any matters of policy. There was a discussion with regard to the place for headquarters, and there was a discussion also about the name, I recall, but on questions of policy I don't recall any conflicting views expressed. Proposals were brought in by Field, and they were usually adhered to and acted upon favorably.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, it was Field's policy?

Mr. YERGAN. I would say that, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And Field had told you that Dennis had ordered him to organize this for a specific purpose; is that so?

Mr. YERGAN. He didn't go into the purpose.

Senator FERGUSON. But he said Dennis had ordered him to organize?

Mr. YERGAN. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Did they tell you what the purpose was of this organization?

Mr. YERGAN. Well, the purpose was discussed both formally and informally at these two meetings, that being to discredit Chiang Kai-shek, to use all of the influence possible to turn material to the forces in China that were opposing Chiang Kai-shek. That was the general point of emphasis with regard to the purpose.

Senator FERGUSON. Was there any word about trying to influence public opinion here on the question of being against Chiang Kai-shek and also in favor of the forces against him?

Mr. YERGAN. There was a fairly general discussion of releases to be sent out, of publications to be issued by the organization, and of meetings to be held.

Senator FERGUSON. Was that to influence American public opinion?

Mr. YERGAN. I would say so, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That is, where they were going to circulate this literature was at the time in the United States?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, primarily in the United States.

Senator FERGUSON. Were the Negro people to be used also in this?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. I recall a lady who was identified in an executive capacity, Miss Russell.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Miss Maud Russell?

Mr. YERGAN. Miss Maud Russell; and the Reverend Stephen Fritchman.

Senator FERGUSON. Where did he come from?

Mr. YERGAN. He was a Unitarian minister from Boston I think. They came once to me requesting that I give them the names of some leading Negroes whom they wished to have as sponsors both for the organization and for a proposed meeting.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think or do you know that the Communists have used the Negro people in this country to sponsor Communist activities and Communist propaganda?

Mr. YERGAN. I both think it and know it.

Senator FERGUSON. Tell us how you know it.

Mr. YERGAN. I know it because of a request made upon me to suggest Negroes who might be brought into various organizations. I think I am an example also of the use that is made. As I said at the beginning, I have reached the considered opinion that this is primarily a use made of people who are carrying on an effort to improve their conditions. I have no confidence in the sincerity or the good faith of the Communist Party or of Communists so far as Negroes and their efforts are concerned.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, it does not make any difference; whether it is a white man or a colored man, or whoever it might be, they will use him if they can to further their objectives?

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct. I believe that. Negroes in this country are interested in achieving the largest possible measure of democracy for themselves and for the country. The Communists are not interested in achieving that.

Senator FERGUSON. But they claim to get your help, do they not?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, they claim it, but my experience leads me to the conviction that that is a false claim.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I ask a few questions, Mr. Chairman?

Senator FERGUSON. Go ahead.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Yergan, you spoke a few moments ago about certain objectives of the organization, and you named them. How did you know those were the objectives of the organization? Did Mr. Field say so, or did Mr. Dennis say so, or who said so?

Mr. YERGAN. That statement which indicates what I believe to be the objectives was made at the meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. By whom?

Mr. YERGAN. By individuals who were present. There was general agreement on those statements.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who?

Mr. YERGAN. Field made the statement, and I don't recall any opposition expressed to that statement.

Mr. SOURWINE. Field made the statement and that was it?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. Other people amplified it in support.

Mr. SOURWINE. And those objectives were carried out by the actual operations of the organization; is that right?

Mr. YERGAN. I take it that they were. Certainly in the literature that I saw—I only attended those two meetings—afterward indicated that those objectives were being acted upon.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you say you helped to form that organization?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, I was present. I would say that by my presence I must have contributed in one way or another to it. I think that follows.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that the only way you contributed to it, Dr. Yergan, by your presence?

Mr. YERGAN. I think the fact that I was asked to come indicates that they felt that I would not be in opposition to it.

Mr. SOURWINE. A little more than just being asked to come and the fact that you did go. As a matter of fact, did you not at that time and in that framework actively assist in the formation of that organization?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. I have said that, sir; by my presence there I think that is true.

Mr. SOURWINE. I mean by more than your presence there.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you participate in the conversation?

Mr. YERGAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, based on your experience with Communists and Communist organizations, and your experience during that meeting and the subsequent meeting that you make reference to, do you have any doubt whatever that that was a Communist organization coming into being at that time?

Mr. YERGAN. No, I don't have any doubt.

Mr. MORRIS. You say you attended a second meeting of this organization, Dr. Yergan.

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, I have been talking here about the two meetings.

Mr. MORRIS. I understand that, but I want to make it clear that there were two separate meetings.

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there anybody at the second meeting who was not at the first meeting whose name you have not mentioned here today? Your estimate of the number of people present at each meeting is what, Dr. Yergan?

Mr. YERGAN. Oh, 12 or 15.

Mr. MORRIS. You have not given us that many names.

Mr. YERGAN. No, I don't remember them all.

Mr. MORRIS. You have seen a list of names. We have submitted to you in the executive session a list of names of people connected with the institute and that did not refresh your recollection, did it, Dr. Yergan?

Mr. YERGAN. If I could see that list it might.

(Witness is shown list referred to.)

Mr. YERGAN. Epstein, I have mentioned. Gerlach, I have mentioned.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Maud Russell present at either one of those meetings?

Mr. YERGAN. I think so. I am fairly certain that she was. Maxwell Stewart I have mentioned.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Gunther Stein present at either one of those meetings?

Mr. YERGAN. I don't remember him.

Mr. MORRIS. Kumar Goshal?

Mr. YERGAN. I knew him, but I don't recall that he was present at one of those meetings. He may have been, but I don't recall it.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, have you told us as much as you can about the policy that was set down as the policy of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy at that time? You said it was to undermine Chiang Kai-shek?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How was that to be done?

Mr. YERGAN. To discredit him.

Mr. MORRIS. How was it to be done?

Mr. YERGAN. Through literature, through public meetings, to represent Chiang Kai-shek as the symbol of feudalism and of corruption in government, and to represent the forces that were opposed to him as the forces that stood for democracy.

Mr. MORRIS. Was also an active campaign to be waged that would encourage nonintervention on the part of America and Americans in China?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there also a policy to build up the Chinese policy, that is, to build up the Chinese Communists as people who were free and people of good works?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. That was established in both of these meetings as a policy of that organization?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to show you exhibit No. 174, which has been introduced into our public record. This is from the Daily Worker of Friday, August 17, 1945. It is entitled "Americans in Plea to Truman on China." It reads:

> Twenty-one prominent Americans urged President Truman to avert the serious danger of a civil war in China. They demanded immediate steps to prevent American planes and other military equipment from being turned over to the Chungking Government.
>
> Pointing out that Chiang Kai-shek has made a direct appeal to the Japanese troops "to retain their arms and equipment for the maintenance of public order," the telegram to Truman stated that "the only American policy which will avoid civil war is not to interfere with the surrender of Japanese troops to patriotic Chinese groups on the spot."
>
> The message to President Truman noted that the Communist-led Eighth Route and new Fourth Armies which Chiang Kai-shek is preparing to attack "have borne the brunt of the allied fight in north central China."

Among the signers we have Mr. T. A. Bisson, Mrs. Edward C. Carter, Israel Epstein, Mr. Frederick V. Field, and then I believe at the very end is Dr. Max Yergan, Director of Council on African Affairs. Do you recall that particular episode.

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. I received a telephone call from Frederick Field asking if my name could be used in connection with that letter and I said "Yes."

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know whether that was before or after these two meetings about which you have been testifying?

Mr. YERGAN. It could have been before, but my impression is that it was along about the same time.

Mr. MORRIS. I will mention some of the other names here: Martin Popper, Ilona Ralf Sues, Mrs. Edgar Snow, Richard Watts, and I ask you in general if that is not the same group of people who participated in the two meetings and the organization that was subsequently formed?

Mr. YERGAN. Substantially. I see here the names of many people who were present at those two meetings; not all of them, certainly not.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you describe that as an incident that was representative of the campaign that was being carried on by this organization?

Mr. YERGAN. You mean——

Mr. MORRIS. This particular incident that took place.

Mr. YERGAN. You mean this letter?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, I think so. That's typical of the campaign that was being carried on.

Senator FERGUSON. You gave them consent and they used your name?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know anything about the truth of the statements in that letter that was signed at that time, Dr. Yergan? From your experience now, your general over-all experience, will you comment on the truth of the letter that was sent to President Truman at that time?

Mr. YERGAN. I think there was a certain amount of truth. I think there was room for improvement certainly in the administration of Chiang Kai-shek, just as there is room everywhere, but underneath all of this—and I think this is the real issue—the purpose was, as I think back upon it now, to promote the Communist forces, to strengthen the Communist forces, and to discredit the forces in China that were opposed to the Communist forces.

Mr. MORRIS. And they wanted to use the names of all those people, sending a letter to President Truman so that that fact, the facts set forth in that letter, would be brought to the attention of as many people as possible and therefore to influence public opinion?

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. Doctor, do you know whether they obtained any other names through your name on that letter?

Mr. YERGAN. Perhaps modesty would lead me to say perhaps not, but being perfectly frank, I was a man with some influence and I think people noticing my name on this letter would pay attention to it.

Senator FERGUSON. And the President would probably be influenced by the fact that you had represented the colored people, and he would be moved by the fact that you were on there; do you not think that is true?

Mr. YERGAN. Well, I'd put it just slightly different. I think the fact that they sought to involve me indictes that they wanted to use me and to use such influence and such status as I have achieved.

Mr. MORRIS. It mentions here that you were the Director of the Council on African Affairs.

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I assume that is one of the organizations that you are going to tell us about today. Will you tell us the general nature of that organization that you are here listed as director of? You were the leading director, were you not?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes. There is one organization that constitutes a slight exception. I founded it and when I founded it I was under no influence of the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. That was what year?

Mr. YERGAN. That was in 1937. The only individual that I now recall who was definitely associated with a Communist outfit who was on the committee is Paul Robeson, as I recall. However, Communists were brought into the organization. They were proposed by Robeson. I think I must have proposed some. Certainly I didn't object to those who were brought in, so that I take some responsibility for their presence. This organization had one or two main purposes: One, to inform American opinion about the changes that were taking place in a more or less unknown great colonial area of the world. During the war we sought to involve Africans as fighters on the allied side through correspondence with governments in Europe and the South African governments. We didn't succeed too much in that.

We were interested also in developing a helpful interest, not only from a humanitarian point of view, but in terms of developing the democratic idea and winning Africans who would be coming into positions of leadership to the side of the democratic cause. Now, the Communists saw that and they saw that here was an organization that appealed to Negroes and to non-Negroes in this country, because Africa was then becoming of great interest. By 1945, by the end of the war, the Communists' strength in the organization was considerable. They didn't have a majority of the people, but it was considerable. Robeson was chairman and I was executive head. By the end of the war, actually in 1946, in the organizations to which I belonged, the National Negro Congress, the Civil Rights Congress, I began to see clearly the issues on which and the procedure on which I could not agree with the Communists.

In the Council of African Affairs, particularly, there was a real effort on the part of the chairman and other leaders, the educational director, to use every occasion to criticize American and allied policy with regard to Africa and to promote Russian policy with regard to Africa and the colonies in general. That became so clear and so pointed that it was the basis for the opposition or the conflict that developed in the council between the Communist-led forces and the forces which I led, which were the non-Communist forces in the council.

Mr. MORRIS. The net result of the whole thing was that you were put out of your own organization?

Mr. YERGAN. I was put out of the organization even though I had a majority of votes on my side.

Mr. MORRIS. How was that effected?

Mr. YERGAN. Because the chairman refused to act in accordance with ordinary parliamentary rules.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, they would not count them?

Mr. YERGAN. They would not count them. I had the actual votes and the proxies, but they wouldn't count them and so the usual methods were resorted to until it became perfectly clear to me that I'd use the rest of my life in court or otherwise fighting them, so we lost to the Communists. We lost property. We lost one of the best libraries on Africa in this country, and other things.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you saying, Dr. Yergan, in effect, that as long as you cooperated with the Communist purposes in the organization it rocked along, but when you refused to do that they forced you out? Is that the fact?

Mr. YERGAN. That is one interpretation, but that is not exactly what I was saying. That is one interpretation, to be sure. I raised the issues. I said this organization was founded and exists to aid Africa, not to promote Russian foreign policy and not to attack everything in America.

Mr. SOURWINE. How long after you raised these issues were you forced out?

Mr. YERGAN. These issues were raised early in 1947. I was forced out early in 1948.

Mr. SOURWINE. And how long prior to the time you raised these issues had the organization existed without friction?

Mr. YERGAN. It had existed from its beginning without too much friction.

Mr. SOURWINE. About 10 years; is that not so?

Mr. YERGAN. From 1937 to 1946, nearly 10 years.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, are you acquainted with the China Aid Council?

Mr. YERGAN. There's so many of these committees on China.

Mr. MORRIS. I have here a letterhead of that organization which has been introduced into the record, our exhibit No. 348. I show this to you.

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. You were a member of that?

Mr. YERGAN. I was a member of the American League for Peace and Democracy and the China Aid Council, as I recall, was a subdivision of that over-all organization.

Senator FERGUSON. Doctor, how did they ever get you into so many of these Chinese things when you had a task of your own?

Mr. YERGAN. Well, I can think of two reasons: One, because at that time China was considered as a colonial problem, and, secondly, because the Communists thought to capitalize on the fact of color. They sought to lump nonwhites together and indicate that there was a common bond, or should be a common bond amongst peoples who had color in common. The assumption there was perhaps that whites do not have any color.

Senator FERGUSON. They made that cause, though, appeal to you as wanting to help your people?

Mr. YERGAN. That's right.

Senator FERGUSON. That if you helped the Chinese cause you would be helping your own; is that correct?

Mr. YERGAN. That's an inference; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. So they got your name.

Mr. YERGAN. And the other reason is my name stood for something.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes, and they were using it wherever they could; is that true?

Mr. YERGAN. That is true.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are being completely frank here, Dr. Yergan, I know, and I think your answer to Senator Ferguson's question indicates that. As a matter of fact you are not contending that throughout this you were——

Mr. YERGAN. An innocent victim.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is not your contention at all?

Mr. YERGAN. No, not at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, your motives throughout were not entirely for the sole purpose of elevating the condition of the Negro race, were they?

Mr. YERGAN. My motives primarily had a racial basis, and a racial basis in the sense of American Negroes and in the sense of Africa. My primary concern and my primary interests were in the racial question here and in the colonial question in general, but primarily in Africa, and I think it's because they knew of my interest in the colonial question that I was brought into these organizations that dealt with China.

Mr. SOURWINE. Perhaps I phrased my question badly. The fact I am attempting to reach is whether throughout this period of 10 or a dozen years of association, whatever it was, where your name was used by Communist causes for the furtherance of Communist objectives you were during all of that time misled as to the objectives of the organization, or whether you were at the time and for a period an active cooperator and collaborator.

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct. I was not misled in that I didn't know what I was doing.

Senator FERGUSON. You were not entirely innocent?

Mr. YERGAN. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. You thought at times it would help your cause?

Mr. YERGAN. Frankly, I was conscientious about it. I was naive, as I look back on it now. I wasn't a Marxist. I've known more about Marxism since I've been fighting the Communists than I knew during the time I was considered a cooperator.

Mr. MORRIS. May I get back, then, to the China Aid Council? Is there any doubt in your mind either now or then that the China Aid Council was a Communist organization?

Mr. YERGAN. No; there is no doubt in my mind now.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you acquainted with the American Friends of the Chinese People?

Mr. YERGAN. I know that name.

Mr. MORRIS. I believe that you are associated with that organization at one time; were you not?

Mr. YERGAN. I think so. As I remember, that's one of the organizations with regard to which I was called and I agreed——

Mr. MORRIS. You were a member of the national advisory board in 1939, according to a listing of that organization.

Mr. YERGAN. That I must stand by.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you well enough acquainted with the organization to tell us that that in fact was a Communist organization?

Mr. YERGAN. If I could get the names.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, at this time, while Mr. Mandel is getting that I might say that during the course of these hearings it has been observed that personnel associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations were associated with the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, the organization about which we have been taking testimony here today. Mr. Mandel, director of research, has prepared a list of people who were connected with both organizations, and I would like to offer this to the Chair now and after certain comments and certain limitations are pointed out I would like to ask if the chairman would receive this into the record.

Senator FERGUSON. I wanted to ask Mr. Mandel, research director, whether or not he did prepare this list and whether he now says it is accurate.

Mr. MANDEL. This is a list of the interlocking between the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy showing the names of the individuals, the connection with each organization, and the source of the information. In all there are 44 such names.

Mr. MORRIS. When there is listed, for instance, after the name of Charles Bidien the word "consultant," how do you know in fact that Charles Bidien was a consultant for the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy?

Mr. MANDEL. That is taken from a letterhead dated May 21, 1948, in our possession.

Mr. MORRIS. You have not, however, have you, Mr. Mandel, checked with each individual to find out whether they were in fact a consultant?

Mr. MANDEL. No; it is impossible.

Senator FERGUSON. It merely shows that you did have the letterhead and that is what it indicated here?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes. We have the source of reference.

Mr. MORRIS. The inadequacy of this report is, although it does serve a purpose, that it is conceivable that someone may have been listed in one of those organizations and never actually have been affiliated with it. That is one limitation of this list, but still I think it is a source of explanation.

Senator FERGUSON. I will receive it with that explanation.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1334" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1334

Interlocking between the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy

Name	Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy		Institute of Pacific Relations
	Connection	Information source	Connection	Information source
Bidien, Charles	Consultant	Letterhead, May 21, 1948.	Writer	Far Eastern Survey.
Bisson, T. A	do	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	Member	International Secretariat Bien Report 1944-46.
Bodde, Derk	Writer	Spotlight, Apr. 5, 1950	Collaborator.	IPR book Chinese Ideas in the West, 1948 Far Eastern Survey, Nov. 16, 1949.
Brooke, Raymond D., pseudonym for Chen, Hanseng.	do	Spotlight, June 1949	Writer	Pacific Affairs, June 1937.
			Member	International Secretariat 1949.
Carlson, Evans F	Chairman	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	Writer	Far Eastern Survey, 1941.
Chapman, Abraham	Director	Letterhead, Apr. 18, 1951.	do	Pacific Affairs, June 1946.
Cholmeley, Elsie Fairfax	Editor	Spotlight, October 1949.	Member	International Secretariat 1935-41.
Deane, Hugh	Consultant	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	do	Letter, Oct. 10, 1940.
Epstein, Israel	do	do	Writer	IPR book Notes on Labor Problems in Nationalist China, 1948.
Field, Frederick V	Director	do	Secretary	American Council IPR, 1936-40.
Forman, Harrison	Consultant	do	Author	Book promoted, IPR bulletin Mar.9, 1945.
Friedman, Julian	Writer	Spotlight, April 1947	Member	Ninth IPR conference 1945.
Gayn, Mark	Book promoted.	Spotlight, October 1950.	Author	Book promoted, Pacific Affairs, April 1944.
Gerlach, Talitha	Member executive committee.	do	Supporter	Letters, Feb. 4 and 6, 1943.
Goodrich, L. Carrington	Sponsor	Dinner folder Apr. 3, 1946.	Trustee	American Council 1946, 1951 (annual reports 1946, 1951).
Goshal, Kumar	Consultant	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	Coauthor	IPR pamphlet Twentieth Century China, 1944.
Hersey, John	Reference	Circular, 1946, quoting New Yorker, May 5, 1946.	Trustee	American Council 1946, 1947, 1951, annual reports.
Jaffe, Philip	Consultant	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	Member	Seventh IPR Conference 1939.
Keeney, Philip O	Writer	Spotlight, July 1948, February 1950.	Speaker, writer.	Dec. 11, 1947. Far Eastern Survey Jan. 28, 1948.

Interlocking between the Institute of Pacific Relations and the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy—Continued

Name	Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy		Institute of Pacific Relations
	Connection	Information source	Connection	Information source
Lang, Olga	Recommended reading.	Spotlight, January 1947 p. 7.	Writer	Pacific Affairs 1940, p. 110.
Lattimore, Eleanore Frances.	do	do	IPR staff	May 1944–June 1947, W. L. Holland list.
Lindsay, Michael	Consultant	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	Writer	Far Eastern Survey April 1945; September 1947.
Mandel, William	Writer	Spotlight, Apr. 5, 1950	do	IPR book Soviet Far East and Central Asia, 1943.
McWilliams, Carey	Sponsor	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	do	IPR pamphlet: What About Our Japanese Americans? 1944.
Menefee, Selden	do	do	Member	Washington, D. C., 1946.
Melish, William H	do	do	Writer	Far Eastern Survey July 14, 1943.
Mitchell, Kate L	Consultant	do	Staff writer, editor.	Pacific Council and International Secretariat, 1934–41 Far Eastern Survey 1936, 1937, 1945.
Rosinger, Lawrence	Recommended reading.	Spotlight, January 1947, p. 7.
Salisbury, L. E	Consultant	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	Editor	Far Eastern Survey 1944–45.
Seeman, Bernard	do	do	Writer	IPR pamphlet: Cross Currents in the Philippines, 1946.
Smedley, Agnes	Writer	Spotlight, October 1950	Member	Carter testimony, p. 73.
Snow, Edgar	Member Executive Committee.	Spotlight, July 1948	Writer, member.	Pacific Affairs 1937–38, Carter testimony, p. 73.
Snow, Mrs. Edgar	Director	Letterhead, Feb. 11, 1947.	do	Far Eastern Survey Aug. 28, 1946, Carter testimony, p. 73.
Stein, Guenther	Consultant	do	do	Carter testimony, p. 73, Pacific Affairs, 1936–37, 1939, 1941, 1943, 1946, 1948. Far Eastern Survey 1942 1943, 1947
Stewart, Maxwell	do	Letterhead Feb. 11, 1947.	do	Carter testimony, p. 73 IPR pamphlet Wartime China, 1944.
Straus, Donald	Sponsor	do	Member	Board of Trustees, 1949 to 1951.
Strong, Anna L	Director	Spotlight June 1948	Member writer.	Carter testimony p. 73 Pacific Affairs June 1941.
Sues, Ilona Ralf	Consultant	Letterhead Feb. 11, 1947.	Author	Book promoted Far Eastern Survey Mar. 8, 1944.
Tewksbury, Donald	Writer	Spotlight October 1950	do	IPR book, Source Materials on Korean Politics and Ideologies, 1950.
Van Kleeck, Mary	Director	Letterhead Apr. 18, 1951.	Member writer.	Carter testimony p. 73 Pacific Affairs September 1936; June 1938.
Wallace, Henry A	Writer	Spotlight July 9, 1949	Member	Board of Trustees, 1946.
Watts, Richard, Jr	Director	Letterhead Feb. 11, 1947.	Writer	Far Eastern Survey Oct. 10, 1945.
Weltfish, Gene	Sponsor	Letterhead Feb. 14, 1947.	do	Far Eastern Survey Aug. 28, 1945.

NOTES

Spotlight refers to Far East Spotlight, published by Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy.
The Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy has been cited as subversive by Attorney General Tom Clark in a letter to the Loyalty Review Board, released April 27, 1949.
Far Eastern Survey, published biweekly by the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations.
Pacific Affairs, published quarterly by the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Mandel, there are a couple of items I would like to ask you about. After the name of Mark Gayn you have the expression "book promoted." Will you explain that?

Mr. MANDEL. That simply means that his book was favorably reviewed or recommended for reading purposes.

Mr. MORRIS. After the name of John Hersey you have another reference. What is the explanation of that reference? You have the word "reference."

Mr. MANDEL. There were quotations from some of his writings which were set aside as references.

Mr. MORRIS. Is that the only connection we have of John Hersey?

Mr. MANDEL. Yes; with the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy.

Mr. MORRIS. After Olga Lang and Eleanor Lattimore you have "recommended reading." Will you explain that?

Mr. MANDEL. Spotlight on the Far East, the official organ of the Committee for a Far Eastern Democratic Policy, there is a feature in each issue with recommended reading, and the books of Olga Lang and Eleanor Lattimore were recommended to the readers of the Spotlight.

Mr. MORRIS. But everything else, Mr. Mandel, is listed here as a result of your research in connection with the publications of the Committee for a Democratic Far Eastern Policy, and the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. The name "Lattimore" came up here. Did you ever know Owen Lattimore?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes, sir. I met Owen Lattimore on one occasion.

Senator FERGUSON. What was that occasion?

Mr. YERGAN. At a social gathering, a cocktail party in San Francisco, in the early 1940's. I think it was 1942 or 1943. It was at the home of Mrs. Chamberlain, whose daughter was at that time the wife of Frederick V. Field.

Senator FERGUSON. Was Field at the meeting?

Mr. YERGAN. He was not at the meeting.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether any known Communists were at that cocktail party?

Mr. MORRIS. Was Paul Robeson there?

Mr. YERGAN. Paul Robeson was there; a man by the name of Philip Lilienthal.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know him to be a Communist?

Mr. YERGAN. I did not, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. I asked you of any known Communists.

Mr .YERGAN. I am sorry. I was answering the second question. I don't know of any known Communists who were there.

Senator FERGUSON. Were there any people there who had worked with you as Communists?

Mr. YERGAN. Well, Robeson was there.

Senator FERGUSON. Field was not there, was he?

Mr. YERGAN. He was not there.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you know at that time that Robeson was a Communist?

Mr. YERGAN. No; but I knew that there never was any expression of opposition from him to the Communist point of view.

Senator FERGUSON. Then, you knew him to be under the discipline of the Communists?

Mr. YERGAN. I don't know, sir, the use in which I have the word "discipline."

Senator FERGUSON. Were you under——

Mr. YERGAN. I was never under the discipline in the sense that I was bound by them.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you actually comply with their directives?

Mr. YERGAN. Not always, and it is in that sense that I was not under their discipline.

Senator FERGUSON. You did have some freedom, then, of action, outside of the Communists; is that right?

Mr. YERGAN. I would like to say, sir, that I had complete freedom of action, so that it is for that reason that I take the responsibility for the mistakes that I made, because I did make a mistake in identifying myself with them, and I now have to take the responsibility for it.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, what was discussed at this meeting at which you were present and, according to your testimony, Paul Robeson, Mrs. Frederick V. Field, her mother, Philip Lilienthal, and Owen Lattimore, among others?

Mr. YERGAN. I would not say it was a discussion. It was a conversation. It was informal. The general question dealt with the issue in China: Why does America continue believing in Chiang Kai-shek? Why doesn't America see that the real exponents of democracy in China are the Communist forces? That was the tenor of the discussion.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there general uniformity of agreement on this?

Mr. YERGAN. I don't recall any opposition.

Mr. MORRIS. Can you recall, for instance, Owen Lattimore objecting to any of those sentiments you have just described?

Mr. YERGAN. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Then there was unanimous opinion of that discussion?

Mr. YERGAN. I would say so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have we established that Mr. Lattimore was there and heard it?

Mr. YERGAN. I think that is established.

Senator FERGUSON. You are satisfied that that was true?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Lattimore, when asked about this meeting, acknowledged that he was present, and that Paul Robeson was present, and that Dr. Max Yergan was present. He has not testified as to what the conversation was at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever meet Mrs. Lattimore?

Mr. YERGAN. No, sir: I've never met her.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, would you look at that "American Friends of the Chinese People" there?

Mr. YERGAN (complies). Yes, I've looked at that. I see the names here of several people who were asked to sign and support Communist projects. I see a lot of names that I think that they were pretty fortunate in getting to lend dignity to the thing, but I don't have any question about it being an effort on the part of Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, you got to know Frederick V. Field quite well, did you not?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you able to observe the degree of monitoring or supervision that the Communists exercised over his activities, during his activity within the Communist scope of endeavor?

Mr. YERGAN. There was a Miss Bachrach——

Mr. MORRIS. Is that Miss Marion Bachrach?

Mr. YERGAN. Marion Bachrach, who seemed to function as a political expert in such meetings as I attended where they were present.

Now, there was a meeting of the Council for Pan-American Democracy, and other meetings which discussed the colonial question in general, and she appeared as a sort of political expert there.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you say within the Communist sphere of things, it appeared to you that Marion Bachrach was superior to Frederick V. Field?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes; I would say that.

Mr. MORRIS. How about Alexander Trachtenberg? Did he monitor the actions of Frederick V. Field?

Mr. YERGAN. Not at those meetings, but at the meetings of the board of Jefferson School—I was on that board also—Mr. Trachtenberg's voice was usually the authoritative voice.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever teach at that school, or lecture?

Mr. YERGAN. I've lectured there.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether that was a Communist-dominated organization?

Mr. YERGAN. I would say, sir, that it was.

Mr. MORRIS. You have no doubt about it, do you?

Mr. YERGAN. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Dr. Yergan, did you know Mr. Lawrence Duggan?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes; I met him on one occasion.

Mr. MORRIS. What was that occasion?

Mr. YERGAN. At a meeting held at 23 West Twenty-sixth Street, dealing with Latin-American questions. This was a meeting that Fields' organization on Latin America held, and Lawrence Duggan was there, under the invitation of Field. They constituted a sort of panel which received and answered questions.

Mr. MORRIS. Lawrence Duggan at that time was an official in the United States State Department, was he not?

Mr. YERGAN. I think so.

Mr. MORRIS. He appeared to you to be a political intimate of Frederick V. Field at that time, did he not?

Mr. YERGAN. Yes; he appeared to be a very close friend of Field.

Mr. MORRIS. And what year was that, Dr. Yergan?

Mr. YERGAN. I'm not sure about the year, but I think that was 1944.

Mr. MORRIS. Was Frederick V. Field an important functionary as far as you could observe, of the Communist policy, with respect to far-eastern policy?

Mr. YERGAN. Oh, yes; I would say that he was, on the basis of what he wrote, and the fact that he wrote almost exclusively on far-eastern questions. I would say that he was set up and regarded as an authority.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, we have a few more exhibits. It will only take us 5 minutes if we can put them in the record at this time. These are things that have appeared in recent testimony, Senator, and have been called for as a general supplement to the paper—what is that paper?

Mr. MANDEL. This is an advertisement in China Today of October 1935, advertising a meeting, dated October 9, and showing as speakers Frederick V. Field, Maxwell Stewart, Earl Browder, Hansu Chan, and others.

I offer that for the record.

Mr. MORRIS. May that go into the record, Mr. Chairman?

Senator FERGUSON. I will receive it into the record.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1335" and is as follows:)

[Source: China Today, October 1935]

October 9th—Night Extraordinary

EARL BROWDER

MAXWELL S. STEWART,
Editor, The Nation.
WILLIAM GROPPER,
Famous Cartoonist and Nemesis of Emperor Hirohito.
DR. HANSHU CHAN,
Chairman of Editorial Board of China Today.
FREDERICK V. FIELD,
American Secretary of the Institute of Pacific Relations.
HARU MATSUI,
Well-known Japanese Woman Writer.
J. W. PHILLIPS—Chairman,
Exec. Sec'y, American Friends of the Chinese People, Editorial Board of China Today.

WILL GREET THE FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF CHINA TODAY AND CELEBRATE THE 24TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THE CHINESE REPUBLIC AT THE

"CHINA TODAY" BANQUET

Wednesday, October 9th, at 6:30 P. M., at Manhattan Lyceum, 66 E. 4th St., Bet. 2nd & 3rd Aves.

$1.25 PER PLATE

Genuine Native Chinese Food.
Native Chinese Instrument Program.
Famous Filipino Dance Orchestra.
William Gropper will draw what he really thinks of Emperor Hirohito of Japan.

SEE LARGEST MAP OF CHINA EVER MADE

To be used by speakers of the evening

35¢ Tickets Sold at Door Only, Will Admit Holder to Hear Speakers, Entertainment & Dance. Program Begins at 8 P. M.

Tickets for Banquet Obtainable in Advance at China Today, 168 W. 23rd St., and Worker's Bookshop, 50 E. 13th St.

RESERVE WEDNESDAY EV'G, OCTOBER 9

Mr. MANDEL. I have compiled a list of contributors to China Today from their magazine, who are also asociated with the Institute of Pacific Relations, and I offer this list, giving the name of the contributors and the source of the information.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that go into the record?

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1336" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1336

CHINA TODAY

Official Organ of the American Friends of the Chinese People

Contributors associated with the Institute of Pacific Relations

Name	China Today		Name	China Today
	Date	Page		Date	Page
Alley, Rewi	1/40	4, 13	Mitchell, Kate	2/41	4, 5
Barnett, Patricia Glover	6/40	4, 9	Moore, Harriet	9/39	4, 10
Barnett, Robert	5/40	4, 5	Norton, Robert	9/39	4, 8
Bertram, James	2/39	3, 8	Price, Harry B	9/39	4, 12
Bisson, T. A	2/39	3, 5	Pruitt, Ida	10/39	4, 12
Carlson, Evans F	1/40	4, 5	Rosinger, Lawrence K	8/40	4, 12
Chi, Ch'ao-ting (Hansu Chan)	11/35	26	Roth, Andrew	1/41	4, 13
Deane, Hugh	2/41	4, 9	Schoyer, B. Preston	8/40	4, 12
Fabyan, Eleanor B	11/39	4, 11	Snow, Edgar	4/41	4, 5
Field, Frederick V	12/41	2, 4	Stewart, Maxwell S	2/39	3
Goshal, Kumar	3/42	2, 6	Strong, Anna Louise	3/42	2, 6
Jaffe, Philip J	2/39	3	Thompson, Virginia	11/40	4, 12
Lattimore, Owen	5/41	4, 5	Yakhontoff, Victor	8/39	4, 12

NOTES

The American Friends of the Chinese People has been cited as a Communist front by the Special Committee on Un-American Activities in its Report, March 29, 1944, pages 40 and 147.

China Today has been cited as a magazine "published by the Communist front, Friends of the Chinese People, at 168 West Twenty-Third Street, New York City" by the California Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities, in its Report, 1948, page 198.

China Today has been mentioned by the Massachusetts House Committee on Un-American Activities in its Report, 1938, page 281, as distributed by the Communists' Progressive Book Shop in Boston, Mass.

TYPICAL QUOTATION FROM CHINA TODAY

"If the people of the United States know what is happening in China, if they know the glorious history of the Chinese Communists * * * there will rise a storm of protest against American and European aid for Chiang Kai-shek * * *. Thus is telling the story of China to our people, your magazine is helping to protect the future of the Soviet Union." (Waldo Frank in China Today, December 1934, page 42.)

Fred Brown, also known as Alpi, a Comintern operative, in an article in the COMMUNIST of March 193-, pages 261 and 262, has paid tribute to the work of the American Friends of the Chinese People as follows: 'Credit is due to the good work of the American Friends of the Chinese People."

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, on that point, let me ask Mr. Mandel a question:

Is it not true that what you have here is a list of persons whose names appear in China Today as contributors?

Mr. MANDEL. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no knowledge as to whether, in fact, although it is presumptive, that they are, in fact, the respective authors of the articles that appeared therein?

Mr. MANDEL. That is the way they appeared in the record.

Mr. MORRIS. What is next?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter from the Deputy Under Secretary of State dated November 23, 1951, signed "W. K. Scott, Acting Deputy Under Secretary" addressed to Senator McCarran.

Mr. MORRIS. What does that letter say?

Mr. MANDEL. This deals with a document known as the Economy of Communist North China, 1947–49, and identifies the document.

Mr. MORRIS. Have these documents been introduced into our record?

Mr. MANDEL. They have been introduced in introducing the front sheet of each one.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that identified in the record as a physical document taken from the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. MANDEL. It was.

Mr. MORRIS. Does this show it was not taken from the files of the institute, but, in fact, taken from the files of the State Department, and you made a mistake in identifying it?

Mr. MANDEL. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Mandel, is it a case of this letter showing that you made a mistake, or are you testifying that with this letter refreshing your memory, you know that you made a mistake.

Mr. MANDEL. The latter, that is, the documents were kept in a cabinet and were confused with IPR documents, and as a result of testimony, there seemed to be some disagreement so I checked on the matter and found that it was a document from the Department of State.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1337" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT 1337

DEPUTY UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, November 23, 1951.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: In Mr. Humelsine's absence, I should like to answer your letter to him of November 13 in regard to the photostatic copy of Economy of Communist North China, 1937–45 (No. 3024) which Mr. Humelsine sent you at your request, and also in regard to the summary appraisal of this study.

With reference to your questions concerning the summary appraisal quoted by Mr. Humelsine in his letter to you of November 6, this appraisal was prepared routinely at Mr. Humelsine's request after receiving your letter of October 3, and was quoted in full in his letter. Mr. Humelsine quoted this appraisal because he thought it might be helpful to you and your committee in evaluating the study. (Another copy of this appraisal is enclosed.)

The Department does not believe that individual(s) who drafted the appraisal should be identified. The disclosure of the authorship of internal memoranda by subordinate officers inevitably leads to inhibited and inconclusive writing and counsel on their part if they feel that they will be held accountable to unknown others in addition to their superiors. Similarly, the Department cannot release the name of the author of the study itself even though he left the Department in 1947.

In regard to the circulation of the document (Economy of Communist North China, 1937–45), a search of the Department's files has failed to reveal what circulation was made. Because the unsatisfactory nature of the study was clearly recognized at the time, however, it is probable that it was given a very limited circulation.

I regret that the Department is unable to furnish certain of the information requested.

Sincerely yours,

W. K. SCOTT,
Acting Deputy Under Secretary.

Enclosure.

APPRAISAL OF OCL NO. 3024, ECONOMY OF NORTH CHINA, 1937–45

The subject report, approximately 250 pages in length, was published in nine sections, the first describing the area of Chinese Communist control, the second summarizing Chinese Communist economic policies, and the remaining seven sections dealing with Chinese Communist policies in various fields such as agriculture, industry, labor, etc. According to the introduction, the series of reports was "to compromise a comprehensive analysis of economic conditions and policies in the Communist-held area of North China during the period of Japanese occupation. As thus defined, the studies will provide information on a stage of Communist economy which orginally evolved in the course of the anti-Japanese struggle and now forms the basis for the new economic stage ushered in by the Japanese surrender" (3024.1, p. 1).

When this report was undertaken, available information on this important subject was extremely limited, consisting largely of materials from Communist sources (Chinese Communist pronouncements, directives, and doctrinal statements). As a research paper, it suffers basically from the fact that this material is used with little critical evaluation and without proper appreciation of Communist political tactics. In consequence, the report tends to overstate Communist administrative and productive achievements in North China, the degree of popular support they enjoyed in the area, and to assign a "democratic" character to Chinese Communist economic and political policies during the war. Chinese Communist statements regarding their endorsement of moderate policies in the postwar period are presented uncritically. The fact that the Chinese Communists are real Communists tends to become blurred.

At best this report may be viewed as a somewhat sloppy and inadequately unqualified presentation of Communist policies based on Communist statements.

The flavor of the report can adequately be obtained by reading Section two, Summary of Economic Policies (3024.2).

Mr. MORRIS. What is the next document?

Mr. MANDEL. The name of Ordway Southard has come up in testimony. This is a clipping from the Daily Worker of August 20, 1952, page 3, showing him as a candidate for Governor on the Communist Party ticket.

Mr. MORRIS. The chairman of the preceding meeting requested that that go in the record.

Senator FERGUSON. It may be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1338" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT 1338

(Source: Daily Worker of August 20, 1942, p. 3)

THREE COMMUNISTS QUALIFY FOR ALABAMA ELECTION

(Special to the Daily Worker)

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., August 19.—Three candidates nominated by the Communist Party of Alabama have qualified to run in the general election No. 3, it was announced in the State capitol today.

The candidates are Mary Boggs Southard, for State Senator; Rob F. Hall, for Congress from the Ninth Congressional District: and Ordway Southard for Governor.

Mrs. Southard is district secretary of the Young Communist League. She was born in South Carolina 27 years ago and was reared in Birmingham. She graduated with highest honors from Phillips High School and Agnes Scott College.

Hall was born in Mississippi in 1906 and was reared in Mobile, Ala. Since 1935, he has been district secretary of the Communist Party.

Ordway Southard, 30, is a native of Cambridge, Mass., where his father, the late Dr. Ernest Southard held the chair of neuro-pathology in the Harvard School of Medicine. He is the grandson of former Governor Horace Austin of Minnesota one of the pioneer governors of that State. Southard has lived in Birmingham for the past 5 years and is District Daily Worker director.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the next one?

Mr. MANDEL. The next is a letter from the Chinese Embassy dealing with an organization known as Indusco, and the Chinese Embassy gives an analysis of the organization from their viewpoint.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, would you accept that into the record?

I want to call your attention here to what it is.

The Indusco is an organization that was concerned with bringing relief to certain organizations in China, and the staff requested the Chinese for an analysis, that is, the official Chinese Government, of that. I was wondering whether you would receive that into the record for just what it is?

Senator FERGUSON. I will receive it for what it is. It is an explanation from the Chinese Embassy.

Mr. MORRIS. It is over the signature of Wellington Koo to Senator McCarran.

Senator FERGUSON. That will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1339" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1339

CHINESE EMBASSY,
Washington, February 12, 1952.

Senator PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: In reply to your letter of January 19, I am sending along a study prepared by one of my staff members on the subject. I hope that the materials contained therein answer your question adequately.

With sincere good wishes,

Sincerely,

V. K. WELLINGTON KOO.

INDUSCO

The Chinese Industrial Cooperatives (Indusco, or C. I. C.) was organized in Hankow early in 1938, the second year of the Sino-Japanese War. Its founders were Rewi Alley, a New Zealander, and Mme. Sun Yat-sen.

The Indusco was nominally governed by a Board of Directors, with headquarters in Chungking. At its peak in 1940, there were 1,738 societies, with a total of 25,682 members.

The cooperative societies were financed by three main sources: (1) Chinese Government appropriations, (2) loans from the Farmers' Bank of China, and (3) private donations.

A considerable portion of private donations came from abroad, principally the United States. In 1939, an "International Committee for Chinese Industrial Cooperatives Production Relief Fund," usually known as the International Committee, was set up in Hong Kong, to receive funds donated from abroad and to send these funds to the different societies.

Donations from abroad during the war years, 1938–1945, totalled some CNC$140,800,000, of which CNC$118,200,000 came from the American Committee in Aid of Chinese Industrial Cooperatives (Amindusco) in New York, CNC$22,-180,000 from the British United Aid to China Fund, and CNC$400,000 from other miscellaneous sources. This compared with CNC$84,000,000 appropriated by the Chinese Government, and CNC$48,500,000 loaned by the Farmers' Bank of China. In other words, the finances of Indusco depended considerably from donations outside of China.

As originally conceived, Indusco was supposedly to operate in three broad regions of wartime China—the Northwest, the Southwest, and the Southeast. From the very beginning, however, attention was centered in the Northwest region, with Paochi, in Shensi Province as the key point of operation. Rewi Alley himself, for instance, was stationed there almost permanently. So was the Chinese secretary, Lu Kwang-mien (K. M. Lu).

The organizational pattern was that, at certain key points, a headquarters would be set up, which was surrounded by depots which served the cooperative workshops. As an example, Paochi was one of the headquarters, and Yenan (the wartime Chinese Communist capital) was one of the depots.

One of the main problems connected with the Indusco was its propaganda activities both in China and abroad. Rewi Alley himself became some sort of a prophet for social democracy. A bronze statue was made of him in London. American magazines featured him in numerous articles under such titles as "Alley, the Man." Books were written about Indusco, such as that by George Hogg entitled "I See a New China." Hollywood made a film about it. Many visitors came to the Paochi headquarters, including Ida Pruitt, Nym Wales, General Evans F. Carlson, Henry Luce, Clare Boothe Luce, the British Parliamentary Mission to China, Lady Cripps, and many, many others.

The propaganda exaggerated and distorted the facts. For instance, while there were only some 25,600 members, the general figure in circulation was that there were 50,000.

One of the propaganda stunts, originated by Rewi Alley and widely circulated by General Carlson, was to coin the Chinese phrase "Gung Ho," which was translated into "Work together." This was done because the Industrial Cooperatives in the Chinese language was known as Gung-yeh (meaning industrial) Ho-tso (meaning cooperatives), and for abbreviation purposes, like the alphabetical names of Washington government agencies, it was known as Gung Ho, a term which, like SHAPE, carried no particular meaning in itself.

But both Alley and Carlson saw fit to exploit this abbreviated term to mean "Work Together," which was ridiculous. They carried the term further to do propaganda in favor of the United Front (between the Chinese Government and the Communists), which was the Comintern policy at the time. The Indusco thereupon became a Communist propaganda agency, symbolized by its operation both in Nationalist and Communist territories.

It will be recalled that in 1938, when the Indusco was first set up, the Communists had pledged allegiance to the Chinese Government for joint prosecution of the war against the Japanese aggression. It was the period of the United Front.

However, as the war dragged on, the position of the Communists became increasingly recalcitrant, and an open break between the Chinese Government and Communists took place in 1942 in the famous incident of the New Fourth Army. It was also at this time that a serious schism began between the Indusco headquarters in Chungking and the local office headed by Rewi Alley in Paochi, which resulted in the termination of the services of Alley by the Chinese Government on September 21, 1942.

From then on, the Indusco gradually declined, although the international propaganda mills were still grinding out the usual stunts on its behalf.

In short, the Indusco was conceived as a means to speed up production in wartime on a cooperative basis. Unfortunately, those who championed it were politically inclined, and it soon came under the direction of men who preferred to exploit it as a propaganda agency for the so-called United Front; i. e., the working together of the Nationalists and the Communists. This followed the Comintern line, and efforts to divert it from that channel into its original conception brought only schism within the organization itself. The Communists, naturally, were in favor of the Indusco because it served their propaganda purposes. This was true especially of such men as General Evans F. Carlson, whose championship of "Gung Ho" in the United States was tireless until his death. It was equally apparent that, when the so-called United Front was no longer real in China, the Indusco turned against the Chinese Government, and apologists for Indusco, such as General Carlson, outspokenly attacked the Chinese Government. (General Carlson, for instance, was one of the sponsors of the three-day conference, October 18–20, 1946, in San Francisco, "to call upon our government to withdraw all United States armed forces from China, to cease arming and financing the Kuomintang, and to allow the Chinese people to settle their internal affairs in their own way." Other sponsors included Harry Bridges, Bartley Crum, Joseph Curran, Hugh de Lacy, Paul Robeson, Vito Marcantonio, Maud Russell, Guenther Stein, Frederick V. Field, Harrison Forman, etc.)

It is an ironic commentary that, when the Communists came to power in China, no effort at all was made to revive the Indusco. The propaganda agency had served its purpose, and served it well.

Mr. MORRIS. What is next?

Mr. MANDEL. This is a letter dated July 30, 1951, from the Postmaster General, showing the interchange of subscribers between China Today and Amerasia.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask you if you will introduce that into the record.

It says here:

This will acknowledge your letter of July 19 concerning China Today and Amerasia.

These publications were formerly admitted to the second class of mail matter. In a letter dated March 19, 1942, the publishers informed the postmaster of New York that issuance of China Today had ceased and that "the subscribers to this publication will be informed that the unexpired portion of their subscriptions will be covered by issues of Amerasia, which has assumed to responsibility for this list."

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received. Amerasia has been mentioned before.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1340" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1340

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington 25, D. C., July 30, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: This will acknowledge your letter of July 19 concerning China Today and Amerasia.

These publications were formerly admitted to the second class of mail matter. In a letter dated March 19, 1942, the publishers informed the postmaster of New York that issuance of China Today had ceased and that "the subscribers to this publication will be informed that the unexpired portion of their subscriptions will be covered by issues of Amerasia, which has assumed to responsibility for this list." The second-class mailing privilege of China Today was then revoked.

Our records indicate that the second-class mailing privilege accorded the publication Amerasia was canceled August 11, 1947, pursuant to a letter dated August 4, 1947, from the editor advising that that publication ceased publishing with the issue dated July 1947.

Sincerely yours,

J. M. DONALDSON, Postmaster General.

Mr. MORRIS. We have testimony that when Amerasia closed the Far Eastern Survey, which was a publication of the Institute of Pacific Relations, took over from them. This bears on the fact that when China Today closed its existence Amerasia took it over.

What is the next one?

Mr. MANDEL. The next is a letter dated July 13, 1951, addressed to Senator Pat McCarran from Robert Ramspeck, Chairman of the United States Civil Service Commission, giving the civil-service records of persons who have been named in our hearings. I can read those names.

Mr. MORRIS. Will they be admitted into the record? It is routine, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1341" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1341

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington 25, D. C., July 13, 1952.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Further reference is made to your letter of June 27, 1951, wherein you request information concerning thirteen persons who you state have been employed by the Civil Service Commission.

The specific questions asked in your letter concerning these individuals are as follows:

1. Are they still employed by the Civil Service Commission? If so, in what capacity?

2. Have they severed their employment with the Civil Service Commission? If any questions of loyalty were involved, would you please indicate? What were the circumstances of their severance?

The records of the Civil Service Commission show that although all of these individuals have been employed in the Federal service, none has been employed in any capacity at any time by the Civil Service Commission.

A full report showing the Federal service of each of the thirteen individuals you list is being furnished herewith for your information.

Julian R. Friedman was employed by the Department of State from September 2, 1943, until November 15, 1946, when his employment was terminated without prejudice. There is no record of subsequent Federal service by Mr. Friedman.

Thomas Arthur Bisson received an appointment as Principal Economic Analyst with the Board of Economic Warfare on January 22, 1942, in which position he served until July 10, 1943, when he resigned voluntarily. On October 4, 1945, Mr. Bisson was appointed to a position with the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, Department of War. His employment with that department was terminated on May 23, 1947, due to the completion of his contract. There is no record of subsequent Federal employment by Mr. Bisson.

Esther Caulkin Brunauer has been employed with the Department of State since March 8, 1944. In connection with her employment with that Department, Mrs. Brunauer was the subject of an investigation under the provisions of Executive Order 9835, as amended. As a result of this investigation, she has been suspended for security reasons.

Emile Despres was employed as a Senior Economist with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System from September 5, 1939, until he resigned on October 5, 1941. On October 6, 1941, he received an appointment with the Office of the Coordinator of Information, which agency was later transferred to the Office of Strategic Services. He was separated from his position with the latter agency on September 30, 1945, for transfer to the Department of State. Mr. Despres resigned from the Department of State on January 2, 1946. Later, he received a W. A. E. appointment as a Consultant with the Economic Cooperation Administration. His employment with that agency was terminated on November 12, 1948, upon completion of his assignment. There is no record of subsequent Federal employment by Mr. Despres.

Ellen Van Zyll De Jong Atkinson was employed by the War Department from October 22, 1941, to April 30, 1945, when she resigned. In connection with an application for a position with the Office of War Information, Mrs. Atkinson was the subject of an investigation as to her qualifications, including loyalty. Mrs. Atkinson was not appointed and the investigation of her was discontinued. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mrs. Atkinson's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of her loyalty has been resolved.

Michael Greenberg was appointed to a position with the Board of Economic Warfare on November 9, 1942. On July 7, 1944, he was transferred to the Foreign Economic Administration and on September 27, 1945, he was transferred to the Department of State. His employment was terminated due to reduction in force on June 15, 1946. In connection with his employment with the Foreign Economic Administration, an investigation of Mr. Greenberg was conducted by the Civil Service Commission to determine his general qualifications for Federal employment. As a result of this investigation, Mr. Greenberg was barred from competing in civil service examinations on March 7, 1947, because of questionable loyalty.

John N. Hazard was employed by the Office for Emergency Management from July 21, 1941, to July 7, 1944; with the Foreign Economic Administration from July 7, 1944, to December 12, 1945; and with the Department of State from December 12, 1945, to July 31, 1946, when he resigned to join the staff of Columbia University. He later received an appointment to the position of Attorney-Adviser with the Department of State on a W. A. E. basis. This employment was terminated on November 30, 1949, due to completion of assignment. In connection with this latter employment, an investigation of Mr. Hazard was initiated under the provisions of Executive Order 9835 but was discontinued when it was learned his employment with the Department of State had terminated. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mr. Hazard's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of his loyalty has been resolved.

Jefferson Franklin Ray was employed by the Office for Emergency Management from June 23, 1941 to February 1, 1944; by the Foreign Economic Administration from February 1, 1944 to September 7, 1945, when he resigned to accept a position with the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. On March 31, 1948 he received an appointment with the Department of State as a Foreign Affairs Specialist, in which position he served until March 18, 1949 when he resigned to accept a position in the foreign service with the Economic Cooperation Administration. Mr. Ray was employed with the latter agency until December 1, 1950 when he resigned. There is no record of subsequent Federal employment by Mr. Ray.

Michael Lee was employed from June 18, 1942 until August 5, 1943 with the Board of Economic Warfare; from August 5, 1943 to July 7, 1944 with the Office of Economic Warfare; from July 7, 1944 to December 1, 1944 with the Foreign Economic Administration; from December 1, 1944 to June 16, 1945 with the Office for Emergency Management; from June 16, 1945 to December 18, 1945 with the Foreign Economic Administration; and from December 18, 1945 until November 16, 1950 with the Department of Commerce. In connection with his employment with the Department of Commerce, Mr. Lee was the subject of an investigation under the provisions of Executive Order 9835. As a result of this investigation, Mr. Lee was suspended for an indefinite period on September 8, 1950 pending final decision on contemplated removal action under the provisions of Executive Order 9835. He resigned while under suspension. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mr. Lee's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of his loyalty has been resolved.

Charles Flato was employed with the Work Projects Administration from February 23, 1937 to July 13, 1937; with the Department of Agriculture from December 16, 1938, to March 15, 1939; with the National Labor Relations Board from March 16, 1939 to October 11, 1939; from October 12, 1939 to November 2, 1940 with the Department of Agriculture; with the Federal Security Agency from January 13, 1941 to January 31, 1941; with the Department of Commerce from February 1, 1941 to June 30, 1941; with the Federal Works Agency from June 30, 1941 to December 21, 1941; with the Office for Emergency Management from December 22, 1941 to October 6, 1942; with the Board of Economic Warfare from October 7, 1942 to September 25, 1943; with the Foreign Economic Administration from September 25, 1943 to March 17, 1945 and with the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion from March 17, 1945 to June 30, 1945. In connection with Mr. Flato's employment with the Office for Emergency Management, he was subject to an investigation by the Civil Service Commission to determine his general qualifications, including loyalty. As a result of this investigation, he was rated ineligible and on April 23, 1945, the Foreign Economic Administration was instructed to terminate his employment. That agency advised the Commission that Mr. Flato's employment had been terminated on March 16, 1945 by transfer to the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion. The latter agency was then advised of the facts in the case and Mr. Flato was removed from his position with the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion due to unsatisfactory investigative report.

Olga Lang was employed by the War Department from January 28, 1940, to January 8, 1949, when her services were terminated due to completion of employment agreement. There is no record of subsequent Federal employment by Miss Lang.

Lawrence K. Rosinger was employed by the Department of State as a Consultant (without compensation) from October 6 to 8, 1949. His employment was terminated due to completion of assignment. There is no record of subsequent Federal employment by Mr. Rosinger.

Harold Glasser was employed by the Department of Agriculture from May 1, 1936, to November 22, 1936; and with the Treasury Department from November 23, 1936, to December 31, 1947, when he resigned. In connection with his employment with the Treasury Department, Mr. Glasser was the subject of an investigation under the provisions of Executive Order No. 9835, but this investigation was discontinued when Mr. Glasser resigned. Precautionary measures were taken to prevent Mr. Glasser's reemployment in the Federal service at a later date until the question of his loyalty has been resolved.

You will note that in the reports given above on Julian R. Friedman, Thomas Arthur Bisson, Emile Despres, Jefferson Franklin Ray, Olga Lang, and Lawrence K. Rosinger, no reference is made of loyalty that may have been involved or the circumstances of their severance. The reason this information is not set forth is that the six individuals were either excepted employees or employees of the Economic Cooperation Administration, in which case the investigative reports were forwarded directly to the agency for consideration. All reports on persons occupying excepted positions or given absolute appointments prior to October 1, 1947, the effective date of Executive Order No. 9835, were adjudicated by the particular agency under the provisions of Executive Order No. 9300. Such reports would not come into the possession of the Civil Service Commission.

All reports of investigations on employees of the Economic Cooperation Administration are referred directly to that agency by virtue of the statute creating the Economic Cooperation Administration and do not fall within the jurisdiction of Executive Order No. 9835. Consequently, the Civil Service Commission would have no knowledge of a question of loyalty that may have been involved in the circumstances surrounding a separation from the Economic Cooperation Administration.

However, if any of these six individuals reenter the Federal service in any department or agency, other than the Economic Cooperation Administration or the Atomic Energy Commission, they will fall within the jurisdiction of Executive Order No. 9835, as amended, and a determination as to their loyalty to the Government of the United States will be made.

If I can be of further assistance to you at any time, please let me know.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT RAMSPECK, Chairman.

Mr. MANDEL. Finally, is a letter from the Treasury Department, signed by William W. Parsons, Administrative Assistant Secretary, dated August 31, 1951, giving the Treasury Department records of certain individuals who had been mentioned in the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Mr. MORRIS. One of the Senators requested that in part.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1342" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1342

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 31, 1951.

[SEAL. Administrative Assistant Secretary]

HON. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Internal Security Subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, Room 409 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Secretary asked me to reply to your letter of August 27, 1951, requesting data for the use of the Internal Security Subcommittee regarding the title and status during the period 1942 to 1945 of four former employees of the Treasury Department. The information you requested is indicated below:

Name	Date	Title
Harry Dexter White	Jan. 1, 1942	He was serving as Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury and Director of Monetary Research, Grade P-8, $9,000 per annum.
Do	Jan. 24, 1945	Appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury with compensation at the rate of $9,000 per annum. This appointment was made by the President and confirmed by the Senate.
Solomon Adler	Jan. 1, 1942	He was serving as Senior Economic Analyst, Grade P-5, $4,600 per annum, in the Division of Monetary Research.
Do	June 9, 1942	Promoted to Principal Economic Analyst, Grade P-6, $5,600 per annum. From the latter part of 1941 to February 19, 1943. Mr. Adler served as the Treasury Economic Adviser to the United States Member of the Chinese Stabilization Board.
Do	Feb. 19, 1943	His appointment in the Treasury was terminated as he was appointed by the Chinese Minister of Finance as the alternate American Member of the Chinese Stabilization Board.
Do	Mar. 1, 1944	He was reinstated in the Treasury as an Economic Analyst, Grade P-7, $6,500 per annum in the Division of Monetary Research.
Do	May 1, 1945	Promoted to the position of Treasury Attache in China and Far East, Grade P-8, $8,000 per annum.
V. Frank Coe	Jan. 1, 1942	He was serving as Assistant Director, Division of Monetary Research, Grade P-7, $7,000 per annum.
Do	Feb. 1, 1942	Transferred from the Treasury to the Board of Economic Warfare to serve as Assistant to the Executive Director. In November of 1943, he was appointed Assistant Administrator of the Foreign Economic Administration.
Do	Feb. 16, 1945	Transferred back to the Treasury as Director of Monetary Research, Grade P-8, $9,000 per annum.
Irving S. Friedman	Jan. 1, 1942	He was serving as Economic Analyst, Grade P-4, $3,800 per annum, in the Division of Monetary Research.
Do	June 9, 1942	Promoted to Senior Economic Analyst, Grade P-5, $4,600 per annum.
Do	Aug. 26, 1943	Promoted to Principal Economic Analyst, Grade P-6, $5,600 per annum.
Do	May 1, 1945	Promoted to Economic Analyst, Grade P-7, $6,500 per annum.

These employees are no longer with the Treasury Department.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) WILLIAM W. PARSONS.
Administrative Assistant Secretary.

Senator FERGUSON. I believe you have a short statement of two pages that you wanted to read or put in the record, Doctor?

Mr. YERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I will be quite satisfied to put it in the record.

Senator FERGUSON. I think you ought to give it to the press. It is a résumé of what you think about communism?

Mr. YERGAN. That's right, and I would like, Mr. Chairman, the record to show that I came voluntarily here today.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. YERGAN. I came here voluntarily today because I am appreciative of the service that this committee is rendering our country.

This statement, which I will hand over to the press, is a reflection of my views, with regard to the relation of communism and Communist agents, to the issues confronting Negroes and colonial peoples today.

Senator FERGUSON. Doctor, I will receive it in evidence as part of our record, and it will be passed to the press officially.

(The document referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1343" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 1343

(STATEMENT BY DR. MAX YERGAN)

It is my considered opinion that Communism, its agents and its dupes constitute one of the deadliest dangers to freedom, democracy, and therefore our country, today. It is for this reason that I appear voluntarily before this committee which is rendering vital service to our country in routing out and exposing the activities and influence of Communists in the most important aspects of our national life today. I testify with a sense of conscious pride in my American citizenship, my membership of the Negro race, and the fact that my three sons serve as officers in the United States Air Force.

My experience leads me to the strongest possible conviction that the Communist forces mean no good to Negroes in America, to the people of Africa, or to other hitherto underprivileged people who now seek and are on the threshold of a better life. I speak here out of an experience of nearly twenty years in Africa as an Executive of the Young Mens Christian Association, as a lecturer in Negro history at the College of the City of New York, and more recently as the founder of the Council on African Affairs, President of the National Negro Congress, and a less active member of a number of other organizations which by every test are quite accurately described as Communist fronts. I founded the Council on African Affairs, but to my everlasting shame I permitted the Communists to take control of it, and it is with a sense of shame also that I recall that I was among those duped by Communists and other organizations.

They look in vain who expect moral leadership or even wise political guidance from Communists for those who desire and work for an over-widening democracy.

I returned a few months ago from a visit to East Africa and India. In numerous conferences and public meetings I was glad to bear witness to two things: First, to my belief that American democracy is surely solving what many people a quarter of a century ago thought of as an insoluble national problem in America, and secondly, that the reactionary Communist force of today not only is unable to advance the cause of human progress but, because of the very nature of this vicious force, is the greatest stumbling block in the way of human progress.

Surely Negroes, other minorities, along with all American people, know that the Communists have nothing to contribute to the society and to the life which we are trying to build here. We are not perfect but we do have the opportunity to work continuously toward something better. I say without hesitation to Negroes in America, to my people in Africa, shun Communism and its agents as one shuns poison. This is a force that threatens the cherished institutions of our country and would destroy them as it would destroy our country. It is for this reason that I refer to it not only as a force of evil, of an unprincipled character, but a conspiracy against human freedom and the deadliest enemy of the United States.

Senator FERGUSON. We want to thank you for appearing here voluntarily, and explaining your part, and what the Communists had to do in relation to activities here in the United States, how they subverted certain good causes for their own use and benefit, and under the guise of being humanitarians, they were attempting to take over in their own behalf, for Communists and for Russia.

You feel that they have done that?

Mr. YERGAN. I do. I agree fully with what you have said, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Thank you, Doctor.

(Whereupon, at 5 p. m. the hearing was recessed, subject to the call of the chairman.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE, SUBCOMMITTEE
TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS, OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to recess, at 2:45 p. m., in room 424 of the Senate Office Building, Senator Homer Ferguson, presiding.

Present: Senator Ferguson.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; and Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel.

Senator Ferguson. The committee will come to order.

Will you raise your right hand and be sworn. You do solemnly swear that in the matter now pending before this committee, being a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, that you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do.

TESTIMONY OF DAVID WEINTRAUB, DIRECTOR OF ECONOMIC STABILITY AND DEVELOPMENT, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC AFFAIRS, UNITED NATIONS, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Senator FERGUSON. State your full name and address.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. David Weintraub, 34 West Seventy-fourth Street, New York City.

Senator FERGUSON. You are an official of the United Nations Organization?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. What is your official title?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Director of the Division of Economic Stability and Department of Economic Affairs.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you ever connected with the IPR in any way?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I was not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever attend any IPR meetings?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I was informed by you that a meeting I had attended was called a study group of the IPR. I attended that meeting as an official of the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. For the record, Mr. Weintraub, I want to state that you were not informed by me nor by anyone else that any meeting you attended was called a study group of the IPR. You were asked if you attended a discussion group on United Nations cooperation sponsored by the United Nations on March 15, and you said you did. The use of the words "study group" was your own, is that a fact?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. The record will speak, of course, of the executive session.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that that particular portion of the colloquy that took place in the executive session this morning be entered in this record at this point.

Senator FERGUSON. It will.

Mr. SOURWINE. As counsel will designate when it is transcribed.

Senator FERGUSON. And it will speak for itself.

Mr. SOURWINE. If the Chair will include that order to cover all of the answers and questions this morning with regard to that particular meeting we need not go further into that right now.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be made a part of the record.

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1344A" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT 1344A

(The portion of executive session testimony of May 15, 1952, of David Weintraub referred to above appears as follows:)

Mr. SOURWINE. I have explained to the witness our procedure of holding an executive session first, and thereafter going into public session. I assured him we would try to do it all today so he could go back to New York.

Were you ever a member of the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever connected with the Institute of Pacific Relations in any way?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever attend any of its meetings?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you attend a discussion group on United Nations Cooperation under auspices of IPR on March 15, 1943?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have any memory of it at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think I remember attending a meeting which was organized in OFRAR of the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was that word?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation of the State Department. But I was at the State Department at the time, and it was attended by a white-haired gentleman whose name slips me, who was with IPR, but I do not know that it was a study group of the IPR or what it was.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember anyone else who attended it, sir?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. A lady Congressman, I remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. Pardon?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. A lady Congresswoman, whose name I don't remember.

Senator FERGUSON. Was she on the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I could not say.

Senator WATKINS. Can you describe her?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know what State she was from?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Ohio comes to my mind.

Senator FERGUSON. Would it be Mrs. Bolton?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think so.

Senator FERGUSON. From Cleveland?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. She is on the Foreign Relations Committee of the House. I just assumed that is who it would be, because of her connection with the Foreign Relations Committee. She does come from Cleveland.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you remember any others who were at that meeting?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was a very small group, as I recall it.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was Dr. Frank Coe there?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Could be; yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Michael Greenberg?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not recall.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Edward C. Carter?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Carter is the white-haired gentleman I had in mind.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. W. L. Holland, of the IPR?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. William Johnstone?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. L. B. Pearson, then Minister Counselor of the Canadian Legation?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. It could be.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Rifat Tirana, member of the Board of Economic Warfare?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is possible.
Mr. MORRIS. Did you know Mr. Pearson?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. MORRIS. How well did you know him in those days?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I knew him in those days.
Mr. MORRIS. You know him now?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Len DeCaux, was he there?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Mr. DeCaux?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I know the name, but I don't think I know him.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Mr. Chairman, I do not want it to appear in the record that I am in any way noncooperative.

Mr. SOURWINE. Of course not.

Senator FERGUSON. Every witness has a right to state what he understood the testimony to be.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was just I don't recall having been aware of that meeting as being a study group of the IPR. It may well have been that. I attended it as I recall, and it is now 9 years ago, as a member of the staff of the Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation who was in charge of research work for that office. As I recall it, I was asked to attend it. I don't remember any more by whom, and I regarded it as part of my duty to attend it. I have no objection to its having been a study group of the IPR, it is just that my recollection is not quite so sharp and that is all I meant to indicate.

Senator FERGUSON. You attended it as an official of the United States Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. And took part in it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. I am assuming that you do not remember the facts, what you learned there.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. You are quite right.

Senator FERGUSON. Then it might have been beneficial or detrimental to the United States.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I doubt very much that it was detrimental to the United States in view of the fact that Congresswoman Bolton was there.

Senator FERGUSON. I meant for your job as to whether or not it gave you any information.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It presumably helped me in my job. I just don't remember what transpired at that meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Irving Kaplan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was he employed under you at the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with his employment by the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell the committee about that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Sometime in 1947 Mr. Kaplan got in touch with me. We talked about his availability for employment. He indicated that he might become available sometime in the future for employment in the United Nations. I told him that when he was, to let me know. He let me know eventually and I sent him around to see several people and eventually he was employed by the United Nations.

Senator FERGUSON. What was he working at, at the time you had that conversation about the fact that he might be available?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. If I recollect correctly he was working on something that had to do with wage legislation or annual wages or something like that.

Senator FERGUSON. For the United States Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall whether it was the United States Government. To the best of my recollection that was on some project that was headed by Mr. Murray Lattimer, but I don't know whether it was a governmental project or not. It probably was.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever know him as a Government employee?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I did.

Senator FERGUSON. How long had you known him as a Government employee?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Since 1935.

Senator FERGUSON. He was a Government employee from 1935 up until about the time he went with the United Nations.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. So far as I know, I don't know his entire career but I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Weintraub, did you have anything to do with the appointment of Owen Lattimore as head of the United Nations mission to Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell the committee the circumstances of Mr. Lattimore's selection and appointment to that post.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The United Nations received a request for technical assistance from the Government of Afghanistan.

Senator FERGUSON. That was economic assistance?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Technical assistance for economic development of Afghanistan. After discussing this request with my superior, Mr. David Owen, and with representatives of the Afghanistan Government it was decided by Mr. Owen that before any technical assistance could be extended, a further investigation on the spot in Afghanistan would be necessary and that a mission would be organized for that purpose, and we then cast about for a person qualified to head that kind of mission.

Senator FERGUSON. What is Mr. Owen's first name? You see, we have an Owen Lattimore and Mr. Owen, so we had better be careful to keep this record straight.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. David Owen.

Senator FERGUSON. Is he an American citizen?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; he is a subject of the United Kingdom.

We then tried to think of properly qualified persons and Mr. Owen Lattimore's name was suggested by me as a possible qualified person for that post.

Mr. SOURWINE. On what bases did you make that suggestion, Mr. Weintraub?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. On the bases of general knowledge of Mr. Lattimore's work as a political scientist.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know him at the time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I had never met him before.

Mr. SOURWINE. Had you met him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I had never met Mr. Lattimore before.

Mr. SOURWINE. Had anyone suggested to you that he would be suitable for the job or for a job of this kind or for employment by the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect anyone having suggested that to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You just chose his name yourself?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know him as an expert in Afghanistan matters?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I knew of him only as an expert in general far-eastern affairs.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know whether he had written anything about Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know whether he had been in Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you consider Afghanistan a far-eastern nation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Technically Afghanistan is classified as a middle-eastern country.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you consider Afghanistan to be a nation within the sphere of Mr. Lattimore's specialty or his expertness?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I thought so; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Why?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Because I knew that Mr. Lattimore had spent considerable time in countries adjoining Afghanistan and I believed that the general condition, mode of living, were sufficiently similar to feel that Mr. Lattimore could handle that job.

Mr. SOURWINE. What countries adjoining Afghanistan had Mr. Lattimore been in, to your knowledge?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Mongolia.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where does Mongolia join Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I will have to ask for a map to help me on that. I just don't have that clearly enough in my mind.

Senator FERGUSON. You had been in neither one?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I had been in neither one.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think Mongolia does adjoin Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am sorry; I would like to have a look at a map at this point.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it your impression at the time you picked Mr. Lattimore that Mongolia did adjoin Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was Mongolia, Tibet.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was Mr. Lattimore in Tibet?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Certain parts of India. I couldn't tell you when Mr. Lattimore was in Tibet.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know if he was ever in Tibet?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know it for a fact.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was he in India?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know Mr. Lattimore well enough to know about his travels.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think the customs and mores of Mongolia are similar to those of Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I would rather not answer that kind of question because——

Mr. SOURWINE. Don't you have an opinion on that subject? If you don't, you need only to say so.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't have an opinion on the subject.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have an opinion on the subject as to whether the customs, mores, of India are similar to those of Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is the same kind of question that I would rather not answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have an opinion on the subject?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Sir, I have a general view that the economic condition and developments of many countries in that part of the world are rather primitive and in their primitiveness have many similarities.

Senator FERGUSON. Therefore you think that a political scientist, one that had to do with politics, would be the proper man to send in to determine what economic aid they ought to have and what should be done?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To my way of looking at it, a political scientist is aware of the relationships between economic, social, and political problems. And to my knowledge Mr. Lattimore is that kind of political scientist.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you saying now that you selected Mr. Lattimore because he was an able political economist rather than because he was an expert in the area to which you were sending him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; because he was an expert in the general area to which we were sending him.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the general area of Afghanistan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; that general area which includes those other countries that I have mentioned.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the general area which includes Mongolia, India, and Afghanistan and Tibet?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is a pretty good-sized general area.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is a good-sized general area.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is an expert in that whole general area?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To my view he was sufficiently expert for me to make the suggestion to Mr. David Owen and I did not finally appoint him, it was not for me to appoint him. The judgments of four other people came into that after a discussion with Mr. Lattimore.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you initiated it, you initiated the suggestion?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Without a prompting from anyone or suggestion from anyone?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Without any prompting or suggestion from anyone that I can recall.

Mr. SOURWINE. And solely on the basis of your feeling that Mr. Lattimore was an expert in this general area?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. My feeling that Mr. Lattimore was a sufficiently expert person in this general area to be looked——

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know where he was employed at the time you suggested his name?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I knew that he was with the Johns Hopkins University.

Senator FERGUSON. How did you know that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is a kind of fact that people pick up and know. One knows that Owen Lattimore is associated with Johns Hopkins.

Senator FERGUSON. Had you read his book?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I had read some parts of books that he had written. I remember looking into one dealing with China, if I remember correctly.

Senator FERGUSON. You thought that would qualify him if he knew about China?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I thought that he was a person whose qualification ought to be looked into by my boss and if he wanted, after that, to appoint him, that was up to him.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know which side, if any, he was on in the China problem? When did this happen? When did you suggest his name?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Early in 1951, I believe it was. No; I think it must have been early in 1950.

Senator FERGUSON. 1950. Had you known at that time which side, if any, Owen Lattimore was on in the Chinese problem, the Chinese conflict.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Senator FERGUSON. Didn't you know he was broadcasting and issuing statements and so forth on one side or the other?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect, sir, that I knew at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. What was it that caused you to name Lattimore for this job? What was there in the book or anywhere that his name came to you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is a very difficult question to answer, Senator.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you contact the State Department?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Would that not have been one of the places to contact if there was an American that had knowledge of Afghanistan or that territory that they thought you might contact and see who would do it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It might have been one of the places; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you contact any other government as to whether or not they had a subject or a citizen that might have done that job?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Out of a clear sky, the name of Owen Lattimore came along?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know how names occur to one, sir. I only recollect that when the question arose, Mr. David Owen and I considered whom we might possibly consider for the job, that the name of Owen Lattimore occurred to me. I suggested that and it was felt that it was sufficiently interesting to have a chat with him to find out what he thought of it, to find out whether he thought he might be able to do it. We then had a meeting with him. Mr. Owen requested that he come to a luncheon which was attended by Mr. Owen and myself, two other members of the staff of the United Nations, and over luncheon we discussed it and after that Mr. Owen came to the conclusion that Mr. Lattimore would do for that job.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you contact Lattimore?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I may have. If I did it was at Mr. Owen's request to do so.

Senator FERGUSON. You think you may have?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think I may have talked to him.

Senator FERGUSON. As a member of the United Nations staff, it wouldn't have made any difference to you which side of the dispute he was on in China between the Chiang Kai-shek government and the Communist government, that would not have made any difference, would it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know that question ever arose actually.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I meant, you were not concerned really with the question of loyalty to any country or anything like that.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. We were concerned with Lattimore's technical ability to do the job.

Senator FERGUSON. That is right, and not any question as to what he may have represented in his thinking.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think that would be a correct way of describing it, using him as a technician.

Senator FERGUSON. If you had thought of a man who was then back of the iron curtain, say a Russian, you would not have hesitated to suggest his name to go there as the head, because those problems are not involved in your work in the United Nations, are they?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They are not involved.

Senator FERGUSON. The question of whether a man is a Communist or not a Communist is not involved in your work in the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That explains the situation. You just selected the man that you thought could do it. Is that right?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, that is correct, we selected the man we thought could do the kind of job we had.

May I interject, Senator, just so there is no misunderstanding in the matter. The United Nations has since then dispatched many missions to many other countries, and I think it is rather rare that a chief of a mission, which is what Lattimore was supposed to be, is selected primarily for his abilities as an economist. The chiefs of missions of the United Nations are frequently lawyers, judges, sociologists. Their qualifications to a very considerable extent are judged in terms of their ability to deal with high government officials. And it is assumed that chiefs of missions have as their assistants technicians and specialists, and for that reason the mission that was headed by Mr. Lattimore was a mission of several people, including among them an engineer, an economist——

Senator FERGUSON. Where did you get your staff? From what countries? America was represented by Lattimore. What others?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. An Englishman went along as the economist. I believe either an Australian or South African went along as an engineer. I forget exactly what his nationality was. I don't recollect offhand who the other members were.

Senator FERGUSON. How do you pick these men up from these countries? Do you do that through their foreign office or how do you get them?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It varies. Rarely are people picked through foreign offices.

Senator FERGUSON. In fact you take an oath that you will not be subject to the dictation or the influence of any other country or any nation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct, we take an oath that we are not subject to orders of any other nation.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean of any nation, not of any other nation.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct, of any single nation; that is correct. I don't remember the exact words of the oath but that is certainly the sense of it.

Mr. SOURWINE. The substance of it is that you will take orders only from the Secretariat of the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you talk to Mr. Lattimore either in person or over the telephone before you made your suggestion to Mr. Owen?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Not at any time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not before I have made the suggestion to Mr. Owen. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, after this luncheon at which it was discussed, did you tell Mr. Lattimore or indicate to him that he was going to be appointed to head that mission?

Mr. WEINTRAUR. I don's recollect that I did but I may have. As I told you, my superior, Mr. Owen, was there. My recollection is that in one way or another Mr. Lattimore was left with the impression that he was certainly seriously being considered for that appointment and he was subsequently notified.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who notified him, do you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect. He was probably notified by letter. He was possibly notified by telephone that the letter was coming and although I certainly do not recollect that I notified him it is possible that it was I.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you speak with him in person or over the telephone at any time after that luncheon?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Tell us about the occasion or occasions when you did so.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I recollect one occasion only at the moment. Mr. Lattimore came to Lake Success for the purpose of making arrangements for that mission, and he came to my office, and we spent a couple of hours talking about the mission, the organization.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just the two of you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, no. Mr. Caustin was there.

Mr. SOURWINE. He had been at the luncheon also, had he not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is your deputy?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is my deputy.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who else was there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was a rather small group, I don't recall all of them, but Mr. Rosenborg was there.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you spell that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. R-o-s-e-n-b-o-r-g.

Mr. SOURWINE. From what country is he a national?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is a Swede.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he a deputy to Mr. Owen?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is, I believe, called a special assistant to Mr. Owen.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who else was there? This is the meeting at Lake Success after Mr. Lattimore had the designation to head the mission?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. Was Mr. Kaplan there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, Mr. Kaplan was not there.

Senator FERGUSON. Did his work take him into this field at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Senator FERGUSON. It would not take him in there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, it would not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Kaplan have anything to do with the selection or appointment of Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, he did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Or briefing Mr. Lattimore on this matter?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether Mr. Kaplan ever met with Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he ever meet with Mr. Lattimore in your presence?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you remember anyone besides Mr. Rosenborg who was at this meeting in Lake Success?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am trying to recollect.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is, other than Mr. Rosenborg and Mr. Caustin.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I couldn't swear to it, but I believe a Mr. Ed Henson was there.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where is he from?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is an American.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is on the United Nations staff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is.

Mr. SOURWINE. In what capacity?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I couldn't tell you exactly. He is now a member of the staff of the Technical Assistance Staff of the United Nations, but I couldn't really describe it.

Mr. SOURWINE. At that time he was also a member of the same staff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. At that time he was a member of my staff. There was no Technical Assistance Administration in existence at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. How much was Lattimore paid for this mission?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I couldn't answer that exactly.

Senator FERGUSON. How did they pay him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Again I don't think I could answer it exactly, but it is likely to have been a specified amount per day.

Senator FERGUSON. About what did they average, those kind of jobs, per day?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Somewhere between $40 and $50 per day.

Senator FERGUSON. And expenses?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Plus any other expenses.

Senator FERGUSON. And that would include transportation and meals and, everything, traveling?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I wouldn't care to specify precisely what it includes. It includes what per diems normally include.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. And travel expenses.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, the $40 per day is compensation, that is not per diem.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Salary.

Senator FERGUSON. Five- or six-day week, or seven?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am again afraid I couldn't answer that exactly. Normally one is paid when actually employed, but draws per diem on week ends. I couldn't tell you exactly what that arrangement was.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know approximately how much Mr. Lattimore received for this mission?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I do not. One could try and estimate it roughly, but I just don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he explain how he could get away from his teaching to make a mission like this?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I recall it, it was his problem rather than our problem.

Senator FERGUSON. But did he explain that he would have to get a leave of absence, was that understood?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I suppose it was understood that he would have to get permission from his university to leave unless he was free during that period anyhow, but I just couldn't answer that one exactly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that all on that subject?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. So that the record may contain your background, sir, I would like to go over very briefly what we went over in the executive session this morning.

You were born February 14, 1904, in Kozlow, K-o-z-l-o-w?

Mr. WIENTRAUB. Right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Austria-Poland?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Right.

Mr. SOURWINE. What does that mean, it was Austria then, Poland now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I suppose since you have it on your record, what it must mean when I was born it was Austria, when I left it was Austria. Subsequently after the First World War that part became Poland, and that is what I suppose your notation means.

Mr. SOURWINE. I see. Where did you receive your early education?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In Vienna, Austria, and in New York City high schools and universities.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you come to the United States?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In 1921.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were at that time 17 years old?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I must have been.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were naturalized a United States citizen in the eastern district of New York on July 3, 1928?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You attended eastern district high school in Brooklyn and the Washington Square school?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. CCNY?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Acquiring a B. S. degree from CCNY in 1928?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. And attended at Columbia University, majoring in economics and receiving your M. A. in 1932 or 1933?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe it was 1932.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you did get an M. A. degree from Columbia?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. You started to work for the Government when?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think it was July or thereabouts of 1933.

Senator FERGUSON. Was that right after you graduated or did you do something else for a year?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did something else for a year.

Senator FERGUSON. What was it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I worked for the National Bureau of Economic Research.

Senator FERGUSON. Where was that located?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Located in New York City. That is a private nonprofit research organization, and I was research assistant there.

Mr. SOURWINE. During that time did you ever work for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, just prior to coming to Washington I did a 1 or 2 weeks' special job for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, where, I might add, I was, so to speak, on loan from the National Bureau of Economic Research, and the only payment I received, if I remember, was reimbursement for expenses.

The incident came about because in the National Bureau of Economic Research Dr. Leo Wolman was my superior.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that Leo or Louie?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Leo, professor of economics at Columbia University, L-e-o Wolman, W-o-l-m-a-n. Professor Wolman was simultaneously the director of research for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers at that time, serving with the NRA in Washington. I was asked to assist Mr. Sidney Hillman in preparation of a brief for the NRA.

Mr. SOURWINE. To assist Mr. Sidney Hillman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was for a period of about 2 weeks?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Approximately.

Mr. SOURWINE. There was a longer period, however, was there not, when you physically worked in the quarters of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, because as an employee of the National Bureau of Economic Research I was required to work in close proximity to Dr. Wolman, who spent most of his time at the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and an office was assigned to me in the building of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

Mr. SOURWINE. During that period of time, or most of it, were you in fact working on a project for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I was during that period working on a project for the Bureau of Economic Research.

Mr. SOURWINE. It had nothing to do with the Amalgated Clothing Workers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It had nothing to do with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Professor Wolman assist you to get into Government service?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, he did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you tell us about that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I recollect it, Professor Wolman called me from Washington one day and suggested that I come up to Washington. When I came he told me that Mr. Harry Hopkins was looking for an assistant, and would I go up and see Mr. Hopkins. I did, and I was subsequently asked to join the staff of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration for what was supposed to be a temporary period of 6 months, and I requested leave of absence from the National Bureau of Economic Research for that purpose, and that was the beginning of my governmental career.

Senator FERGUSON. It is a sign that once you get in temporarily you cannot get out, is that it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well——

Mr. SOURWINE. Bringing this up chronologically, sir.

I beg your pardon, I do not think the witness had a chance to answer.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you went from the United States Government in 1944 into the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not quite. From the Government I went to UNRRA in early 1944, I don't remember the exact date.

Mr. SOURWINE. Going back to 1930 to keep this chronological, were you ever an organizer for the Young Communist League?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever hold any other job with the Young Communist League?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you a member?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were a member of the Young Socialist League?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. That had no connection with the Young Communist League?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. And never was merged with it or associated with it as far as you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were in 1933 an instructor in economics at CCNY?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. In 1933 you were a statistician with the FERA in Washington?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. 1933 to 1941 you were Director of the National Research Project on Reemployment Opportunities and Recent Changes in Industrial Techniques of the Work Projects Administration?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. In Washington?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where were you at that time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In Philadelphia.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now how long did that last?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Until I was asked to joint the staff of the War Production Board.

Mr. SOURWINE. Which was in what year

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Which was, I believe, September or October of 1941.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever defend the Russian purges of 1936 and 1937?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever maintain that the Russian purges were necessary?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever state that you saw nothing wrong with the Russian purges of 1936 and 1937?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever study that problem?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not seriously.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, did you study it at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, I read about it in the newspapers.

Senator FERGUSON. What conclusion did you come to?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, I don't know that I came to any special conclusions except that it was a very depressing affair, something like that. I don't recollect any more.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever defend the Stalin-Hitler Pact of 1939?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever take the position that Stalin was fully justified in agreeing to such a pact?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you economic adviser for the Redistribution Division of the War Production Board, 1941 to 1943?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you Chief of the Division of Studies and Reports, Office of the Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation Operations, United States Department of State, in 1943?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I was.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was briefly for a period of months, was it not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was from very early in 1943 until that staff was merged into UNNRA, which was at the beginning of 1944.

Mr. SOURWINE. In 1943 you were assigned as adviser to the Director General at the First Council Session of the United Nations Relief meeting in Atlantic City?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I was.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who was Director General at the time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, now Senator Lehman.

Mr. SOURWINE. You never returned to the State Department after that, did you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is, you went over to UNRRA on assignment first and then subsequently shifted over to the UNRRA payroll?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Morris Rosenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that the same Rosenthal who was formerly in charge of the Director of Imports Office of the Foreign Economic Administration?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know where he is now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Vaguely I think he is in some import business, but I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is out of Government as far as you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. So far as I know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever assist Mr. Rosenthal to secure employment or promotion in the Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Murray Lattimer?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that the same Murray Lattimer who was employed in 1943 with the Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabiliation Operation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know where he is now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Again vaguely I understand he is in private business.

Mr. SOURWINE. Out of the Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Out of the Government.

Mr. MORRIS. Is his wife's name Eleanor, do you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know.

Mr. MORRIS. Murray Lattimer is different from the other man we have been discussing. There was some confusion in our record at one time, Senator.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have a close association, social or business, with either Morris Rosenthal or Murray Lattimer?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. None with Morris Rosenthal.[3] With Murray Lattimer, yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you tell us about that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I was employed by the Industrial Relations Counselors in New York some time I think the end of 1929, early 1930, as a research assistant, and Murray Lattimer was a member of that staff, and although I did not work for him there, I did meet him several times right there in the office.

The next association with Murray Lattimer was when I was director of this national research project that you mentioned, and one of the activities of that project involved some work which was to be done by the staff of the Railroad Retirement Board, and that was probably sometime in 1936 or 1937.

---

[3]Mr. Weintraub in a letter dated May 22, 1952, said: "I appear to have said, 'none with Morris Rosenthal.' I meant to say, 'not with Morris Rosenthal.' As my other testimony showed I did have some business association with Rosenthal."

The next association was in the Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation in the State Department when Mr. Murray Lattimer became one of the assistants to Governor Lehman. We were both there as members of the staff of the Office of Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation, OFRRO, which was headed by Governor Lehman.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did your association with him cease?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think when he left OFRRO.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your association then was wholly in a business way?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now did you ever assist Mr. Lattimer to gain employment or promotion in the Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I shouldn't think so; he was always in positions much superior to mine.

Mr. SOURWINE. To your knowledge did he ever assist you to gain promotions or positions in the Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were Secretary of the Committee on Supplies of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration in 1944?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. That last group of questions was about Lattimer, L-a-t-t-i-m-e-r.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is correct. You were Chief of the Bureau of Supply of UNRRA from 1945 into 1946?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You became Director of the Division of Economic Stability and Development, Department of Economic Affairs of the United Nations in September 1946?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You still hold that position?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that you have been under consideration for promotion within the United Nations organization?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Very vaguely. I understood that I might possibly be promoted to a vacancy.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you in 1951 attend a United Nations conference in Chile?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you returned from that conference in April of 1951?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you return before the conference was concluded?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I believe I left hours after the conference was concluded.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you hurry back, would you say?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I tried to hurry back.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was there any particular reason why you were hurrying back?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I had a lot of work to do.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did any of that work involve in any way any persons who had been dismissed or separated from the United Nations or were about to be dismissed or separated from the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you in 1951 or thereafter take an active part in protesting against the dismissals or separations of United Nations employees?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mary Jane Keany?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know the person?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I saw the person.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know her yourself?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever take any part in protesting the dismissal or separation from the United Nations of Mary Jane Keany?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever know she was going to be dismissed?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was a matter of newspaper talk and general discussion; yes.

Senator FERGUSON. That is all you knew about it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is all.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had no information about it except from the newspapers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. There was some gossip in the corridors.

Mr. SOURWINE. Otherwise, you had no information?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you take sides?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever express yourself on it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Benedict Solomon Alper?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; again, simply as a name that was talked about.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Alper was employed by the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And was dismissed?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you take part in protesting his dismissal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know John Picon, P-i-c-o-n?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, again, only as a name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Picon was employed by the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that he was dismissed?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you take any action in any way with regard to his dismissal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you protest it? Excuse me.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I certainly did not protest it. I have a vague recollection that Picon is a woman rather than a man, and that is the reason for my hesitation.

Mr. SOURWINE. The name as I have it is spelled J-e-a-n; that might be a woman, of course.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I merely wanted to explain my hesitation in replying.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know why they were dismissed?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No. These names became cases before a board, and there were some papers circulated as to the hearing, and in those papers some of those names were stated.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with the board?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. With the papers.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. What were the papers that were circulated? You mean official papers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are not speaking of some kind of petition about the matter?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; some releases about the action of the board.

Mr. SOURWINE. You never signed a petition with regard to these three persons?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know there were petitions out to keep them from being discharged?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I did not. As a matter of fact, during this entire incident, as I remember, I was not in New York; I was in Geneva.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever take the position that the point 4 program should be administered by an international organization and not by the United States?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you care to expand on that? You might feel that in justice to yourself you should do so.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes. The program in question is a program of technical assistance for the economic development of underdeveloped countries. That question had been under discussion in the United Nations for years—meaning, by that, the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and various committee and commissions—and along with others I felt that that kind of activity is peculiarly suited for an international organization so as to put underdeveloped countries in a position of receiving economic assistance of that character from an organization of their own rather than receiving it on a bilateral basis from individual governments.

I agree with that position, and I am sure I must have said so to to many people at various times.

Senator FERGUSON. How much are you administering now under the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I personally?

Senator FERGUSON. No; I meant the United Nations.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The United Nations has a technical-assistance program which involved $20,000,000, funds contributed by some 60 different countries for the period of middle 1950 to the end of 1951, and early in 1952 an additional approximately $19,000,000 was pledged.

Senator FERGUSON. What is our percentage, the United States?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The United States percentage is roughly 60 percent of that contribution.

Mr. SOURWINE. Of the entire $39,000,000?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have we paid in our share?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I couldn't answer that. Normally the United States pays its share.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. Have any of the other nations paid in their shares?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Certainly.

Mr. SOURWINE. They have?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Certainly.

Mr. SOURWINE. The other 40 percent has been paid in?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I didn't say that.

Mr. SOURWINE. How much of it has been paid in?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I couldn't answer that; I would have to look at the records. My impression is that a good proportion of it has been paid.

Mr. SOURWINE. What is the Soviet Union's share, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. None.

Senator FERGUSON. They are not a member of that; are they?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They did not contribute to it. I can't answer your question technically; that kind of question doesn't arise.

Senator FERGUSON. Are they supposed to contribute, and are they in default?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; the contributions to that particular fund are voluntary. That is why I can't answer your question, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were there, sir, some 1,500 persons approximately under you in the "National research project" of the Work Projects Administration?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were any of those persons to your knowledge Communists?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were any of them pro-Communists so far as you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not so far as I know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have any reason to believe that any of them were Communists or pro-Communists?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever assist a person known to you to be a Communist or seek to assist such a person to secure employment in the "National research project"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize your name to be used as a reference by any Communist or pro-Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not so far as I know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know of Harry Samuel Magdoff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was he employed by the "National research project"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you assist him to secure employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. If he gave my name as reference, I probably gave him a good reference.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you assist him actively in securing employment under you in the "national research project?"

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Under me?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. He was employed under you, was he not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. You asked me did I assist him?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I must have hired him. He came to work for me.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am trying to get at this point. Was he employed at a level which required you to hire him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; definitely not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you say you did hire him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I was the responsible person, and I would therefore have to say yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you authorize him to use your name as a reference?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall, but I well may have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you in fact give him a letter of recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is quite possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have you any reason to believe that Harry Samuel Magdoff is or was a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I certainly do not have any reason to believe that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have you any reason to believe that Mr. Magdoff ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with the Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not know that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does it surprise you to hear his name mentioned in that connection?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No. because I had seen his name mentioned in the newspapers before.

Mr. SOURWINE. Before when?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Before now.

Mr. SOURWINE. Had you ever seen his name mentioned in the newspapers before you hired him for the "National research project?"

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know anything of the circumstances under which he ceased to be employed under the "National research project"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As far as I can recollect, he left the "National research project" to go to another Government agency, probably the Department of Commerce.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that it was in fact the Department of Commerce?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe it was the Department of Commerce.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you not recommend him to the Department of Commerce?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. If I wrote a letter, it must have been to whatever agency it was.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is perfectly obvious that if you wrote a letter it was addressed to the person to whom it was addressed. I am asking you whether you wrote a letter.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It's quite likely I wrote a letter, but I don't recall it as a matter of fact. I am not surprised if I did. If he went to the Department of Commerce, that is where the letter was addressed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you saying that if he went to the Department of Commerce you wrote a letter to the Department of Commerce, or are you saying that you do not recall writing a letter for him anywhere?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not recall writing a letter for him.

Mr. SOURWINE. You say you know Irving Kaplan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you assist in securing his employment there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, he worked in the FERA together with me before then.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. We both went together to the "National research project," I went as director and he went as associate director.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you recommend him for the post of associate director?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect the exact facts, but I well may have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with his selection as associate director?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I may have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you not know that you did have?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am not trying to dodge your question; I am trying to be sure of the facts.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am trying to be sure of the facts, too.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He worked with me, we worked well together. When the question arose as to how the project should be operated, I may well have and probably did say that I need someone to help me, Kaplan will be perfectly all right, and Kaplan went. That is the answer to your question.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, do you not know, sir, that initially when you were approached on the matter you were not simply told, "We will select an associate director for you," you were consulted about who you would have on the job?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't remember?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It's 17 years ago, and I think you are probably right, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You were asked the question whether or not you had any Communists or pro-Communists working under you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What was your answer to that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not to my knowledge.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you ever known a pro-Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I probably did; I just don't recall.

Senator FERGUSON. You cannot think of any? Did you ever know any Communists?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; other than persons who probably are Communists who are in the United Nations, non-United States citizens.

Mr. SOURWINE. Shall we proceed, Mr. Chairman?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. SOUTHWINE. Mr. Weintraub?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Excuse me, sir. Mr. Chairman, might I just state for the record that Mr. Sourwine is quite right. I must have made the suggestion within FERA that Mr. Kaplan should be an associate director. I can't imagine that it would have been done without that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you subsequently recommend Mr. Kaplan for any other Government employment or assist him to secure any other Government employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you give him permission to use your name as a reference?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is quite possible. I think he would have had a right to assume that he could use my name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he ever ask you for permission to do so?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever write him a letter of recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't specifically recollect that, but that is quite possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that Mr. Kaplan is or was a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that Mr. Kaplan ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with the Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or did you know Mr. Whittaker Chambers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not and did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was Mr. Chambers employed by the "National research project"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I wouldn't have known that he was, but I recollect that I saw somewhere in the newspapers that he stated he was employed by some part of the "National research project."

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with his employment in that capacity?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so; I am quite sure I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize him to use your name as a reference?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am quite sure I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever recommend him to anyone for employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am quite sure I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give him a letter of recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am quite sure I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that Whittaker Chambers is or was a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I read that in the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. That he what?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That he stated he was a Communist.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know as a matter of general knowledge that Mr. Chambers has declared under oath that he was a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I guess so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You never read any of his testimony?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I never read his testimony except what I saw in the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do know that he was at one time employed by the "National research project"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Only from the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. Only from the newspapers. Did you ever give the right to use your name as a reference to Abraham George Silverman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give the right to use your name as a reference to Solomon Adler?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever write a letter of recommendation for either Mr. Silverman or Mr. Adler?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would it surprise you to learn that both of those men had in fact given you as a reference in connection with an application for Government employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It would not surprise me with respect to Mr. Adler. I think it would surprise me with respect to Mr. Silverman because again his positions were superior to mine, and I don't think my reference would have done him much good, and he never worked for me.

Mr. SOURWINE. When a person is given as a reference in Government it is customary to check the reference, is it not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, certainly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether in fact any agency of the Government ever checked with you with regard to Mr. Silverman on the basis of a reference which he had given—that is, his listing of you as a reference?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so, I certainly don't recollect it.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many employees are there in your division at the present time in the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Approximaately 125.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that any of those people are Communists?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Only to the extent that some of those employees are nationals of countries with Communist governments.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many of those employees are nationals of the Soviet Union?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I recollect at the moment only one.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who is he?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I may have the name not quite right, but I think it is something like Pavolov.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you spell it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I could spell it only phonetically, probably P-a-v-o-l-o-v, but I am not quite certain of that name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he perhaps an employee in a rather subordinate or lesser capacity?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Below the policy-making level?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are there any employees in your division at or above the policy-making level? In other words, a line of demarcation of the policy-making level with respect to whom you have knowledge or believe or have reason to believe that they are Communists?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The line of demarcation is a rather vague one, but one of my immediate assistants is a national of Poland.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is, Mr. Michael Klecki?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. K-l-e-c-k-i?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. What is his position?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Assistant director of the division.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether he is a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where is Mr. Klecki now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is probably in Poland right now on leave.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now with regard to the two gentlemen you have named, are there any other employees in your division whom you know or have reason to believe are Communists or pro-Communists?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, I do not know of any such.

Mr. SOURWINE. Outside of those two whom you have named, Mr. Pavolov and Mr. Klecki, are there any other employees in your division whom you know or have reason to believe have ever knowingly cooperated or collaborated with the Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Harold E. Caustin?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I do.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; he is.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is a national of the United Kingdom?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is, and is my deputy in the division.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is your deputy?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is my deputy.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that he has ever knowingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the furtherance of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. May we have an understanding that with regard to the list of people concerning whom I am about to ask you, when I ask the question, Communist connections I am referring to this whole phrase as I have used it repeatedly here, "Do you know or have any reason to believe that this person ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?"

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Phillis Chait, C-h-a-i-t?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not know the person.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know the name?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not know the name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Howard Daniel?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I know him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not now, no.

Mr. SOURWINE. How recently?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is employed by the Technical Assistance Administration?

Mr. SOURWINE. And was until recently employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Until about a year ago, I would say.

Mr. SOURWINE. When he left was it a promotion or an advancement?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I don't think it was either.

Mr. SOURWINE. Just a transfer?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Just a transfer.
Mr. SOURWINE. He is a national of Australia?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is.
Mr. SOURWINE. Does he have a Communist connection or affiliation?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.
Mr. SOURWINE. Sarah L. Diska?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I know of her.
Mr. SOURWINE. Is she employed in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. She is employed in my division.
Mr. SOURWINE. United States national?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.
Mr. SOURWINE. Adolfo Dorfman, D-o-r-f-m-a-n?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I know of Adolfo Dorfman.
Mr. SOURWINE. Argentina?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. A national of Argentina.
Mr. SOURWINE. Is he employed in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.

Senator FERGUSON. Could I ask there, do I understand from your answers previously in executive session that the question of a person's political belief is not a qualification for employment with the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That, so far as I know, is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. A person's political belief is not a question of employment in your particular branch?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. So that if all of them were Communists that would be within the scope of the employment there, or if they were all capitalists, that would be within the scope, is that correct?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; it would be; that is correct, theoretically.

Senator FERGUSON. Or is there an endeavor to try to match the Communists and anti-Communists so that you have a ratio? Is there anything like that in the employment? In other words, there being so many Communist nations, their population so many, so many capitalist nations have so many, and so many Socialist nations? Do you try to do like they do in some places, try to distribute the positions according to the political thinking of the respective nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Sir, I am really not competent to speak to that question. I can say that the charter of the United Nations includes an article somewhere, and I could not recite it to you verbatim, which states that the secretariat of the United Nations should be selected on the basis of competence to do the job first, but insofar as possible the secretariat is to reflect the geographic distribution of the world and that is understood to mean that all nations that are members of the United Nations should be appropriately represented among the secretariat staff members.

Senator FERGUSON. But certainly one of the qualifications is not a matter of political thinking?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, it would not make any difference to the United Nations that a person was a citizen of the United States and believed in communism and not capitalism as far as getting a job in the United Nations was concerned?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I wish, sir, you directed that question to the people who can answer you.

Senator FERGUSON. I am asking you to your knowledge.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To my knowledge that is not a factor.

Senator FERGUSON. That is right; that is not a factor.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that all, sir?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

One other question. When you take this oath of allegiance to the United Nations, have you ever found difficulty in your thinking that you also owe allegiance to the United States and owed allegiance to the United Nations? Has that been a conflict in your mind?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Never, my allegiance to the United States is an allegiance which I hold as a citizen of the United States, and that is in no way affected by the oath which I took to the United Nations.

Senator FERGUSON. Now do you think that a Communist, your knowledge of a Communist, do you think that he can take an oath such as you took and be loyal to that oath?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. You are now asking my personal view of that?

Senator FERGUSON. Sure.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I should think not.

Senator FERGUSON. I see.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am trying to say I should think he would have difficulty.

Senator FERGUSON. He would have difficulty?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. In paying allegiance to his oath that he took to the United Nations owing to the allegiance that he owes to communism, that is what you have in mind?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. That he would have difficulty.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Now as I understand it, you conferred with the counsel of the United Nations before you came down here?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did.

Senator FERGUSON. You have been answering the questions believing that you are within the rule that he laid down for you to answer questions?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so, yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You may proceed.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. May I say, sir, that he simply said to me that there was no objection on his part to my answering questions that the committee puts to me, and I am doing that.

Mr. SOURWINE. You volunteered that, did you not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, were you not told that you might be asked questions about Mr. Kaplan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that if certain questions were asked about Mr. Kaplan the answer was to be thus and so?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. What was the "thus and so"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That Mr. Kaplan has been terminated by the United Nations as of the 29th of May.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you were warned that you might be asked why?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not quite, but I was told that the Secretary General gave no reasons for the termination.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were told to say that; were you not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I was told to say that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, now, is that the same thing as being told that they have no objection to answering all questions fully and freely?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I was told both things.

Mr. SOURWINE. I see. Do you know Lottie Adler Fields?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is she employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. She is a national of the United States?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection, and by that I mean do you know or have any reason to believe that she has ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Anna Friefeld?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I know her.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is she employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. A national of Canada?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.

Mr. SOURWINE. Sidney Glassman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. United States national?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.

Mr. SOURWINE. Michael Klecki we have already discussed?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is a national of Poland?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is presently in Poland?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. He has a Polish passport?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does that not necessarily indicate that he is persona grata to the present Polish Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I would suppose that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that he ever knowingly or willingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Since you ask me that question this morning, I thought about that one again, and the only thing I can say to you is that I recollect that sometime before he came to work with the United Nations he spent several months in Poland assisting the Polish Government in elaborating their economic plan as an economist.

Mr. SOURWINE. What bearing do you think that has on the question I asked you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, you asked whether he in any way had assisted in the attainment of Communist aims.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your answer then necessarily is "Yes"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I would suppose under those circumstances I would have to say "Yes."

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Mr. Irving Kaplan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is employed by you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no knowledge or reason to believe that Mr. Kaplan has ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the attainment of a Communist objective?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I have no knowledge or reason to believe that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now will you tell us what you know of the reasons for Mr. Kaplan's termination by the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, as I told you, the Secretary General gave no reasons for his termination.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, does not the United Nations protect an employee against summary dismissal without any reason?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No. There is a regulation—which I cannot quote to you verbatim—which states that, with respect to employees who are not on a so-called permanent contract, the Secretary General has the right to dismiss them without stating any reason. I understand that the Secretary General has availed himself of that right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead. What do you personally know about the reasons for Mr. Kaplan's dismissal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, as to the reasons, I am afraid my answer would have to stand that, so far as I know, the reasons were not given. Now, all I can tell you is something about a sequence of events. First I think I would have to say that the director of the personnel office more than a year ago told my superior, Mr. Owen, and me that he suggested the replacement of Mr. Kaplan by some other person who was more eminent in the field. That was over a year ago, and I perhaps ought to state that I had forgotten to mention that this morning; that just slipped my mind.

Second, that sometime early in April Mr. Kaplan was called before a grand jury, and a few days later I was called before a grand jury. In the course of the questioning before the grand jury——

Senator FERGUSON. Now, as I understand it, you have talked to the grand jury, and they said there was nothing secret about what they were telling you or what you told them?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They specifically told me that anything that transpired at that hearing I was free to discuss outside.

Senator FERGUSON. All right, you may proceed now.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They then told me that they had directed certain questions to Mr. Kaplan, and that he had refused to answer those questions, and they wished to know what I was going to do about it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did they tell you what the questions were?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They did.

Mr. SOURWINE. What were they?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They said——

Senator FERGUSON. First, did they think that he worked for you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They asked me that, and I told them that he did.

Senator FERGUSON. All right, go ahead and give us the questions.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They told me that they had asked him whether he was a member of a spy ring, and to the best of my recollection that is the substance of the question.

Senator FERGUSON. Did they use the word "spy" or "espionage"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To the best of my recollection they used the word "spy."

Senator FERGUSON. Did they say for what country?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; and that he had refused to answer that question. The second question, as I recollect it, was that, when they asked him where his loyalties would lie in case of a war between the U. S. S. R. and the United States, he had refused to answer that question.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you asked the same questions?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I was.

Senator FERGUSON. What were your answers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I said "No"; that I was not a member of a spy ring nor never was, and in case of a war between the U. S. S. R. and the United States my loyalties would definitely be with the United States of America. They then wished to know what I was going to do about that and whether I wasn't going to fire him. I told them that I certainly would wish to ask Mr. Kaplan some questions, and told them that I neither hired nor fired for the United Nations. They then wanted to know who did, and I told them it was Mr. Lie and Mr. Owen, my superiors. They wanted to know wasn't I going to tell them about this matter, and I said I probably would, and I in fact did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you recommend Mr. Kaplan's dismissal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That question did not arise when I reported the matter. I was told, having reported the matter, it was now out of my hands.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you recommend Mr. Kaplan's dismissal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not recommend against Mr. Kaplan's dismissal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did not; that question did not come up.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you express any position with respect to his dismissal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. You simply recited what happened before the grand jury?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Exactly.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you had no further function to perform?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Exactly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, in the light of all that recital, is it still your contention that you do not know and do not have any reason to believe that Mr. Kaplan is or was a Communist or pro-Communist or whether he has ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with the Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, because before I came to that kind of conclusion I would certainly want to investigate a matter thoroughly, it being a serious conclusion to come to.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever discuss it with Mr. Kaplan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, and he said to me he was not.

Senator FERGUSON. When did you discuss it with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. "Discuss" is perhaps too broad a word. When he reported to me about the grand-jury matter.

Senator FERGUSON. He reported to you about the grand-jury matter?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you what questions they asked?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; he did not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ask him whether or not he was a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. What did he say?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He said to me he was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Let me get this straight. Mr. Kaplan reported to you on his appearance before the grand jury?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. As soon as he had come from the grand jury?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And he told you nothing about any of the questions that were asked him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; he told me that he had been asked a number of questions about the United Nations and its operations and that he had refused to answer those questions, and he wished to get instructions.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he tell you that he had been asked questions about his own possible membership in the Communist Party or his attitude toward the party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; he simply reported to me the official matter that he, as a United Nations employee, had been questioned, and he asked what should he say. I sent him to my superior, Mr. Owen.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he tell you anything about communism in connection with his report of what had taken place in the grand jury?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not at that point.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then why did you ask him if he was a Communist at that point?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did not ask him if he was a Communist at that point.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. After I had been to the grand jury.

Mr. SOURWINE. Oh. That is what we wanted to get. That does not sound quite like your earlier testimony, and perhaps we misunderstood you on that. You did not ask him until you had been to the grand jury?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then you asked him. Just what did you ask?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I told him that I had been informed about this and what were the facts in the matter.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he tell you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He told me that he was not a Communist; that he didn't answer these questions.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he tell you what questions he did not answer?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Some of these questions. I told him what the grand jury had told me.

M. SOURWINE. You only knew about two questions; is that right?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You told him about those two questions?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. He did tell you he refused to answer them?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he tell you whether he was a member of a spy ring?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He said he was not.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he tell you why he did not answer those questions at the grand jury?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; he did.

Senator FERGUSON. Why?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe as I recollect it that he said he had consulted counsel and that counsel had told him he did not have to answer these questions, and so he didn't answer.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he tell you whether he would owe loyalty to the United States or Russia in the event of a war between those two countries?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He did.

Mr. SOURWINE. What did he tell you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He would owe it to the United States.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he volunteer that he was not a Communist, or did you ask him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect exactly whether I asked him or he told me, but he certainly left me with the impression that he was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he just leave you with the impression that he was not, or did he state voluntarily or in response to a question from you that he was not a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall that I asked him the specific question. What he said to me was that he had every confidence that he could disprove any specific accusation on all of these matters, both with respect to being a Communist, being a member of a spy ring, and matters relating to that, and I left it at that and reported that to my superiors.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you now testifying that you never did ask him if he was a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I said to him, "Are you?" and he said, "No."

Mr. SOURWINE. That is what we wanted to get. Did you ask him that, or did you not ask him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think the best honest answer I can give you is that I believe I asked him and he said to me no, he was not. At any rate, that certainly was the impression I was left with.

Mr. SOURWINE. If you asked him it means that you did take the logical step and go through the question of what could be proved by him or anybody else and go to the ultimate fact of was he. If you did not ask him it means that you did not go to that ultimate fact.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I must say that I did not conduct an investigation. I meant to go to that ultimate fact. I did not keep a record, and I can't say that I specifically asked it in these words. That was my intention, and what I got satisfied me that he was not.

Mr. SOURWINE. You would say that you satisfied yourself that he was not a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In terms of his answers, "Yes."

Senator FERGUSON. There, Mr. Weintraub, I am wondering why you inquired about that, it not being one of the qualifications or requirements in the job he held, whether he was or was not. What difference did it make? In other words, from what you told us?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Only because the question arose in terms of this grand jury investigation, and it was in that context that I asked that. Perhaps I had no right to.

Senator FERGUSON. It was not as an employee of the United Nations; this was rather a personal matter, was it not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It probably could be put that way; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. How do you put it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I had by that time become personally involved in the thing, and I was interested to know.

Senator FERGUSON. How did you become personally involved?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In this sense, that I was asked, if I remember correctly by the grand jury, would I knowingly hire a Communist.

Senator FERGUSON. What did you tell them?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Or recommend one; and I replied to the grand jury that I would not. It was for that reason that I wanted to satisfy myself.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was Mr. Kaplan's dismissal announced?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't believe it was announced, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you first learn of it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The closing days of April.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew of it before the 1st of May?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think so, I think it must have been the 28th of April.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was it that you appeared before the grand jury?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In the early days of April; I don't remember the exact date.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was Mr. Kaplan notified of his dismissal, do you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. On the same day that I was told about it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you the one that notified him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I was not. It was done through formal channels.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I return to the list of names?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Karol, K-a-r-o-l, Kracziewicz, K-r-a-c-z-i-e-w-i-c-z?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. I presume my pronunciation is very bad?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is atrocious.

Mr. SOURWINE. The person in question is a national of Poland?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so; I couldn't swear to that.

Mr. SOURWINE. A woman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, a man.
Mr. SOURWINE. Is he employed by you?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; he is not.
Mr. SOURWINE. Has he been employed by you?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Has he been employed by your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know where he is employed?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. If we are speaking of the same person, he is in the Personnel Bureau.
Mr. SOURWINE. Of the United Nations?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Of the United Nations.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that he has ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the attainment of Communist objectives?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not. I really don't know the person except as an official.
Mr. SOURWINE. Leo Malania, L-e-o, M-a-l-a-n-i-a?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I know him.
Mr. SOURWINE. A national of Canada?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Employed in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Where is he employed, if you know?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. At this time he is employed in the Secretary-General's office.
Mr. SOURWINE. Of the United Nations?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Of the United Nations.
Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.
Mr. SOURWINE. Susan Morris?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I know of her.
Mr. SOURWINE. Is she employed in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. United States national?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?
Mr .WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.
Mr. SOURWINE. Jacquelin Rosenborg?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Is she employed in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Where is she employed, if you know?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. On the secretariat of the Technical Assistance Board.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was she at one time in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; she never was.
Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.
Mr. SOURWINE. Margaret Rukovina, R-u-k-o-v-i-n-a?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I know of her.
Mr. SOURWINE. United States national?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Where is she employed?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In the Technical Assistance Administration.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was she ever in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you help her get her present job?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was it a promotion?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect whether it was or not.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did it carry a salary increase?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect; it is conceivable that it did.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you recommend her transfer?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I recommended her.
Mr. SOURWINE. It was not because you wanted to get rid of her?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, no. As a matter of fact, I wanted her to come and work for me very much.
Mr. SOURWINE. Communist connection?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I know of.
Mr. SOURWINE. Marcia Singer?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall the name.
Mr. SOURWINE. A United States national?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know the name.
Mr. SOURWINE. Alfred James Van Tassel?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I know of him.
Mr. SOURWINE. United States national?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Where is he employed?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Now in the Technical Assistance Administration.
Mr. SOURWINE. Formerly in your division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Formerly in my division.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you assist him to get his transfer or new position?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was it a promotion?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I couldn't say. He came to me one day, in fact, he came to me with a letter from Senator MacMahon, as I remember it, having worked here on the Hill, but I don't know whether he came directly from here or whether he had been somewhere in between.
Mr. SOURWINE. You say you do not know whether he got a promotion when he left your division and went to the Technical Assistance Division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. When he left my division?
Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I doubt if he did; I think it was a straight transfer.
Mr. SOURWINE. You were not trying to get rid of him when you recommended him to the other division?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. That whole Technical Assistance was moved away and organized into a separate department, and he moved along with it.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know of any Communist connection for Mr. Van Tassel?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know of any.
Mr. SOURWINE. Dimitry, D-i-m-i-t-r-y, Vladimar, V-l-a-d-i-m-a-r, Varley, V-a-r-l-e-y?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with hiring him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You hired most of these people, did you not, who are in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I hired most of the people you have named; yes, sir. I mean, hired is the wrong word to use. As I told you, I neither hire nor fire. There is a procedure for that. There is a Bureau of Personnel, there is a special department that handles that.

Senator FERGUSON. But you recommended?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I certainly recommended some of those names which you have mentioned.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know any Communist connection for Mr. Varley?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I don't.

Mr. SOURWINE. David Zablodowsky, Z-a-b-l-o-d-o-w-s-k-y?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I know him.

Mr. SOURWINE. In your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think he is in a section of the secretariat that deals with the printing of documents.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Weintraub, is this a fair statement, that you never inquired about any of these people when you were recommending them as to whether or not they were Communists?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct. I might say that some of those names you mentioned, I know that David Zablodowsky I did not recommend. I don't want you to be under the impression that I admit to knowing more people than I recommended.

Senator FERGUSON. What do you mean?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To answer your question, sir, we are not supposed to ask that kind of question.

Senator FERGUSON. That is not one of the requirements, is it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Quite right.

Senator FERGUSON. You do not ask a man whether he is a Communist or not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. If he is working in an espionage ring, how would that affect his job at the United Nations? He is sworn to allegiance there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I wouldn't know, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. I am just asking you if you know. Would that make any difference as long as it was not against the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To the extent—exactly.

Senator FERGUSON. What?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. You are quite right.

Senator FERGUSON. As far as the rule is concerned that if the espionage, the spy ring, was not a spy ring against the United Nations it would not make any difference, would it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I would suppose it would not make any difference.

Senator FERGUSON. I have taken that from your answers that when a man owes allegiance to the United Nations and he is not in a spy ring that involves the United Nations, disloyal to the United Nations, the United Nations would not be involved in it as you have given these answers; is that right?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct. But I ought to state that I do not make personnel policies.

Senator FERGUSON. But that is your understanding there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. My understanding is that; yes, sir.[4]

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know of any Communist connection within the limits of the phrase that I constantly use here for David Zablodowsky?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Marjorie Zap?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is she employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you employ her?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you have anything to do with her employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. She is working for me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know of any Communist connection of hers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Herman Zap?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he related to Mary Zap?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He is her husband.

Mr. SOURWINE. He is employed in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; he is not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where is he employed?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In the Technical Assistance Administration.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was he formerly in your division?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He was.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you recommend him for his present position?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know anything of a Communist connection for him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know what kind of a spy ring the grand jury may have been investigating from what they say to you and said that you could report out?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. They never told me.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether or not from the questions put to you it was a spy ring against the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know a man named Field?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know a Philip Morton Field?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize a Philip Morton Field to use your name as a recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

---

[4] Mr. Weintraub in a letter to Senator Ferguson dated May 22, 1952, said: "I should have added, 'But I am sure that nobody in the United Nations would knowingly hire anyone who is in any kind of spy ring'."

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize a Philip Morton Field or anyone who was using that name to give your name as a recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give a letter of recommendation to a Philip Morton Field or to anyone under that name?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You think you might have?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so. I might simply say, sir, not necessarily in connection with that name, but as you have elicited here, I have had over the past 20 years several thousand people working for me and I must have written several hundred letters of recommendation in the normal routine process of people stating they worked for me, they are good people, technical people, and I certainly cannot remember all the names and letters that I have written.

Now I certainly do not recall having ever employed such a person or having written such a letter.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Frederick Vanderbilt Field?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Just from the newspapers.

Senator FERGUSON. You did not know him personally?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr SOURWINE. Did you ever know a man named Adler?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Solomon Adler?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Solomon Adler.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he the only Adler you ever knew?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To the best of my recollection. I can't think of another Adler.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have any close association with him on either social or business matters?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He worked for the same project.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is, the research project?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The research project.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize him to use your name as a recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect it, but I may well have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give him a letter of recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It's quite possible, but I don't recollect it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Max Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I do.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did ever have any business contacts with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have any social contacts with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Cocktail party kind of social contacts perhaps.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever know that he was anti-FBI?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I had read a review of a book that he had written a couple of years ago, I think, somewhere.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever discuss that question with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Is there a rule to your knowledge in the United Nations that they will not hire any American that has ever worked for the FBI as an agent?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I have never heard of such a rule, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you tell the committee about your business contacts with Mr. Max Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I recollect it, Mr. Max Lowenthal was in charge of a unit in the FEA, I guess the Foreign Economic Administration, during the war.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that your first contact with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had no contact with him back at the time when you had something to do with Sidney Hillman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so; I don't think I had ever met him before.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right, go ahead.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I said, he was head of a unit in the Foreign Economic Administration during the war, and both OFFRRO—that is, the Office for Foreign Relief and Rehabilitation, I guess it was—in the State Department, and subsequently UNRRA had a great deal of business involving economic matters, and the Foreign Economic Administration was in fact one of the agencies through which the UNRRA dealt with the United States Government.

Consequently I had fairly frequent contact as a person in UNRRA dealing with supply questions with what might in a way be called my opposite number in the United States Government, which was Mr. Lowenthal, and many of his people. So I did have dealings with him, and that was the nature of it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did it terminate when he and you or he or you left your respective posts, the ones you have mentioned?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe it terminated when he left his post because I think he left his post before I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Whenever the organizational arrangements were changed, it must have been some time in 1945.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you have had no business connections with him since then?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. None at all.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you seen him since?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so. I don't recollect having seen him since.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mentioned the possibility of a cocktail party. You might have seen him at some cocktail party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It's conceivable.

Mr. SOURWINE. Outside of a casual meeting at some function sponsored by a third party organization, would you say you had not seen him or had conferences with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have not had any appointments with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Abraham Silverman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Tell us what you know about Mr. Silverman.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I first met Mr. Silverman when he was a research fellow at the National Bureau of Economic Research, and I was a research assistant. That must have been some time in 1930.

I think I subsequently met him here in Washington sometime during 1933. After that when I was the director of this "National research project"——

Mr. SOURWINE. That was 10 years later, was it not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, no. As I said, in 1933. I became director of the "National research project" I believe in 1935.

Mr. SOURWINE. I see. Did you know him during that intervening 2 years?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I said I met him here in Washington in business connections.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was it business or social connections?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Both.

Mr. SOURWINE. During the period from 1931 to 1933?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I had any contact with him between 1931 and 1933.

Mr. SOURWINE. Between 1933 and 1935, both social and business?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead and pick it up at 1935.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In 1935 or 1936, thereabouts, this "National research project" of which I was director was carried out in conjunction with several agencies of the Government, one of which was the Railroad Retirement Board. Mr. Silverman on the Board conducted some of that work for the "National research project," and I had fairly frequent contacts with him there concerning that work.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you help him in any way to get his position with that Board?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir; I certainly don't recollect that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think that those are the only business contacts that I had with him except that when I came back to Washington in 1941 I did see him from time to time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have any contact with him between 1935 and 1936 and 1941?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, and throughout this project, which lasted from about 1935 to 1941, we had on this work that was being done at the Railroad Retirement Board, frequent contact.

Mr. SOURWINE. What did you mean when you "came back to Washington"?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I told you earlier, in 1941 I joined the War Production Board.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He being in Washington, I meant when I came back to Washington I saw him from time to time.

Mr. SOURWINE. I see. But that was not a resumption of the association because the association had continued, had it not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes. I am trying to give you the story year by year as I recall it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right, it was a continuation except that the business end of the association ended with my leaving the "National research project," that is what I meant.

Mr. SOURWINE. That was what year?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That was in 1941.

Mr. SOURWINE. I see.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. But having known him we continued the association on an occasional lunch basis kind of thing.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you met with him periodically at lunch?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, from time to time we would run across each other and have a drink together.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever make luncheon appointments?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you do that with some regularity?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. As often as once a month?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, no.

Mr. SOURWINE. Three times a year?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Conceivably, yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. As often as four or five times a year?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I would say three is nearer to the number than five, something like that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who used to make the appointments, you or he—that is, who initiated them?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I couldn't say that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Both ways?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Quite possibly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Sometimes you? Did you sometimes initiate luncheon appointments with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Quite possible, I am quite sure I must have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he sometimes initiate luncheon appointments with you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. And on other occasions you just ran across him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Continue.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you seen him since then?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I haven't seen him since I left Washington.[5]

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you ever had any dealings with Mr. Silverman other than social or governmental?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever leave a package with Mr. Silverman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No. sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you give or hand him a package at any time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize Mr. Silverman to use you as a reference?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not to my recollection.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever do anything to assist Mr. Silverman in getting a commission in the Air Force?

---

[5] Mr. Weintraub in a letter to Senator Homer Ferguson, dated May 22, 1952, made the following statement:

"With respect to the last reply, I subsequently recollected that I saw Silverman again about half a dozen times in New York shortly after I joined the staff of the United Nations. As I recollect it, he was negotiating for a job in New York and looking for an apartment. He got in touch with me and since he indicated that he was having difficulty in getting a hotel room during his visits to New York I told him to feel free to stay over at our house whenever he wanted to. At that time we lived in a furnished 10-room apartment at 955 Park Avenue and had plenty of spare rooms since our normal requirements are about 5 rooms. Mr. Silverman availed himself of that invitation on several occasions. As near as I can recollect it, this was near the end of the year 1946, and I have not seem him since then."

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not to my recollection. I didn't know he had a commission.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know he had applied for a commission in the Air Force.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I do not.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever recommend Gregory Silvermaster for a commission in the Air Force?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Silvermaster?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Here in Washington?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could I finish with Silverman, Senator, before we get to the next person?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know that Mr. George Silverman had used your name and the names of Harry Dexter White and Lauchlin Currie as references in an application for a commission in the Air Force?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I ever knew that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did not the Air Force check with you about that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I certainly don't recall that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now if the Senator wants to pursue the question about Mr. Silvermaster?

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I knew him.

Senator FERGUSON. Here in Washington?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Here in Washington.

Senator FERGUSON. How well did you know him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Very casually, he was an employee of the FERA when I was there.

Senator FERGUSON. Superior?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. We didn't have anything to do with each other actually. He was working somewhere else, and I just knew that he was there.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you met him recently?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. When is the last time you saw him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Probably when I left the FERA, which must have been in 1935.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Elizabeth Bentley?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever hear of her?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I read her name in the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could I ask about some other names, Mr Chairman?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know George Perazich, P-e-r-a-z-i-c-h-.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did I pronounce that name properly?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Very well.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us about your association with Mr. Perazich?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He was an employee of this same project, the national research project.

Mr. SOURWINE. Had you had anything to do with his employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so beyond having general responsibility.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right, go ahead. What else do you know about him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe that he also was subsequently an employee of OFRRO in the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with securing that appointment for him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that I did, but had he given me as a reference I probably would have given him a good reference, but I don't recall that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize him to use your name as a reference?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not specifically, but again I think he would have had a right to feel that he could, having worked for me.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right. What else do you know about Mr. Perazich?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He, subsequently, as I recall it, was also employed by UNRRA.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with his employment there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so, but it is quite likely that he transferred over with the OFRRO staff to UNRRA. In any case he did not work for me either in OFRRO or in UNRRA.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead, what more do you know about him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. There is very little more I think that I can tell you. As I recall it, he was sent off on a mission to Yugoslavia.

Mr. SOURWINE. Sent off by whom?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. By someone in UNRRA, not myself, but normally that would have been handled by a part of the shop which I think was called area studies—not area studies—Bureau of Areas, I think it was called.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that the end of him?

Senator FERGUSON. What do you mean "the end of him"?

Mr. SOURWINE. He says he does not know what happened to him, and he went on a mission to Yugoslavia.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am trying to recall now. Well, he came back, I know that, but I really couldn't tell you what happened to him after that.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know where he is now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have any social or business contacts or dealings with him other than those you have told the committee about?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, he was a fellow with green fingers.

Senator FERGUSON. With what?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I owned a house here, and I had a garden. I had no time to do anything in the garden, and as I remember it, George loved to work with flowers, and for a time when his family wasn't here he used to come around on Sundays and just putter away, and that is the only other contacts that I can recall, and I appreciated that very much.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have Mr. Perazich use your name as a reference?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall that I authorized him to, but again I wish to say that he would have had the right to use my name as a reference, having worked for me before.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know or have any reason to believe that Mr. Perazich was a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE Were you ever a member of any organization of which Mr. Perazich was also a member?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever a member of any organization of which Mr. Silverman was also a member?

Senator FERGUSON. Any group?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so short of, I am a member of the American Economic Association, and I would assume he is likely to be, it is that kind of technical association.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever a member of any group or organization other than the technical kind that you have mentioned of which Nathan Gregory Silvermaster was a member?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No. sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that at the time Mr. Perazich was a member of the Bentley ring?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know a man named Harry Magdoff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever authorize him to use your name as a recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Again I don't recollect the specific authorization, but he worked for me, and he would have had the right to use my name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give him a letter of recommendation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is quite likely that I did, although I do not specifically recall that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have any social association with Mr. Magdoff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, a casual sort. In Philadelphia when he worked on the project that I was director of, I remember he lived only a block or two away from me, and their babies and my babies were born about the same time, and we used to admire each other's babies in baby carriages and so on.

Mr. SOURWINE. He did not have a green thumb?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir. At least I don't know of it.

Mr. SOURWINE. With him it was a mutual interest in babies and with Mr. Perazich it was a mutual interest in gardening?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. If you care to put it that way. It wasn't mutual, I had no interest in the gardening.

Mr. SOURWINE. You just had the garden?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I just had the garden, and that lasted only for a brief period, but I didn't want to leave it out since you asked me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Anatoli Borisovitch Gromov?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Never head of him.

Mr. SOURWINE. A former first secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Washington?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall the name.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Gubichev when he was with the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Judith Coplon?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever in contact with Mr. Gromov?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so, although I must say I was in contact with the Soviet Embassy as an employee of UNRRA.

Mr. SOURWINE. When was that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Throughout my employment with UNRRA.

Mr. SOURWINE. That would have been what period by years?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. 1944 to 1946.

Senator FERGUSON. Did they make contributions to UNRRA, the Soviets?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To the administrative fund of UNRRA.

Senator FERGUSON. Just the administrative fund?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Specifically were you in contact in December of 1944 with Mr. Gromov?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I certainly don't recollect.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever go to the Soviet Embassy to see him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that, but it's possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever call him on the telephone?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is possible, but I don't recollect the name at all.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever go to the Soviet Embassy at any time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. In what connection?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I recall several cocktail parties at the Soviet Embassy.

Senator FERGUSON. Was that on May Day?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. More likely on the anniversary of the Revolution, which is sometime in November.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever go to the Soviet Embassy other than to a social function, and by social function I mean an affair to which many were invited?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so, but I fairly frequently went to the Soviet Purchasing Mission.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Silverman and Perazich and Magdoff and Kaplan and Gromov, of whom we have been talking, all have been named by Elizabeth T. Bentley, who is a self-confessed former Soviet agent, as having been members of an underground group in Washington, the purpose of which was to gather and forward information to the Russian Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I knew of some of those names. I don't think I recall all of them.

Mr. SOURWINE. Which of those names did you remember?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Would you mind repeating them?

Mr. SOURWINE. Silverman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I remember that was one.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you first learn about him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I was in Geneva at the time when the thing broke in the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. You mean you learned about that at about the time that Miss Bentley testified?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Perazich?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I ever heard about that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Magdoff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I think that was another name that came to light at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Kaplan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. About the same time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You learned about that at the same time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Which was that?

Mr. SOURWINE. Irving Kaplan.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Gromov?

Senator FERGUSON. Just a moment. Is that the same Kaplan as the man sitting here today?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you knew when Elizabeth Bentley testified about his so-called connection with the espionage ring?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That was exactly the question Mr. Sourwine asked me.

Senator FERGUSON. You seemed surprised that the grand jury would ask him a question like that.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I didn't say I was surprised.

Senator FERGUSON. You knew the open testimony before the Senate connected him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you disbelieve Miss Bentley's testimony?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, I didn't believe it.

Senator FERGUSON. You didn't believe it?

Mr. SOURWINE. You didn't?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I was shocked.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have any basis of knowledge concerning the facts to which she testified?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. This much, that when I heard of the name Kaplan I think I heard that first through a memorandum which was received in Geneva when I was there. That memorandum was received by Mr. Owen, my superior, from a man who was then in charge of the department in New York, a Mr. Goldet, G-o-l-d-e-t, and as I recollect it, the memorandum stated that Mr. Kaplan had come to see him; that Mr. Kaplan had told him that this was a ridiculous charge; that it was not true; that he had every faith that on any opportunity to disprove it he could do so. That is the memorandum that was received in Geneva.

Senator FERGUSON. What was Kaplan's job at that time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was the job that he has now. He was then working for the United Nations in my division.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether Mr. Kaplan was ever thereafter given the opportunity to disprove the charge?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe Mr. Kaplan had stated, but I don't recollect it very exactly, that he had offered to come to the same committee before which Miss Bentley had made the charges and that I think he was never called.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether he ever was called?

Senator FERGUSON. Did he ever voluntarily appear before the committee and ask to be heard?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not know that, but as I recollect it, he either told me or told Mr. Owen that he had offered to come.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether he ever did in fact appear?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not think he ever in fact appeared, but I cannot say that I know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever make any effort to find out whether he had in fact appeared before the House Committee on Un-American Activities?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I can't recollect it exactly, but I think I asked him, and he said to me no, he was never called.

Senator FERGUSON. Then do I understand now that he had been working for the United Nations and nothing had been said about it although Bentley testified before a committee of the Senate and one of the House that he was in an espionage ring?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. But when the grand jury tells you about it, you go back and tell the United Nations, and either by coincidence or something else he loses his job?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Those are the facts, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Has there been a change in attitude on the part of the U. N.? I am talking of your personal knowledge.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I couldn't answer that.

Senator FERGUSON. I mean your personal knowledge.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To my knowledge I know of no changes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now with regard to Mr. Perazich, you said you did not know of Miss Bentley's charges concerning him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct; I don't recall having heard.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Magdoff; did you disbelieve her charges with regard to Mr. Magdoff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I was surprised.

Mr. SOURWINE. There is a difference between surprise and disbelieving. Did you disbelieve?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believed that Magdoff could probably prove that it wasn't so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever talk to him about it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I never saw him.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did disbelieve her charges then?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think it would be correct to say that I had confidence that he could probably disprove that.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you believe it about anyone she had said that they were in the ring?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. There are many names that I never heard of.

Senator FERGUSON. I mean that you knew.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not. I felt the same way.

Senator FERGUSON. About all of them?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. About all of them.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you question these people as to whether or not she was telling the truth?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir. Most of these people I never saw since then.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Whittaker Chambers had testified that these people were members of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I could say I knew.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know he had testified that any of them were members of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I never read the testimony of Whittaker Chambers.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is not the question, did you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Consequently I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are saying that you did not know, for instance, that Mr. Whittaker Chambers had ever testified that Abraham George Silverman was a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not recollect that I knew it as a testimony by Whittaker Chambers. Conceivably I saw it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that anybody had testified in support of Miss Bentley's charges in that regard?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Again I am afraid I cannot answer you as a matter of positive knowledge because I believe I was in Europe at the time and did not follow the thing closely and what I saw, I saw bits and snatches that appeared in the European press, and I never went back to the testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. You never got any information about Whittaker Chanmbers' testimony?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is not correct. I got information again through the newspapers, and as I recall it, it was primarily a matter of Alger Hiss, but I don't recall the names.

Senator FERGUSON. By the way, did you know Hiss?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I did.

Senator FERGUSON. How well did you know Hiss?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Only casually, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever work in the State Department with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not with him, but I think I met him casually at that time, and I subsequently met him when he was president of the Carnegie Fund where he on several occasions came to the United Nations, and there was a meeting or two about some report that Carneige Fund was writing about the United Nations. I met him then again.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you give him information on that report?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. About the United Nations?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I gave any information directly to him, but to some of his people. I think some of his people went to see quite a number of people in the United Nations about its structure and so forth, and I am sure I talked to one or more of his people.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever hear of the Perlo group?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know what the Perlo group is or was?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know a man named Perlo, P-e-r-l-o?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. What was his first name?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I can't recollect it.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was it Victor?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, it was.
Mr. SOURWINE. When and where did you know him, and how long did the association continue?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect exactly, but some time somewhere in Washington in some official connection, I believe it was, in the War Production Board. I remember meeting a man named Perlo in some official capacity and that is about all I can remember of that.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have——
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I ever had any other contacts, social or otherwise.
Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever a member of the Perlo group?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever meet with any other persons in a room with Perlo?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.
Mr. SOURWINE. To your knowledge, did your wife Sylvia ever attend any Communist meetings?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was she present at a fraction meeting or fraction meetings of the Communist Party in the Philidelphia area?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did she ever attend any Commuinst Party meetings in Washington, D. C.?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Was she ever a member of the Communist Party?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. What was the Coordinating Committee for Postwar Rehabilitation?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember the name at all.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know who the members of that committee were at all?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I say, I don't remember the name of the committee.
Mr. SOURWINE. Does it refresh your recollection that the members of that committee might have been Murray Lattimer, Morris Rosenthal, and yourself?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. There never was such a committee.
Mr. SOURWINE. There never was a committee of which you, Murray Lattimer, and Morris Rosenthal were members?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. There never was any such committee.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you, Mr. Lattimer, and Mr. Rosenthal ever meet together?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is possible.
Mr. SOURWINE. On more than one occasion?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Quite possible.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you ever recall any such meetings?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. What was the occasion of any meeting of that nature?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I don't remember any such meetings, and when I say it's quite possible, it is simply because Murray Lattimer was Governor Lehman's deputy in OFRRO, I was a top-ranking employee in OFRRO at that time, Rosenthal was a top-ranking employee of the Foreign Economic Administration. We must have had common business, and it's quite conceivable that the three of us met sometime, but I just don't recollect it specifically.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the three of you ever meet with Max Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That again is possible, but again I don't recall.

Mr. SOURWINE. On more than one occasion?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have frequent meetings with Max Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Alone, you mean?

Mr. SOURWINE. The group.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Or you and one of the other two?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You may have met with him, you say, on more than one occasion. Do you remember any such meeting?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes. Again it is rather vague in my mind. I remember I once came to the offices of the FEA, there was a meeting of which Lowenthal was chairman. I represented either OFRRO or UNRRA, and we conducted some business, but I don't remember exactly what it was any more.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you and Murray Lattimer or you and Morris Rosenthal or you and both Mr. Lattimer and Mr. Rosenthal meet with Mr. Lowenthal outside Government offices?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect any such meeting.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Parker McAllister?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember the name at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Director of rehabilitation for the Balkan area.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember the name at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever discuss Mr. McAllister's appointment with anyone?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I said, I don't remember McAllister's name at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Could you have discussed Mr. McAllister's appointment with Mr. Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I doubt it very much since I don't remember McAllister's name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever discuss any appointments with Mr. Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Lowenthal ever to you or in your hearing question the appointment of any man not known to be a liberal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Norman Bursler, B-u-r-s-l-e-r?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who is he.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It's very vague in my mind. He seems to have been one of the employees of the National Research project in its very early days.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with his employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Only in my general capacity as the person responsible for the project.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know there has been testimony under oath that he was a member of an underground group for the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Frank Coe?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. How well did you know him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I first met Mr. Coe in the summer of 1933 when he was working for an employers' group in the clothing industry in Chicago, as I recall it, when I assisted Mr. Sidney Hillman on the brief, and he did a technical job on the other side, and I never Senator FERGUSON. Was that an economic brief or a legal brief?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was an economic brief. He more or less performed the same kind of function for the employers' group that I did on the union group.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were there any attorneys associated in that matter?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall that. I simply did a technical job on the brief, and he did a technical job on the other side, and I never had anything further to do with it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that all you ever had anything to do with Mr. Coe?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; that was the first time I ran into him. I don't think I ran into Coe again for years until I came back to Washington and was working in UNRRA. I think that Coe at that time occupied some position in the Foreign Economic Administration and that I again began to run into him there, but that was rather infrequent, and subsequently I believe I had again some contacts with him when he became secretary of the International Monetary Fund.

I had occasional lunch with him, and that is about all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you now informed the committee fully with regard to the extent of your association with Mr. Coe?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think so. I have had, as I said, occasional contacts with him of that kind.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know there had been sworn testimony that Mr. Frank Coe was a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you learn that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Again I think when I was in Geneva. As I remember it, it appeared in the newspapers at the same time as Mr. Harry White's name was mentioned.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Mr. Lauchlin Currie?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us the extent of your association with Mr. Currie?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It's again a casual kind of association stretching over quite a number of years, probably going back to something like 1934 or thereabounts. I remember attending some meetings together with Mr. Currie involving discussions about some economic matters and problems.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were those meetings which you attended in your official capacity?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes. I remember meeting him from time to time in various places, and I would say that the contacts I had with Mr. Currie from the years 1934 to about 1947 or 1948 were probably no more than half a dozen to a dozen contacts over that whole stretch of years.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that there had been sworn testimony that Mr. Currie was a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you learn that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. About the same time as I heard about Harry White and Coe.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know a person named Bela, B-e-l-a, Gold?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever hear that name?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know a Sonia Gold?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever hear that name?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that name either.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have testified about Abraham Silverman; have you not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you told the committee fully concerning your knowledge and association with Mr. Silverman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know William Taylor?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The name sounds familiar, but I don't recall now.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no memory of a Mr. William Taylor?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I say, only as a familiar name, but I just couldn't place it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know a person named William Ludwig?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I ever heard the name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you testified fully with regard to your knowledge of and association with Victor Perlo?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know an Edward J. Fitzgerald?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell the committee what you know about him and what your association with him was, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He was one of the employees of the "National research project." As I recall it, he left the project to go to work for some Government agency, and I don't recollect exactly which it was. I don't believe I have had any contact with him since then; at least, I don't recall it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know there had been sworn testimony that Mr. Fitzgerald was a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I heard that.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did you hear it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember any more, but it appears to be associated in my mind with that same Bentley testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. You read all of this in the newspapers; is that right?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, about Fitzgerald?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. And about these other people that you said you learned at the same time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Harold Glasser, G-l-a-s-s-e-r?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us what you know about him and inform the committee concerning your association with him, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I recall it, I first met Harold Glasser when I worked in the State Department in OFRRO just prior to the calling of the first UNRRA Council when we were preparing certain documents for the Council in collaboration with other departments of Government; and, as I remember it, Harold Glasser represented the United States Treasury in a series of meetings that we had about the financial plan for UNRRA.

Subsequently Glasser was one of the representatives of the United States Government in a series of meetings that lasted over years dealing with UNRRA, involving the United States contribution to UNRRA, and involving a committee of an intergovernmental committee of UNRRA which dealth with the ability of governments to pay for the relief supplies; and, since I was secretary of that committee, I met him at every meeting.

I think that is the total of my association with Glasser.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know there has been sworn testimony that Mr. Glasser was a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I don't recollect that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Charles Kramer?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No. sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Charles Krevitsky, K-r-e-v-i-t-s-k-y?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Solomon Leshinsky, L-e-s-h-i-n-s-k-y or L-e-c-h-i-n-s-k-y?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Tell us what you know about him. First, do you know which spelling is correct?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. What do you know about him? What is your association with him, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Leshinsky was an employee of the "National research project" in Philadelphia, if I remember correctly, and subsequently was an employee of UNRRA. In both instances I was his superior, although not his immediate superior. That is about all I can tell you about Leshinsky.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have anything to do with his employment; that is, employing him, securing employment for him, or recommending him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Only in this general way. I don't remember specifically employing him or recommending him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know there has been sworn testimony that Mr. Leshinsky was a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I had heard that.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you hear it, and when?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As a matter of fact, now I recall Leshinsky dropped into the U. N. offices—it must be several years ago—and told me that himself, if I remember correctly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know why he did that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; he came in. I think, as I remember it, one day my secretary told me "Mr. Leshinsky is outside and wants to see you." I think he just came in and said, "Well, I happened to be in New York and wanted to drop in and say hello." He said he hoped I didn't mind wasting my time on that, and I said I did not.

As I recall it now, he told me he had a farm and that, as he expressed it, he was being hounded by an accusation of this kind, and it was a lot of nonsense, but it certainly was taking up a lot of his energy and things like that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you believe his denials?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes; I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you subsequently make any investigation with respect to the truth or falsity of the charges against him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you fully informed the committee with regard to your knowledge of and association with Harry Magdoff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Allan Rosenberg, A-l-l-a-n, R-o-s-e-n-b-e-r-g?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It sounds like the name of a man who was in the FEA, if I remember correctly. Could you refresh my memory? Was he in FEA with Lowenthal or something like that?

Mr. SOURWINE. I am unable to state. I am asking you for your recollection.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To the best of my recollection, I seem to remember a man of that name in the FEA in that same group that Lowenthal was in as a person with whom I had dealings during UNRRA days.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Allan Rosenberg has been cited in sworn testimony as a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Donald Niven Wheeler?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall the name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Harry Dexter White?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you informed the committee fully concerning what you know about Mr. White and your association with him, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe you didn't ask me anything about Mr. White.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us, please?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The association with Mr. White was also a rather casual one stretching over quite a number of years.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you first meet him in a business connection?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. When?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall exactly, but I think it must have been around 1934 or 1935, somewhere in the Federal Reserve Board or something like that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you not know him before that time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. I think what we will do at the present time is to suspend with the witness, and counsel has a few letters he wants to put in the record at this time.

Mr. MORRIS. First is an extract from the Far Eastern Survey dated June 30, 1943, and it is entitled "The Navy Needs Men for the Military Government Program."

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344B" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1344B

THE NAVY NEEDS MEN, SPECIAL PROGRAM 108–43 (MILITARY GOVERNMENT)

The Navy needs exceptional men capable of accepting an over-all range of executive responsibilities to serve as administrative officers in the Military Government of occupied areas. A college degree is essential, preferably with a major and postgraduate work in international relations, law, trade, or finance; or the domestic fields of political science, economics, public administration, law, or finance. The age limits are from 28 to 45. Civilian experience must have included at least three years of executive-administrative work.

Government, business, and education are the three fields which can contribute most of these higher-caliber executives. Backgrounds of foreign service in any of these three fields, with a knowledge of languages and customs of individual foreign countries (preferably the South Pacific and Far East area), are particularly desirable, but not absolutely essential.

"Officers in Military Government will be expected to serve beyond the expiration of the war. This message is not intended for men engaged in essential war industries or employed by a federal agency. Candidates should apply at the nearest Office of Naval Procurement or write to the Secretary of the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, Inc."

—FAR EASTERN SURVEY, June 30, 1943.

Mr. MORRIS. This is a letter from Raymond Dennett to Mr. Robert Morris, special counsel, dated February 7, 1952, asking that a certain change be made in the testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Morris, this is a letter which was received by you here?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. And connected with it is a carbon copy of your reply. Do you desire that to go in also?

Mr. MORRIS. I do.

Senator FERGUSON. That will be made a part of the record.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344C" and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1344C

RAYMOND DENNETT
21 LOWELL ST.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., February 7, 1952.

Mr. ROBERT MORRIS,
Special Counsel, Subcommittee on Internal Security,
Committee on the Judiciary,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRIS: In reading over the printed record of my testimony before the subcommittee I have discovered minor errors to which I should direct your attention. The first is clerical, and the second a misunderstanding on my part of the question you asked as we were rushing to adjourn.

On the third or fourth page of my testimony where I am describing the set-up of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations, the printed record states, in regard to the Washington office, that Mr. Lattimore was later associated with that office. It was Mrs. Lattimore and not her husband who was on our payroll.

The record also shows that the final question you asked me was whether Gunther Stein attended the Hot Springs conference as a member of the American delegation and that I answered that this statement was correct. I understood you to ask whether Gunther Stein attended the Hot Springs conference. Stein did attend, but, as Security in the Pacific shows, he attended as a member of the United Kingdom and not the United States delegation.

I thought these two corrections should be brought to your attention and, if you consider it desirable, entered in the record.

Sincerely yours,

RAYMOND DENNETT.

RD:jw

FEBRUARY 12, 1952.

Mr. RAYMOND DENNETT,
21 Lowell Street, Cambridge, Mass.:

DEAR MR. DENNETT: Thank you for your letter of February 7th. I shall ask the committee to insert your letter into the record with the two changes that appear therein.

Thank you for calling this to our attention.

Sincerely,

ROBERT MORRIS, Special Counsel.

RM/al

Mr. MORRIS. I have here a request by Senator Pat McCarran addressed to the Honorable Henri Bonnet, Ambassador of France, and the reply from Mr. Bonnet to Senator McCarran, dated April 17, 1952, stating that Andrew Roth had been barred admission to Indochina.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344D," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT NO. 1344D

APRIL 8, 1952.

Hon. HENRI BONNET,
Ambassador of France.
2535 Belmont Road, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Would you kindly let us know, for the use of the Internal Security Subcommittee, whether or not in the 1940's, possibly about 1945, a writer named Andrew Roth was refused admission to Saigon on the order of the French High Commissioner. If so, I would like to have the reasons for such action.

Kindest regards and all best wishes.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

AMBASSADE DE FRANCE, AUX ETATS, UNIS,
April 17, 1952.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.,

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: With reference to your letter of April 8th concerning Andrew Roth, I have the honour to inform you that this journalist has been refused admission to Indochina since 1949 because of his extremely violent attacks in American, Chinese, and Indochinese newspapers against the French presence in that country.

Between 1946 and 1949, Andrew Roth had made several journeys to Indochina.

HENRI BONNET.

Mr. MORRIS. Next is an exchange of correspondence between Senator McCarran, who writes to the Honorable Robert A. Lovett, Secretary of Defense, dated January 19, 1952, and a reply to Senator McCarran signed by William C. Foster, Deputy Secretary of Defense, dated January 29, 1952, in connection with the publication the Making of Modern China, being published in the Infantry Journal of the United States Forces.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344E," and is as follows:)

(The booklet, the Making of Modern China, by Eleanor and Owen Lattimore, was filed in committee files for reference.)

EXHIBIT No. 1344E

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, January 29, 1952.

Senator PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Inclosed are copies of a paper-backed edition on "The Making of Modern China" by Eleanor and Owen Lattimore, and Army Talk No. 66, published by the Army during the summer of 1945 on the subject of "Our Ally China," as requested in your letter of 19 January 1952.

You will note that the booklet "The Making of Modern China" was published by the Infantry Journal and not by the United States Armed Forces Institute. So far as the Armed Forces of the United States are concerned, both of these publications are obsolete and have been withdrawn from circulation. The entire stock of the book was declared obsolete and salvaged in December 1947 except a few file copies, from which I was able to obtain the inclosed copy. The Army Talk, "Our Ally China," was declared obsolete by Army Circular No. 346, dated 26 November 1946. Neither of these publications has been distributed or referred to in publications of the Armed Forces of the United States since the above dates.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) WILLIAM C. FOSTER,
Deputy Secretary of Defense.

Inclosures—2.

JANUARY 19, 1952.

Hon. ROBERT A. LOVETT,
Secretary of Defense, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: For purposes of the inquiry of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee into the affairs of the Institute of Pacific Relations, we would like to obtain a copy of a paper-backed edition of "The Making of Modern China" by Eleanor and Owen Lattimore, published by the United States Armed Forces Institute at Madison, Wisconsin, and a copy of an Army fact sheet published for orientation work in the Armed Forces during the summer of 1945 dealing with China. A photostat of the latter would do.

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

[Restricted]

ARMY TALK—ORIENTATION FACT SHEET 66

WAR DEPARTMENT—WASHINGTON 25, D. C.—7 APRIL 1945

Note For This Week's Discussion

There are three main points to develop in this week's discussion: (1) China, in spite of her extreme poverty and lack of sufficient numbers of well-trained, well-equipped troops, has waged a heroic war against Japan; (2) A united, progressive China can hasten the final defeat of the enemy; the present internal political tension within the country is a serious problem; (3) Only a strong, forward-looking, democratic China can give leadership to the people of the Far East and function as a leading member of the United Nations. (Suggested references: Fact Sheet Nos. 27 and 28; also Changing China by George E. Taylor, and The Making of Modern China by Owen Lattimore—both of these volumes were issued in the basic reference library for Information and Education officers.)

OUR ALLY CHINA

There is no need to tell you that great numbers of American soldiers are fighting the Japanese in the Pacific. Many of them are fighting alongside our Chinese ally—on the soil of China. And many more—perhaps some of you—will eventually get there.

This is certainly not the first time you have talked about China—you have undoubtedly read articles about the Chinese people and their heroic struggle with the Japanese since as far back as 18 September 1931.

Today we will spend our hour in an attempt to get at several important points that we ought to know about China—there is a lot more to talk about but this will not be our only opportunity.

Newspaper stories, magazine articles, and books have been written about what is supposed to be going on within China. Sometimes authors tell conflicting stories. Often enough it is hard to tell whether the conflicting reports are the result of individual bias or inadequate information.

One hears a lot of phrases that seem to have special meaning: The Nationalist Government, the Chinese "Communists," guerrilla fighters, lack of unity, war lords, Japanese puppets, and so on. Later, we will try to get a clearer picture. Right now let us remember that China is big—China is poor—China has about 450 million people—people like yourself and myself—all of whom very likely want the same things that you and I do: peace, a chance to make a decent living, and a chance to have some fun out of life. There isn't a GI in our Army who doesn't want these things—and that is about the same for the Chinese GI.

China, like the United States—like any nation—has her problems. Some are internal, others are related to the War. We can't begin to consider all of them. But it is important for us to know how some of her major problems affect the United Nations war effort and how they will affect the peace to come.

We are vitally concerned in the affairs of our Chinese ally. We each need each other in the battle against Japan. And when the War has been won—we will still need each other. America and the world need a strong, forward-looking, democratic China ready to give leadership to the people of the Far East and prepared to function as a leading member of the United Nations.

(The foregoing may be useful as a brief introduction to the topic for discussion.)

WHY IS CHINA BACKWARD?

(Question: Why does China, by American standards, seem poverty-stricken and backward?)

Many reasons might be given for China's poverty and economic backwardness. Here are a few of the most important.

1. China has an enormous population.—Even with all her dependencies, she is not a great deal larger than the United States, yet she has between three and four times as many people—about 450 million, as compared with the 130 million of the United States. Much of her land is either mountainous or so dry that it cannot support agriculture without artificial irrigation. As a result, most of her people are crowded upon a comparatively small part of the land. Forty-six

Chinese farm families have to get a living out of the land that one American farm family of the same size would have.

As things now stand, the overcrowding of land means poverty for most people. About 80 percent of China's population are farmers. And it also means that in the past, the existence of an almost limitless supply of cheap manpower as acted as a definite check upon such a development of labor-saving machinery as we have had in the West.

2. China is an old country.—Considerable parts of China have been under continuous and intensive cultivation for more than 3,000 years, yet they still produce large crops today. This is only possible because of the infinite and painstaking toil that has been put into the soil by generation after generation of Chinese farmers. In the United States we have had quite a different situation. But that would happen if we were as crowded as the Chinese, or if we had been forced to stay settled on the same land for two or three thousand years. Taking these factors into account, perhaps it will be easier for us to realize what the Chinese are up against.

3. China is poor in natural resources.—Coal is the only basic resource that is plentiful, except for large deposits of a few of the rarer metals, such as tungsten. But in iron her known reserves would last only nine years at the annual U. S. rate of consumption. Her situation as to oil is even worse. This helps to explain why the Chinese are so far behind us in industrialization. They do not have our almost limitless and easily accessible natural resources. The annual output of iron in China is only three pounds per capita (as compared with 550 pounds in the United States), and even in coal she annually produces only 100 pounds per capita (as compared with 10,000 pounds in the United States).

Much of China has never been properly surveyed for minerals, and future explorations, especially in China's little known western regions, will undoubtedly on the War, and in spite of certain other inequities in the distribution of wartime burdens, the harrowing fact remains that the average Chinese is living under conditions but one step removed from starvation. But in spite of all this, the Chinese are still fighting with us today, though the battle has not been going too well.

MILITARY SITUATION CRITICAL

(Question: What is the present military situation?)

At he start of 1945, the military situation in China looked worse than it has in all her seven years of war. The United Nations suffered a major defeat when the Japanese succeeded in joining together their forces in northern and southern China. Three major gains accrued to Japan from this move—she virtually established a continuous land corridor between her base in Manchuria and her conquests in Indo-China and the East Indies; she drove us from our principal air-bases in South China; she placed herself in a position to prevent the Chinese from coming to our aid should we attempt a landing on the China coast.

At present Japan is garrisoning the coast of China, in greater strength, to prepare for the threat of American landings.

reveal many hitherto unknown resources. As things stand today, these figures point clearly to why China is a poor country.

4. China has been fighting a war, on her own soil, for seven years.—Actually China's war with Japan began in 1931 when the Japanese struck in Manchuria. However, after rapidly overrunning this province, the Japanese turned to the problem of exploiting its resources, and did not strike again until 1937. But between 1937 and 1939 the Chinese had lost to the enemy precisely those parts of their country which were richest and economically most developed. They were forced back into the deep interior regions that were the least modernized parts of the country. Before 1937 that part of China which is now not occupied by the Japanese possessed only about ten percent of the industrial plants, and 20 percent of the railroads; it mined only 22 percent of China's coal and milled less than three percent of her flour.

Millions of Chinese preferred to flee from Japanese rule into the interior of Free China, thus complicating the problem of food and support. The entry of America and Britain into the Far Eastern war and the resulting blockade against our shipping made China's economic position worse rather than better, because its immediate result was to cut off China almost entirely from the outside world. Is it any wonder, then, that there is a terrible scarcity of almost all kinds of goods in Free China today; a resulting inflation that has raised price levels to several hundred times what they were in 1937; and that black markets and profiteering activities have sprung up on all sides? This blockade has reduced China's normal poverty to misery and suffering. Thousands of highly cultivated Chinese people who were accustomed to some of the normal comforts of living are gradually dropping below the minimum standard of health requirements. In spite of the profiteers who are fattening

These gains by the Japanese have been blamed on many things—insufficient supplies from us, corruption and bad management in the Chinese government, and poor leadership in the Chinese Army. We shall take a closer look at these complaints a little later.

IS GOVERNMENT DEMOCRATIC?

(Question: Why do some people find it difficult to call China a "democracy?")

Since 1912 China has been a republic. We Americans have been told many things about China's heroic struggle for human freedom. But there are certain things that may seem startling or even appalling—things that don't seem to fit into the usual pattern of what we think of as a republic. A one-party form of government, for example, controlled by the Kuomintang (Gwoh-min-dahng) or National People's Party; a president but no popular elections; and governmental control over the press and other institutions that are run as private enterprises in our own country. In other words we find in China that the terms "republic" and "democracy" do not always necessarily mean the same thing. Though China, by abolishing the monarchy, has become a republic, she hasn't yet fully worked out the democratic processes that we think should go with a republican form of government.

ONE-PARTY RULE

The control of the government by a single party, the Kuomintang, is the result of historical circumstances, for it was the Kuomintang that, under Sun Yat-sen's leadership, overthrew the monarchy in 1912. In China the men who created the revolution were a comparatively small group of ardent revolutionaries. They had to struggle against reactionary forces of all kinds. Thus the Kuomintang tends to look upon itself as a very special and select group, better qualified than others to lead China in her new path.

Sun Yat-sen and his followers believed that the introduction of representative government in China could only be done very slowly. Therefore they regarded the revolution as a gradual and continuing process that would include three different stages: The first, that of military operations, came to an end in 1929, after the Kuomintang armies, led by Chiang Kai-shek, had reunified China after the disorders that had followed the overthrow of the empire. The second stage that followed, that of political tutelage, was a period when China was being prepared, under the leadership of the Kuomintang, for full democratic government. In 1937 it was to have been followed by the third phase, that of full constitutional government, when the Kuomintang would give up its one-party rule and hand the government over to the entire Chinese people. But, unfortunately, the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese War in the same year made this last step impossible. Thus China still remains in the stage of political tutelage, and is still under the government of the Kuomintang.

During the last 100 years China has been politically weak—so weak that it has sometimes been referred to as "a loose sheet of sand." During the last 20 years the Kuomintang has done very much to change this situation, but in the process it has inevitably been led to the use of forceful and sometimes even repressive measures. Since 1937, too, its centralized control has been considerably increased. Whether China can make a smooth transition to constitutionalism at the end of the War, or whether reactionary forces win out is a question of vital importance.

ROLE OF THE "COMMUNISTS"

(Question: What is the difficulty between the Kuomintang and the Chinese "Communists?")

One of the most serious bars against the realization of full representative government in China is the continuing tension between the Kuomintang and the Chinese "Communists." When we speak of the Chinese "Communists," we should remember that many competent observers say that they stand for something very different from what we ordinarily intend when we use the word "communist." In the first place, unlike communists of the orthodox type, they believe in the rights of private property and private enterprise. Their chief interest at present is to improve the economic position of China's farmers, many of whom own but little land themselves, and rent their land in part or in whole from wealthy landlords. In the second place, the Chinese "Communists" are not, like those in America, merely a small minority. With the sole exception of the Kuomintang itself, they are easily China's most important single political group. They exercise almost independent control over many parts of North China, where they have been responsible for much of the continuing guerrilla activity against the Japanese.

The present situation between the Kuomintang and the Chinese "Communists" has a long and complex history behind it. The Chinese Communist Party got its real start when certain Soviet advisers were sent by the USSR to China in the early 1920's to help the Kuomintang in its work of uniting the country.

In 1927, shortly before this unification was completed, a split developed between the Kuomintang and "Communist" groups, and in the years following this split led to serious civil war, in the course of which the Kuomintang armies finally drove the "Communists" into the northwest part of China. Their capital is at Yenan (Yen-ahn) in Shensi (Shen-see) province.

But late in 1936, when the threat from Japan was growing, the feeling became general that this costly internal conflict must end. This resulted in the creation of an armed truce.

During the first years of the War this truce operated very well. But as the years passed by, and China became almost completely isolated from the outside world with resulting inflation and economic suffering of incredible proportions, the old tensions and mutual suspicions reappeared. The "Communists" accused the Kuomintang of failing to send them necessary military supplies and withholding the cooperation needed for the common struggle against Japan. The Kuomintang, on the other hand, accused the "Communists" of failing to obey the orders of the Central (Kuomintang) Government, and of wanting to set up an independent state for themselves in the northwest.

The situation is so complex and has such an involved history, that it is very difficult for any outsider to say definitely who is right and who is wrong. Probably some degree of right and wrong attaches to both sides. The "Communists" say that they are trying to carry out certain economic and political reforms that the Kuomintang has up till now been unable or unwilling to make. Some American and other observers who have visited the "Communists" agree that their program is a moderate one, and that the things they have been doing in their areas are quite in accord with what we think of as a liberal democracy.

In the early autumn of 1944, Chinese press censorship was temporarily relaxed and American correspondents in China were able to give us a clearer picture of the Chinese situation in general, a situation which came as somewhat of a shock to the American public.

NEED UNDERSTANDING AND HELP

We Americans are accustomed to newspapers which freely express their views. We have a long heritage of political freedom. We have fought for the rights of trial by jury, habeas corpus, and freedom of speech. With us the idea of a secret police run by a government is so obnoxious that no government would dare try it. But we sometimes forget that part of the reason that we have and keep these liberties is that we also have enough to eat, and a certain security in our lives which is unknown in the Orient. The years of war against Japan, the terrible malnutrition of the people and the internal conflicts have produced, in China, conditions which require both economic and political improvement. We, on our part, must try to understand China's problems and help her in solving them. All who know this patient people, cheerful under unbelievable hardships, believe they have a chance of coming through.

Recently there have been indications that internal affairs in China have been improving. Negotiations and talks between Chungking and Yenan have been continuing over the past nine months, with General Chou En-lai as the chief representative of the "Communists." Dr. T. V. Soong, whose attitude toward the "Communists" is considered moderate, has been made premier of the Central Government. Early in December 1944, the Generalissimo withdrew large numbers of troops from the armies that had been blockading the "Communists" for six years and rushed them south to Kweichow (Gway-joh) province where they have helped to repulse the Japanese. In March, Chiang announced a National Assembly to convene on 12 November 1945, to draw up a constitution. All parties, including the "Communists," are to be invited and all are to have equal status.

OUR BASIC CONCERN

(Question: How would you summarize the essential problem of China?)

In brief, our basic concern with China's problems is related to the winning of the War and the peace that will follow. China needs supplies—China needs well-trained and well-equipped troops—but perhaps most of all China needs internal unity.

The issue in China is not so much the tension that exists between the Nationalist Government and the Chinese "Communists" as it is between those elements within each camp who place their personal prestige, ideas, and ambitions ahead of winning of the War. A strong, democratic, and united China will hasten the end of the war in the Pacific and make it possible for China to assume her important role in the Far East and among the United Nations.

Who's Who in the Chinese Situation

CHENNAULT, MAJOR GENERAL CLAIRE L., commanded the famous "Flying Tiger" volunteer force of American airmen who fought for China before the United States entered the War. He now commands the U. S. 14th Air Force operating against the Japanese from bases in China.

CHIANG-KAI-SHEK is China's Generalissimo and Head of State. A follower of Sun Yat-sen, he became the most powerful leader in the country after Sun's death.

CHOU EN-LAI, CHU TEH, and MAO TSE-TUNG are leading Chinese Communist figures. Chiang fought them before the War and drove their forces into northern China, but they later united with him in resisting the Japanese. Chou En-lai has been one of the principal negotiators with Nationalist representatives in trying to settle the differences between the two groups.

SOONG is the most important family name in modern China. T. V. Soong, one of the country's foremost financiers, was appointed Foreign Minister soon after Pearl Harbor. He succeeded H. H. Kung as acting President of the Executive Yuan recently. His three sisters all married leading Chinese figures. One is the widow of Sun Yat-sen, one is the wife of Chiang Kai-shek, and one is the wife of H. H. Kung.

SUN YAT-SEN, who died in 1925, was the great leader of modern China, and has been called "China's George Washington." His "Three Principles of the People"—nationalism, democracy, and livelihood—are the great guiding lights of the nation, to which most of its leaders subscribe in theory while sometimes quarreling about methods of achievement.

WEDEMEYER, LIEUTENANT GENERAL ALBERT C., was placed in command of U. S. Army Forces in China when the CBI theater was divided after General Stilwell's recall. Lieutenant General Daniel I. Sultan was given the India-Burma part of the command.

AIDS FOR DISCUSSION LEADERS

Following are some special guides for AAF, AGF, ASF, and Officer Group discussion leaders, also supplementary material for the background information of all group leaders. Importance of this material precludes printing this week of the usual Outline for Discussion.

SPECIAL GUIDES

Army Air Forces

Two phases of the Chinese situation will probably be of particular interest to Air Forces personnel: (a) the record made by the Air Transport Command in flying supplies across the Himalaya (Him-AHL-ah-yah) Mountains while the Burma Road was closed; (b) the activities of our combat airmen in China. Here are a few basic facts on each operation:

(a) "Flying the Hump."—After the Burma Road was closed by the Japanese in April 1942, the only way to supply China from India was by air. This involved flying cargo planes from fields in northeastern India over mountains as much as three miles high. At first the totals were small, but more planes, more fields, and improved methods boosted the record. A War Department report in October 1944 stated that 23,000 tons were flown over the "Hump" in one recent unnamed month, adding: "Air freight from India to China long ago started flowing in greater volume than ever went via the Burma Road." This was more than twice the tonnage for December 1943. In January of this year, General Stilwell said that 35,000 tons a month were now being flown in. The supplies carried included gasoline, munitions, trucks, and jeeps.

One writer, discussing the old Burma Road, which supplied 20,000 tons a month, said: "Such a supply line could hardly maintain a single American Armored division in combat." It must be remembered, too, that supplies brought in had to be divided between General Stilwell's Chinese troops and General Chennault's air force. Also, part of the cargo had to be high octane gasoline for the Air Transport Command itself.

(b) Combat air forces in China.—The "Flying Tigers," the American Volunteer Group, had been fighting the Japanese for about five months before Pearl Harbor was attacked. Out of this organization ultimately grew the U. S. 14th Air Force. Starting almost entirely with fighter planes, this force eventually added medium and heavy bombers. It has not only fought for the defense of China; it has aided our Pacific operations, having destroyed about 275,000 tons of Japanese shipping off the China coast in a single year's time. Chinese pilots trained by Americans made up part of the personnel.

The story of this air force has emphasized again the importance of air-ground coordination. The force has worked closely to support Chinese ground troops, but the fact that China and the Allies have not been able to equip ground forces on a sufficient scale has resulted in the enemy driving us out of many forward air bases simply by ground action. This is well worth pointing out to Air Forces personnel—that final victory against the Japanese in China can only come through combined action.

Army Ground Forces

Many Ground Forces discussion leaders may want to emphasize particularly the point that the United Nations may ultimately engage the main body of the Japanese army in China. One question is most likely to be raised in this connection: If the Japanese do fight on in China, will large numbers of American troops be sent there?

Any attempt to answer this question would be speculative, of course, but it is possible to point out the factors that will be involved.

One factor would be the scale of Japanese resistance in China. China's Chief of Staff estimated in February that the Japanese have assigned up to 50 divisions—two-fifths of their army on the Chinese mainland—to prevent an American landing on the coast.

Another factor would be the extent to which China's military effort can be built up. China recently announced that 500,000 new men would be drafted by the end of March "to meet the demand for the all-out Chinese counter-offensive in conjunction with the coming landing of American forces on the China coast." The big need, however, will still be proper training and equipment for Chinese armies.

One other question of particular Ground Forces interest may rise: Would troops in China encounter a new set of conditions there?

In general, China's likely battle areas are not unusual fighting terrain. The country lies roughly in the same latitudes as the United States, with about the same range of climates. The outstanding terrain difficulties are mountain gorges in some sections and rivers which cause great floods from time to time. The enemy troops encountered are likely to be tough. China has been a great practical training ground for the Japanese, and many Japanese soldiers there have had years of experience in combat under the conditions our forces would meet there.

Army Service Forces

Emphasis upon supply in inevitable in any discussion of the Chinese war situation. For Service Forces groups, discussion leaders will have the opportunity to show in this particular theater more clearly than in most others just how vital supply activities are in relation to combat success. To an unprecedented degree, China's difficulties have been the result, not of lack of manpower, but of lack of the means to equip the millions of soldiers in its armies. It has necessarily been our task—a slow and painful one—to attack that problem.

The building of the Stilwell Road was an example of cooperative effort by ground and service troops. Some of the difficulties involved were described by Secretary of War Stimson in his press conference of 2 February 1945:

"The construction of the Ledo Road was a great engineering as well as military achievement. Part of the Ledo Road was built at a time when enemy attack and harassing raids were an ever-present possibility. Terrific rains, bottomless mud, mountains, jungles, and malaria had to be overcome. Much of the job was done working around the clock 24 hours a day using flood lights at night. During the last monsoon period a two-mile wooden causeway had to be built for maintenance purposes across a stretch of flooded jungle land inundated with four to six feet of water. This causeway, comprised of one million board feet of lumber, was cut by two G. I. lumber mills in the Hukawng Valley. Altogether 487 miles of road had to be built or improved from India to the China border. It is permanent all-weather supply highway."

The road was started in December 1942, so that it took slightly over two years to complete. Though it is a two-way highway for most of its length, in some places it had to be hacked along the sides of 4,000-foot mountains and is scarcely more than a jeep-track. To build each mile of the road, engineers moved an average of 750,000 tons of rock and earth and laid 1,000 feet of culvert. In many cases they worked after dark by the light of oil flares.

In Burma, the troops faced malaria, dysentery, and leeches, in addition to the ever-present mountains and jungles. There was also the monsoon season, beginning in May and lasting four or five months; during that period, the rainfall may be as high as 50 inches a month.

As is the case of "flying the Hump" (see Army Air Forces section), this road will not be a complete answer to China's supply problem. But as long as the Chinese knew that their allies were bending every effort to complete it, they had evidence of our good faith and the hope that ultimately more vital equipment would be on the way. They knew, too, that while the road was being built, trucks and stockpiles were being accumulated at its far end to be rushed to them as soon as possible.

The Chinese have had so little equipment to work with that a little more can mean a great deal to them. Service Forces troops will understand, for instance, how important a few trucks are to the Chinese Army when they are told that when the Burma Road was closed, it was estimated that there were perhaps 15,000 trucks operating on China's roads. Two years later, there were perhaps one-third that number which could operate regularly.

The vehicles in the first convoys coming in over the Stilwell Road will be left in China to ease this shortage. Drivers can be flown back over the Himalayas on return trips of the Air Transport Command.

Answers to the question—Will we need many supply troops in China?—are partly contained in the above information. It is clear that the scale on which Japanese troops fight in that theater will be the real determining factor. If there is major combat activity there over a long period, many Service Forces men must be kept busy. Some will be in port areas in India and Burma or at supply dumps at one end or the other of the Stilwell Road. Others will be driving vehicles. Still others will be doing service and supply jobs in China. If we make landings on the China coast, large numbers of service troops would inevitably be involved. The importance of China in the Far Eastern picture, at any rate, advances the possibility that Service Forces men of all branches face the possibility of serving in or near that country.

Officer Discussions

Where separate officer discussion groups are held, there is an excellent opportunity to drive home a point in which understanding by leaders is very important: the whole subject of relations between Americans and Chinese as individuals. It is vital to emphasize:

1. That the Chinese have fought the Japanese with very little outside help, have suffered more than 5 million casualties, and have lost most of the best industrial facilities of their country.

2. That in spite of this, they still fight on, and that they have earned the right to our respect as good allies.

3. That although their standard of living is very low by comparison with ours, they are working for a better life, and that the ways in which they are like us are more important than any superficial differences between Chinese and Americans.

4. That the Chinese are a living proof of the falsehood of the Japanese claim that this is "a white man's war."

5. That American soldiers in China by their actions and attitudes are contributing to the picture that the Chinese people form of all of us and of our country. Behavior based on mistaken notions that the Chinese are "inferior" not only betrays a lack of familiarity with the ordeals China has been through; it can also do incalculable harm during the War and in the peace that follows.

A Few Interesting Facts On China's Industrial Progress

China's first railroad, a line ten miles long between Shanghai and Woosung, was built in 1876. Shortly afterward it was completely torn up, owing to the superstitious fears of people living along the right of way, who believed it brought bad luck. But at the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese War in 1937, the Chinese owned over 7,500 miles of railroad, exclusive of over 3,700 miles in Manchuria lost to the Japanese in 1931.

China's first motor highway was built in 1912. By 1937 there were about 70,000 miles, of which 15,500 were surfaced.

In 1912 there were almost no modern factories. But by 1937 there were 3,849, among them many cotton textile mills, having a total of over five million spindles.

In Free China, the region that before 1937 was the most backward part of China, this progress has been continued since 1937, despite overwhelming difficulties. In some fields it has even been speeded up. Here is part of what has happened:

Railways: About 800 miles built up to December 1942.

Highways: About 3,720 miles built up to the summer of 1942, and 3,350 miles under construction or surveyed.

Coal production has been increased in Free China by 59 percent; iron by over 150 percent; oil by 1,194 percent.

Of the 3,489 factories in pre-war China, 452 have been moved to the interior. This involved the transport of over 120,000 tons of machinery and other equipment, much of which had to be taken apart and carried in small pieces for hundreds of miles on the backs of men.

Most of this progress in Free China has been made entirely by Chinese, without help from any outside source. Thus it is evident that the Chinese have both the ability and the determination to carry out the modernization of their country even under the most heartbreaking conditions. After the War it will undoubtedly continue at a much faster rate.

SUPPLEMENTARY MATERIAL

BASES AND COOPERATION

"Even if we destroy the Japanese fleet, we still couldn't defeat them on the sea. We have to have bases in China to cut off their lines to Manchuria. * * * I still feel that Japan will be defeated from bases in China."

—Admiral of the Fleet Chester W. Nimitz, August 1944.

"Following on the heels of the Cabinet reorganization, and closely related to it, came important changes in the Chinese system of military supply and far closer cooperation between the Chinese and American high commands. * * *

"There is more likelihood that moderate elements in the Kuomintang will continue to gain power, adding to the chances of genuine cooperation between the National Government and the Communists. * * * Such cooperation, if attainable, will be of historical importance both in speeding the progress of the war and in strengthening the bases of the peace."

—Donald M. Nelson, in a special report to the President, early this year.

MILITARY AND ECONOMIC AID

Aside from its internal political problems, China's big problem has been supply After Japan closed China's seaports and captured its best industrial areas in the early years of the War, both military and civilian demands grew harder to meet. Whole manufacturing plants were transported piece by piece and set up in the interior, but lack of modern methods and machinery has made the supply job tremendously difficult. Now, however, efforts we have made to aid the country are beginning to show results.

Even since April 1942, when the Japanese closed the Burma Road, China has been almost entirely cut off from outside help except for supplies—at present, perhaps 35,000 tons monthly—being flown in over the Himalayas. In January the Japanese were finally driven from northern Burma so that engineers could complete a new road from Ledo through Myitkyina (MYIT-chi-nah) connecting with the old Burma Road near the Chinese border. The first convoys, carrying ammunition, ambulances, and medium and light artillery, have now passed over the route, which Chiang has named after General Stilwell, "in memory of his distinctive contribution and of the signal part which the Allied and Chinese forces under his direction played in the Burma campaign and in the building of the road." The world's longest oil pipeline, roughly paralleling the road, has also been constructed.

In another move to improve the Chinese supply situation, Donald M. Nelson, formerly chairman of our War Production Board, paid two visits to the country, the first in September 1944. As a result of that trip, Chiang agreed to the creation of a Chinese War Production Board. Nelson returned to this country in November for a talk with President Roosevelt, and then went back to China with a small group of production experts. The Americans worked with Chinese officials headed by the Minister of Economics, on a basic law granting wide powers to the new WPB. Arrangements were made for close liaison between it and U. S. Army Ordnance representatives in Chungking. Nelson also left behind him steel and alcohol experts to work with plant managers on output, quality, and cost. By the spring of this year, he estimated, China's total war production will double the November rate.

This program, of course, is mainly aimed at bettering China's war situation. It can be important for the future, too. As the Nelson report puts it: "The success of China's venture in planned war production, if properly followed up through American Government and business channels, will make for closer postwar economic relations between China and the United States. China has the capacity and the desire to develop herself industrially with American aid. If that aid is realistically planned, and if financial arrangements are put on a sound business basis, China should soon after the War begin to replace Japan as the leading industrial nation of the Orient. In that event, a market of enormous size should progressively open up for American export industries."

CHIANG STATES AIMS

"Internally we strive for the realization of local autonomy throughout the country, consolidation of national unity, establishment of government by law and consummation of the democratic rule. Externally we seek to cultivate closer relations with our friendly nations, to win the war against aggression, to collaborate with our allies in establishing permanent world peace after the war, to develop our rich natural resources, and carry out economic reconstruction and to enhance the well-being of mankind through self-exertion as well as internation collaboration."

—Chiang Kai-shek, on the 32nd Anniversary of the Chinese Republic, 10th October 1943.

CHINESE STRENGTH AND WEAKNESS

"As a whole, Chinese people have incredible fortitude. I have rarely heard a Chinese complain about the miseries of wartime existence. China's remarkable spontaneous sense of humor, which makes it easy for Americans and Chinese to get on together, keeps the Chinese people sane and congenial during a period of bleakness and slowly accumulating disaster.

"These are some of the things for which the Chinese people are to be respected. But for our own self-respect we must be realistic about China's many shortcomings. Some of them are inevitable and cannot be remedied; some of them are due to the incompetence of a government that puts its political security ahead of the War against Japan. * * *"

—Brooks Atkinson, N. Y. Times, 21 November 1944.

CHINA AND THE FUTURE

"China's future policies toward Japan, toward Russia, and toward colonial Asia, like China's domestic development within the homeland of the 450,000,000 Chinese, will be of primary concern to all men living in the world today. The abolition of the unequal treaties by America and Britain has already symbolized the end of the hundred years of China's semicolonial subjection. China's part in the final victory will give significance to that symbolic act by Britain and America; it will mark the beginning of the end of the colonial system as a whole.

"No longer will the destinies of Asia be dictated by imperial powers. Nor, on the other hand, is an Asiatic counter-imperialism to be expected. Japan tried that and failed. The truth is that we no longer live in a world of 'the European question,' 'the Balkan question,' 'the Russian question,' 'the Far Eastern question.' That era is over. Henceforth we live in a world where there are only local aspects of the world question. Whether we make a success of that new world will depend on the interaction of two things: the success or failure that each nation makes of its own affairs, and the success or failure of all nations in dealing with each other as neighbors in a world order."

—Owen and Eleanor Lattimore in The Making of Modern China.

(Prepared by Army Orientation Branch, Information and Education Division, ASF [A. G. 353 (16 Jan. 44)].

Mr. MORRIS. This is a letter from Mr. Richard Wait, counsel for John K. Fairbank, to Robert Morris, dated April 25, 1952, together with a carbon copy of a letter sent by Robert Morris to Richard Wait dated April 23, 1952, asking that three articles purportedly written by his client be identified for the record.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The documents were marked "Exhibit No. 1344F" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1344F

SH: FW

FAIRBANK WITNESS.

APRIL 23, 1952.

RICHARD WAIT, Esq.,
Choate, Hall and Stewart, 30 State St.,
Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR MR. WAIT: The following three articles, purportedly written by Professor John K. Fairbank, are being introduced into our public record of the hearings on the Institute of Pacific Relations:

"The Mechanics of Imperialism in China." (AMERASIA, September 1937, pp. 295–300).

"China's Prospects and U. S. Policy." (FAR EASTERN SURVEY, July 2, 1947, pp. 145–149)

"Communism in China and the New American Approach to Asia." (NEXT STEP IN ASIA, Harvard University Press, 1949, pp. 1–24.)

Would you kindly have professor Fairbank send us a statement confirming the fact that he is the author of these specific writings?

Thank you.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT MORRIS, Special Counsel.

John L. Hall, Stuart C. Rand, Charles O. Pengra, Harvey H. Bundy, Claude R. Branch, James Garfield, Charles P. Curtis, Richard C. Curtis, Marcien Jenckes, Robert Proctor, Richard Wait, Simon P. Townsend, Brooks Potter, Samuel L. Gwin, Bailey Aldrich, Franklin Dexter, John M. Hall, Charles H. Stockton, Raymond W. Ellis, John Dane, Jr., Wm. Arthur Dupee, Jr., Franklin R. Johnson

CHARLES F. CHOATE, JR., 1899–1927. RALPH A. STEWART, 1904–1926

CHOATE, HALL & STEWART

30 STATE STREET

Telephone CApitol 7–5020

BOSTON 9, MASS., April 25, 1952.

ROBERT MORRIS, Esquire,
Special Counsel, United States Senate,
Committee on the Judiciary,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MORRIS: I have your letter of April 23. My client, John K. Fairbank, confirms that he was the author of the three articles listed in your letter. You will recall that pages 13 and 14 of the digest of his writings touching upon communism, which was an exhibit to his statement submitted to the Committee, contains excerpts from the article "Next Step in Asia" which is the third article referred to in your letter.

Very truly yours,

RICHARD WAIT.

RW : KV.

FAR EASTERN SURVEY

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

July 2 1947 Vol. XVI No. 13

Trends in China toward collectivism work against American efforts to foster a capitalist-American way of life in that country.

CHINA'S PROSPECTS AND U. S. POLICY

(By JOHN K. FAIRBANK)[1]

The American fear of communism, if we yield to it blindly, may inspire us to aggressive anti-communist policies in China of the most disastrous sort. Our defense against totalitarianism will be ineffective if it is blindly fearful, and we must therefor try to assess clearly the Chinese political tradition and China's trend toward some form of collectivism. What kind of Chinese state must we be prepared to get along with in the future?

I assume that, as an alternative to understanding Asia's long-term prospects, we may embark on an emotional program of aid to anti-communist regimes which attempt to suppress popular movements in areas like Indonesia, Indochina, the Philippines, or China, in the belief that such aid will somehow defend American democracy. Far from helping us, such a program would be likely to help communist leadership of those popular movements become firmly established, since communists would be able to champion the people's cause and focus anti-foreign and anti-imperialist sentiment against the United States. Thus, after setting out to fight communism in Asia, the American people would be obliged in the end to fight the peoples of Asia, in the effort to make them develop liberal political and economic institutions which are outside their tradition and beyond their means.

This is the danger we face if we try to defend ourselves in Asia blindly and without regard for Asiatic tradition and institutions. Aggressive anti-communism in Asia could easily reinforce a trend toward anti-communist authoritarianism at home. Such a trend will come only if we let our fear of communist totalitarianism stampede us into acquiescence in an American type of fascism, and this may seem unlikely. But we must recognize that corruption of our democratic process may begin overseas, and that if we set ourselves to stamp out popular movements in Asia, we can only undermine, rather than fortify, American-style democracy at home. If we take China as the decisive theater, what political institutions are the Chinese people themselves now tending toward?

MAIN LINES OF DEVELOPMENT

In China's political reformation we can expect three main lines of development, in the economic, political, and cultural spheres, respectively. They add up to a new Chinese-style collectivism.

In the economic sphere the main determinant of China's future will be population increase, made possible by the continuation of the general process of industrialization and modernization, particularly in public health and medicine and in production and transportation of food. These developments will lower the infant mortality rate, increase the number of baby girls that grow up to produce children, and so raise that proportion of the population which is in the child-bearing age-group. The population increase after several decades will level off with an increase of possibly twenty percent or even more, at any rate an enormous net increase.

---

[1] Dr. Fairbank is Associate Professor of History and Associate Chairman, China Program, Committee on International and Regional Studies at Harvard University. His most recent periods in China were with the Office of Strategic Services and the Office of War Information.

KEY FACTOR FOOD SUPPLY

The key factor in this process will be the increase of food supply. Lack of food in China, as in India, appears to be the chief factor which has been deterring population growth. That is, the demographic picture is Malthusian. Food supply is likely to be increased, first, through government stimulation and organization of increased production. The current example is the Chinese Communists' production drives, which work through communist-led farmers' bodies and use political means to encourage farmer cooperation and initiative. Anti-communist campaigns oblige communist areas further to encourage this local production. Second, food supply will also be increased by scientific and technical improvements--plant- and stock-breeding and improved farm management and crop diversification--such as those developed particularly by agencies under the National Government, and also by Japanese during the occupation of North China. American technical aid, through official State Department channels or through academic and missionary channels as at the University of Nanking, should continue to help in this scientific aspect of rural reconstruction. The chief need is for a closer coordination of mass political organization and technological know-how. The present separation of political mass organization (as in the Communist areas) and imported technology (as in the Kuomintang areas) is disastrous for China. The key to agrarian reform lies in getting the Chinese farmer, by political means, to act differently in the economic sphere.

The same coordination of politics and technology is possible and may be expected sooner or later in the field of public health. Over a decade ago the Ting Hsien experiment, for example, made it plain that in traditional circumstances rural China can be remade efficiently only by combining technological improvements with political support of such improvements. The reason is that any program of change in the countryside, to be effective, must be on a mass scale. Anything on a mass scale in traditional China had to be under government purview, just as in the new China mass activity may also be under government inspiration.

Improvements in food supply and public health are only two of the factors in population increase, others being improved transportation channels, rural farm credit facilities, industrial production of cheap consumer goods in factory cities, increased foreign trade, and the like.

In the slowing down and leveling off of the population increase in China the key factor will be the general rise of the standard of living among the broad mass of the people. Industrialization, generally speaking, means both an increase of population and a rise of the standard of living, but the latter lags behind the former. Increased production of food in China, so to speak, will be used first as a basis for increased survival of people, after which the increase of material goods gradually will be used less for increasing the quantity of people and more for improving their quality of living. The slowly rising standard of living may be expected to cut down the birth rate, through the operation of many factors--not merely contraception but also a later age of marriage, some decline of fertility, and the like.

SOCIAL WELFARE OR MONOPOLY

The crucial question is, will the standard of living in China rise soon enough and cut down the birth rate fast enough to permit the Chinese people individually to enjoy the fruits of industrialization? Or will industrialization and its attendant population increase merely multiply the present coolie poverty and mass misery? Will China use modern technology to support a greater volume of human life or a better quality of life? The outcome depends on whether or not the fruits of modern technology and production can be spread rapidly and broadly among the mass of the people. This rise in living standards in turn depends on whether the political and economic system aims at social welfare rather than upper class interest or monopoly.

In this context Chiang Kai-shek's archaic Confucian ideas, as expressed in China's Destiny, do not seem as hopeful as the ideas expressed by Chinese Communist leaders. Since the raising of mass living standards is the particular stock in trade of the Chinese Communists rather than of the anti-communists, American support of anti-communist regimes in China will be likely therefore to exacerbate the Chinese population problem. In general, we must be prepared for a trend toward political organization of the economy adequate to sustain a larger population but inadequate to raise its standard of living rapidly.

This key importance of government-for-social-welfare rather than for upper-class interest brings us from the economic to the political sphere, in which we must expect the growth in China of an authoritarian state system at variance with traditional American ideals of individual freedom, particularly the ideal of economic free enterprise which now forms the ideological basis for our large-scale capitalism. This growth of authoritarianism has a solid basis in China's history and institutions.

There is for example the Chinese tradition of the unity of the empire, one sun in heaven and one ruler in the world, or as Kuomintang slogans put it, "one nation, one party, one leader." This deeply ingrained feeling that the whole of China must have one single top authority stands in the way of movements for federation of autonomous areas and reinforces extremist opponents of coalition government. It lies behind the mutual distrust of the Kuomintang and the Communists who each feel that the other must be aiming at monopoly of the government power. It impedes the growth of a two-party system, since the control of government has traditionally been vested in a single dynastic house, ruling monolithically through a single universal bureaucracy personally loyal to it. Traditionally the opposition to the government has found organized expression only through secret societies which defied the government's monopoly of political organization. All these traditions undoubtedly influence the present scene.

Let us analyze certain elements in this sociopolitical tradition. First, China has had a two-class or bifurcated society. The lower class or stratum has been the illiterate and custom-bound mass of the peasantry. The upper class or stratum has been that small proportion of the Chinese population who have in one way or another had enough leisure to become literate. Language has been used to preserve this class structure. Anyone learning the Chinese written language must be supported for several years by the labor of others. Consequently literacy has been a luxury mainly confined to the land-owning class, from which has been produced the scholar class, to which has been attached, under its wing, the merchant class. This small literate ruling class of landowners, scholars, officials, and also merchants has been the bearers of China's culture and has had every reason to hang together in support of a bureaucratic authoritarian government.

TRADITIONS OF TWO-CLASS SOCIETY

In the second place, the two-class society of China has naturally had a tradition of government as the responsibility of the bureaucracy, not of the people. To be sure, Confucius, Mencius, and others developed the idea that the ruler and his officials would be well advised to rule in the interests of the mass of the people. in order to retain their tacit acquiescence in the continuation of the regime, that is, the Mandate of Heaven. But this was rule for the people, not by the people.

This idea is now echoed in the present-day doctrine of party dictatorship and political tutelage. The Kuomintang, for example, still runs the national government of China on behalf of the Chinese people, who are considered to have surrendered their voice to it. The Chinese Communists have a similar party structure topped by a Party Congress and a Central Executive Committee, which is like the Kuomintang in form.

ROLE OF SCHOLAR

Third, modern China has inherited the tradition that the scholar class is the reservoir from which the officials of the bureaucracy are chosen, but that the scholar when out of office has no particular responsibility concerning public affairs. It is true that the memorials of courageous scholars were one chief expression of public opinion under the empire, but this was offset by the generally passive attitude of the nonactive members of the scholar-official class, who, as the saying goes, were Confucians when in office and Taoists when out of office. This tendency may be seen among Chinese scholars today, of the type who are inclined to deplore both communist ruthlessness and Kuomintang corruption and keep their skirts clean of both. (They have their counterpart among American liberals, and are similarly impotent and unhappy.) This irresponsibility of the liberal in China accounts for the relatively small number of technically trained personnel who have moved to join mass movements in the countryside.

Fourth, it has taken a long time for the Chinese intellectuals to begin to overstep the ancient class boundary and provide leadership for the modern mass revolution. The great Taiping Rebellion of the period 1851–64 was a peasant movement but it failed to enlist the leadership of the Confucian scholar class. The scholars were active in the Reform Movement of 1898 but failed to organize any sort of mass support. Even Sun Yat-sen in organizing the revolution of 1911, while he used the secret societies, failed to extend his organization into the masses of the cities or the countryside. The Kuomintang did not finally achieve national leadership in the revolution of 1925–27 until it used Soviet tactics of mass organization.

In the long course of the Chinese revolutionary process, one great stumbling block has been this inability of the scholar and the coolie to get together and work together. This tends to leave the bureaucrat today in a strategic position between the two. As long as the official stratum of political organizers, military officers, and civil bureaucrats can replenish its ranks from a relatively small literate educated class, it can continue to dominate the illiterate agricultural masses. It is essential to the Kuomintang, for instance, that it continue to screen all candidates for technical training abroad and try to absorb them into government institutions on their return. By controlling the sluice gates of western technology, the ruling class in modern China is able to absorb the scholar back into itself and so perpetuate the two-class type of society. This two-class system necessarily implies authoritarian government of the lower farmer class by the upper official class.

In this respect the Chinese Communists are truly secular and not merely cyclical revolutionists in their effort to draw an official class directly from the peasantry. China's chief hope is to stimulate and permit the peasant to participate in politics and find representation, preferably in our democratic forms, and at least through the bureaucracy of a social-welfare government. If the Communists cannot quickly wipe out the ancient class barrier of illiteracy and shatter the old two-class system, their administration will more easily succumb to the traditional evils inherent in bureaucracy.

GOVERNMENT FROM THE TOP

The continuing tendency toward government from the top down, by a ruling bureaucracy which monopolizes the higher learning and technology as well as control of public utilities and large-scale enterprises of all kinds, is best seen among the conservative ranks of the Kuomintang as the party entrenched in power. Kuomintang authoritarianism is buttressed by the use of the ancient Confucian virtue-ethic exemplified in Chiang Kai-shek's book; also by the slogan of the Confucian reformers of the late nineteenth century—"Chinese learning for the fundamental structure and Western learning for practical use"—in other words, traditional Chinese values, like the two-class society, can be preserved, while modern technology is used in the service of such values. The prostitution of Western science in the service of outworn oriental despotism is nothing new in Asia. Continued American assistance in this prostitution, as in military missions, would not be new either.

If we lift our eyes from the Kuomintang, however, we find still a considerable prospect of authoritarian government under the Chinese Communists. Quite aside from the controversial question how far the Russian example might be followed in China, we must face the exigencies of the Chinese situation in itself. Supposing that the Chinese Communists avoid both the evils inherent in the Confucian political tradition, and also the political evils developed under the communist dictatorship in Russia, they will still be subject to two very powerful factors in China making for autocratic centralized control from the top down. One of these factors is the urgency of China's problems. So much must be done in so short a time, if any government is to avoid disaster. This urge toward police rule will be the greater among the Chinese Communists in proportion as they take responsibility for the government of urban areas and areas in which they have not had sufficient time to build up indoctrinated mass organizations, responsive to propaganda rather than to police control.

NEEDS AND RESOURCES

The second factor calling for central control, no matter what party or parties eventually unify China, will be the size of China's needs in proportion to her resources. Raw materials, capital resources, and trained personnel are all so scarce that only an autocratic top authority can undertake great tasks of reconstruction, can make great investments, and can organize great projects.

American policy will also influence this trend. The Chinese Communists rely heavily on mass support, which cannot be entirely manipulated, and their declared policy is to proceed toward socialism through an inevitable intermediate stage of bourgeois-democratic small-scale capitalism, by which they hope to build up the productive powers of their society, and to develop democratic institutions.

But it is doubtful if the Chinese Communists will be allowed favorable circumstances in which they can follow out this gradual program.

On the contrary, American efforts to save China from totalitarian communism, by increasing the material obstacles in the way of the Chinese revolutionary movement, are likely to oblige the revolution to follow more ruthless, dictatorial, and totalitarian leadership than would otherwise be the case. For example, American acquiescence in the legally recognized Chinese government's blockade of the communist areas has already increased the doctrinaire ignorance and lack of technology which are the Communists' weakest points. American support of the anti-communist military effort, for another example, permits the unmilitary Chinese liberal movement to be liquidated, and the leadership both of liberalism and of communism to become concentrated in military communism. The attempt to suppress social change by the sword ensures that social change will come only by the sword. Liquidation of die-hards, secret police surveillance, an iron curtain against foreign influence, all may develop to preserve the gains of the communist revolution.

The pernicious results of our intervention policy are already apparent. American support of Kuomintang authoritarianism now allows the Kuomintang to destroy Chinese liberalism in its area. Consequently the extremist totalitarian elements among the Chinese Communists have less need to compete with the Kuomintang in order to win the support of Chinese liberals. They more easily inherit the liberal cause as a poor ally of the communist cause. By backing one extreme and supporting Chinese fascism we shall soon wipe out independent Chinese liberalism.

In the long run we may expect Chinese individualism and humanism, which are so ubiquitous in the conduct of personal relations in Chinese society, to reassert themselves in politics. But the fundamental fact is that in the poor countries of agrarian Asia food comes before civil liberties. The American type of political freedom, being as yet unknown there, will not be demanded until the standard of living has risen considerably. Thus the economic trend toward a greater population, at a low living standard, and the political trend toward an authoritarian government dominating the vast peasant mass through bureaucratic controls will reinforce each other. We must recognize that Asia is ready to modernize through mass organization rather than follow the nineteenth century example of the United States and modernize through individual enterprise.

This un-American type of political and economic development, which may be called forth in part by American stupidity, is likely to be further reinforced by Chinese cultural trends. In this sphere the main background factor is the ancient tradition of Chinese cultural superiority to the barbarians roundabout. As a culture island in East Asia, the early Chinese developed, instead of nationalism, a sort of culturism, judging the foreigner by his conformity or nonconformity to the Confucian way of life. In time of invasion and alien domination the Chinese scholar class took refuge in the demonstrable superiority of the art, literature, philosophy, and customs of Chinese life. This has formed the basis for a national pride which, as the world shrinks, can increasingly be used to nourish xenophobia, nationalism, and chauvinism, contempt for the foreigner, and aggressiveness, when circumstances allow, in foreign relations,

DEMOCRATIZATION OF CLASSICAL TRADITION

One factor which may facilitate this modern superpatriotism is the democratization of the Chinese classical tradition. The spread of literacy to the masses, presumably through some form of phonetic script, cannot be delayed forever. Like the spread of political organization and political consciousness which accompanies it, the spread of literacy and enlightenment is a constant possibility in the Chinese countryside today and offers to those who spread it the opportunity to assume the leadership of the awakened masses and thereby gain great power and accomplish great changes. It is this potentiality of mass awakening which gives the Chinese revolutionist a long-term advantage which is not possessed by the die-hard conservative.

USE OF EDUCATING MEDIA

Within the context of authoritarian government, this means that the media of mass enlightenment which accompany industrialization—radio, press, publishing, schools, and screen—can be used for the political purposes of a ruling bureaucracy. Techniques of thought control and of propaganda are to be expected and are already being used by poth parties as far as present circumstances allow. The diffusion of a highly selfconscious interpretation of Chinese history and cultural traditions among the vest ocean of the common people can contribute to a new and vital popular culture, such as the new folk drama and simple pictorial art of North China, or the modern theater of the cities. All this cultural development can be stimulated, guided, and used to support a new order of society. The point to note is that the new mass culture is developing pari passu with mass political organization and controls, not ahead of them as happened in Western countries.

Finally we must not forget the distinction between the fascist-conservative and the communist-progressive forms of totalitarianism. Whatever may be the case elsewhere, there is no doubt whatever that the Chinese communist movement, as the party out of power, is strongly motivated to show a broad concern for the masses of the people, since it is from mass support that it derives its strength. This cannot be said of the Kuomintang regime in power, as now constituted. Since the long future belongs to those who prove that they act for the welfare of the Chinese people, our support of anticommunism in China will be a losing battle as long as the Chinese communist movement retains popular support. This it will be helped to do as long as we attack it and thereby confirm communism as the defender of the Chinese masses.

In summary, a much larger but still economically poor and insecure population will call for a more efficient but still necessarily authoritarian government, which will reinforce its position through the use of a new and democratized but still essentially Chinese and nationalistic mass culture. Given China's size and poverty, she has no other road to follow. In order not to remain poor, ignorant, individualistic and disorganized she will become less poor, more educated, and collectivized. It follows that efforts to foster in China an illusory, capitalist-American way of life, which China cannot afford, will only delay the process of creating China's new way of life and if persisted in will eventually range China against us.

[Amerasia, September 1937]

The Mechanics of Imperialism in China

(By John K. Fairbank)

Several features of the present Japanese expansion in northeastern Asia are reminiscent of the process by which England opened China to Western trade a century ago. Puppet régimes, smuggling wars, the narcotic trade, opportune "outrages," "insults" and "incidents" are in China an old story. In greater or less degree they were characteristic of the British commercial conquest in the 1840s and '50s just as they are typical of the present Japanese aggression, which is the lineal though brobdingnagian descendant of its British forerunner.

Imperialism in China, like most other importations, soon becomes Chinese. Granted that Japan seeks territorial control where Britain sought only peaceful trade, and that the evil concomitants of the present conquest are intensified many fold by modern improvements in warfare, finance, and propaganda, still there are certain recurrent phenomena which seem to distinguish a foreign invasion in modern China from its counterpart elsewhere. One of these is the fact that the invader can attain his ends only with the help of a certain type of opportunist, the so-called "Chinese traitor" (han chien) so roundly denounced in Chinese documents of the last century. Another persistent phenomenon has been the opium trade, with which is allied the business of smuggling dutiable goods past the customs. Also, because of the numerical weakness of the invaders, the maintenance of their prestige has always been a peculiarly important consideration. In these and other respects the early British experience forms a parallel which provides instructive comment on current Nipponese activities.

It took the British four campaigns and many minor skirmishes to effect the opening of China in the years between 1840 and 1860. Their first war led to treaties in 1842–43 which opened to trade five seaports on the southeast coast. But the trade soon outgrew these coastal ports. British merchants clamored for access to the interior, into which the foreign trade was already making its way. The second war and the treaties of 1858–60 completed this seemingly irrestible process, and foreign merchants and missionaries, protected by gunboats and extraterritoriality, were soon bargaining for the goods and souls of the natives all over the country. Of course, we believe that the result improved China, since it made her more like ourselves. The fact remains that China was opened, without her consent, by a subtle process of temptation and intimidation.

What are the chances of the same thing happening again today, on a vaster scale? To what extent are the circumstances that helped the British likely to help the Japanese?

As in most cases of imperialism, the dynamic element in the British advance was the man on the spot. Her Majesty's Consuls, pen in hand, played then the role which Doihara and his colleagues now bustle through in military trappings. It was the Consuls in the treaty ports whose ambitious minds saw problems crying out for regulation, insults that demanded immediate redress, opportunities ripe for the taking. Moreover Her Majesty's servants had their careers to make, and they were hand-picked for self-reliance and fidelity to the interests of British trade. After the first war, for example, the Government in London was adverse for a time to the acquisition of even an island base in China, such as the merchants had desired for generations. Sir Henry Pottinger, who negotiated the Treaty of Nanking in 1842, finally obtained the cession of Hongkong on his own responsibility, in excess of his instructions. This was typical of British expansion. The men on the spot were often several jumps ahead of their superiors in London. When the dynamic Harry Parkes, who was the Chinese bête noire, the Doihara of the period, precipitated the second war in 1856, the first impulse of people in England was to disavow him; and they might have done so had they not been convinced that Britain's honor, meaning at Canton Britain's face, was at stake. Loss of face would entail loss of trade. Again, when Consul Alcock installed foreigners in the Chinese custom house at Shanghai and so laid the foundations of the Chinese Maritime Customs Service, the greatest boom the China trade has ever had, his superiors at home washed their hands of the experiment almost at once and two years later actually ordered the whole thing abolished. Not being on the spot even in imagination, at a time when the telegraph to China stopped in Italy and most people traveled to the Orient only to make money or to fight, or perhaps both, the officials of the Foreign Office were seldom interested in expansion in China. It was only under a man with Palmerston's imagination or under the pressure of the commercial associations in England that the Consuls in China were energetically supported.

It goes without saying that the British merchants of the 1850s, like the great financial houses of modern Japan, were actively interested in expansion. Their enthusiasm was that of pioneers. They saw before them virgin territory awaiting exploitation. In many respects the early treaty ports were frontiers, such as Manchuria seems to be today. It is often forgotten that for two hundred years the East India Company had been confined to Canton while its contemporaries, the Massachusetts Bay and Virginia Companies, and their successors had been conquering the American continent. The barriers of an alien civilization had been more formidable than those of nature, and after two centuries of contact the Western merchants in China still lived perched on the rim of a vast hinterland into which they seldom ventured beyond the treaty limits of a day's journey. The missionaries who traveled and even dwelt in the interior in defiance of treaty law (before 1858) were hardy voyageurs, trail breakers for their itinerating descendants.

The treaty port frontier was a place for young men and for money making. In their middle thirties the older residents often went back to Scotland with a fortune. Fortunes were made in buying teas and silks and selling opium, but the idea of hour hundred million Chinese each adding an inch to his cotton shirt-tail was soon conceived and began to haunt the thoughts of Lancashire and the Board of Trade. Vast potentialities for Western manufacturers were seen in the Chinese market. For England, wrote Consul Alcock, "to whom the necessity of commercial expansion is a law of existence and national power . . . China alone remains a virgin soil, with a population numbering probably more than a third of the whole human race, with facilities of trade which no empire of similar extent has ever enjoyed, and with ready formed capabilities of consumption which time can scarcely exhaust." No Japanese paean over Manchuria could exceed the optimism of the early treaty ports. Hongkong was to become "a second Carthage, with a population equal to that of ancient Rome."

And yet the Chinese demand for Western manufactures grew with disappointing slowness. A second war was fought and new ports were opened, but British goods found few customers. The plain fact was that China was not only conservative but, for all its size, a poor country, as others have since discovered, and what ready capital there was became involved first in the tea and opium trades.

In the opium trade the British had a wonderful solvent for the hard shell of China's exclusiveness. The importation of opium from India had only begun about 1800—opium smoking is a modern vice in China—and until 1858 the trade had to make its own way in the face of Chinese official opposition and British official nonsupport. Actually, of course, the Chinese local authorities of the day generally connived at it, and the British for want of a better solution quietly let Hongkong become the great distributing center for the rest of the China coast. Opium certainly was not forced upon China. It was merely supplied to her, although it must be noted that the opportunity to supply it was got and maintained chiefly through force. The distinction is significant because it indicates the importance, in the trade, of the Chinese opium importer and distributor without whom the drug could never have reached its consumer. This unchronicled class of opportunists, trafficking in their neighbor's weakness, were an essential link in the process of supply, not as lovely to contemplate as the stately British and American opium clippers and undoubtedly more dangerous to China. Through them the drug spread over the interior, where poppy growing was well begun by 1850. With the opium trade went official corruption and demoralization, since the trade was still illegal by Chinese law and yet too lucrative for the average mandarin to ignore. The British officials of the time reasoned simply that if China wanted opium someone would supply it, and British India, which needed the revenue, could do it more regularly and respectably than anyone else. To this argument there was no practical answer so long as the opium receiving-ships had only to wait for the Chinese smuggler to come out and take delivery of what he wanted.

By way of contrast the present situation in North China, where Japan is reputably unable to prevent the pumping of narcotics into the country, seems more iniquitous in proportion as it is more intensive. Now, instead of chests of crude opium it is heroin and similar derivatives, which can kill in months instead of years, and delivery is made not f. o. b. the opium store-ship but direct to the consumer's divan. The poppy fields of Jehol and Manchuria are closer than those of India once were, and the agents of the trade are now reported to be chiefly Koreans, who are protected by Japanese extraterritorial rights, rather than purely Chinese as in the old days.

The early Chinese opium merchants were members of that great class of "Chinese traitors" who dealt with the foreign devil. This is a feature of British expansion in China which has been generally overlooked—the fact that it was conducted in large part by the Cantonese, such as those of Sun Yat-sen's native district, Heung Shan, near Macao. The merchants and boat people of Kwangtung Province had been longest in contact with the bearbarian and had early learned to work with him through the medium of pidgin English. As compradores, linguists, bearers, and body servants, these "brisk and handy natives of the south" were an indispensable element in the foreign penetration. Through them the resident of old Canton had done much of his business. When the first new ports were opened, at Amoy and Foochow in Fukien and Ningpo and Shanghai farther north, the arrival of the Westerner at those places meant the arrival also of his staff of Cantonese servants, tough fellows who spoke a different dialect and often ganged together to prey upon the natives. It is a question whether these compradores and their hangers on, coming from another province, were not more detested than the handful of foreign devils who brought them. They started riots and assaulted the local women, and on at least one or two occasions the local populace rose to massacre them. In such instances they sought the protection of their British employers, until the Consul at Foochow at one time forbade any more Cantonese servants being brought into port. To the people of Fukien, Chekiang, and Kiangsu these Cantonese could not have seemed more alien, and certainly were more to be feared, than the Korean and Formosan adventurers who now carry on their activities under Japanese protection in the North and South, respectively.

Aided and abetted by such fellows, it is small wonder that the foreign merchant of a century ago broke the laws of China and often flouted the objurgations of his Consul. The lawlessness of the Canton River was imitated eslewhere. An export trade in coolies and copper cash and rice, all of them forbidden by Chinese law to leave the country, might be carried in foreign vessels, but it was Chinese crimps and smugglers who supplied the cargo. Evasion of the customs duties flourished by arrangements between the merchant and the customs collector, neither of whom was averse to "taking it out of the Emperor." Thus the sharpest elements of the Chinese population flocked to the treaty ports, like the ex-hong-merchant of Canton, Samqua (Wu Chin-chang), who rose by purchase to be the leading official at Shanghai in the early 1850s. He prided himself on his knowledge of English, which was actually little better than pidgin, and cultivated the affable American merchants of Russell and Co. in order to learn the weaknesses of the British. In the end his study of English undid him when he allowed his custom house to take promises from the foreign vessels in port that each one of them would pay half the regular duties if all the others paid full duties.

If Chinese officials would not coöperate with the barbarian, they could sometimes be used anyway, as when the Governor of Kwangtung, Po Kuei, was captured by the British in 1858 and installed as head of the Provisional Government of Canton with a guard of British bluejackets to keep an eye on him and Harry Parkes to give him orders. For about two years Canton was under a puppet régime, necessitated by the fact that the British had conquered the place but could not rule it. A mixed British and Chinese police force kept order and it was six months before the unfortunate Governor was denounced to the Emperor for having written all his cheering reports at the dictation of his captors. The foreign occupation was described in terms applicable to other times and places; it was reported to Peking that the invaders had built barracks and blockhouses, printed a newspaper, and collected the local taxes. "Every day they measure the streets and make maps. They look upon Kwangtung Province as their own * * * they have ruined the Confucian Temple, seized the Treasury * * * and torn down the houses of the populace." Chinese meeting barbarians in the street were required to take off their hats, and it was forbidden to say the two words "foreign devil" (fam kuei). In all this the barbarians were being aided by more than a hundred hired Chinese, who acted as advisers, secretaries and spies.

This example of puppet government at Canton was not carried further because the British were not territorially ambitious, but it illustrates the procedure which Japan has since followed.

Just as the administrative difficulties of an invader are complicated by the size of the Chinese population, so, consciously or unconsciously, his fears are aroused. When to this is added a consciousness of the importance of preserving face, the alien intruder not infrequently becomes pathologically sensitive. It is not surprising that the first foreign residents of the treaty ports—barely a thousand males in 1850 surrounded by millions of Chinese—felt actively on the defensive and rejoiced at the sight of a gunboat. When rebels of a native secret society in 1853 seized the citadel of Amoy and the walled city of Shanghai adjoining the foreign settlements, the British and American merchants had good cause to think of their lives and their warehouses. In such circumstances their prestige was their chief protection. When it was lowered, so were their chances of safety. As in India, "lowering the flag" was a cardinal social sin. In particular no Consul could afford to do it. And so the very thinness of the British spearpoint served to make it sharper.

It was soon found that the Chinese authorities yielded to pressure firmly applied, yielded at least as long as the pressure was applied. When three Englishmen, for instance were stoned near Shanghai in 1848, the British Consul ordered his one gunboat to blockade the river when several hundred grain junks with thousands of truculent seamen were about to carry valuable tribute grain to the capital. The blockade, really a gamble, actually worked. The local authorities wanted as always to avoid trouble, the grain fleet could not be delayed, culprits were found and punished, and the Consul became the hero of the treaty ports. Foreign prestige could not always be maintained so easily, however, because in the last analysis it was merely an idea in the minds of the Chinese. At Canton British troops twice routed the defenders of the city but each time withdrew for diplomatic reasons. As a result a third campaign and the final capture of the place were necessary in order to establish British supremacy.

Such a situation breeds incidents. Any successful manifestation of disrespect, or even a good joke if it destroys the oppenent's face, may be an insult—before their second war the British published a Blue Book on "Insults in Chin..."—or as the more quaint Japanese phraseology goes, such actions may demonstrate Chinese "insincerity." Faced with insults or insincerity, as the case may be, the invader cannot stand still. He must either advance and retaliate, or retreat.

And if he retreats at all he might as well go home. Hence the British learned early in the game never to make a threat or a demand which they were not prepared at once to back up with force. Following this policy they were led steadily forward in a vicious spiral. Once they had demanded freedom for Western trade, there seemed to be no alternative but to open the whole of China or abandon the project entirely Of course the steady expansion of trade gave them the impetus to go forward. But if at some point the trade had become stabilized, even then it seems most unlikely that they could have stopped, short of a minister at Peking and the opening of the interior, and still maintained their supremacy. Motives of prestige as well as of gain drove the British irrevocably forward, just as they appear to be driving the Japanese today.

When the British commercial conquest of the mid-nineteenth century, picturesque but relatively mild-mannered, is compared with Japan's present activities, the contrast is enormous. But it may be questioned whether the difference is not one of degree only, rather than of kind. Modern methods are more intensive and the Japanese program is more far-reaching. Instead of the inevitable and beneficent triumph of Free Trade, now we are to be shown the splendor of the Great Asia Principle. The light-draft paddle-wheel gunboat has given way to the bomber, and the artery between North China and the Yangtze is the railway rather than the Grand Canal, which the British blockaded at Chinkiang. But the fact remains that the Japanese cannot gain their objectives as the British gained theirs unless, like the British, they get the cooperation of a certain type of Chinese. Unfortunately the "Chinese traitor" is still to be found, and when Yin Ju-keng, head of the puppet government east of Peiping, proves no longer useful, his secretary perhaps can be promoted in his place. Economic necessity still operates and job seekers have flocked to Manchoukuo just as Chinese merchants swarmed into Hongkong and the Shanghai settlement a century ago. But behind the pressure of population that makes a full rice bowl palatable whatever its provenance, there lies certainly another factor, call it a lack of nationalism or a rational individualism—a quality which in different contexts has been recognized as one of the great Chinese virtues. The experience of many centuries seems to have endowed the realistic Chinese individual with the conviction that he gains very little by dying and that if everyone takes care of himself everyone will be taken care of. It was this sophisticated and really far too civilized atomic point of view which facilitated the humbling of the Manchu dynasty by a few thousand British troops. How far it has been extirpated by the rapid development of nationalist China remains to be seen. In 1840 the British attacked Canton with the aid of a Chinese coolie corps, but now in 1937 Cantonese stevedores are reported to have refused to load Japanese ships.

Judging by the British experience, it is an obvious conclusion that China's present crises will differ from that of 1840–58 insofar as the new forces of nationalism are found to have gained power within the country, power sufficient to repress those atavistic elements willing to give aid and comfort to the enemy.

[1949 Harvard University Press]

Next Step in Asia

John K. Fairbank

COMMUNISM IN CHINA AND THE NEW AMERICAN APPROACH TO ASIA

Our Problem of Understanding.—The danger of a Communist victory in China has been foreseen for a good many years by China specialists both inside and outside the government. Formulation of American policy to forestall such a victory, however, has depended upon conditions in the United States as well as in China.

The first prerequisite when dealing with a revolutionary situation in a foreign land is surely to study and understand it. But the American people have generally lacked either formal education or first-hand experience concerning the Chinese revolution. The second prerequisite, when dealing with 450,000,000 people, is surely to take account of the realities of their immediate situation. But Americans of the postwar period have generally been so aware of the obvious undesirability of Communist revolution in this and other countries of the West that they could not imagine it being welcomed by anyone worth mentioning in China. Thus our China policy became involved in the disastrous duality advocated, for example, in the famous Wedemeyer report; we urged that reform was the only way to forestall Communism yet at the same time we kept on giving aid to anti-Communists like Chiang who felt they did not have to reform because they were getting our aid. These alternatives were by nature mutually incompatible, but we became involved in trying both at once. This was because our policy makers in the various branches of the government represented a variety of views, while the country as a whole had no one over-all view.

Now at last the past advocates and opponents of American military aid to Chiang Kai-shek are at one in facing the fact of Chinese Communist military ascendency. As indicated in the State Department's eloquent White Paper on China of August 1949, it is time for stock-taking and appraisal, as a basis for new and more effective action, not only in China but in all of Asia. As a sign of the times, it is worth noting that one staunch advocate of military aid against Communism in Asia, General Claire Chennault, has finally acknowledged (in Life for July 11) that areas of anti-Communist resistance "must be sufficiently progressive and enlightened both politically and economically that the people of China and of all Asia can have living proof that democracy can meet their material, political, and spiritual aspirations better than can communism. We must insist that the necessary policies and reforms are carried out to make certain that this will be true." Presumably if this condition is not fulfilled, any resistance program, by Chennault's own argument, would not be effective. There are thus essential political, economic, and spiritual ingredients which must accompany any military program against Asiatic Communism. Lacking these ingredients, a military effort is likely to fail, leaving us in an even worse position than before.

Our situation is even more difficult then General Chennault realizes, because the political, economic, spiritual, and military ingredients with which to oppose Communism are at present inadequate within China and cannot be supplied by us from the outside. This pessimistic judgment is not defeatism but realism, the only basis on which we can build a new policy toward Asia free from dangerous wishful thinking.

Three Realities.—There are three points we must accept if we want to be realistic: first, the Chinese Communists have achieved military domination over the Nationalists and there is no firm evidence of any Nationalist capability to prevent the Communist consolidation of power over the whole of China. Once this Chinese Communist power is established, it is not likely to wither overnight.

Second, the Chinese Communist leaders are genuine Communists, as far as ideas can make them; they are not "mere agrarian reformers," but hope to apply to China many of the methods developed in Soviet Russia.

Third, from the point of view of the Chinese common people, the Chinese Communist regime, judging it in Chinese terms by its record to date, now offers promise of being the best government which China has had in modern times. (Note that this is a relative statement.)

Before we look at the record in China, we must recognize the problem of understanding created for us by these last two points: Chinese Communism is real Communism, but is seems, thus far, to be a relatively good thing for the Chinese masses. It is easy to accept either one of these points, but not both of them together. For instance, there have been some people who have liked to think that the Chinese Communists were not real Communists but merely do-gooders in the countryside—on this basis, Chinese "Communism" might very well be a good thing for the peasant since it seemed to lack the evil aspects of Russian Communism. On the other hand, there have been some observers who assumed that Chinese Communism, being Communism, could not possibly represent anything but evil, even if the peasant was temporarily persuaded into thinking so.

Americans who accepted either one of these positions have heretofore had a way out of our present dilemma: either it wasn't real Communism in China, or else it wasn't a good thing for the masses and they might eventually find it out and turn against it.

The proposition that Chinese Communism is genuine Communism and is also, thus far, a relatively good thing from the point of view of the Chinese common people, is not only more realistic according to the evidence available; it also makes our problem in China many times more difficult than we formerly realized it to be. Compared with the easy denunciations of the extreme right wing, who say, "It is Communism and so to hell with it, let us exterminate it," our predicament is much more serious. We are really up against a movement which is winning and organizing the support of the Chinese people and yet is fundamentally opposed to our political order.

The key to this paradox lies, of course, in the backwardness of the old Chinese system of government and in the fact that modern China has been going through a social revolution on which the Chinese Communists have capitalized and of which they have taken the leadership. This paradox of Chinese Communism can be understood only in Chinese terms, not in American terms. We have to forget temporarily that we as Americans have no use for Communist and totalitarian methods in this country, and put ourselves in the position of the Chinese peasant.

Chinese Communism as a New Dynasty.—The first thing that strikes one in the Chinese scene is the incredible poverty of the peasant masses, who are so crowded upon the land that their standard of living is as low as any in the world. This poverty is easy to describe in statistical terms but hard to realize—food without meat, shoes without leather, houses without iron, illiteracy and ignorance, disease and famine, an average life expectancy of twenty-five or thirty years, and all of this accepted as a matter of course, forming part of an ancient way of life. The important point which has too often been overlooked is that China's political standard of living cannot rise far above her economic standard of living. To put it another way, the level of politics is held down by the low level of economic life. Depotism thrives on poverty, and since poverty has been an institution in China, so has despotism. The two actually seem to reinforce each other, forming a society entirely different from our own. This can be understood if we look at the Chinese Communists within the context of the Chinese political tradition.

The dynastic political system which developed in China over a period of almost thirty-seven hundred years without serious interruption came to an end only thirty-seven years ago. Behind the Chinese Communists' success thus far may be discerned the traditional features of a new dynasty's rise to power. Not all of the twenty-five dynasties chronicled in the official Chinese histories went through the same life cycle, but in a good many cases the new regime came to power by leading and organizing a peasant rebellion, helping the impoverished countryside to rise against the economic domination of the towns and cities. Redistributing the land or otherwise lessening the peasants' burden, at which Mao Tse-tung has thus far outdone Chiang Kai-shek, has been a common denominator in these rebellions, no matter what their ideology.

Use of the Peasantry.—In the traditional style, the new contestant for the Mandate of Heaven was usually a competitor among other regional war lords, but he won out because he excelled them in his concern for the common people—the lao-pai-hsing of the farming villages. His troops usually treated the people less violently, his area was less disordered and therefore more productive, his conduct more exemplary. "Winning the hearts of the people" (te jen hsin) was an operation that had to be performed in the countryside, not among the city proletariat. The dynastic founder therefore developed his military power on the basis of peasant cooperation, which gave him troops and the food to feed them. Peasant enthusiasm and mass participation in the new regime were not expected; tacit popular acquiescence constituted the Mandate of Heaven. The winner might be helped by his fanatical followiing (sometimes religious and mystical), military ferocity, and organizing ability, and by demoralization of the old regime and the war-weariness of the people. Having come to power to the accompaniment of agrarian reform, the new dynasty had the chance to consolidate its rule by preserving peace and order, levying the land tax efficiently, and maintaining the public works—canals and postroads for transportation, irrigation systems for agriculture, dikes against flood, and granaries against famine. It also kept up the official examinations to provide competent bureaucrats, and the official ritual observances to sustain the imperial prestige. For these public works the regime conscripted China's manpower.

In this Chinese political order there was little room for the political rights of the individual under a legal system. Government was a paternalism guided by the Confucian ethic, which was superior to written law. So long as the people prospered sufficiently not to rebel, the ruler retained Heaven's Mandate. The ruler's despotism was sanctioned by the people's maintaining a livelihood. It is no accident that Chiang Kai-shek, in his book Chinese Economic Theory, in the effort to build a strong modern state should consider it the government's duty "to satisfy the people's wants on the one hand and to restrict them on the other . . . to support the people—the people's livelihood— on the one hand, and to protect the people—national defense—on the other." Each farming unit, he urges, should be a military unit—production and defense combined on the land.

Against such antediluvian political competition, Communist success in China has been a foregone conclusion. One need not be an Anglo-Saxon democrat to be more democratic than Chiang and the Confucian sages. "Democratic centralism," with its single-candidate "elections", is below the Western European-American political level, but above that of traditional China. As long as the masses are successfully fed and clothed, Chinese Communism can be despotic in our view and remain "democratic" in the eyes of the lao-pai-hsing. This is hard for us to remember, but important. When the Chinese Communists ask the peasant villager to participate in political meetings they are breaking the precedent of centuries, even though they are not catching up with the Anglo-Saxon practice. In Chinese terms, the Communist-organized village councils and elections are more "democratic" than anything in the past. We can understand the success of Communist "democracy" in China only by comparing it with China's past, not with our own.

Heaven's Mandate.—China's political tradition may also help us to understand the amazing speed of the Communist success during the past year. In Chinese terms, the Mandate of Heaven has passed from the Nationalists to the Communists, which means that the Communists are acknowledged to be the winners of power, much as an American presidential candidate is acknowledged to be the winner on the day after an election. By long training in the Anglo-Saxon tradition, Americans will unanimously acknowledge an election winner, even though an actual majority of the American voters may have voted against him. We abide by the rules of the game and proceed with our government. By an even longer training in the Chinese tradition, the Chinese public assume that one of the contestants in any civil war will emerge as the ruler of all China. When one contestant has demonstrated that he is superior in getting the peasant masses to fight for him and feed his army, any traditional Chinese observer knows that he has "won the hearts of the people" and so won the entire country. Resistance thenceforth is useless, and everyone, including the defeated army, proceeds to join the bandwagon.

Use of the Literati.—After its military rise to power, each new dynasty has faced the problem of organizing civil government to collect the surplus product from the land in taxes and maintain the public works. For this purpose the dynastic founder, once he had conquered by the sword, had to woo the scholar class. The great Manchu rulers of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries made themselves Confucian scholars and patrons of the literati. The Taiping rebels of the mid-ninteenth century failed to found a new dynasty because their strange psuedo-Christianity was too fanatically anti-Confucian to win over the Confucian scholar class. The Communists today have been making a great play for the support of modern intellectuals and trained professional personnel, who are almost too scarce in China to provide effective administration even if they all cooperate. Communist efforts to enlist the collaboration of these non-Communist groups illustrate the perennial need of victorious organizers of the peasant masses to get the help of the literate few after the fighting stops.

Among the student class in Communist China today there is widespread and intense enthusiasm. Thousands of boys and girls have joined up in new training centers, inspired by the prospect of peace and the challenge of building a new China, modernizing antiquated ways, and bringing a new life to the great masses of the peasantry. This passionate idealism is a relief and a reaction from the long and hopeless years of Japanese invasion and civil war. Although it is guided by the Communist regime, there can be no doubt that this idealism genuinely inspires the heart and mind of young China. The accession of a new regime to power is always a time of hope and enthusiasm, when everything is still possible, when the cause of reform has overcome its enemies and has not yet been defeated by circumstance. To many Chinese this seems like one of the great periods of hope in China's history. This hope does not spring merely from the fact that a new broom is sweeping out the old corruption and self-seeking in politics; it springs mainly from the fact that the Chinese Communists are leading a real social revolution. Indeed, this is the secret of their rise to power.

This view, that China's Communist revolution is also a social revolution and not merely a seizure of political power or change of one dynasty for another, is still denied by some American social or political scientists, who as scholars ought to recognize a revolution when they see one but who prefer to deny that a great social upheaval is occurring in China under Communist leadership. Here again a refusal to admit reality would lead us into the pitfall of underestimating what we are up against.

Chinese Communism as a Social Revolution.—The social system which still exists in noncommunized parts of China was one of the great human achievements of ancient times. Its persistence down to our own day after a century of Chinese contact with the West is proof of its original solidity. It has also been one cause of China's persistent backwardness.

This system has been based, first, upon the family as the social unit instead of the individual; and secondly, upon a distinction between the literate upper classes who participated in government and the illiterate peasant masses who did not. In this traditional society of old China, the Son of Heaven relied upon the Confucian literati as his flesh and bone. They were the link between the ruler who headed the bureaucracy and the landlord gentry who dominated the countryside. To understand this connection, we must recall the composite nature of China's literate upper strata. They included the landlords whose takings from their tenants' production allowed them to live in the towns and cities, the scholars whose landlord families supported them from this agrarian surplus while they mastered the time-consuming written language and the classics, the officials who were chosen by examination from among these scholars, and the merchants and other hangers-on who depended upon official patronage. All these people, possessing literacy and access to official power through personal contact, formed a mobile upper class in the towns and cities. The illiterate peasantry, who constituted four-fifths of the Chinese population, formed a static lower class in the villages. The landlord-gentry families stressed the obligations of family relationships, while the Confucian classics bred filial piety toward the patriarch and loyalty toward the Emperor. Confucianism held father and ruler, family and dynasty, gentry, and bureaucracy all together in one ideological apparatus, the most stable ever devised. The peasant masses touched this ruling stratum through the landlord gentry but were themselves inert in politics. They suffered the paternalism of the Emperor and his officials, of the literati and the landlords, all of whom participated in the higher life and culture of old China. There was no caste system, families rose and fell, and there was a good deal of social mobility. But the peasant did not participate in the imperial government, any more than did peasants under the ancient empires in the Near East or the West.

The New Class Structure.—Today for the first time this old-class structure has been widely broken down. The social significance of Chinese Communism is that it is consciously committed to destroying the landlord-gentry class. The mechanism for this is the Party, which now takes the place both of the dynasty and of the gentry. The Party uses the nation and the leader as foci of loyalty, instead of the family and the Emperor. By breaking up familism as one would smash atoms, the Party releases enormous human energy. Young people become party workers, and "Liberation" moves like a chain reaction through the households in the towns and villages. The Party and its government now bypass the local landlords and reach down all the way directly to the peasant (and his wife and family) to organize them for production and defense. This is a political activation of the peasantry such as China has never seen before. The old gentry-scholar-official superstructure is brushed aside and the Party steps in.

This profound social change was inherent in the Nationalist Revolution in which Sun Yat-sen and the Comintern collaborated in the early twenties. Chiang Kai-shek and the Kuomintang after 1927 could not escape the pattern, though they wanted to delay the process. The Nanking Government, in its efforts to control and reform, had to reach down into the villages. It inculcated loyalty to Nation, Party, and Leader. It enlisted a Youth Corps and did everything but face the problem of the political activation of the peasantry, which could only come at the expense of liquidating the gentry.

Today the local gentry and big landlords in backward regions like Szechwan realize that Communist infiltration can mobilize the peasantry against them. They are quite ready to cooperate, no doubt, with General Chennault or anyone else who will fight their battle for survival, while the Communists are supremely confident that the old landlordism is doomed, whether or not the Unitd States supports it. It does little good for American economists to prove that agricultural production is limited in China less by landlordism than by the actual insufficiency of land. The Communists are championing the peasant's cause against his age-old adversary, and have developed a well-tried method for getting and organizing peasant support.

One of their devices for the mobilization of social change is the organized emancipation of women, a movement which has been supported by missionaries and by Madame Chiang Kai-shek and others for years past, but which the Communists have now put on a paying basis. Domination of the male over the female has been part of the traditional family and village society. Communism brings the village women into a woman's association. The school girl is enlisted in party work. A tremendous source of social energy is unlocked.

Another appeal which Communism makes to the unlettered peasant is the opportunity it offers him to become literate and rise in social prestige and status. The literacy movement, begun by western missionaries and carried forward by the Nanking Government, is still another worthy cause which the Communists have harnessed to their chariot.

This would suggest that the special status of the modern Chinese literati will disappear in proportion as the New Democracy spreads literacy among the villages. The new Party and government bureaucracy can be recruited directly from the masses by a system of schools and party cells, instead of through gentry families. Trained personnel, technicians and administrators, are more necessary than ever. But the scholar's monoply of literacy is doomed and with it the special position of the scholar class. The returned students from the West, who have played such a part under the Nanking Government and represent such an achievement in Sino-western cultural cooperation, are eventually replaceable.

In the long run, because the Communists must get more efficient production on the land, they will have to educate the Chinese peasant. Just as the Han and subsequent dynasties found that private property in land was a necessary incentive for intensive irrigated agriculture, so any increase of agrarian production today will require a literate farmer who can learn to apply modern technology to the land. But this rural technician, whether or not collectivized, will not be an Anglo-Saxon type of liberal.

What I have been saying about the constructive efforts of Chinese Communism could be amplified from the testimony of unimpeachable neutral sources, the eye-witness observations of non-Communist western medical workers and relief administrators, the first-hand impressions of reliable journalists and travelers in the Communist area. All this evidence shows a revoluntary movement dedicated to rebuilding China "for the common people", trying in a backward country to achieve the degree of literacy which the United States had a century ago, the social status for women which American women have had for a generation, the amount of public health and medical service which we had, say, in 1880, a standard of production which most Americans would think still too low for survival. With most of this Chinese revolution the American people have always been in sympathy, since in fact American missionaries helped to start it. Here again, we strike a problem of understanding; how does it happen that this necessary and desirable modernization of Chinese life can be led constructively by the ideology of Communism?

Communism as a Chinese Ideology.—If we try to look at Communism in Chinese terms as an ideology of the state, it is at once apparent that it seeks to supplant the Confucianism of the traditional dynasties and the famous Three Principles of Sun Yat-sen and the early Republican, and perform the age-old function of giving the new regime an ethical and philosophical sanction.

In traditional China a military victor found Confucianism ready at hand to form the sanction for his rule, providing only that he qualified by his conduct for the role of the Confucian monarch. This was not hard to do, since every schoolboy had memorized the deeds of model Emperors: it was the function of the Chinese ruler both to set an example of proper conduct as a person and to perform the ritual function of his office. This was, briefly, to take responsibility for the maintenance of the moral and material order of mankind. Here was the meaning of Heaven's Mandate: the actions of men must harmonize with the processes of nature, and the Son of Heaven was the great Harmonizer. Hence he set the calendar so that the crops would be planted on time, he ordered public works so as to maintain the people's livelihood, he rewarded virtue and punished crime, performed sacrifices and issued penitential edicts, and gave the final answer on all matters. This tradition of personal administration by the monarch, so different from the Japanese tradition, has lingered on in modern China. The extent to which Chiang Kai-shek was a modern Son of Heaven may be judged by his administrative habits and personal masterminding of war tactics, as well as by the speed with which his regime broke up once he left it. The apotheosis of a party leader, be it Sun, Chiang, or Mao, may therefore be viewed as a Chinese tradition quite as much as a Russian importation.

Personal leadership is still unusually important in Chinese politics.—But what has taken the place of Confucianism as the leader's ideological base? Sun's late acceptance of Comintern help in 1923, after he had himself failed to lead the Republic out of warlordism, was a confession that his own ideology, of mixed Chinese and western principles, was insufficient. Chiang's reversion in recent years to a revived Confucianism has been a further confession that Sun Yat-senism, which the Nanking Government tried so hard to propagate throughout the thirties, was not quite adequate to China's needs. Mao accepts Sun's ideas in their pro-Communist version of 1924, as a convenient first approach to China's long process of revolution and reconstruction. It now remains to be seen whether Mao's version of Marxism, in the way that he translates it into the Chinese language and applies it to Chinese situations, will prove adequate to his needs. In approaching this imponderable subject, we can remember that the Taiping rebels' failure in the 1850's, after they had conquered the greater part of China, was essentially a failure of intellectual leadership; and that neither Sun Yat-sen nor Chiang Kai-shek was able to present an interpretation of the world and China's place in it which could inspire the modern intellectuals of China. Can Marxism with its oversimplifications and nineteenth-century blindspots do much better?

The Marxist Appeal.—Superficially, the utility of Marxism to a modern dynastic founder in China seems hard to beat. The Chinese peasant has seen his two chief enemies as grasping landlords and foreign invaders. To call them Feudalism and Imperialism, respectively, is no very difficult propaganda feat. Communist propaganda can picture concretely the way in which native Feudalism and foreign Imperialism are supposed to reinforce each other in the persons of Wang Ching-wei and Tojo, or Chiang Kai-shek and General Marshall. This is easy when foreign arms are being used on Chinese soil against the peasants who are being indoctrinated. To youth and intellectuals, meanwhile, Chinese Communism has offered the great valid ideal of twentieth-century Asia, the liberation of the peasant masses from ignorance, poverty, disease, and exploitation. This is expressed in a real cult of the lao-pai-hsing, for whom the Communist labor hero labors, the student studies, and the soldier fights. Chinese youth are no doubt more receptive to this ideal because of the century of humanitarian effort invested in China by western missionaries of all sorts. But unfortunately the western evangelism, which has done so much for China, came hand in hand with western commercial exploitation and political domination, which international Communism claims to eschew. Marxism has had its chance in China thus far without the incubus of contemporary Russian expansionist pressure on that country (except for the unexplained rape of Manchuria in 1945, concerning which the Chinese Communists have had very little to say).

Marxism's claims to universality may also help it in China. Confucianism was a system of allegedly universal validity which took no account of color or origin so long as one behaved in the Confucian way. Any barbarian could become Chinese by acting Chinese, whereas Christianity, Anglo-Saxon liberalism, and fascism all reached China in circumstances which suggested a specific overseas origin among so-called advanced western peoples. They each had an aroma of foreign cultural superiority which made them less palatable to the Middle Kingdom. Perhaps the same odor will attach to Marxism as Marxism ripes in China. But in the past two decades of Russian passivity there, relatively speaking, the Marxist creed has achieved a local footing reminiscent (in this one respect) of the early days of Buddhism when the monks of the fifth century visited India and returned to make coverts of their disordered homeland. Chinese Communism is accepted in China as a genuinely Chinese movement. Mao Tse-tung proudly announces that his movement has "found the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism, which holds good everywhere."

A wise Russian policy will certainly avoid pressures on Chinese Communism which might destroy the cosmopolitan and yet patriotic appeal of Mao's doctrines. Under Maoism young Chinese patriots can feel themselves participating in a practical world-wide movement in which China is an esteemed and self-reliant colleague, not an appendage. This is a good feeling after a century of humiliation.

Communism and Nationalism.—Part of the Communist ideological success against the Kuomintang has come from their capture of the sentiment of nationalism. It is a stratling paradox that Communists, so closely allied to China's inveterate continental enemy, Russia, should have been able to turn the force of patriotism against Chiang Kai-shek, who came to power as its symbol.

Chiang's chief ideological sanction was the theme of national unity, strength, and independence, toward which he at one time provided historic leadership. Yet the Communist propaganda claims that it has succeeded in mobilizing patriotic sentiment against Chiang as a "running dog of American imperialism," a traitor who sold his country to foreigners in order to stay in power. Few American administrators of aid to China will agree that Chiang was a subservient ally; he would take our aid more easily than our advice. How fundamentally, then, has Chinese Communism actually been able to use the sentiment of nationalism against him? This subject awaits study, but I suggest that Chiang's real failure was on the domestic front, not the international. It was his reliance on civil war instead of reform, as his means of competing with the Communists to solve China's manifold ills, that made him seem finally to be an enemy of the people. He lost public support not because he accepted American help but because he did not use it for the popular welfare and reform. The American policy of military aid to help an unpopular government suppress a social revolution played into Communist hands, as serious students predicted. It is noteworthy that the Communuist hold upon Chinese patriotic sentiment has been achieved at a time when the United States was open to the charge of putting its own strategic interest ahead of the interest of the Chinese people. This self-seeking American policy gave Communist propaganda its chance to focus public indignation on Chiang's American-made and supplied bombing planes while picturing Russia as a friendly neutral.

Now that Chinese Communism has come to power, it is rapidly cementing its ideological base by a widespread indoctrination of the Chinese people in the Communist interpretation of China and the world scene. The study of Marxist texts today is reminiscent of the traditional study of the Confucian classics. But Communist methods today include the study-group, the individual's criticism of himself and of his colleagues, and public confession of errors-psychological techniques in which Communism bids fair to outshine its rival, the Church of Rome. By these methods the Communists hope to reduce the inveterate individualism of the old China, the personal jealousies and frictions which have undermined the cohesion and effectiveness of Chinese group activity of the past.

Bases of a Chinese Totalitarianism.—In summary, if we survey these political, social, and ideological aspects of Chinese Communism, we can hardly deny that it has its roots deep in the Chinese scene. After almost thirty years of trial and error and adaptation to Chinese circumstances, the Chinese Communist movement might indeed be expected to have firm roots, not superficial and not easily dislodged. The fact that Marxism is a two-edged sword which may be used first to liberate the populace but later to enslave it is not out of keeping with the Chinese political tradition. The Marxist emphasis on a monopoly of power by the state machine is compatible with the old Confucian theory of benevolent depotism. Modern Chinese who have seen the impossibility of reforming their ancient crowded country by unorganized individual efforts are more ready to accept the need of disciplined organization and central direction. China still consists of the illiterate peasant masses and a small literate elite, and both these groups in Chinese society will accept the idea that the Party must lead and the masses must follow, an idea which neither Sun Yat-sen nor Chiang Kai-shek could dispense with. The crowning point in the Chinese Communist success story, finally, is the fact that western missionaries and educators and western-trained liberal reformers in modern China have had their chance to remake and modernize this ancient society but have failed to do so because they failed to secure and use political power to carry through revolutionary changes. Fundamental reform, according to the Communist arguments, is impossible without military and political power behind it, just as the ancient rulers could not be benevolent until they had become despots.

Thus the same political, social, and ideological conditions in Chinese society which have permitted and facilitated the rise of Chinese Communism to power now provide a sanction for the use of that power in the totalitarian pattern. This includes the control of all political association, the activation and guidance of all social movements, the indoctrination of the people, manufacture of information and control of the press, manipulation of education and of mass movements, suppression of dissent and of civil liberties as we think of them. All these things are potentially a part of the new Communist order, including the systematic inculcation of the bogey of "capitalist imperialism" and denunciation of American "spies" and "sabotage" against the "peoples democracy" which the Chinese Communist Party has created.

Toward this new, complex, revolutionary China we are now making the effort to formulate and develop a new American policy. We must recognize that many excellent popular reforms are being carried forward by doctrinaire Chinese Communist leaders who are imbued with a dogmatic and provocative hostility to the United States.

Bases of a New American Policy.—In this effort to set up a new policy we can expect little or no help either from the left or from the right. Any credit that we give the Chinese Communists will be accepted by them as a matter of course, and any criticism denounced as capitalist American lies. Conversely, the emotional anti-Communist in the United States will assume that all criticism of Chinese Communism is obvious, and any praise is pro-Communist propaganda. One may therefore expect to be called both a stooge of the Kremlin and a lackey of American capitalism.

Mao Tse-tung has proclaimed that his movement looks to Moscow for leadership, that the world is divided into two camps, that there is no middle ground and everyone must be for him or against him. With a curious similarity, the extreme right represented by the religious dogmatism of the Roman Catholic Church, sees itself locked in mortal combat against Communism for the soul of mankind and proclaims that there can be no neutral ground. Chiang Kai-shek says we must support him or fight a third world war. So does Chennault. Apparently both right and left are implacably determined that we must fight—Mao because he assumes as a Marxist that our capitalism must be imperialistic and that the revolution must come by violence. Chiang Kai-shek because he considers Communism insatiable and also probably hopes that war between Russia an the United States will save his political fortunes.

We must recognize that this kind of extremist thinking does not provide us with a policy short of war. The cold war in which we find ourselves with Russia calls for armament as a deterrent of warfare, but also for constructive policies to build the peace. Yet in seeking constructive policies toward Asia we cannot profit greatly from our experience in western Europe, where we have followed a dual policy: Marshall-plan aid to revive the prewar industrial economy and a defensive military alliance, the Atlantic Pact, to maintain political stability. In eastern Asia (excepting Japan) there is little prewar industrial economy left to revive, industry has still to be built up, and meanwhile the degree of social and political instability makes a defensive alliance less possible than in western Europe. For an Asiatic program we have to strike out on new ground.

A few years ago we might have fallen back on the principle of the self-determination of all peoples and relied on an appeal to Asiatic nationalism. This principle that peoples should be left free to work out their own political systems is as old as our republic. It has been applied in Asia in our program for Philippine independence and in our doctrine of the territorial and administrative integrity of China. In the process of maintaining an open door for our trade and cultural contact, we have stood against the domination of China by any outside power.

Yet the application of this doctrine today is peculiarly obfuscated by the fact that the Chinese Communists are Chinese and, in spite of their professed ideological tie to a foreign power, have won a greater degree of popular support than their opponents could muster even with general American economic and military assistance. We cannot claim that the Russian interventionist activity in China since V-J Day has been greater than our aid, much as we may deplore the former and approve the latter. The chief of the American military aid mission which tried unavailingly to help Chiang Kai-shek has testified that no battles were lost by the Nationalists for lack of American arms; what the Nationalist troops lacked was something worth fighting for as an alternative to Chinese Communism. On balance, I am afraid we must put the Communist victory in China down as a case of self-determination, not of outside aggression. An American military effort to save the Chinese people now from their dangerous ideological tie to Russia would find the vast majority of patriotic Chinese lined up against us. Thus, the simple formula of backing Asiatic nationalism against Communism in the name of self-determination is not enough.

The implication of this very unpleasant fact is that we cannot expect to have an opportunity to develop toward China the beneficent programs of economic and social assistance of which we might be capable. The Chinese Communists have no intention of letting us compete with them in areas they control. Moreover, since our access to Indo-Chino is limited to the narrow confines within which the French are unsuccessfully trying to avoid the fate of the Chinese Nationalists, we must also expect little opportunity there. Thus we are already limited to south Asia and the islands on Asia's periphery; Japan, part of Korea, the Philippines, Indonesia, as well as India, Siam, and states which have been or are under British control.

The Lesson of Our Old China Policy.—The American public are slow to realize that for some time to come we must be content with a very minor role in Chinese affairs. We can no longer expect to play the important part in China's national life that we have played during and since the war. Our major activity in Asia must shift to other areas. Yet if we seek to follow there the pattern which we followed in China, we shall meet similar disasters. The most trenchant conclusion to draw from our China failure is that material means (food and goods, arms, ships, and planes) are inadequate to defeat a social revolution which operates in the realm of the spirit and of national sentiment and psychology as much as on the economic and military levels. In this context it is a nice question whether our arms to Chiang Kai-shek did not actually help the Communists more than it hindered them.

We may expect our position in the rest of Asia to worsen steadily until we respond to its dangers in a more than military manner. It is therefore high time to apply to the rest of Asia the lesson which we should learn from our disaster in China.

This lesson may be stated in a series of points: First, Asia's peasant masses are now ripe for social revolution and political activation. The Asiatic farmer is ready to become a participant in politics. Whoever can lead and organize him in his own self-interest can use him as a basis for political power. But the Asiatic peasant is astute, like any farmer, and not easily led into new paths. The resolutionary leadership, as Mao Tse-tung tells his followers, must get close to the common people and stay close to them, experience their problems, live their life and think their thoughts, much as an American Congressman must retain close contact with his electorate. The revolution must be "for the comman people."

Second, the political leadership of Asia's rural masses can come only from their own countrymen, not from foreigners. The Chinese Communist leaders are native Chinese, even though a number have been trained in Russia.

Third, the creation of a native non-Communist leadership for the modernization of Asia and the liberation of its peoples from poverty, disease, and ignorance can be achieved only in response to a revolutionary idealism which is ruthlessly dedicated to the people's welfare. If we are really interested in the fate of Asia's peasant masses, and not just in our own security and comfort, now is the time for us to show it. Communism derives its power originally from its ideal of helping the common people; so strong is this ideal that it partially sanctions the evils of the Communist police state even after it has begun to coerce the common people. To put it another way, Communism is winning in Asia because it combines genuine idealism with a ruthless urge to power; it cannot be combated by power alone. Nothing we can offer in arms and material goods can buy the support of Asia; such support as we seek and need must be inspired by ideals and visions of a better life. This is a great test for western Christendom—having begun by inspiring the modernization and liberation of Asia in modern times, can we now continue the job?

Fourth, the ideas and ideals with which to inspire a native revolutionary leadership in Asia are not lacking in the American background; our Declaration of Independence, for instance, is impressed in the minds of many Asiatic patriots; our concern for the individual, our humanitarianism, our technology, and our cultural values are known and admired. Yet the spiirt to make these things come alive in our approach to Asia since the war has been lacking, because we plainly put ourselves first and Asia second in our policies. Take for example our distrust of socialism abroad: a great many Americans oppose the growth of federal government power and activity in the United States as a trend toward a dangerous and unnecessary totalitarianism or statism; on this ground some of us denounce all American efforts to help regimes abroad which are developing socialist types of government ownership and operation; yet it will be difficult if not impossible to find in Asia a creative leadership which is not fundamentally socialist in its thinking. This is because the backward peasant societies of Asia generally have a ruling or official class but lack an entrepreneurial middle class: capital is not in private hands, and private enterprise on the American model cannot be their primary means of development. The Asiatic states must lead the way in many aspects of their own modernization and industrialization. If we would consult the needs of these Asiatic peoples, instead of our own fears or predilections, we could give them more inspiration. The Tennessee Valley Authority is still one of the most inspiring examples that we have set before Asia's leaders, because in the TVA government capital has done a job in the interest of the local common people which their own local private capital could not do.

Here, then, is the challenge. The American people have the skills and technology, the cultural values and ideals, to make us the guide and friend of revolutionary Asia. Thus far we lack the will and vision to use them.

What we could do, if we would, can be vividly imagined: we could help to bring literacy and education, medicine and public health, production and welfare to a third or a half of mankind, and bind them to us as cooperating partners in a new world. We cannot do this, however, by purely material means—by the mere shipment of cargoes, least of all by the supply of arms alone. The job requires, first, study and undertanding, a grasp of the problems; second, trained personnel who are inspired by a sense of dedication as real as that of the American missionaries who spread over the world in the nineteenth century. American technicans, administrators, and advisers sincerely dedicated to the development of Asia will have at hand the most powerful tools and methods that man has ever devised for the remaking of his own society. The things that America produces, supplies and equipment of all kinds, are only a first element among our resources; economic aid is only the first step, and may not be the main one. We also have available the media of mass communication and of individual education—books, periodicals, pictures, radio, motion pictures; the methods by which science is applied to the age-old problems of agriculture and husbandry; the techniques, both scientific and social, by which science can be used to meet human problems anywhere; the ideal of individual and community initiative as the key to prosperity and welfare.

Our first problem of all, in such a program, would be to relate it constructively to our own domestic economy. The development of Asia must be an integral part of American business, education, and administration. Obviously, it cannot depend solely on the profit motive for its inspiration; as the American business community is the first to declare, the profit motive alone and unaided cannot save either Asia or ourselves from the menace of totalitarianism.

In summary, the lesson of our defeat in China is that we have let our policy become more anti-Russian than pro-Chinese. In our endeavor to thwart Russian expansion we have let ourselves become aligned against genuine Chinese popular sentiment. The ill-advised zeal of the Eightieth Congress, when it further increased our arms aid to Chiang Kai-shek, played into Communist hands; for the Chinese Communists not only got the arms in the end but have been able to turn popular feeling against us, in spite of all the help that we have given the Chinese people in the past. The fact that Moscow and Chinese Communism have loudly exploited our error against us must not obscure the fact that we consciously put our own strategic interest, which is to check the spread of Russian influence, ahead of the Chinese popular welfare, which was served by our economic aid but not by our military aid. The defeat of our policy will have been a small price to pay if we can learn from our experience in China how to harmonize our strategic interest with the popular welfare of the rest of Asia.

It is not by any means too late to relate ourselves constructively to the revolutionary process at work in China and the rest of Asia, providing we accept these principles: (1) The containment of an all-encompassing revolution such as now convulses China cannot be achieved merely by setting up static military defense lines nor by arms shipments from abroad but only by competition from rival groups within the country which make an equally valid use of the sources of revolutionary power. (2) Such competition in agrarian Asia must stress the remaking of peasant life and its political activation, and must therefore parallel those elements in the Chinese Communist "Liberation" movement, like the emancipation of women and the use of medicine and technology, which are desirable things in themselves. (3) The American role in all of Asia must therefore be to help and inspire an Asiatic leadership which seeks constructive and rapid change in all aspects of society, a genuine social revolution in the people's interest. (4) This policy of working with and not against the Asian revolutionary process requires intensive study of Asiatic conditions, needs, and sentiments and an immediate vigorous development of the President's Point Four program. It calls for an intellectual effort greater than in wartime, the use of American resources and idealism to forestall a world-wide defeat from which arms alone cannot save us.

Practical Steps.—The details of a new and more active American program toward Asia must be worked out by administrators who face the concrete problems, but a general outline may be suggested. In China it is too late for military or other interventionist adventures, which could only strengthen the Communist position against us. We must strive to maintain contact with the Chinese people as best we can, preserving educational and cultural activities whenever possible, cooperating with United Nations agencies, developing whatever commercial and cultural exchange the new Chinese regime will permit and we ourselves consider desirable. In our propaganda we should try to keep the record straight and provide an example of freedom of opinion and criticism. We have more to lose than to gain by any further support of Chiang Kai-shek, or by the use of American force to keep Formosa out of Chinese Communist hands. Similarly, we probably have more to gain than to lose by according a new Chinese central government some sort of de facto recognition if they seek it, and by not responding too violently to any provocative acts against us. We must remember that our hostility is essential to Chinese Communism, to preserve the Communist myth of world history and keep popular sentiment mobilized against "capitalist imperialism." The development of a discriminating trade with China, on a selective basis to eliminate strategic materials, should be a cardinal point in our policy. China is not now in the Russian orbit economically, and we will gain nothing by pushing her into it. In spite of Mao Tse-tung's vigorous adherence to Moscow, China's foreign trade is still oriented toward the West. We should try to keep it so. All this, however, can add up to little more than a holding action in our relations with China.

Our more active policy should center on non-Communist Asia. Here the essential step, fundamental to all others, is a mobilization and allocation of American manpower to provide the specialized personnel who can develop direct and intimate contact with Asiatic realities. American shipments are less necessary than Americans on the spot in Asia, ready and able to study local problems and assist local leaders. This personal firsthand understanding of Asiatic needs is the only way of safeguarding an American program of development, for all programs will fail which are not geared to the life of the common people so as to help them effect great social changes. Revolution or rapid change is inevitable in all aspects of Asiatic life. Revolution in the people's interest is part of the American heritage. We must revive the pioneer revolutionary spirit in our approach to Asia. This will come if public-spirited Americans are given a closer view of Asia's problems and potentialities. Training programs, research institutes, field stations, and cultural exchange at all levels are therefore in order, with a movement of students and specialists of all sorts in both directions between the United States and Asia. The cost is relatively little. All these things can be done once we realize that American security and Asiatic welfare are indivisible.

It is time, therefore, to reactivate our approach to Asia through private American agencies—missions, the YMCA and student movement, universities and foundations, our great business corporations. Our free society must respond to Asia's challenge through private as well as governmental channels, through a new recruitment of talen, on all the many levels of which we are capable.

Mr. MORRIS. Next is an excerpt from the Vandenberg Diary received from Mrs. Helen Reid of the New York Herald-Tribune and the reference to the Vandenberg Diary was made in a photostat.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, on this point I should like to request that this extract from the diary be printed. It is in photostatic form and is presented in reduced size as a plate, and I ask that the text also be printed because the reduction will make the text practically unreadable and yet it is desired that the position of the note on the text be shown on the plate.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be done in that way.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344G" and is as follows:)

MEMORANDUM

4 February

Miss Barrows, Matt Connelly's office, 'phoned to ask the Senator to be at a meeting with the President tomorrow at 11 o'clock; it's a very much off the record meeting. Connally, Eaton, Bloom, the V.P., and Acheson will be present. East Entrance, White House.

S

R.S.V.P.

Saturday; February 5, 1949.

This meeting proved to be about China where the Nationalist Government (which we support) has all but collapsed and is now trying to negotiate peace terms with the Chinese Communists. Under ECA we granted $125,000,000 of American military aid to Chang Kai Shek. About half has been delivered this past year. The other half (about 60 millions) is now in process of delivery - some on ships ready to sail/ * * * The President met us in the Cabinet room. He was very serious. He said that his National Security Council and his military advisors had recommended this week that he suspend all export licenses on all further shipments to the Nationalists because of their imminent collapse and, therefore, that these supplies probably would simply fall into the hands of the Chinese Communists (or, in the event of Chang's fall, be sold by the Chinese in the black market). He asked our view. Two or three of the gentlemen immediately fell in with the idea of stopping all export licenses forthwith. I kep silent until the President asked for my view. This is substantially what I said. * * * "Chang and his Nationalist government may well be on their last legs. They probably will collapse in the near future. Our shipments to them, therefore, might well fall into the hands of the Northern Chinese Communists (as has been the case with American equipment furnished to eight American-trained Nationalist Divisions which surrendered without firing a shot). But there is something here vastly more important than what happens to $60,000,000 worth of supplies. The American Government already is charged with a large share of responsibility for Chang's Government's fate because of our previous policies and our failure to give it adequate military supplies. (This charge is only partially justified up-to-date). But if, at the very moment when Chang's Nationalists are desperately trying to negotiate some kind of a peace with the Communists, we suspend all military shipments to the Nationalists, we certainly shall make any hope of a negotiated peace impossible. We shall thus virtually notify the Communists that they can consider the war ended and themselves as victors. We virtually withdraw our recognition of the Nationalist Government. We seal China's doom. Regardless of the justification of previous charges that our American policy has been largely responsible for China's fate, if we take this step at this fatefully inept moment, we shall never be able to shake off the charge that WE are the ones who gave poor China the final push into disaster. Millions of our own people will be shocked; and we shall seriously lose prestige throughout the world. I decline any part of any such responsibility. I beg of you, at the very least, to postpone any such decision for a few more weeks until the China question is settled by China and in China and not by the American government in Washington. This blood must not be on our hands. My point is further emphasised by the fact that the title to almost all of this 60 millions in supplies has already passed to the Nationalist Government which is waiting for these export licenses. Therefore your order will be much more than a withholding of American supplies in American hands. It will be a ban on the Nationalist Government - and that will be "the last straw". I make it plain that I have little or no hope for stopping the immediate Communist conquest. That is beside the point. I decline to be responsible for the last push which makes it possible." * * * After a moment of silence, the President said that, of course, I had posed the real question. Then he asked the Vice President for his view. Barkley said he agreed with me. * * * That ended the conference. I doubt whether the President will issue any "orders" for a while to come.

Mr. MORRIS. Next is an exchange of correspondence from Senator McCarran to the Honorable Dean Acheson. Senator McCarran's letter is dated April 1, 1952, and the reply from Mr. Carlisle Humelsine to Senator McCarran is dated April 11, 1952, and this bears on the significance of the Japanese-Soviet Pact which took place in 1941 with a characterization thereof by Secretary Hull.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344H" is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1344H

BM: MW

APRIL 1, 1952.

Hon. DEAN ACHESON,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Will you kindly send us, for the use of the Internal Security Subcommittee, a copy of former Secretary of State Cordell Hull's statement characterizing the Russo-Japanese Treaty. This statement was released after April 13, 1941.

I would appreciate having this as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

DEPUTY UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, April 11, 1952.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: With reference to your letter to the Secretary of April 1, there is attached a copy of the statement you requested.

Sincerely yours,

CARLISLE H. HUMELSINE.

Enclosure: Copy of press statement by Department of State, No. 180, April 14, 1941.

For the press.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
April 14, 1941
No. 180

In reply to inquiries at his press conference today, the Secretary of State made the following statement:

"The significance of the pact between the Soviet Union and Japan relating to neutrality, as reported in the press today, could be overestimated. The agreement would seem to be descriptive of a situation which has in effect existed between the two countries for some time past. It therefore comes as no surprise, although there has existed doubt whether the two Governments would or would not agree to say it in writing. The policy of this Government, of course, remains unchanged."

Mr. MORRIS. Next is a letter from Carlisle Humelsine dated July 16, 1951, addressed to Senator McCarran bearing on the employment of seven people whose names have been referred to as having been employed in the Department of State.

Senator FERGUSON. That will be received.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344I," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1344I

JULY 16, 1951.

In reply refer to SY.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I refer to your letter of June 27, 1951, in which you request information with regard to certain individuals who may have been employed at one time or another by the Department of State.

Although it would appear that I am precluded by Presidential directive from discussing whether the investigative facts of a particular case raise a question of loyalty, I am pleased to inform you that the records of the Department contain the following information with regard to the status of the persons concerned:

Julian R. Friedman is not an employee of the Department at this time. He was previously employed, receiving a War Service Indefinite appointment on September 2, 1943, as a Divisional Assistant. He transferred to the Foreign Service Auxiliary on October 10, 1945, and was assigned to the American Consulate General at Shanghai as a Junior Economic Analyst. Mr. Friedman was terminated from this position on November 12, 1946, due to the liquidation of the Foreign Service Auxiilary.

Emile Despres is not employed by the Department at the present time. He was appointed to the Department on September 30, 1945, by transfer from Office of Strategic Services under the provisions of Executive Order 9621. Mr. Despres resigned from the Department on January 2, 1946.

Michael Greenberg is not now an employee of the Department. He entered the Department on September 27, 1945, by transfer from the Foreign Economic Administration under the provisions of Executive Order 9630. He was separated from the Department by reduction in force on June 15, 1946.

John N. Hazard is not employed by the Department of State. He is a former employee who entered the Department on December 12, 1945, by transfer from the Foreign Economic Administration. He resigned from the Department on July 31, 1946. He was again appointed to the Department on November 15, 1949, for a period not to exceed thirty days. Mr. Hazard was terminated from this position on November 30, 1949.

Jefferson Franklin Ray is not an employee of the Department. He was previously employed, having been given a temporary appointment on March 31, 1948. He resigned from this position on March 18, 1949.

Mrs. Esther C. Brunauer's suspension by the Department from her job as Policy Liaison Officer, GS–14, was announced April 10, 1951, and resulted from the suspension of Mr. Brunauer by the Department of the Navy. Consideration of Mrs. Brunauer's case is pending in accordance with established loyalty and security procedures.

Mr. John S. Service, whose case is also pending, is a Foreign Service Officer, Class 2, on detail in the Department to the Division of Central Services.

Thomas Arthur Bisson is not now, and has not been, an employee of the Department.

Sincerely yours,

CARLISLE H. HUMELSINE,
Deputy Under Secretary
(For the Secretary of State).

Mr. MORRIS. This is a letter dated December 12, 1951 from Argyle R. Mackey, Commissioner of Immigration, to Senator McCarran bearing on the deportation of one Charles Bidien, who has written for the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Senator FERGUSON. It will be received.

(The document was marked "Exhibit No. 1344J," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1344J

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICE

Washington 25, D. C.

Please address reply to: and refer to this file No. A–2987117—Inv.

DECEMBER 12, 1951.

Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: This is in response to your letter of December 1, 1951, requesting full information regarding the deportation proceedings of Charles Bidien.

Your inquiry appears to relate to the Charles Bidien who is the subject of immigration file A–2987117. He was born at Acheh, Sumatra, Indonesia, on July 18, 1904, and is an Indonesian citizen of the Malayan race. His name in his native land was Sheh Bidien Ben Aroon.

A warrant of arrest in deportation proceedings was issued against him on September 16, 1948, charging him with: (1) membership in an organization advocating the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States; (2) membership in an organization that circulates, or distributes printed matter advocating such overthrow; (3) being an immigrant not in possession of a valid immigration visa at time of entry; and (4) being an alien ineligible to citizenship and not entitled to enter the United States under any exception.

He was accorded a hearing under this warrant of arrest on November 1, 1949, at the New York Office of this Service. Charges (3) and (4), above, were found sustained by the evidence. Charges (1) and (2), above, were not sustained as no evidence was adduced bearing upon these charges. Admissible evidence to sustain these latter two charges was not available for production at the hearing.

According to the record, Bidien last arrived in the United States February 8, 1930, at Boston, Massachusetts, as a seaman aboard the S. S. City of Rangoon, and deserted the vessel at the port of Philadelphia. He was never lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

On December 21, 1949, an order of deportation was entered. The warrant of deportation was issued on the same date. His deportation was effected on the S. S. Batory, which sailed foreign from the port of New York, January 20, 1950.

I hope that the foregoing satisfactorily answers your inquiry.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) ARGYLE R. MACKEY,
Commissioner.

Senator FERGUSON. We will recess at this time until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 5:30 p. m., the committee recessed to reconvene at 10 a. m., Friday, May 16, 1952.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

FRIDAY, MAY 16, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER INTERNAL SECURITY LAWS OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to recess, at 10 a. m., in room 424 of the Senate Office Building, Senator Homer Ferguson, presiding.

Present: Senator Ferguson.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; and Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel.

Senator FERGUSON. The subcommittee will come to order. You may proceed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Weintraub, when we suspended your examination yesterday, we had concluded a question about Mr. Harry Dexter White.

Do you or did you know Michael Greenberg?

TESTIMONY OF DAVID WEINTRAUB, DIRECTOR OF ECONOMIC STABILITY AND DEVELOPMENT, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC AFFAIRS, UNITED NATIONS, NEW YORK, N. Y.—Resumed

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever meet him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect the name at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Joseph Gregg?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that name either.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Maurice Halperin?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir, I don't recollect that name either.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know J. Julius Joseph?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir. The same answer. I just don't recollect those names.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Duncan Chaplin Lee?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Robert T. Miller?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know William Z. Park?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Bernard Redmont?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. What is the name again?

Mr. SOURWINE. Bernard Redmont, R-e-d-m-o-n-t.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Helen Tenney, T-e-n-n-e-y?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have, I think, answered a question as to whether you know William Remington.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe you asked me the question yesterday. I know who he is.

Mr. SOURWINE. You didn't know him personally?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Harold Ware?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know John J. A-b-t?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us of your acquaintanceship with Mr. Abt, your association with him, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Mr. Abt, I believe, was a member of the general counsel staff in FERA some time during the time that I was there, and I knew him as such.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that the full extent of your knowledge of him and association with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir. I kept seeing him on and off; I had some business with him from time to time related to the FERA, but that is about all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you seen him in recent years?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect running into him in recent years at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you maintain your acquaintanceship?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Abt had been named in sworn testimony as a member of an underground group of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I read that in a newspaper once.

Senator FERGUSON. When you read in the paper about these people, the fact that Chambers and Bentley had testified, as I understand it you discounted all that testimony and did not believe it.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, sir, that is only partly correct.

Senator FERGUSON. I wanted to get your idea. I did not want to put words in your mouth. But from what you said yesterday, I drew that conclusion. That may be your testimony.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, some of those names I knew only as names, and I don't know that I had any particular reaction, other than that it was odd, or interesting, or something like that. With respect to some of the other names, of people with whom I had a working relationship, many of those people, those of them that had worked for me, I knew as competent technicians, with whom I had had associations, with respect to whom I never had any reason to believe that they would do anything of that sort. I was shocked, and I suppose I assumed that when put to the test those people would probably be able to show that that was not true. It is in that sense that I disbelieved it.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you believe that a man who is a Communist can be an economist and really be objective in his thinking in America?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know that I could answer that question, not having been a Communist myself. All I can say is that since I knew these people had done good objective work that stood up in public, I therefore felt that these people probably would be able to show that they were not Communists.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, you have not made much of a study of this question of communism, have you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I am afraid I have not. My specialties are in another field.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, how can you be a economist and not know that philosophy?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In a general way I do know the philosophy. But I certainly have not made any intensive study of it. I have been busy doing other things.

Senator FERGUSON. Are you an economist now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Is that your work?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is my work. And I am essentially an administrator of economic research.

Senator FERGUSON. Let me take our own point 4 program. Do you think that a Communist who claims to be an economist could properly appraise and evaluate and recommend projects for point 4?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, sir, I think when we talked yesterday about some of the people who worked for me, I answered a question to the effect that Mr. Michael Kaletsky, for example, who is a Polish national, is on my staff in a senior capacity. He is an economist.

Senator FERGUSON. I was not thinking of the United Nations. I did not want to put that in, because I understand that the United Nations has to deal with this problem on a Communist and Socialist and capitalist basis. And would you even include anarchy, believing in no government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I wouldn't say.

Senator FERGUSON. At least the others are all combined in the United Nations, and you have to deal with it on that basis, and you cannot eliminate any one of those thinkings—out of the solution of your problem in the United Nations. Is that not correct?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. But here in the United States, do we not have a different philosophy? We were talking about your work when you were with the State Department and the various other agencies. Do you think that Communists should be permitted to be economic advisers to our officials?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, to answer your question——

Senator FERGUSON. And not known to be Communists? That is what I am getting at.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is partly for that reason that I answered the question as I did yesterday. These people worked for me. So far as I knew, they did objective work that stood up. And for that reason I had to answer the question that as far as I knew, to my knowledge, I had no reason to believe that they were Communists and were doing work along those lines. I suppose that answers your question, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you never saw any evidence of communism or socialistic thinking in any of the economists or political scientists that you worked with in Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. None at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. None that I can recall, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, you would not say, from the evidence that has been presented in court, that Hiss was a menace? You would not say that he was not a Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, sir, there was a court, a jury, an appeal. That is a fact, and I accept that.

Senator FERGUSON. All right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Nathan Witt, W-i-t-t?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Lee Pressman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us of your knowledge of him and your acquaintance and association with him, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was essentially the same as that of Mr. Abt. He, too, was a member of the Council, the staff of the FERA, with whom I had dealings.

Mr. SOURWINE. And that is the extent of your association with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Alger Hiss?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. The extent of your knowledge of him you have fully explained to this committee already?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Donald Hiss?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And the extent of your knowledge and acquaintance with him you have already explained to the committee, have you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I don't believe you asked me about him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you do that now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is the most casual—I think I simply ran into him once or twice sometime. I believe it must have been in the State Department, but that is all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he related to Alger Hiss?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I thought he was his brother.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Henry H. Collins?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The name sounds familiar, but I don't recollect.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Charles Kramer or Krevitsky?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No; I think you asked me about that yesterday.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you have already been asked about Victor Perlo; have you not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you did know him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Weintraub, I have asked you about the names of the 10 persons who, according to the Bentley testimony and other sworn testimony, made up the Silvermaster group. You knew 6 of the 10. I asked you about the 10 names that made up the Perlo group. You know 8 of the 10. I asked you about the nine names that made up the Ware-Abt-Witt group, and according to such testimony you knew six of the nine and were doubtful about a seventh. I asked you about the names of 10 persons who, according to this testimony, were Communists but unattached with any of those three groups. You went right down the list of 10 and didn't know any of them. Is that entirely coincidence, sir?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't know, sir. I don't remember, as a matter of fact, which of those were in one or the other.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had no knowledge as to which were in which category at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Certainly not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Anne Triano?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Wilder Foote, F-o-o-t-e?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would you tell us about him, what you know and the extent of your association with him, if any?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Wilder Foote, I believe I must have met for the first time sometime during UNRRA days, but I couldn't fix any date, as a member of the State Department staff, probably related to public relations. Wilder Foote has, for several years now, been a member of the staff of the United Nations, and during those years I have known him quite extensively, see him frequently, as a man in the public relations field. That is about the extent of it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that he is a Communist or pro-Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know or have any reason to believe that he has ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the furtherance or obtainment of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. May we, on the rest of this list, let the phrase "Communist connection" stand for that whole last question?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. If you wish, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Benedict S. Alper?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Isn't that the name you mentioned yesterday as a member of the U. N. staff?

Mr. SOURWINE. I believe it is.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I just know the name.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know the person?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think I ever met him.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right. Do you know Max Beer, B-e-e-r?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Ursula Wasserman, W-a-s-s-e-r-m-a-n?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is she a member of the United Nations staff?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. She was a member of the United Nations staff.

Mr. SOURWINE. She is not now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not so far as I know, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where did she work? In what division or branch?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. If I remember correctly, she worked in the Trusteeship Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with securing her employment?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did she resign, or was she dropped? Do you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not know, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. When did she leave?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not know that either, but it is some time ago, at least over a year ago.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know where she is now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe she is—well, the last time I saw her, as a matter of fact, was in Paris. I have a vague recollection that she had something to do with some newspaper agency, but that is all I could tell you, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Marie Ginsberg?

Mr. WEINRTAUB. No, sir. I don't recollect the name at all.

Could that stand for most of those things that you ask me? When I say I don't know, I simply don't recollect the names.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Jeanne Goodsteinsinger?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir, I don't recollect the name at all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Harold Porter McKeever we have already discussed; have we not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir; never heard the name before.

Mr. SOURWINE. Helen Smerling?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Marshall D. Schulman, S-c-h-u-l-m-a-n?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. J. Donald Kingsley, K-i-n-g-s-l-e-y?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The name, Kingsley, is familiar, but I don't associate that with those initials. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Sir Arthur Rucker?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir. That probably makes it the same as Kingsley. Both Mr. Kingsley and Sir Arthur Rucker are names to me. I have met Mr. Kingsley, I think once, but I don't remember ever meeting Sir Arthur Rucker. They are associated with the International Refugee Organization, if I remember correctly.

Mr. SOURWINE. John C. Ross?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember that name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Millard Lampell, L-a-m-p-e-l-l?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Norman Lewis Corwin?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. What is the name again? Corwin?

Mr. SOURWINE. Norman L. Corwin, C-o-r-w-i-n.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Harry Byard Price, P-r-i-c-e?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Jan Galewisz, G-a-l-e-w-i-c-z?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Jeri, J-e-r-i Stary?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Andrew Steiger?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Allen Atkinson?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were asked about Michael Endelman; were you not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't remember.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't remember being asked about him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Connors asked you about him.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, yes; that is correct.
No, sir, I don't know the name at all.
Mr. SOURWINE. Andrew Grad?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Red?
Mr. SOURWINE. G-r-a-d, Grad.
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Andrew Grazdanzef?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Victor Yahkontoff?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir. The name is simply familiar to me as someone who is doing translation work, I think, in the United Nations, who wrote some books, if I remember correctly, books on Siberia or Russia or something like that.
Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know the man?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Jefferson Franklin Ray, Jr.?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Sir, you will recall your testimony that Harry Magdoff was employed under the research project.
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did he have a top-rank position there?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I suppose you would call it that. He came in at a fairly low level, and by the time he left he was doing some very important work in the sense that his work finally could be published.
Mr. SOURWINE. He is a writer; isn't he?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. He was a statistician.
Mr. SOURWINE. Didn't he also write?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, he wrote up the results of his statistical research which were published.
Mr. SOURWINE. Didn't he write speeches?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not that I knew of.
Mr. SOURWINE. Didn't you know that Harry Magdoff ever wrote speeches for anybody?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not for me. No, sir, I didn't know.
Senator FERGUSON. Did you make speeches?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir. I don't know that he ever wrote speeches.
Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know that he ever wrote speeches for anybody?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. He might have. I don't know.
Mr. SOURWINE. Did you keep up connections with Mr. Magdoff after you and he had severed connections with that research project?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether he ever wrote any speeches for Henry Wallace?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir; I do not know that.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Lewis Corey?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.
Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us what you know about Lewis Corey?
Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I met Mr. Corey sometime when I worked for the national bureau of economic research at the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, where he used to visit from time to time, and I met him there.
Mr. SOURWINE. What was his connection?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I recall it, he wrote some things for the Amalgamated from time to time.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that all you know about him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Go ahead.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Subsequently, he lived about a block away from where I lived.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where was that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In Sunnyside, Queens.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you recall his address?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. And I used to see him from time to time there socially. That is essentially all.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know where he is now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know what he is doing?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Louis C. Freina, F-r-e-i-n-a?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Corey's name had at one time been Freina?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. You never knew that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know or have any reason to believe that Mr. Corey had ever been a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I believe I had heard something of that sort, possibly from him directly, but I don't remember any more.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't remember any details?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know whether he had broken with the party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is what I meant. As you put it, he had been and was no longer at the time that I knew him.

Senator FERGUSON. You had heard that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Had you ever discussed it with him?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, if you didn't discuss it with him, how is it possible that you could have heard it from him directly, sir?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, to that extent. This is a matter of some 20 years ago. To the best of my recollection, now that you have mentioned it, I seem to remember that he had been and was not at the time. Now, I think he must have told me. If he didn't tell me, someone else must have told me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Esther Corey?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. She is his wife.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew her?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Only as his wife?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As his wife.

Mr. SOURWINE. She was not your friend?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I told you we lived a block away from each other.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was this a family friendship?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, we dropped in there. They dropped into our house now and then.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was Mrs. Corey a particular friend of Mrs. Weintraub?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. To the same extent.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mrs. Weintraub know whether Mr. and/or Mrs. Corey had ever been members of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I imagine to the same extent that I knew.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that all you knew about it, just that you imagined?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. We must have talked about it, and I would say that my wife knew the same thing I knew.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you tell her or did she tell you, or did the four of you talk as a group, or how did it come about that the knowledge was the same?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, as I say, I don't know whether I knew it directly from him. If I knew it directly from Corey, it was quite possibly the result of possibly a four-cornered conversation.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no memory at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not exact enough to be able to say that it was that.

Mr. SOURWINE. But you and Mrs. Weintraub knew the Coreys well enough that it could have been a four-cornered conversation among you discussing their prior Communist connections?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes. sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Was your wife ever a Government employee?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What department?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. She was an employee in the National Bureau of Standards during the war.

Senator FERGUSON. How many years did she work there?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. From approximately 1941 or 1942, until we left Washington in 1946.

Senator FERGUSON. Is she employed now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Had she worked for United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What was her line of work with the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. She was a chemist.

Senator FERGUSON. Is she a chemist by profession?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did your wife, to your knowledge, ever discuss with Mrs. Esther Corey the question of who was who in the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not to my knowledge, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you were never present when there was any such discussion?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, when you left UNRRA, did you do so of your own choice?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell us the circumstances under which you left UNRRA?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. At the time I left UNRRA, Mr. Fiorello LaGuardia was Director General, and he asked me to resign.

Mr. SOURWINE. Why, if you know?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He never told me why.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, sir, didn't it involve a question of instructions which you had sent concerning an accusation that Russia was selling machinery for export, selling UNRRA material for export?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, that was a—that is a fact. Now, whether that prompted him to ask me for the resignation or not, I do not, as a matter of fact, know.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you tell us what was said by you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir. As I recollect it, I was then Deputy Director General of UNRRA in charge of supply, and therefore in charge of the shipping of all kinds of goods to countries receiving relief supplies.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, Russia was not in UNRRA, not furnishing any money for UNRRA?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. The U. S. S. R. was paying part of the administrative expenses of UNRRA.

Senator FERGUSON. Just part of the administrative expenses?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Not the operating.

Senator FERGUSON. Not the operation or the matériel?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct. And to be exact, the question involved was the shipment of tractors to the Ukraine, which, incidentally, was a member of UNRRA in its own name in addition to the U. S. S. R.

Senator FERGUSON. As an independent state?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It was an individual member of UNRRA.

Senator FERGUSON. It at least got that listing?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right. And the question involved the shipment of tractors to the Ukraine from the United States. Those tractors were obtainable only through the allocation machinery then in effect in the United States. I received a call one day from the State Department, which in substance was to the effect that there were some rumors that tractors were being shipped out of the U. S. S. R. to Argentina. And if that were a fact, the shipment of tractors to the Ukraine could not go forward, unless I could state to the State Department, and through them to the allocating authorities, that that was not so, that tractors were not being shipped out of the U. S. S. R.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, it was not fair for UNRRA, principally out of American funds, to ship tractors out to Russia and at the same time have Russia selling tractors to the Argentine or any other country.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That was the view. I thereupon dispatched a cable to the UNRRA chief of Mission in the Ukraine repeating the statement that had been made to me and asking some questions concerning it, namely, "Are they or are they not shipping? And if they are, whither are they shipping it, and how much are they shipping?"

I did that for the purpose of getting at the facts so that I could present them to the State Department.

Senator FERGUSON. You sent it to the Ukraine, now, instead of to Russia?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I sent it to the UNRRA chief of mission, who was our man in the Ukraine.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I recall it, I received a reply saying no tractors were being shipped, that it was ridiculous to say so, or something of that sort. I conveyed that information to the State Department. And, as I recall it, the tractors went forward.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, now, did you think that was a sufficient examination of the facts?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. May I——

Senator FERGUSON. Let me ask you that question. Did you think that that was a sufficient examination of the facts?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I thought that that was sufficient information. That was the only information I had to convey to the State Department who, in the final analysis, were the people who had the judgment.

Senator FERGUSON. That was not my question at all.

My question was: Did you think that that was a sufficient examination of the facts?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I do not recall what I thought then.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think so now?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. And I do not know precisely how the man went about obtaining the information.

Senator FERGUSON. That was not my question either.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Sir, I simply am trying to reply to the question in these terms. The chief of mission was a responsible individual in whom a certain amount of faith resided.

Senator FERGUSON. Why did you not ascertain from other sources whether Russia was shipping tractors to the Argentine or any other country?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Because I followed the established channel.

Our way of getting information at that time was through our man who was stationed there. And I therefore went through that channel.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you think that LaGuardia discharged you for doing it in that way?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Now, that is why I asked you to please let me complete my story, and I think perhaps it will come out.

Senator FERGUSON. Go ahead.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Apparently a newspaper correspondent, who was at that time in the Ukraine, met either the chief of mission or one of his people in the Ukraine and asked him some questions about how things were going and received a reply to the effect that the people in Washington in the central organization were crazy, in that they asked such ridiculous questions as to whether the U. S. S. R. was exporting tractors, when it was perfectly obvious to everybody around there that they didn't have any tractors. That story appeared in the newspapers, or something to that effect. That is the story that Mr. LaGuardia saw.

Mr. LaGuardia then said, "Whoever sent such a crazy cable?" or some words to that effect; and apparently seemed to feel that I shouldn't have sent that cable.

Now, what else he felt, I do not know.

Senator FERGUSON. What did he say? He usually spoke out, did he not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Oh, yes. He asked me why I sent the cable, why I sent such a ridiculous cable. He seemed to agree with our people in the Ukraine, that that was a nonsensical question to ask.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, as a matter of fact, sir, didn't Mr. LaGuardia feel and express to you his feeling that your instructions with regard to that matter had not been tough enough?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is incorrect?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is incorrect.

Senator FERGUSON. He would not have made any inquiry at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. My impression was that he felt that I should not have made the inquiry.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you tell Mr. LaGuardia that you had received this communication from the allocation authorities stating that no more tractors would be made available to UNRRA unless you gave them assurances?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I did, except that it was not the allocation authorities; but the State Department.

Mr. SOURWINE. The State Department; but it originated with the allocation people, wouldn't you say?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. And did you get from Mr. LaGuardia any expression as to how he thought it should have been handled?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that. Mr. LaGuardia spoke mainly about: why didn't I clear the cable with him before I sent it. I perhaps ought to say that my recollection then was, and I told him so, that I had shown him the cable, but he claimed he had never seen it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, wasn't it a situation in which the cable in Mr. LaGuardia's opinion was not designed to produce a real investigation of the facts or disclosure of the situation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. He didn't indicate that at all?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir. In fact, it was rather the other way around. It was that this was such a ridiculous rumor that I had no business taking it seriously and starting inquiries of that sort. That certainly was the impression that I got.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you gather that Mr. LaGuardia would have had you ignore the State Department's communication, or that he would have had you send a denial without checking the facts?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I couldn't say that. My impression perhaps was that Mr. LaGuardia would have gotten on the telephone and burned up some wires telling people that he wasn't going to chase around every rumor that appears in the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. But the sole complaint against you so far as you know, so far as Mr. LaGuardia told you, was that you had sent the cable?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. And because of that Mr. LaGuardia requested your resignation?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, as I said before, Mr. LaGuardia never told me. Moreover, we had had several other run-ins before.

Mr. SOURWINE. About what?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I remember Mr. LaGuardia once coming into the office and telling me that he had met somebody over the week end and had bought some thousands of cases of liver paste.

I said to Mr. LaGuardia that he couldn't do that. That upset him very much. He thought he could do anything. I then pointed out to him that we were not in the business of buying directly, that we had to buy through the Department of Agriculture. He then wanted to know why I had three hundred-odd people working for me if we weren't doing the buying.

Senator FERGUSON. That was a pretty good question, was it not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, it certainly sounded good.

I also told him that even if we did, I would not have bought liver paste, because I wanted bread, and there was no use having liver paste if you didn't have bread to put it on, and we didn't have any money to spend on liver paste. We had quite a "go" on that.

Mr. SOURWINE. How long before the tractor incident was the incident of the liver paste?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. A couple of months, I would say.

Mr. SOURWINE. How soon after the tractor incident were you fired?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Perhaps a couple of weeks.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think it was the liver paste or the tractors that had the most to do with it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think it was an accumulation of things. As I said, that was one incident. There were other incidents.

Mr. SOURWINE. If you have other things besides the liver paste and the tractors, bring them out. Let's hear it.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, we had another incident that had to do with grain allocations, if I remember correctly. There was some meeting of a committee of one of the allocating bodies. I forget the details now, but that allocating body didn't want to allocate as much grain to UNRRA to ship as we wanted, as we thought we were entitled to. It was an off the record kind of meeting. There were papers floating around there, with all sorts of figures on them, about what the allocations might be, should be, could be, and so on.

Mr. LaGuardia, at that meeting, became terribly excited and finally stalked out of the room and said he wasn't going to stand for this any more and asked all of his staff to come along with him, and as he went along he picked up a sheet of paper from the table and put it in his pocket; which was a confidential piece of paper, and the chairman protested it and asked him to return the paper.

Senator FERGUSON. Who was the chairman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect any more who the chairman was. Vaguely I recall he was a Canadian.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you come into that picture?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I was in charge of supply, and I was the man who dealt with requests for allocations, and so on. As we left the place and got back to the office, I told Mr. LaGuardia that he ought to return that piece of paper.

We had a little argument about that, or rather quite an argument about that.

Senator FERGUSON. I was wondering whether LaGuardia ever had a "little" argument.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is right. It was quite an argument. And as I recall, he eventually returned the piece of paper, but he was quite angry.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was on the paper?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. As I remember, some confidential figures of some sort. And I had said to him that he had no right to take it.

Senator FERGUSON. What was his position at that time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He wanted more food for UNRRA.

Senator FERGUSON. But what was his position at that time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He was the Director General for UNRRA.

Senator FERGUSON. And what happened?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I complained that he should return it, and he at first said he thought he didn't have it, and I said, "Look in your pocket," and he put his hand in his pocket, and he had it, and he eventually returned it. It was a very unpleasant affair.

I remember another incident. I don't know why—well, you want to know. I will tell you. I recall another incident shortly before the firing, as a matter of fact. UNRRA had bought a lot of meat, as I recall it, through the Department of Agriculture, against my advice, and I kept insisting that we ought to cancel those meat orders, because we didn't have any funds, and we ought instead to use those funds to buy grain. Apparently Mr. LaGuardia had, through the Secretary of Agriculture, previously done a lot of work to obtain the allocation of this meat from the Department of Agriculture.

And what I was asking Mr. LaGuardia to do was to go back on that and cancel that and instead spend the money for bread.

It took several weeks, as I recall it, of arguments about that, until finally Mr. LaGuardia was convinced that he ought to do that.

He went up to see the Secretary of Agriculture, and I went along with him. We had a brief talk with the Secretary. He did all the talking. The Secretary was quite glad to accept the cancellation and merely asked Mr. LaGuardia to write him a letter about that, so that he would have it on the record.

Mr. LaGuardia and I left the Secretary's office, got into his car, and on the way back to our office I said to Mr. LaGuardia, just before we were to leave the car, that I would be glad to draft his letter to the Secretary; which netted me perhaps some of the worst abuse I ever received from anybody, to the effect that did I think that he didn't know how to draft a letter, or something of that sort. It was a most unpleasant affair. I don't remember any more what I said to him and what he said to me. It was one of those things I would rather forget, as a matter of fact.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are there any other instances which come to your mind which you feel may have been part of the background for your dismissal from UNRRA?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Perhaps I also ought to state for the record, sir, so that you don't get the wrong impression; in between those incidents, we got along extremely well sometimes. I was asked to submit my resignation not directly by Mr. LaGuardia but by General Rooks, who was then his deputy; and 2 days after the resignation, I received a telephone call from Mr. Rooks asking me whether I would join the UNRRA staff again, on some assignment in Europe, as I remember it; and as I recall, I said there wasn't room enough for both Mr. LaGuardia and me in the organization. Perhaps that rounds out the general picture. It was one of these flare-ups-and-downs kind of affair.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Arthur Stein?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is he a former president of the UFW, United Federal Workers?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he ever have anything to do with that organization?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think he held some kind of office with that organization.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was he ever dismissed from Government employment, to your knowledge?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was he ever employed by the Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Where?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He was employed in the NRA, if I remember correctly, at first. Later on he worked in the FERA.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have anything to do with securing his employment, helping him to get a Government job at any time?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It is quite possible. He is my brother-in-law. I don't think I had anything to do with his first employment, but it is quite possible, since he later worked in the FERA, that I did have something to do with it, although I don't recollect it specifically.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you help many people to get in Government?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, sir, I think the answer would have to be "Yes," in the sense that people used my name as a recommendation, and in some instances I proposed them.

Senator FERGUSON. And have you helped many to get into the United Nations?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Again I think the same answer would be true.

Mr. SOURWINE. You remember we discussed your acquaintance with and knowledge of Mr. Abraham George Silverman?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. And did you state that you had no knowledge or reason to believe that he had ever been a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Or a pro-Communist?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Or that he had ever willingly cooperated or collaborated with Communists for the furtherance of Communist objectives?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, do you know that when he was testifying before the House Committee on Un-American Activities in 1950—and let me ask: Did you know he had testified there in 1950?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I think I read that in the newspapers.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that when he was testifying before that committee he had been asked:

What was the nature of your association and relationship with Mr. David Weintraub?

And that he had replied:

* * * on the advice of counsel, I refused to answer that, decline to answer that, in the exercise of my constitutional privilege under the fifth amendment, since what I would say might tend to incriminate me.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. That he was then asked: "Do you know where he is now?"

And he replied: "I decline to answer on the same grounds."

And that he was asked:

What positions did he hold with the United States Government, to your knowledge, other than that of economic adviser of the War Production Board?

And Mr. Silverman conferred with his counsel and then replied:

I decline to answer in the exercise of my constitutional privilege, under the fifth amendment, since what I would say might tend to incriminate me.

Did you know that?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Can you give this committee any possible explanation for why Mr. Silverman took that position?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Had you never heard that before?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever at any time engage with Mr. Silverman in any discussions, activities, joint ventures, or any other type of activity which, if known, would incriminate him criminally?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Were you not even curious when it appeared in the paper that he had been before the Un-American Activities Committee? Was any of this ever printed in the newspaper?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect having read that in the newspaper.

I remember vaguely that I read somewhere that he had refused to answer questions. I don't remember the date of this.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever hear that he refused to answer questions in relation to you?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Nobody ever called that to your attention?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You never heard it before?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I never heard it before.

Senator FERGUSON. Are you surprised at it?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Rather; yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Just "rather?"

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir; I am surprised at it.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, you do not show much surprise on these questions of communism, here, or your investigation of them. Were you curious about all this testimony going in about your friends down here in Washington?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. In a general way; yes, sir.

Mr. FERGUSON. Just generally curious?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You could not quite fathom why these people would be taken before the Un-American Activities Committee, and refused to answer on the ground that it would tend to incriminate them? That did not even incite your curiosity?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, it incited my curiosity, but obviously not sufficiently for me to make any serious investigations of it to go into the testimony and the records.

May I say, sir: I don't remember the date of this particular thing, but you might possibly help me on that.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; I will try to help you.

Mr. SOURWINE. It was August 1950.

Senator FERGUSON. As late as August 1950.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, sir, in August 1950, I was in Europe. I read about this thing very briefly in the European press. I was busy with other things. By the time I returned, I was tied up in other things, and I didn't make any special investigation of it.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever know that Silverman also refused to answer a question in relation to Irving Kaplan?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Who was a friend of yours?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. Irving Kaplan was a friend of yours?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. He certainly was associated with me for many years.

Mr. SOURWINE. I have nothing further, Mr. Chairman, for this witness.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. May I, Mr, Chairman, before I am excused, make one or two small points?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; you may.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. One, I would like to make a correction of something I said yesterday. I believe I gave the name of one of the employees working under me who is a national of the U. S. S. R. as Pavlov, indicating that I wasn't sure of his name. I subsequently recollected that the name is really Ivanov, I-v-a-n-o-v.

As a second point, I believe either you, sir, or the counsel asked me yesterday about some kind of coordination committee that existed some time in the forties having to do with postwar reconstruction, of which Mr. Lattimer, myself, and either Lowenthal or Rosenthal were members, and I think I indicated yesterday that I have no recollection of such a committee. If I have made a positive statement that no such committee ever existed, I had no right to say that.

There were many interdepartmental committees at the time, and if some kind of committee existed having to do with postwar reconstruction, I may well have had something to do with it, but I simply would like the record to show that I have no recollection of any such committee.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did in connection with that prior testimony to which you have now referred testified that you and Mr. Murray Lattimer, or you and Mr. Rosenthal, had never met with Mr. Lowenthal in connection with such a committee or its activities or prospective activities. Is that substantially correct?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. If I said we have never met, I would like to say that if any such committee existed, I may have, but I have absolutely no recollection of any such committee or of ever having met with these people about that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think you might have testified earlier here yesterday that you and Mr. Lattimer—L-a-t-t-i-m-e-r—and Mr. Rosenthal had met on several occasions with Mr. Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Would you mind repeating that question?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes. Do you think that you might have testified on yesterday that you and Mr. Murray Lattimer and Mr. Rosenthal might have met on several occasions with Mr. Lowenthal?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I may have testified to that effect.

Mr. SOURWINE. That could have been true?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. It could have been true.

Mr. SOURWINE. In view of your having thought it over, overnight, and coming in here to make your correction, you still say that could have been true?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, it could have been true.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have no recollection of whether it was or not?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I have no recollection of its being true.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right, sir. Do you have anything else to say in relation to adding to or amending your testimony?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Yes, one more point, as far as I am concerned.

You made a statement earlier about certain groups of people, of whom apparently I knew a major proportion, and another group of people of whom I knew a similar number, and another group of which I knew none, and you seemed to draw some kind of conclusion from that, as if this were something that——

Senator FERGUSON. An unusual coincidence?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Something of that sort.

Mr. SOURWINE. I asked you if it were a fact, but I am sure I stated no conclusion for the record, sir.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, sir, I merely would want to say that in my almost 20 years of professional work I have known probably literally thousands of people. Some of those names you mentioned whom I knew were individuals who I am sure thousands of people in Washington knew. They were in positions which made it almost necessary for other people in related fields to run into and deal with them all the time. I simply would like the record to show that in my activities as a Government official I was one of the thousands, I am sure, with whom they dealt and with whom I dealt. And that is all, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, just on that point, you remember you stated you did not know Mr. Michael Greenberg.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. He was with the Board of Economic Warfare and with the Foreign Economic Administration.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I have no recollection.

Mr. SOURWINE. You stated you didn't know Joseph Gregg.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect.

Mr. SOURWINE. He was with the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs in the Research Division.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Well, I never had anything to do with the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

Mr. SOURWINE. You stated that you didn't know Maurice Halperin.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect the name.

Mr. SOURWINE. He was head of the Latin American Division in the Research and Analysis Branch of the Office of Strategic Services, and head of the Latin American Research and Analysis Division of the State Department.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. Again, I had nothing to do with Latin America at the time, but I did have to do with Europe.

Mr. SOURWINE. You stated you did, or did not, know Robert T. Miller?

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recollect that name, either.

Mr. SOURWINE. He was head of Political Research for the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, a member of the Information Service Committee, Near Eastern Affairs, the State Department, and Assistant Chief, Division of Research and Publications of the State Department.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I don't recall.

Mr. SOURWINE. I don't attempt to draw any conclusions from these, but we had here four groups of persons, all of whom had been cited in sworn testimony as members of the Communist underground. Three of them were in groups, the Silvermaster group. That was Nathan Gregory Silvermaster, Solomon Adler, Norman Bursler, Frank Coe, Lauchlin Currie, Bela Gold, Mrs. Bela Gould—Sonia Gold—Abraham George Silverman, William Taylor, and William Ludwig Ullmann.

Your testimony was that you knew 6 of those 10 persons.

The Perlo group was Victor Perlo, Edward J. Fitzgerald, Harold L. Glasser, Charles Kramer, or Krevitsky, Solomon Leshinsky, Harry Magdoff, Allan Rosenberg, and Donald Niven Wheeler; and you knew 8 of the 10.

The Ware-Abt-Witt group was Harold Ware, John Abt, Nathan Witt, Lee Pressman, Alger Hiss, Donald Hiss, Henry H. Collins, Charles Kramer, and Victor Perlo. You knew six of those and were doubtful about the seventh.

And then there were 10 unattached individuals. That is, they were employed in the Government. It was testified by Miss Bentley that they had cooperated in obtaining information from the files of the Government for the use of Russian agents. And those 10 names you didn't know any of. I simply ask if there was any coincidence, if you had any explanation with regard to it.

Mr. WEINTRAUB. I can only say that it must have been coincidence, that those others were names of people who were apparently prominent and moved around a great deal, and consequently I knew them. If those others didn't move around, and I had no direct business relations with them, I didn't know them. It appears to be coincidence. That is all I can say, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. The next witness is Mr. Kaplan.

Will you raise your right hand, sir?

You do solemnly swear that in the matter now pending before the Subcommittee on Internal Security of the Committee on the Judiciary, you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do.

Senator FERGUSON. What is your full name, and your address?

TESTIMONY OF IRVING KAPLAN, NEW YORK, N. Y. (ACCOMPANIED BY HIS COUNSEL, MILTON FRIEDMAN, NEW YORK, N. Y.)

Mr. KAPLAN. Irving Kaplan, 130 West Seventy-eighth Street.

Senator FERGUSON. Can you speak louder?

Mr. KAPLAN. I have a voice that doesn't carry very well. I will try to.

Senator FERGUSON. You have a lawyer with you?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What is your counsel's name?

Mr. KAPLAN. Mr. Milton Friedman.

Senator FERGUSON. And what is your address, Mr. Friedman?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. 522 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Senator FERGUSON. That is your office address?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. You may proceed.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you stated your address for the record?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you acquainted with David Weintraub, the gentleman who has just testified here, and who is Director of the Division of Economic Stability and Development of the United Nations?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. What has been your association with him?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am employed in the United Nations in the division of which he is director.

Senator FERGUSON. The division of what?

Mr. KAPLAN. The division of which he is director. With respect to any other associations outside of the U. N., I refuse to answer on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me or degrade me.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, wait. You merely say now that you will answer that one question, that you work under him, and that as to any other question you offer voluntarily the answer, "I refuse to answer any of the other questions on the grounds that it might tend to incriminate me"?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That isn't what you said, is it?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, that is not what I said.

The question that I was answering was a very general one as to what were my associations with him.

Senator FERGUSON. That is what I mean. Any other questions about your association with him you refuse to answer?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer as to any associations prior to my employment at the United Nations or any personal associations with him.

Mr. SOURWINE. I think that the witness means to say, Mr. Chairman, that he did have other associations with Mr. Weintraub outside the United Nations, but that in that area he will respectfully decline to answer questions on the ground that it may tend to incriminate him.

Mr. KAPLAN. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You heard Mr. Weintraub's testimony, did you not?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes. I heard most of it. I am not sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. You heard most of his public testimony?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. You could hear what he was saying?

Mr. KAPLAN. Not always, but I think I heard the better part of it.

Senator FERGUSON. Your answer indicates, as far as he is concerned, that you leave the inference, as to him, that there must have been something wrong with his negotiations with you.

Mr. KAPLAN. I intend no inferences whatsoever.

Senator FERGUSON. But you refuse to answer on the ground that it would tend to incriminate you?

Mr. KAPLAN. Right.

Mr. SOURWINE. You know that Mr. Weintraub testified to associations with you other than the association which you have testified to, do you not?

Mr. KAPLAN. I heard him so testify; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, did he testify to anything which, so far as you know, was false?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the ground that it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, do I understand that any relationship that you had with the previous witness, outside of the United Nations, your actual job, you refuse to answer? That you refuse to answer as to those relations or activities or relationships or friendships, on the ground that it would tend to incriminate you? Is that right?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. That leaves it that you may not get much information on that line.

Mr. SOURWINE. We may get a good deal, Mr. Chairman.

Did you participate in any way in the assignment of Owen Lattimore to Afghanistan?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know he had been assigned to head a mission to Afghanistan for the United Nations?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that, at or about the time he was so assigned?

Mr. KAPLAN. I knew it at or about the time he was so assigned.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever discuss that with any of your superiors in the United Nations?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You never did discuss it with Mr. Weintraub?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether Mr. Weintraub participated in the assignment of Mr. Lattimore?

Mr. KAPLAN. I heard him testify that he did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, so far as you know, did he testify truthfully in that regard?

Mr. KAPLAN. As far as I know, he did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, you have testified your name is Irving Kaplan?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever known as Isador?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that the name you were given at birth?

Mr. KAPLAN. I was given a name in Jewish at birth.

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes; the equivalent of either Isador or Irving.

Mr. KAPLAN. That is right. The equivalent of Israel, Isadore, or Irving.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you testify as to where you were born, sir?
Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. And where was it?
Mr. KAPLAN. Poland.
Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know the place?
Mr. KAPLAN. I can spell it.
Mr. SOURWINE. Would you do that? I couldn't pronounce it, either, sir.
Mr. KAPLAN. Z-d-z-i-e-n-c-i-o-l.
Mr. SOURWINE. And that was in what might be termed the Province of Nowagrodek?
Mr. KAPLAN. I think that is right.
Mr. SOURWINE. When was that?
Mr. KAPLAN. September 23, 1900.
Mr. SOURWINE. Are you aware that your school and college records indicate that you were born December 12, 1900?
Mr. KAPLAN. I think some records did.
Mr. SOURWINE. That is incorrect?
Mr. KAPLAN. Those were incorrect, those that did; yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. Your parents were Morris Kaplan and Jenni Kaplan?
Mr. KAPLAN. Right.
Mr. SOURWINE. They were both born in Grodno, Russia?
Mr. KAPLAN. Well, I couldn't be sure, but they were born in that same vicinity.
Mr. SOURWINE. Your father was a naturalized citizen of the United States?
Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. And you acquired your citizenship by derivation from him?
Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.
Senator FERGUSON. Were you born in Russia, or Poland?
Mr. KAPLAN. Well, it has been listed as Poland. I think it is an area that has shifted around in the post-World War I period and subsequently.
Senator FERGUSON. You were classed as Polish, though, rather than Russian?
Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know.
Mr. SOURWINE. Are you aware that your father's naturalization papers show that you were born September 1, 1901 in Russia?
Mr. KAPLAN. I am not aware that they show any date.
Mr. SOURWINE. And you remember testifying in executive session that you came to the United States about 1904?
Mr. KAPLAN. About 1904 or 1905, yes.
Mr. SOURWINE. You know that your parents entered the United States on March 17, 1902, at New York City?
Mr. KAPLAN. I say it must have been my father who entered at that time, and I entered a year or two later.
Mr. SOURWINE. And your father was, on December 18, 1911, admitted to citizenship?
Mr. KAPLAN. Approximately. That must be right.
Mr. SOURWINE. Has your American citizenship ever been questioned, Mr. Kaplan?
Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You attended elementary school and high school in the public schools of the Bronx, N. Y.?

Mr. KAPLAN. And Manhattan.

Mr. SOURWINE. And Manhattan.

The City College of New York, 1919, 1920; Columbia University, 1920, with an A. B. degree June 6, 1923?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think that is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You attended Fordham Law School from September through April 1929?

Mr. KAPLAN. That is approximately correct.

Senator FERGUSON. Are you a lawyer?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not receive a law degree?

Mr. KAPLAN. I had a year and a fraction of law in night school.

Senator FERGUSON. Are you an economist?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were employed in New York City and later in San Francisco, Calif., in various positions as statistical clerk, research analyst, and statistician, between July 1918 and July 1935; is that right?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think that is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you work in any other cities during that period except New York City and San Francisco?

Mr. KAPLAN. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. In July 1935, you secured employment as a principal statistician with the Government in Washington?

Mr. KAPLAN. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you get that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the early 1930's, were you employed by the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. in San Francisco?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have a fellow worker named Frederick J. McConnell?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Frederick J. McConnell took an active part in Communist demonstrations in San Francisco?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that he was regarded as an active Communist among his fellow workers?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever attend any Communist Party meetings with Mr. McConnell?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Senator FERGUSON. Has he ever been prosecuted in any way in connection with communism?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. Have you ever been made a party to any litigation, criminal activities, in relation to communism?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were employed by the national research project of the WPA in Philadelphia in November of 1935?

Mr. KAPLAN. Correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. And remained in that employment until August of 1938?

Mr. KAPLAN. Till when?

Mr. SOURWINE. August of 1938.

Mr. KAPLAN. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were associate director of that research project, working under Mr. Weintraub?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, you have previously refused to testify on the grounds that it would tend to incriminate you about any association with Mr. Weintraub other than the United Nations.

You are now testifying about an association with Mr. Weintraub other than the United Nations.

Mr. KAPLAN. I did not intend to do so.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did do so, didn't you?

Mr. KAPLAN. It was in error.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did so testify right here, didn't you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I wish to withdraw that testimony.

Mr. SOURWINE. You can't withdraw it. It is true, isn't it?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it would tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You refuse to answer whether the testimony you just gave here was true?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this witness be directed to answer that question.

Senator FERGUSON. Yes; I do direct the witness to answer.

Mr. KAPLAN. It is true.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were then employed as associate director under Mr. Weintraub?

Mr. KAPLAN. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Weintraub assist you to get that position?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the ground it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you consulted with counsel with regard to your refusal to answer on that, after you have opened it up with regard to the association?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You had better consult him again.

Mr. KAPLAN. All right.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I adhere to my position.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the witness be directed to answer that question.

Senator FERGUSON. Will you read the question?

(The question referrred to was read by the reporter.)

Senator FERGUSON. I do not think I will require him to answer that, if he refuses on the ground that it may tend to incriminate him. They are not directly connected with the fact that he worked under him, and the fact as to whether or not he helped him get the job.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know of any Communists or former Communists who were employed by the national research project of the Works Projects Administration?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you ever know that McConnell was a Communist, this person you have been asked about?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you basing your answer on the grounds that it might tend to incriminate or degrade you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am basing my answers on the constitutional privilege.

Mr. SOURWINE. You said it might incriminate or degrade you. Do you think you have any right to refuse to answer a question before this committee on the grounds that it might degrade you or tend to degrade you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am resting on the incrimination.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not contend that you have any right to refuse to answer on the grounds that it might degrade you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know about that.

Mr. SOURWINE. You are not contending that you do? You are not claiming any such right?

Mr. KAPLAN. I said I am not claiming that.

Mr. SOURWINE. All right. You have said that several times, and I wanted for your sake to have your position clear.

The questions you have refused to answer, then, have been refused on the grounds that they might tend to incriminate you if you answered them truthfully; is that correct?

Mr. KAPLAN. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Harry Samuel Magdoff?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the grounds it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Irving Kaplan?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am Irving Kaplan.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Whittaker Chambers?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that Mr. Magdoff and Mr. Chambers were employed by the Research Project while you were there?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the grounds that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you employed as a special assistant to the Attorney General in the Antitrust Division, Department of Justice, from 1938 to 1940?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who helped you to get that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the grounds that it might tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who was your immediate superior?

Mr. KAPLAN. I guess Thurman Arnold.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Arnold employ you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Senator FERGUSON. You refuse to answer the question that was asked as to whether Thurman Arnold employed you, on the ground it would tend to incriminate you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know, as a matter of fact, offhand, what the employment procedure is. I imagine I was employed by the Attorney General.

Senator FERGUSON. Then you withdraw that claim that it would tend to incriminate you, on the question of whether he did hire you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I withdraw that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you consult with Mr. Thurman Arnold before you were employed by the Department of Justice?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did talk with him?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Over the telephone, or in person?

Mr. KAPLAN. In person.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you make your appointment?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Kaplan, you can't open up a line like this and then refuse to go further with it.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. May I speak?

Mr. SOURWINE. Certainly.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think he has opend up that line, sir. He has answered questions which do not have a tendency to incriminate, and when you then ask a question which he thinks tends to incriminate him he reserves his privilege.

Senator FERGUSON. I will have to rule that he may refuse to answer that. A Communist, you see, may have made the connection.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you tell Mr. Arnold who had sent you to him?

Mr. KAPLAN. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you and he discuss the question of your references?

Mr. KAPLAN. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not?

Mr. KAPLAN. No.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you and he discuss the question of your qualifications?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Kaplan, do you think that a Communist could be a proper employee to help a man in the Antitrust Division of the Attorney General's office of the United States?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the ground that it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you a research analyst, Federal Works Agency, Washington, D. C., from February 1940 to February 1942?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think those are the right dates, yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you tell the committee how you acquired that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Senator FERGUSON. Mr. Kaplan, do you know whether Communists were aiding people to get into the various agencies of the United States Government?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Senator FERGUSON. Was there a ring in Washington, where Communists were active, to get other Communists into the United States Government?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you head program progress analyst for the War Production Board, February 1942 to September 1944?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you get that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you in charge of Reconstruction and Foreign Economic Development in the Foreign Economic Administration from September 1944 to July 1945?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you get that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever meet Lauchlin Currie?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever employed by the Treasury Department?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Doing what?

Mr. KAPLAN. I was employed first on an assignment to Germany with the military government.

Senator FERGUSON. The military government?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. KAPLAN. I didn't know him personally; no.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you know Harry Dexter White?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he help to get you the job in the Treasury?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were employed in Germany from July 1945 to December 1945?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think those are the correct dates.

Mr. SOURWINE. And while you were there, you served as economic adviser, Foreign Funds Control Section, assigned to the United States Group Control Council in Germany?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think that is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. And in that capacity you traveled to Europe to assist in carrying on the liberated areas program of the Treasury Department?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. What year was that?

Mr. KAPLAN. 1945.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether they inquired as to whether or not you were a Communist at that time, before you got that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know whether any other Communists—or any Communists; I will put it that way—were with you on that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were transferred from economic adviser, Division of Monetary Research to the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, as an economist, on May 19, 1946?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You retained that position until the discontinuance of the agency, January 31, 1947?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. How did you get that job?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the Treasury Department ever call upon you for any information?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't understand that question.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the Treasury Department ever call upon you for any information?

Mr. KAPLAN. You mean while I was working in the Treasury Department?

Senator FERGUSON. Either while you were working, or otherwise.

Mr. KAPLAN. Why, certainly. I had assignments, or I couldn't work there.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the Treasury Department ever call on you for any personal information, information about you, yourself?

Mr. KAPLAN. I filed an application.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the Treasury Department ever call upon you for any personal information, about you?

Mr. KAPLAN. After that, you mean?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir, I don't recall that they ever did.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you give any people's names, that they could get information about you?

Mr. KAPLAN. Presumably. That is required by the application form.

Senator FERGUSON. So the applications would show those?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am pretty sure they would.

Mr. SOURWINE. Who did recommend you to the Treasury? Who did you give as reference?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the Treasury Department ever ask you whether you were a Communist? Or about Communist affiliations, or about any charges that you had such affiliations?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir, I don't think so.

Mr. SOURWINE. They never asked you about that?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't recall that they did.

Mr. SOURWINE. They didn't seem to be interested in that?

Mr. KAPLAN. There was no occasion for it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the State Department ever call on you for any information?

Mr. KAPLAN. I never worked for the State Department. I was on an interdepartmental committee for a short time while I was with the FEA, and if you mean by my participation in that committee as being called upon to provide information, then the answer is "Yes."

Mr. SOURWINE. Did the State Department security officials ever ask you for any personal information?

Mr. KAPLAN. State Department security officials?

Senator FERGUSON. I cannot hear you.

Mr. KAPLAN. I am just trying to get the significance of that question. I don't recall that there ever could have been any occasion for that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you employed as economic affairs officer, Economic Development Section, United Nations, in January of 1947?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You were not?

Mr. KAPLAN. Not in January 1947.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you hold a job of that nature?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. When were you employed?

Mr. KAPLAN. In 1948.

Mr. SOURWINE. January of 1948?

Mr. KAPLAN. Beginning in February, I think.

Mr. SOURWINE. February 1948.

Senator FERGUSON. Did you testify when you left the United States Government employment?

Mr. KAPLAN. No. Some time in 1947, about the summertime.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you have a Government job after the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion was discontinued in January 1947?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You did not?

Mr. KAPLAN. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. What was the Government employment that you left some time in the summer of 1947?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think the termination of that project took place actually, with respect to me, at that time.

Mr. SOURWINE. In the summer of 1947?

Mr. KAPLAN. About June or July. I don't remember how long.

Mr. SOURWINE. The agency didn't exist after January 31, 1947?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think there was a technicality. There was a formal discontinuance. The work of completing the report continued until March or April. And my pay with the annual leave involved in it continued into the summer.

Mr. SOURWINE. You entered on duties at the United Nations February 9, 1948?

Mr. KAPLAN. February 2, I think. I am not sure.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many employees are there in the Economic Stability and Development Division of the United Nations?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do not know. I heard Mr. Weintraub say there were about 125.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that about right?

Mr. KAPLAN. It sounds to me about right.

Senator FERGUSON. Do you know William Remington?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Senator FERGUSON. Alger Hiss?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many of the employees in the Economic Stability and Development Section of the United Nations are Communists?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. How many of them have Communist sympathies?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Senator FERGUSON. Well, do you know whether or not the United Nations inquires into a man's political beliefs, as to whether or not he is a Communist or a Capitalist or even an anarchist?

Mr. KAPLAN. It is my understanding it does not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Dean Acheson?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Solomon Adler?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Larry Adler?

Mr. KAPLAN. I know he is a harmonica player.

Senator FERGUSON. A what?

Mr. KAPLAN. I know he is a harmonica player, and I have heard him perform.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know him?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Ferri, F-e-r-r-i Asakian, A-s-a-k-i-a-n?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't recall ever having heard that name before.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Alben Barkley?

Mr. KAPLAN. I know he is Vice President of the United States.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Veet Bassie, B-a-s-s-i-e?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know V. Frank Coe?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. You know you are being pretty selective about which ones you will answer and which ones you won't answer, don't you? What is the reason for that?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Henry Hill Collins?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Henry Hill Collins, Jr.?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know of any such person.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't know of any such person as Henry Hill Collins, Jr.?

Mr. KAPLAN. What was the previous name you read?

Mr. SOURWINE. I am talking about this name now. Do you or did you know Henry Hill Collins, Jr.?

Mr. KAPLAN. Oh. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You just said you didn't know any such person, didn't you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I didn't have any idea who you meant. I thought it must be a different person from the one you read before.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then you do know a Henry Hill Collins?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You see, you did testify you didn't know any such person as Henry Hill Collins, Jr., didn't you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I answered to that question, and it seemed to me it must be a different person from the other, and the "Junior" made me think it must be an infant that I don't know anything about.

Mr. SOURWINE. Well, didn't you testify that you don't know any such person as Henry Hill Collins, Jr.?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes; I did.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was that true?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know of any child by the name of Henry Hill Collins.

Mr. SOURWINE. I didn't ask you about a child. I asked you if you knew Henry Hill Collins, Jr., and you said you didn't know any such person, and I am asking you now: Was your testimony true when you said that?

Mr. KAPLAN. My answer meant at the time that I didn't know what I was thinking of as that name, as distinguished from a name that had been given me before.

Mr. SOURWINE. What were you thinking of?

Mr. KAPLAN. I told you I was thinking of a child.

Mr. SOURWINE. I am asking you now not what you meant, but I am asking you now whether your testimony was true when you said you didn't know any such person as Henry Hill Collins, Jr.

Mr. KAPLAN. If you mean the same person as Henry Hill Collins, I refuse to answer on the ground it may tend to incriminate me or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is the answer your counsel just told you to make, isn't it?

Mr. KAPLAN. That is right. That is the answer I am giving you on advice of counsel.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right. He leaned over and asked you to say that, without your asking him anything.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. That isn't a fair statement. We have been conferring for the last 3 minutes.

Mr. SOURWINE. I asked the witness a question, and I ask counsel to please remain quiet.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I ask the Senator's permission to make a comment, since that does reflect on me.

Senator FERGUSON. The question is now: Did he confer with you, Counsel?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. He did confer with me several times in the last few minutes.

Senator FERGUSON. And do I understand that you are just giving him legal advice, rather than advice on the facts?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. Most definitely, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, may I have the witness who is under oath answer the question that I asked him?

Didn't your counsel lean over and tell you what to say in answer to that question, without your asking him?

Mr. KAPLAN. Sir, I consulted counsel at the very beginning, saying that I couldn't see what kind of person this might be, if it is distinguishable from the first one, and whether I shouldn't say I don't know of any such person.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you answer the question?

Senator FERGUSON. He is answering it.

Mr. KAPLAN. My consultations continued after that. They were never interrupted. And my counsel advised me at the end as to how to give the explanation, which I think is exactly the same explanation I have been giving over and over again.

Mr. SOURWINE. Answer the question categorically.

Didn't your counsel lean over and tell you what to say in answer to that question without your having asked him?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think you will have to drop the "without your having asked him."

Mr. SOURWINE. You didn't turn to him and say, "What shall I say?", did you?

Mr. KAPLAN. This was a continuing consultation.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right. He had been leaning over and telling you what to say in answer to any question, hadn't he?

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I don't think that is fair, either.

Certainly, it is an improper paraphrase.

Mr. KAPLAN. I have indicated that I consulted with counsel on this question from the start, because it seemed to me to be a tricky question. There were parts of the name that were in common, and then there was something else. And my consultations were continuing, as I see it, and the fact that it became a three cornered conversation I don't think changed the situation.

Senator FERGUSON. But your actual testimony is now that you do not know this person? Or you refuse to answer? Which is it?

Mr. KAPLAN. My actual testimony is that if by this person is meant someone who is a junior, an offspring, of any Henry Hill Collins, then my answer is, "I don't know."

Senator FERGUSON. You do not know the junior? If it is the other fellow you know him?

Mr. KAPLAN. If it is the same person, I refuse to answer on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your answer is that if the person I asked about, to wit, Henry Hill Collins, Jr., is a junior and offspring of a Henry Hill Collins, you don't know any such person? Is that your answer?

Mr. KAPLAN. That is right. I don't know any such person.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know a Tom Collins?

Mr. KAPLAN. You mean a drink?

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know a person named Tom Collins?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't think so. It may be a very common name.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't think I am making that name up, do you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am sure there are lots of Tom Collinses. I don't recall knowing any.

Mr. SOURWINE. For your information, there is a Tom Collins on the professional staff of this committee.

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know him, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have been asked if you know Mr. Laughlin Currie.

Mr. KAPLAN. I have been asked that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Laughlin Currie ever recommend you for a position with the Government?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Pauline Friedland?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did she ever live at 9 Greenwood Court, Queens, N. Y.?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know the address.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is she related to you in any way?

Mr. KAPLAN. She is my sister-in-law.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your sister-in-law?

Mr. KAPLAN. Right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your wife's sister?

Mr. KAPLAN. Right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did she ever live in Queens?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am not sure, but she very well may have.

Mr. SOURWINE. Don't you know whether your sister-in-law ever lived in Queens?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know for certain. I know that she once worked out in Long Island, and presumably lived somewhere around there, but I wouldn't know whether it is Queens.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether the Pauline Friendland of your acquaintance was ever associated in any way with the Communist Party?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do not know that she ever was.

Mr. SOURWINE. You do not know whether she ever was.

Didn't she ask you in 1936 to sign a Communist Party nominating petition for State and city elections?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you think a person could have asked you to sign a Communist nominating petition if they were not a Communist?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. You realize that a refusal to answer—

I will rephrase that. I don't want to presume to be giving legal advice. I suggest you ask your counsel whether refusal to answer on those grounds will be any protection to you against perjury committed here.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes, I realize that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, you have said, have you not, that you did not know whether Pauline Friedland was a Communist?

Mr. KAPLAN. Right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether she was in any way associated with communism or with Communist Party objectives?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Edward J. Fitzgerald?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Barry Fitzgerald?

Mr. KAPLAN. The name seems familiar to me, but my counsel tells me it is a movie actor's name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Your counsel tells you it is a movie actor. Do you know him?

Mr. KAPLAN. No; I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Patrick F. X. Fitzpatrick?

Mr. KAPLAN. That sounds like a familiar name, but the only reaction I have is that the components of the name are familiar ones. I don't recollect it.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't recognize that as a Communist name, do you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't recognize it as the name of any person at the present time.

Mr. SOURWINE. You don't recognize the name of Patrick F. X. Fitzpatrick as a Communist name?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't recognize it as a name, I say, of any person that I have knowledge of.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Isaac Folkoff, F-o-l-k-o-f-f?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Isaac Folkoff was a charter member of the Communist Party in 1918?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Folkoff was a man who Whittaker Chambers testified he contacted in 1935 in San Francisco at a time when he, Chambers, had a money belt that was to be delivered to someone whose identity he did not know?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You understand I am only asking you if you knew about Whittaker Chambers' testimony.

Mr. KAPLAN. I understand.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you refuse to answer?

Mr. KAPLAN. Right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or did you not know Jacob Golos?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Charles Kramer?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Ferdinand Kransky—K-r-a-n-s-k-y or K-r-a-n-s-k-i?

Mr. KAPLAN. I know of no one by that name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Solomon Lischinsky?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Harry Samuel Magdoff?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know David Neyhaus—N-e-y-h-a-u-s or N-e-i-h-a-u-s?

Mr. KAPLAN. The name is unfamiliar to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know David Niles?

Mr. KAPLAN. I recognize the name as a former executive assistant to the President. I don't believe I ever met him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I don't want to seem out of order. It is my opinion, without hearing the conversation, that counsel is advising the witness what to answer on every question.

If the Chair desires that that continue, I will have no more protest. If the Chair wants to ask counsel to sit one seat apart from the witness, so that if the witness wants to confer he will have to do so voluntarily——

Senator FERGUSON. I think this ought to appear on the record. When you want to confer with counsel, ask whether you may confer with counsel.

Mr. KAPLAN. Ask on the record?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. FRIEDMAN. I take it that I am not required to comment on counsel's statement that I have been giving answers?

Senator FERGUSON. No. In the future, you will ask whether you may confer with counsel. Then there will be no misunderstanding on the record.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Isadore Gibby Needleman?

Mr. KAPLAN. I should like to confer with counsel.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. The question, as I recall it, is: Do I know Isadore Gibby Needleman? The answer is "Yes."

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know that he is a former attorney for the Amtorg Trading Corp.?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. How well do you know him?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know where he is now?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever have any business dealings with him?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Does the Chair desire to require the witness to answer those questions?

Senator FERGUSON. No; I believe not. Maybe in his mind he thinks that would tend to incriminate him.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know George N. Perazich.

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Victor Perlo?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Lee Pressman?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Helen Witte Silvermaster?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you recognize that as a name of a Communist?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. You have answered one question here with regard to whether you recognized a name as that of a Communist, haven't you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't recall.

Mr. SOURWINE. You said you didn't recognize it as the name of anybody, didn't you?

I gave you the name Patrick Fitzpatrick, and you said you didn't recognize it.

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. On fact, or on law?

Mr. KAPLAN. On law.

Senator FERGUSON. All right. You may confer with him.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. What is the question I am supposed to answer?

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you recognize the name of Helen Witte Silvermaster as the name of a Communist?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Then I asked you the question as to whether you had not answered such a question with regard to Henry Patrick Fitzpatrick.

Mr. KAPLAN. I answered that I don't know of any such person.

Mr. SOURWINE. That is right. Well, if you didn't know of such a person as Helen Witte Silvermaster, you could answer the question the same way, couldn't you?

Mr. KAPLAN. If I didn't know of the existence of any such person?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel on that?

Mr. SOURWINE. Surely.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Harold Ware?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you or do you know Harry Dexter White?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever a member of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was your wife, Dorothy, ever a member of that organization?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties had been designated as Communist by the Attorney General?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know a woman named Bentley?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Miss Bentley in testifying before the House Un-American Activities Committee had testified with regard to you:

He was employed in the WPB. He was in a very peculiar position, because he was paying his dues to the Perlo group and giving his information to the Silvermaster group. Somehow the two groups got a little scrambled at that point.

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan consults with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. You knew she had so testified?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was her testimony truthful?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Alger Hiss?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Charles Kramer?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Charles Kramer, when testifying under oath, and asked, "Do you know Irving Kaplan?" stated, "I must decline to answer that question, on the grounds it may tend to incriminate me"?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I didn't know that.

Mr. SOURWINE. It is not a case of your doing him now the same courtesy he did you then?

Mr. KAPLAN. You expect me to answer that question?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Abraham George Silverman, testifying before the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and asked, "Do you know Irving Kaplan?" had stated, "On advice of counsel, I refuse to answer that question, in the exercise of my constitutional privilege under the fifth amendment"?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I didn't know that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever hold any meetings at your apartment that were attended by any of these persons: Veet Bassie, Harry Magdoff, Edward J. Fitzgerald?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever attend meetings at the apartment of Abraham George Silverman which were attended by those persons, or any of them?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. You used to play ball with Harry Victor White?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know he had testified under oath that you used to play ball together?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think so. I think I saw a press account.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he testify truthfully?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes, you may.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Bela Gold had testified that he knew you?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Sonia Gold has testified that she knew you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Frank Coe had testified that he knew you?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I am not certain, but I have some vague recollection that I knew Frank Coe had testified, and testified with respect to me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did he testify truthfully when he said he knew you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me or degrade me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Whittaker Chambers had testified that he knew you?

Mr. KAPLAN. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Mr. Chambers had testified that he asked George Silverman to get him a job in the Government, that J. Peters agreed to that separately, that Silverman referred him to Irving Kaplan, at that time co-head of something called the Federal Research Project, or the National Research Project; that Mr. Kaplan was then living in Philadelphia, that he, Chambers, went to Philadelphia, and spent an evening with Mr. Kaplan and discussed the problem? Did you know he had testified substantially to that effect?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I can't say I knew that whole sequence as read there.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did Mr. Whittaker Chambers come to see you?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the grounds that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Mr. Whittaker Chambers testified that he had known you before and that you knew his real name?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel on that?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. No, I did not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you in fact know Mr. Whittaker Chambers' real name?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel on that?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know or do you know Marion Bachrach?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that in testifying before the House Un-American Activities Committee, Marion Bachrach, being asked, "Do you know Irving Kaplan?" replied, "I refuse to answer," claiming her privilege under the Constitution?

Mr. KAPLAN. I did not know that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was your wife ever a member of the Washington League of Women Shoppers?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know the Washington League of Women Shoppers had been cited as a Communist-front organization?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel about that?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SURWINE. Were you ever a member of the United American Spanish Aid Committee?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever make any donations to that committee?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know you were on the mailing list of that committee?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that committee had been designated as Communist by the Attorney General?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever belong to the Southern Conference for Human Welfare?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know Bella Rodman?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't recall any such name.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether Bella Rodman was associated with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do not.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know whether Bella Rodman was a Communist?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Pardon?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did your wife know Bella Rodman?

Mr. KAPLAN. I do not know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you or did you know Henry Fowler?

Mr. KAPLAN. You are talking about the man who is now head of the National Production Authority?

Mr. SOURWINE. I am talking about the man who was chairman of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare in 1946.

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is the man who was chairman of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare in 1946 the same Henry Fowler who has just been named to replace Manly Fleischmann?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes, surely.

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know the Henry Fowler who has just been named to replace Manly Fleischmann?

Mr. KAPLAN. I think I have met Henry Fowler on some occasions.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you contact him in July of 1946 or at any other time for the purpose of making arrangments for your wife, Dorothy, to furnish assistance to the Southern Conference for Human Welfare?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. And you still say you don't know whether this is the same Henry Fowler who was with the Southern Conference for Human Welfare?

Mr. KAPLAN. I don't know.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that the Southern Conference for Human Welfare had been cited as a Communist-front organization?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Jay David Whittaker Chambers at Columbia University in the early 1920's?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you at that time in frequent association with Socialists?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know that Abraham George Silverman was employed by or collaborating with the Communist Party or a Communist group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give Mr. Silverman any information to be passed on to Nathan Gregory Silvermaster?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know Nathan Gregory Silvermaster?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know he was the head of a Communist group in Washington?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever give data to the Silvermaster group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever belong to the Silvermaster group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever pay dues to the Silvermaster group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you belong to the Perlo group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever pay dues to the Perlo group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever hear of the Bentley group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you belong to the Bentley group?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you know whether Elizabeth Terrill Bentley ever was a Communist?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Don't you know, as a matter of fact, that she is a self-confessed Soviet espionage agent?

Mr. KAPLAN. I am aware of reports that she has confessed.

Mr. SOURWINE. You said you know about a lot of her testimony. On various occasions you have shown familiarity with her testimony. You must know she has testified that she was a Soviet espionage agent, don't you?

Mr. KAPLAN. Was that your original question?

Mr. SOURWINE. I am just asking you now: Do you know that she was a Soviet espionage agent?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Mr. SOURWINE. Sure.

Mr. KAPLAN. I know that she said so. I don't know whether she was.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever know Earl Browder?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever pay Communist dues to Earl Browder?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever furnish Government information to any unauthorized persons?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you, on May 29, 1949, decline to even discuss an allegation that you had furnished Government information to an unauthorized person?

Mr. KAPLAN. Will you read that question again?

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you on May 29, 1949, decline to even discuss any allegation that you had furnished Government information to any unauthorized persons?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you state that any such charge was ridiculous?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you now state that any such charge is ridiculous?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever furnish unauthorized Government information to Abraham George Silverman?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you on May 29, 1947, deny that you had furfinished unauthorized Government information to Abraham George Silverman?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same ground.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know anything about the provisions of the Alien Registration Act?

Mr. KAPLAN. Not especially.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know anything about the provisions of section 20 (a) of the Internal Security Act?

Mr. KAPLAN. Not especially.

Mr. SOURWINE. Has it ever been suggested to you that you might be required to register under the terms of that act?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Have you ever registered as a representative or agent of a foreign government?

Mr. KAPLAN. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever pay dues to the Communist Party?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you now a Communist Party member?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Were you ever a Soviet espionage agent?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you a Soviet espionage agent now?

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate me.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you ever conspire to overthrow the Government of the United States by force and violence?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)

Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.

Mr. SOURWINE. Are you now engaged in an active conspiracy to overthrow the United States Government by force and violence?

Mr. KAPLAN. May I consult with counsel?
Senator FERGUSON. Yes.
(Mr. Kaplan confers with his counsel.)
Mr. KAPLAN. I refuse to answer, on the same grounds.
Mr. SOURWINE. I have no more questions, Mr. Chairman.
Senator FERGUSON. That is all.
We will recess without a particular day.
Mr. SOURWINE. You are excused from the subpena, Mr. Kaplan, and we will fix up your travel papers.
(Whereupon, at 12:15 p. m., Friday, May 16, 1952, the hearing was recessed, the committee to reconvene subject to the call of the Chair.)

INSTITUTE OF PACIFIC RELATIONS

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 1952

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE
ADMINISTRATION OF THE INTERNAL SECURITY ACT AND OTHER SECURITY LAWS OF THE
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to call, at 9 a. m., in room 424 Senate Office Building, Senator Homer Ferguson presiding.

Present: Senators O'Conor, Smith, Ferguson, and Watkins.

Also present: J. G. Sourwine, committee counsel; Robert Morris, subcommittee counsel, and Benjamin Mandel, research director.

Senator FERGUSON. The committee will come to order.

As has been the custom, General, we swear all witnesses in this particular hearing. You do solemnly swear in the matter now pending before this committee, being a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, that you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I do.

TESTIMONY OF CLAIRE LEE CHENNAULT, ACCOMPANIED BY THOMAS CORCORAN, ESQ., WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, will you give your full name and your present occupation to the reporter.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Claire Lee Chennault, major general, United States Army, retired. I am presently employed as an executive in Civil Air Transport, an airline operating in non-Communist areas of the Far East.

Mr. MORRIS. Are you operating that airline now in the non-Communist areas of the Far East?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you in China during World War II?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes; I was in China from May 31, 1937, until I departed August 8, 1945.

Mr. MORRIS. And you were there continually during that period?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Except for two or three trips outside of China for conferences.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, General Chennault has been called here today to be asked questions under oath concerning statements that appeared in his book that have been relevant to this inquiry. It is for that limited purpose that General Chennault has been brought here today.

General Chennault, were you in China when General Marshall in late 1945 went to China with his orders in order to bring about a coalition government between the Nationalist Government and the Chinese Communists?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I came to the United States in 1945, after the Japanese war, and returned to China, I believe on January 4, 1946. I did remain in China thereafter while General Marshall was there.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that General Marshall, as you say in your book, applied pressure in the Stilwell manner by shutting off the flow of all military aid to China including war surplus bought and paid for by the Chinese? You have made that statement in your book, General. Is that a fact?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes; that is correct according to the best of my information and knowledge.

Mr. MORRIS. How did you know that? Will you tell us precisely how you know that?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I know it because I was informed by the Chinese Government officials that they had ceased to receive war equipment manufactured by the United States. When I inquired why, they said that General Marshall had forbidden its shipment from American-held islands and from the United States. That embargo did not last the entire time that General Marshall was in China, but was imposed some time in the spring of 1946 or early summer and did continue thereafter for the entire period that General Marshall was there.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the nature of this embargo?

Mr. CHENNAULT. War materials of any kind could not be shipped from the United States territory or territory held by the United States at that time, including the islands of the Pacific, to China.

Senator FERGUSON. That was military material?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And it could have been used for military purposes in China if it had been shipped?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is correct.

Senator FERGUSON. So that it was in effect held from the Nationalist government which was really the only government at that time in China?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. And you say the embargo extended not only to the aid that we were giving the Chinese but what they themselves could buy on the free and open market?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I was told that the Chinese had actually purchased considerable quantities of what we designated surplus war materials on the former Japanese islands in the Western Pacific, particularly Okinawa, Guam, and other islands, and that this embargo applied to material purchased by the Chinese as war surplus.

Senator FERGUSON. You were in what authority at that time, that you were told this, General?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Strictly as a friend and wartime companion at arms of the Chinese officials. I was not in any official position in China at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. At that time you were not a general in the United States Army?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I was retired. I had no official position with the Chinese Government at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. Had you any reason to doubt that that order was in existence?

Mr. CHENNAULT. No, sir; I had no reason to doubt it. On the other hand there were other indications that these reports were true.

Senator FERGUSON. Was it true because the material was not coming in?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right. I lived in Shanghai, which is the port of entry for all of this stuff, and it simply was not coming in.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you were in Shanghai, a port of entry, and there were no shipments coming through that port?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. And you say that is the principal port where they would have brought it through?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is the principal port where this stuff would have come through.

Mr. MORRIS. You say General Marshall extracted a promise from the Generalissimo not to use the Chinese force already in China on the ground that this would constitute an offensive action? How do you know that?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Throughout the so-called trust period, the Chinese Air Force was restrained from attacking the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. How do you know that?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Again I was told by responsible Chinese officials. The chief of the Chinese Air Force had been a close companion of mine throughout the war. I worked with him on very intimate terms and he informed me.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you have known, because of your position at that time, of any extensive Chinese air offensives against the Communists?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. I had other sources of information through other Chinese Air Force officers with whom I was well acquainted.

Mr. MORRIS. But because of your experience as an air fighter in China would you have known of such an offensive if one had been undertaken?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. I might explain to you that for a period of more than 2 years I was appointed, with the consent of our President, as Chief of Staff of the Chinese Air Force. For that reason I was intimately acquainted with all of the top ranking and many of the lower ranking Chinese Air officers.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, General, are you acquainted with the various truces and the general truce that General Marshall tried to impose on the Chinese Government at the time they were fighting the Chinese Communists?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. That was common knowledge in China. General Marshall proposed a truce, with a cease fire, and with each side to occupy the positions held at that time. The truce was accepted and the truce came, within a point, to consist of one Nationalist officer, one Chinese officer, and one American officer. They were dispatched to all of the principal points held by both Nationalist and Communist troops to enforce the cease fire. That cease fire lasted for almost a year, according to my recollection.

Mr. MORRIS. How would a truce team operate, General?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I described the composition of the team already. They went to the principal points held by the Nationalist and Communist troops and remained in observation of troop activities so there would be a cease fire.

Mr. MORRIS. You say in your book here that very often the Chinese Government would have a Communist military force defeated when a truce would be imposed on them. What do you know about that?

Mr. CHENNAULT. There were several instances where that occurred. I think the first instance occurred down on East River, east of Canton and north of Hong Kong. The East River Communists had a line by the Nationalist forces, and with the cease fire they were induced to cease attacking them. Those troops were moved out by sea, in vessels furnished by the United States, according to my recollection, and moved up to Shantung Province by water. That is the first instance I recall where Communist troops were saved by the intervention of Americans.

The next instance I recall, I believe was with the Communist force pinned up in the mountains north of Hankow, in the northern Hunan Province. They were almost entirely surrounded by Nationalist troops, and again American officials headed by General Marshall intervened and persuaded the Nationalists to let them off, and marched them off into Shantung. The third instance that I recall was Kalgan Pass.

Mr. MORRIS. That was one of the most important.

Mr. CHENNAULT. The Nationalists had taken Kalgan Pass by force of arms, and as long as they held the Communist troops to the south and southwest were unable to move to the northeast. The Nationalists were persuaded to pull out of the pass and open the highway through there so the Communists could move northeast. They did that and they moved into Manchuria where they received arms from sources we will name later.

Mr. MORRIS. How did they receive those arms that you refer to later on?

Mr. CHENNAULT. My information was that they were given arms by the Russians who had occupied Manchuria previously and who continued to occupy Manchuria after this Japanese surrender.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the source of your information on that point?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Chinese officials. No American was in that area at that time. I didn't get in there, therefore I could not have first-hand knowledge.

Mr. MORRIS. As far as you know, General Chennault, was the Chinese Government at that time a one-party government?

Mr. CHENNAULT. No; the Chinese Government was a government of several parties. The Kuomintang was merely the strongest party. I recall two other parties to mind, the Youths Party and the Social Democratic Party. There were other parties also, but I can't remember the names now.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say there were other parties in the Government, did they have seats in a national assembly?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. Under the agreement or terms which were agreed to before the election of the National Assembly, each party was allotted a certain number of seats, regardless of whether the candidates of that party won in the election or not. The Kuomintang Party was by far the strongest, and, as a matter of fact, the Kuomintang Party did give up seats that their candidates had won in the election in order to have more parties represented in the Assembly.

Mr. MORRIS. Did the Generalissimo assign any seats to the Chinese Communists?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, the Communists were assigned a definite number of seats, but the number was calculated to be in fair proportion to the number of Communists as compared to the number of party members of the other parties.

Mr. MORRIS. In the excerpts of the book, General, that we have introduced into our record you make the statement that:

> At the time of the Marshall mission the Chinese Communists terms for entering the Chinese National Government were one-third of the Cabinet members including the War Minister, retention of a Communist army of 48 divisions, and the governorships of all provinces where the Communist troops then claimed occupation of a majority of the area.

Is that a true statement, General Chennault?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Those are the conditions that were published in the press at that time, or approximately the same conditions that were published. I can't recall whether they are exactly the same in every condition or not. But those were substantially the conditions published in the press and accepted as being the actual terms of agreement with the Communists; I mean, proposed by the Communists. They never did accept it.

Mr. MORRIS. What else do you know about the Communist demands at that time, General Chennault?

Mr. CHENNAULT. In my recollection, each time the Communist demands were met, either wholly or partly, the Communists would bring up fresh demands and thereby go into further negotiations and delays.

Senator FERGUSON. Somewhat like we are going through today in Korea, is that it?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, a great deal of the general tactics, to make demands today and have fresh demands tomorrow, or changes in demands that made them a little more territory.

Senator FERGUSON. We discovered during those periods, at the time General Marshall was there, that you couldn't negotiate a real truce or peace with Communists, did we not?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I was convinced of that. I don't know whether everyone was or not.

Senator FERGUSON. It was demonstrated rather clearly.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Clearly demonstrated. The record was there.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, the Communists and many people writing of military activities in China have stated that the Chinese Communist guerrillas did extensive fighting of the Japanese. Could you give us any testimony along those lines?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I heard those reports and I disagreed with them. I don't believe, after 1941, that the Communists did any extensive fighting with the Japanese except in a few areas, just a few areas held strongly by the Communists where the Japanese had to clear them up in order to open the lines of communication, and the Communists did fight until driven out of those areas. But afterward, the Communist fighting, according to my information, and I was on the ground at the time and had intelligence officers all over the country, was limited to sporadic raids on small Japanese garrisons, of taking food and ammunition, arms.

Mr. SOURWINE. General, you said there was no extensive fighting of the Japanese by the Communists, except in a few places. Do you mean to imply that there was extensive fighting of the Japanese by the Communists at any point?

Mr. CHENNAULT. At a few places, where the Communists were in great strength and held the place for some time and when the Japanese desired to clear a railroad through there, there was hot fighting in that area.

Senator FERGUSON. But it was not any extended fighting.

Mr. CHENNAULT. No, sir; it was not in accord with any general plan or order of fighting, simply sporadic and occurred in isolated areas where the Communists had been entrenched for several years.

Mr. SOURWINE. By extensive in that regard you don't mean over a wide area or with large numbers of troops involved, do you?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. There wasn't, then, a planned campaign by the Communists against the Japanese.

Mr. CHENNAULT. There was no evidence of such campaign.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, were you in China when General Stilwell was in command of American forces in China and when he had on his staff as political advisers John Davies, Paul Ludden, and John K. Emmerson and John S. Service?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you able to observe the political activities of those four advisers to General Stilwell?

Mr. CHENAULT. Some of them I did. I didn't have opportunity to observe Ludden, for instance.

Mr. MORRIS. Were you able to observe the activities of John P. Davies?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. Not under my immediate observation, but I had first-hand reports of his activities. I would like to explain that my headquarters were in Kunming, where General Stilwell was in Chungking 420 miles by air and much farther by ground. So I didn't have direct observation.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, in your book you said:

> I do not think that Stilwell had any political motives in encouraging his Chungking staff to function as a public relations bureau for the Yenan Communists. It was of a piece with his earlier dalliance with the Kuomintang reactionaries. He was simply unconcerned with anything but his immediate objectives. The Yenan Communists shrewdly tickled Stilwell's vanity with many flattering appreciations of his military prowess and clinched him as an ally by shrewdly letting it be known that they would be delighted to have him command their armies.

At the end you said:

> Since it was still official American policy in the summer of 1944 to support the Chungking Government, it was a common joke that Stillwell's headquarters were definitely opening a private foreign policy with John Davies as Secretary of State.

Mr. CHENNAULT. That was a common report.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you tell us what you know about that, General?

Mr. CHENNAULT. The staff at Chungking gave dinners at which prominent Chinese officials were invited and also attended by prominent Americans. They repeatedly told the glowing stories of the Communist fighting. They finally permitted an evacuation plan to leak out. According to the evacuation plan, all Americans in Chungking were assigned definite positions in vehicles and the line of retreat or evacuation of Chungking was to be over the Old Tea Road, that is up through Lanjo, out through Tsinan Province, one of the old tea roads. All of that not only tended to reduce national morale, but actually did reduce it. They got the jitters because the Americans were fully prepared to evacuate. That was one evidence of the bewilderment of the National Government by the Chungking staff. When I use the words "leak out," you know, of course, that an evacuation plan is supposed to be secret and should not become public information.

Mr. MORRIS. You mention in your book, General Chennault, that General Stilwell wanted to take an army after the battle of Okinawa, wanted to take an army and land on the north China coast and commence operations against the Japanese.

Mr. CHENNAULT. In late July of 1945 our ambassador at Chungking, who was then Mr. Hurley, received a message from Washington with instructions to transmit it to the Chinese Government. The substance of that message was that General Stilwell commanded the Tenth Army on Okinawa, and proposed to move part or all of his Tenth Army to the coast north of Shanghai, north of Shensi River, and on an approach to Yungso, there he would arm some two hundred or three hundred thousand Communists and turn south to take Shanghai. Had that been done, of course, the Communists would have occupied the mouth of the Yangtze River, which is the vital artery of all central China, and had been in possession of Shanghai and the Shanghai River Valley. It would have been impossible for the Nationalists to come out of Shanghai after the war was over. This plan, of course, met with great disfavor from the officials of the Chinese Nationalist Government and was dropped. That was in late July, just before the Japanese surrender.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, did you have any indication of learning what the official position was with respect to aiding the Chinese Nationalists in the period 1946 to 1949?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I have already told the story of the embargo on shipment of war materials during 1946 and part of 1947. After the embargo was removed some war materials purchased by the Chinese did come into China. It was not until December—let me ask you, When was Shanghai taken? Was it in 1948 or 1949?

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault's question was, When was Shanghai taken, 1948 or 1949. I think it was 1949.

Senator FERGUSON. What month would it be in?

Mr. CHENNAULT. May of 1949.

Senator FERGUSON. It was May of 1949.

Mr. CHENNAULT. I should remember, but I have forgotten. It was not until December the year before the fall of Shanghai——

Mr. MORRIS. December of 1948.

Mr. CHENNAULT. That the first shipload of materials arrived from the United States. The ship was diverted from Shanghai to Formosa, on orders of the United States.

Senator FERGUSON. But you see, they started to move over into Formosa in the early fall or summer of 1949. They were driven out.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, that ship was diverted from Shanghai to Formosa and was held in a harbor for a period of about two weeks.

This came to my personal attention because Chinese officers came to me and asked me to use my best efforts to have the ship sent back to Shanghai. The fighting was then close to the Yangtze Valley. The fighting was just north of Nanking at that time. So war materials given to the Nationalists after 1947, after the removal of the embargo, did not reach the Nationalist Army in the field.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have an opportunity to observe the attitude of any United States officials in China at that time, with respect to the assistance given to the Nationalist Government?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Observe activities——

Mr. MORRIS. Of American officials in China at that time.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. Just as a matter of common knowledge, I was in Nanking and Shanghai most of the time. I saw our counsul general in Shanghai often. I saw the Ambassador rather frequently. So I did have a chance to observe them.

Mr. MORRIS. Who were some of the officials that you spoke with at that time? Did you ever speak to Mr. Philip Jessup?

Mr. CHENNAULT. No, I don't remember speaking to Mr. Jessup in China at that time. I talked to our Ambassador, Mr. Stewart.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you speak to Jessup at any time about these matters?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, I did, in Washington.

Mr. MORRIS. On what occasion was that?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I had two or three talks with Mr. Jessup here in Washington. During those talks, I urged immediate aid to the Nationalists in order to prevent the Communists from continued conquest of China. At the last talk I had with him, I was told that a white paper was going to be issued in a few days, telling the whole story of Sino-American relations. My opinion was asked as to whether it should be issued, and I replied—I urged that it not be issued——

Senator FERGUSON. Did you give him a reason?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, I said it would certainly destroy what morale remained in the Nationalists and on the other hand would raise the morale of the Communists to a considerable extent if we issued any such paper.

Mr. MORRIS. And did he express opposition to the Nationalist Government at that time? Did he express opposition to aiding the Nationalist Government?

Mr. CHENNAULT. No, but the paper was issued in a few days.

Senator FERGUSON. Did he say why they were issuing it at that particular time?

Mr. CHENNAULT. To explain Sino-American relations.

Senator FERGUSON. That was his only explanation, to explain the relations?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right, and he never explained to me why it was issued, over my protests.

Senator FERGUSON. After you saw it, what do you have to say now about issuing it at that time? Did it do what you said it would do?

Mr. CHENNAULT. It did. It destroyed moral in China to a great extent, Nationalist China, and increased the morale of the Communists a great deal.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chenault, based on your knowledge of the situation in China at that time, was it clearly understood by you that if the Nationalist Government did go down to defeat that the only force remaining would be the Communist force in China?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you comment on that, General Chennault?

Mr. CHENNAULT. It was my feeling all along.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it more than a feeling on your part?

Senator FERGUSON. Were you convinced of that from the facts that you knew?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. When I use the word feeling, I mean that it was my inmost sentiment, my strongest belief.

Senator FERGUSON. Was there any other force in China that could possibly take over if the Nationalist Government was defeated?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Absolutely not, and that proved to be true.

Senator FERGUSON. You mean other than the Communists?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Other than the Communists. I mean, a third force.

Senator FERGUSON. It was well organized by that time, was it not?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Very well organized.

Senator FERGUSON. Had you any doubt at any time that the Communists of China were tied directly to Moscow?

Mr. CHENNAULT. No, sir.

Senator FERGUSON. And part of the international Communists.

Mr. CHENNAULT. I had no doubt whatever.

Senator FERGUSON. And that came from the facts that you learned while you were there in China?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, were you acquainted with the ultimatum that was delivered to Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek by General Stilwell in late 1944? Have you any knowledge of that?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Not first-hand knowledge. I was not present. I was in Kunming at that time, and this took place in Chungking. I did have reports from people who were present at the time. My most recent report was from General Stilwell's confidential aid, who is a brigadier general in the Chinese army.

Mr. MORRIS. What is his name, General? Was it General Ferris?

Mr. CHENNAULT. John Lee, a brigadier general. In fact, the whole time Stilwell was in China he was with him, and the most trusted adviser and Chinese interpretive aid. John Lee told me the whole story, because he did interpet it.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us what happened from that source of information?

Mr. CHENNAULT. John Lee told me that during this series of conferences in October of 1944 General Stilwell kept insisting on command of the Chinese armies, and the Generalissimo finally agreed to let him have command of the army in China. Then at one of the last conferences General Stilwell mentioned that he would like to arm the Chinese Communist armies and employ them. They had offered him command of the armies previously and still offered it to him. The Generalissimo replied that he didn't trust the Chinese Communists and would oppose it. After thinking it over a day or two, the Generalissimo sent for General Stilwell, and at that time General Stilwell had delivered his final message that had been reported by numerous witnesses here before, General Wedemeyer among others, I believe, in which a cable from the President insisted that Stilwell be made commander of the Chinese armies. The Generalissimo then withdrew his agreement to appoint Stilwell as commander of the Chinese Army and refused to do so. He then cabled Washington and asked for Stilwell's release. That is the report John Lee gave me.

Mr. MORRIS. Prior to that time, did the Generalissimo oppose General Stilwell?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes. I don't think he opposed him, but after the Burma debacle in the early summer of 1942 the Generalissimo lost confidence in General Stilwell as a field commander. You remember, the Chinese armies put under Stilwell's command were lost with all of their equipment.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know when the Generalissimo first asked that General Stilwell be relieved of his command?

Mr. CHENNAULT. No; I don't know when that was.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know that in June 1944 Vice President Wallace recommended that Stilwell be replaced by General Wedemeyer?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes; I have information to that effect, information which I consider reliable.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you tell us what you know about that episode, General?

Mr. CHENNAULT. When Vice President Wallace visited China he soon learned that there was a lack of harmony between the Generalissimo and Stilwell. He took pains to question numerous officers regarding that rift, and finally in my opinion it became his opinion that the release of General Stilwell was necessary in order to restore the best relations possible between China and the United States. I believe that Vic President Wallace did recommend his relief at that time.

Mr. MORRIS. At that time General Stilwell was advocating arming the Chinese Communists; was he not?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. For how long had he been doing that; do you know?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I don't know, except as a matter of recollection he had advocated using the Chinese Communists all the time he had been theater commander. I will go back further. If you remember, the war with Japan really began in August 1937, and the Chinese Communist armies operated under the over-all command of the Generalissimo until about the winter of 1941, when they refused to obey his orders about crossing to the south of the Yangtze River. After that instance, it was that the Nationalist armies destroyed Communist units south of the Yangtze River, that the Communists broke off from their close cooperation with the Nationalists. But General Stilwell continued to advocate the use of the Communists.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, could you tell us something about the extent to which the political advisers of General Stilwell reflected his good disposition toward the Chinese Communists?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes; they did that. One illustration of that fact is the military mission first at Yenan. General Stilwell obtained permission from the Generalissimo to establish a mission at Yenan, primarily, according to his statement to the Generalissimo, to collect intelligence in the areas controlled by the Communists in the north. Later, that mission was expanded to include meteorological observation parties, and to include American diplomatic or consular officials, or both. I have forgotten just how they were assigned. They remained in Yenan until after Stilwell was relieved of his command in China, and until Wedemeyer ordered them back, and the mission at Yenan was closed down by Wedemeyer's orders. A very interesting incident occurred in relation to that mission which has not been published.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us about it?

Mr. CHENNAULT. In February 1945 both Ambassador Hurley and General Wedemeyer returned to the United States on orders for conferences. Before departing from the China theater General Wedemeyer issued an order and required every officer under his command in China, every American officer, to sign this order as evidence that he had read it, and returned it to his headquarters in Chungking for file. This order said substantially, "You are directed to execute American policy in China and not to make it."

The situation had become so bad that General Wedemeyer considered it necessary to issue a very unusual order and require all officers to sign it and return a signed copy to his headquarters for file.

Senator FERGUSON. In other words, there was feeling that some people in China, Americans, were making the policy?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right; influencing it.

Senator FERGUSON. Now, then, General Wedemeyer issued the order, and required them to sign that they had read it.

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right.

Senator FERGUSON. That the duty of Americans was to carry out and execute policy that had already been made in America.

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right, and not to make it in China.

Senator FERGUSON. And not to make it in China or to influence it in China, is that right?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right. May I continue the story of this incident? After the departure of General Wedemeyer and Ambassador Hurley, I became the senior officer in the China theater. Therefore, I was acting commander of the theater. I was busy fighting the Japanese at the time, and I remained at my headquarters in Kunming, rather than go to Chungking, the theater headquarters. The chief of staff of the Chungking headquarters was approached by a member of the diplomatic corps, who requested the use of a C–47 airplane to go to Yenan. General Wedemeyer had closed Yenan and ordered all personnel to stay away. The chief of staff loaned the airplane to this official and he flew it to Yenan for the party. My first knowledge of the C–47 party at Yenan came when the chief of staff showed up in my headquarters one morning, he flew from Chungking, and showed me a long cable from Washington demanding to know his reasons for permitting a C–47 with a party of Americans aboard to go to Yenan. He, of course, didn't have any good reasons. I was acting theater commander so I advised him to sit down at my desk and to write out a reply. The reply, in substance, was that it had been customary for the military to loan airplanes to civil authorities, diplomatic officials particularly, on request, and that he had not thought anything of it, but had loaned the airplane almost automatically. His reply went to Washington and he was then ordered to have the party removed from Yenan as fast as possible.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was that party?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Mr. Service was included in the party. I don't know who the other members were.

Mr. MORRIS. That is John S. Service?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I believe so. There were two Services in China at that time.

Senator FERGUSON. He was connected with the State Department.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. General Chennault, you stated that General Wedemeyer found it necessary to give a directive that State Department subordinates of the Ambassador and theater commander in China would have to follow United States policy and not set policy.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Wait a minute, you are mistaken there. Wedemeyer issued it only to the military officers.

Senator FERGUSON. And they signed that they had read it?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes, sir. Hurley was in charge of the Embassy at that time. Wedemeyer was theater commander for the military.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you know, as a matter of fact, what the United States policy was with respect to China during that period?

Mr. CHENNAULT. I can't quote it, but substantially it was to aid the Nationalists in fighting the Japanese.

Mr. MORRIS. Were there people in China who were creating a different policy?

Mr. CHENNAULT. There were.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the other policy that was being formulated by people?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Those people continued to advocate arming and aiding the Communists, presumably to fight the Japanese, too.

Senator FERGUSON. I do not think we should use the information on the lend-lease program until we can get clearance from the Department. I cannot see any reason for marking it "secret, security information," back in 1941 to 1945. It seems absurd to mark what we shipped. That has been known and published everywhere. We get it now and it is marked "secret, security information." But I wish that a space in the record would be held at this place so that we can get clearance from the Department to put it in.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator Smith, we have here the figures on what assistance was actually given to the Chinese Government during the period 1941 to 1945, then a period early 1945, and then subsequent to June 30, 1946. We have those figures here, but the figures appear in a document that is marked "secret." That is the issue that we have here.

Senator FERGUSON. I think we better get clearance.

Senator SMITH. Could the record show that that was presented but it was not put into the record until it was cleared? Would that not be the way to do it?

Senator FERGUSON. Yes.

Senator SMITH. Let us do it that way.

(The information to be supplied appears as exhibit No. 1395 in pt. 14.)

Mr. MORRIS. We have covered the points that General Chennault has written in his book. The purpose of this hearing, Senator Smith, was to put into our record as sworn testimony General Chennault's knowledge of those points in his book. I have now covered those points, and I wondered whether we might ask him generally whether there are any other evidences or experiences that he has that should go into our record at this time.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Before replying to that question I would like to preface all of my remarks with a statement.

Mr. MORRIS. What is the statement?

Mr. CHENNAULT. That I have appeared here in response to a subpena by this committee; that I did not seek this opportunity to testify, but I am testifying because of that subpena.

Mr. MORRIS. I think our record shows that. At the commencement of this hearing it will show that, that you were called here today principally to give the testimony concerning the items that you mentioned in the book, which parts of the book are already in our record.

Mr. CHENNAULT. And I did not invite or seek this opportunity to testify.

Senator SMITH (presiding). In other words, you are replying here to a subpena and the duty placed upon you to come in and answer these questions.

Mr. CHENNAULT. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions, Senator.

Senator SMITH. You were not trying to do like we are trying to do in certain parts of the world, butt into everybody's affairs.

Mr. CHENNAULT. That is right.

Senator SMITH. General, is there anything else that you would like to add?

Mr. CHENNAULT. Only a general statement. The events which I reported in that book and the predictions I made on the probable course of events are all a matter of record, and the predictions I made have been fulfilled almost to the last one, 100 percent. I have tried to report the events that occurred under my observation of first-hand knowledge, and I think it constitutes the record of why we lost China, and how we did.

Mr. MORRIS. I have no more questions, Senator.

Senator SMITH. Anything else, General? We would be glad to hear anything you have to say.

Mr. CHENNAULT. No, sir.

Senator SMITH. Thank you very much.

All right, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this meeting today is to put onto the record various facts and various experiences that the witnesses who are here today, because of their peculiar experiences, are in a position to testify to. We have Admiral Hillenkoetter, we have Whittaker Chambers, and Miss Bentley. Admiral Hillenkoetter has not been sworn before this committee, so I wonder if you might do that. Both Mr. Chambers and Miss Bentley have.

Senator SMITH. Do you solemnly swear that the evidence you shall give before this subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States Senate shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. HILLENKOETTER. I do.

TESTIMONY OF ELIZABETH BENTLEY, WHITTAKER CHAMBERS, AND ROSCOE H. HILLENKOETTER

Mr. MORRIS. Admiral Hillenkoetter was director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

One of the things that we would like to establish as a matter of record here today, Senator, is the difficulty of establishing the relationship of an agent. When we talk about the agent in that sense, Senator, we mean somebody who is acting as an agent for the CIA, somebody acting as an agent for the FBI, or somebody acting as an agent for the Communists. We want to get some testimony on the nature of that agency and the difficulty of proof in establishing such agency, if it is difficult to establish it.

I wonder, Admiral Hillenkoetter, if you could tell use from your own experience in the Central Intelligence Agency of the difficulty of establishing proof of agency.

Mr. HILLENKOETTER. The difficulty is that if the agent is any good at all he will not have any identification, he can't possibly have. It is only childish if he does carry identification concerning himself. He must have the identification and live the part of the agent that he is playing. If he is an agent, say, acting as an insurance man, he must know insurance, he must have all of the credentials of insurance. If he fails to have that, he is no good as an agent.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chambers, would you make any comment on those lines?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I don't know what I can add to what Admiral Hillenkoetter has said, beyond the fact that it is all but impossible to penetrate the Communist apparatus, with which I am familiar, except by means of deserters from the apparatus of the Communist Party. I might be asked now if I suppose there are any Communists still in the United States Government.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, I was going to say, Mr. Chambers, how could a committee such as ours at this time determine whether or not there are any agents, Communist agents, high in the United States Government.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I was coming to that, if I may finish. I would have to answer to my direct knowledge there are no Communist agents in the American Government.

Mr. MORRIS. That is to your direct knowledge.

Mr. CHAMBERS. To my direct knowledge. But it would be childish to suppose that there are none. It would be childish for any security agent, say, to go on that assumption. Anyone with any knowledge of the recent past at least would have to presume that attempts are constantly being made to penetrate the Government and that there are in fact agents within the Government, agents of one kind, stature, or another.

Mr. MORRIS. In fact, Mr. Chambers, when you left the Communist organization there were then still in existence a considerable number of Communist agents; were there not?

Mr. CHAMBERS. When I broke with the Communist Party there were still within the Government a number of Communist agents.

Mr. MORRIS. Do Communist agents by nature bring other Communists into the Government?

Mr. CHAMBERS. They tend to; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you develop that point, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I think by now everybody is familiar with past testimony of Miss Bentley and mine and others, about the way the Communist apparatus recruited the other agents into the Government, by securing jobs for them and by advancing them within the Government once they are in.

Senator SMITH. In other words, Mr. Chambers, the more astute the agent is, the better job he will do for the Communist Party, and likewise the more difficult it would be for a person not Communist to detect his activities.

Mr. CHAMBERS. That is quite true.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chambers, is there in existence within the general Communist framework really two organizations, one the regular Communist Party and other people operating outside the Communist Party?

Mr. CHAMBERS. The Communist Party is normally divided into an open Communist Party and an underground Communist Party. The underground Communist Party takes many organizational forms. There are also people who are extremely important to the Communist Party who are not in fact members of the Communist Party, organizationally, but who assist the Communist Party and go to great lengths to assist them.

Does that answer your question?

Mr. MORRIS. Thank you, Mr. Chambers.

Would a person who was a member of the Communist underground be answering truthfully if he is asked by a Senate committee whether or not he has ever been in the past a member of the Communist Party, if he denies that?

Mr. CHAMBERS. That, of course, depends on the facts. If he has assisted the Communist Party in espionage activities, let us say, and has not been organizationally a member of the party, and is asked if he was a member of the party and says "No," he is telling the truth.

Mr. MORRIS. Miss Bentley, do you have any comment to add on that particular point?

Miss BENTLEY. No; except with regard to——

Mr. MORRIS. When you were in the organization, you first were a member of the Communist Party.

Miss BENTLEY. Yes; I first joined what I called the semiopen party.

Mr. MORRIS. And then after that when you left the party you worked for the Soviet military police directly?

Miss BENTLEY. That is correct. During my days, they tended to take the undercover espionage activities away from the Communist Party and run them directly through the Embassy because of a question of safety.

Mr. MORRIS. While you were working in the espionage activities, you actually had to stay away from the Communist Party, did you not?

Miss BENTLEY. I was told to stay away as much as possible; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you add anything to the points that have been made so far, Miss Bentley, on the points that we have covered now?

Miss BENTLEY. First, on the point as to whether or not there are Communists still in the Government, I agree with Mr. Chambers on that.

Mr. MORRIS. In what respect?

Miss BENTLEY. I agree with him that quite obviously there still are Communists in the Government, partially because it is an obvious thing and partially because I was told by one of my Soviet contacts about the existence of other groups in the Government.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you knew there were other espionage rings other than your own in the Government and you know they haven't been exposed.

Miss BENTLEY. I know they haven't been exposed. I was not told who they are, but since they were not exposed, obviously they are still operating.

Mr. MORRIS. You knew of two individual rings working under you?

Miss BENTLEY. Two individual rings plus a collection of individuals I dealt with individually.

Mr. MORRIS. One was the Silvermaster ring?

Miss BENTLEY. That is correct.

Mr. MORRIS. And the other?

Miss BENTLEY. We called it the Perlo group.

Mr. MORRIS. You had some indirect knowledge that Alger Hiss was operating in the Communist framework, did you not?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes. One of the members of the Perlo group had at one time been taken out of that group by Mr. Hiss and turned over to the Russians, and I discovered that during the course of my talking to one member of the group.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, there was still a third group that you knew of that existed at that time.

Miss BENTLEY. There was a third group that I knew of because of Mr. Hiss, and there was another group that was mentioned to me by my Soviet contact without identifying it further.

Mr. MORRIS. That is still a fourth group.

Miss BENTLEY. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And you know, as a matter of fact, that neither one of those two groups, as far as you know, have been exposed as of this date?

Miss BENTLEY. As far as I know, they haven't been exposed.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you comment in any way, Miss Bentley, on the difficulty that a committee such as ours would have in determining who are members of some of these espionage groups?

Miss BENTLEY. Obviously, you would have a great difficulty because any espionage agent, and particularly your Soviet espionage agent, they have had years of training and experience, and would be very difficult to detect, because they were told to take the local coloration. For example, often they were told to pose as right-wing Republicans or Fascists, or whatever might be a handy cover for what they might be doing.

Senator SMITH. In other words, they were told not to tell the truth when asked if they were espionage agents.

Senator O'CONOR. When you appeared before our committee several years ago and, as a result of your disclosures, the Remington case was developed. Do you recall it was a direct result of your testimony? And with what has happened since, do you feel it has borne out the representations that you made at that time?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes; definitely.

Senator O'CONOR. At that time you described the method of operation of the one group that you were most familiar with.

Miss BENTLEY. Yes.

Senator O'CONOR. In reference now, to the other group, the nature of which you learned from your contacts, was there any explanation given as to whether they operated in the same manner or were there any details given of the way in which they operated?

Miss BENTLEY. No, there were no details given. Actually, their method of operation was rather flexible. It adjusts itself. If it is easier for them to act a bit openly they can do it. If they have to go further undercover they can do it. They have the whole thing set up so they can shift from one basis to another almost overnight.

Senator O'CONOR. What I was leading up to was whether or not there was any indication as to whether it reached high in the Government or in any of the executive departments.

Miss BENTLEY. There was no indication where it was or how high it went, but I imagine it must have gone fairly high because they certainly wouldn't have been too interested in mere clerks who had access to nothing.

Mr. MORRIS. In fact, some of the people that you did deal with, one of them was an Under Secretary and the other was an executive assistant to the President, were they not?

Miss BENTLEY. That is correct; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Possibly Mr. Chambers might give us some information along these lines, or Miss Bentley. Some of the people who appeared in our hearings would frequently, from time to time, confer with Soviet officials, members of the Sovet foreign office, members of Tass, and members of the embassies here in Washington. I wonder if you could comment on the significance of that, Mr. Chambers?

I don't mean to ask you about Mr. Lattimore in any way, but from time to time Mr. Lattimore would have occasion to confer with Mr. Oumansky or various other Soviet officials. One man named Dolbin was here in the Soviet office, and they had a conference down in Lattimore's home. Again, without asking you to comment in any way on the question of Mr. Lattimore, I was just wondering if you could tell us some thing about the significance?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Speaking purely as a layman, I would say that if embassy or diplomatic officials of the Soviet Government visited anyone I knew, on almost any occasion, I should find it of extraordinary interest, at least. I actually have no experience of this kind, but I believe Miss Bentley has experience.

Mr. MORRIS. Miss Bentley, could you comment on that?

Miss BENTLEY. It was my understanding from what I was told that Soviet officials do not confer with Americans, especially in their homes, which happened in one instance with some of the people that I dealt with, and Mr. Bromoff, who was then first secretary of the Embassy, unless there was something very important afoot. They are not encouraged to deal with Americans at all, here in this country.

Mr. MORRIS. And you think a conference of several hours' duration would have considerable significance?

Miss BENTLEY. I would think so. I would look into it.

Mr. MORRIS. Would it make any difference if such a conversation took place, say, during the Hitler-Stalin pact? Would that have any significance at all to you, Miss Bentley?

Miss BENTLEY. I wouldn't think it would make any difference; no.

Mr. MORRIS. Would it make any difference to you?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I wouldn't understand what difference it might make. It would make a historical difference, I assume, but I could only speculate.

Mr. MORRIS. During the Hitler-Stalin pact the foreign policy of the United States and Soviet Union were conflicting. During a period of cooperation, there at least would be a framework within which somebody having the interests of the United States could confer with an official of the Soviet Union. Do you think that might cause a difference?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I think it is a reasonable distinction, but I should think that any such traffic as you have described would be of a fact that would interest the security agencies.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chambers, we have to consider the question here in dealing with people who are Communist writers, people who have been shown to have Communists in the past have done considerable writing on behalf of the Institute of Pacific Relations. In all cases the writing has been political in content. Is it conceivable from your experience in the Communist organization that a person could be a Communist and not write in such way as to reflect his Communist nature?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I should have to answer that it is in general possible, but it would be extremely difficult for any man, any Communist, to write without, in some degree, reflecting his political opinions. He might very consciously try to angle his opinions in such a way as to cover his real intentions. We know that there are people very skillful at that line. But I think that a careful study of any such writings would nearly always reveal a line in the writing at least a point of view which would be rather inescapable.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any comments on that, Miss Bentley.

Miss BENTLEY. No, except that I agree with Chambers. Except to those who are rather skilled in tracking that down, it might be unperceptible, but nevertheless somewhere in that writing would be the traces of the political line.

Mr. MORRIS. If we establish in our record that somebody was, as a matter of fact, say 2 years ago or 3 years ago, a member of the Communist Party, what kind of a conclusion can we draw from that, as to his present party membership. Can you tell us anything about that, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I am afraid I am going to have to ask you to repeat that question.

Mr. MORRIS. If we have established in our record that an individual, as of 2, 3, or 5 years ago, was, as a matter of fact, a member of the Communist Party, to what extent can we conclude from that that he is recently a member of the Communist Party? How good is the presumption that if a man is shown to have been working in the Communist organization, that that relationship continues.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I should think that would depend a great deal on what you knew of the individual's activities and expression during the period between the last time you knew of his membership in the Communist Party and your current interest in him.

Mr. MORRIS. Suppose that his associates remained the same, suppose that he continues to work with the same people as he worked with prior to the time of a point where we could establish he was a Communist.

Mr. CHAMBERS. The presumption would then be very strong that he was a Communist.

Mr. MORRIS. When a man changes from being a Communist to a non-Communist, are there any actions discernible on his part that would help us to evaluate whether or not he is presently a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. CHAMBERS. There are actions discernible on his part and on the part of his former associates, namely that he leaves the circles in which he formerly moved, usually with a great deal of strong feeling on his part and also on the part of his former associates who tend to leave him.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, if we can establish that a man is at some time in the past a Communist and that from that time on his associations remain the same, his general political expressions continued pretty much along the same lines, we are warranted in drawing some kind of a conclusion about the continuation of his membership.

Senator WATKINS. Would it be difficult for a man to disengage himself from a party, having been with it for a number of years?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I think it would depend on what area of the party he was active in.

Senator WATKINS. What do you mean by area? You don't mean geographical area, do you?

Mr. CHAMBERS. No; I mean organizational area. If he was active in the open Communist Party, he might fall away from it without very much stress on the inside, particularly if he has not been very active. If he was active in any underground organization, there would, of course, be precautions taken by the Communist Party or the apparatus which is a branch of the party, and he himself, if he broke violently with the underground, might take precautions for his own safety.

Senator WATKINS. What I was trying to get at is maybe a man would not make a violent break or keep away from them for a time, even though he might have made up his mind that he was not going to be a Communist any longer.

Mr. CHAMBERS. That is quite possible.

Senator WATKINS. That is why I was asking in connection with what you just answered to Mr. Morris.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I don't see what the line of the question is. I don't understand it.

Senator WATKINS. Well, if it is a difficult matter to break with the party, to get out of the party, a man might go along for a time, although he, in his own mind had broken with them.

Mr. CHAMBERS. That is quite possible; yes. That is entirely possible. I think most cases of deserters from the Communist Party would probably show that that is a general pattern, that the intellectual break precedes to one degree or another the actual organizational break. Some momentous step is scarcely taken later.

Senator WATKINS. In your own case you had difficulty, did you not?

Mr. CHAMBERS. It is perfectly true in my own case.

Senator O'CONOR (presiding). I just wanted to ask Mr. Chambers a question or two in regard to any of the procedures with respect to appointment in the U. N., as to whether there is anything he can give to the committee which might be of interest. I have for instance, in mind, a case such as the Irving Kaplan case.

Mr. CHAMBERS. Of course, Irving Kaplan's employment by the U. N. comes long after my last direct knowledge of Kaplan. I am entirely unfamiliar with how Communists are able to penetrate the U. N. assuming that they are, and I do so assume.

Senator O'CONOR. Have you reason to believe that that is true, that there is that penetration, that the Communists are in the U. N.?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Well, I can think of one or two names, Kaplan being one of them, and I have no reason to suppose that Kaplan has broken with the Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, he is an example. If he has been keeping the same associations during the past 5 or 6 years that he kept prior to that time or possibly for periods longer than that, you yourself would draw the conclusion that he has kept his allegiance to the Communist organization which you knew about personally.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I think there is a further step in here that we have not touched on, namely, that the Communist who leaves the party leaves the party because he believes that it is no good, has come to believe that from actual experience. Therefore, he tends to seek quite different and new associations. Perhaps some of them he had in the past and has repudiated. He goes back to them. So that a Communist who has actually broken is generally seen in the context quite hostile to the Communist Party as a rule, even though he himself may have decided not to take any direct actions against the party if he can avoid it, for personal reasons. Does that answer your question at all?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Mr. Herbert Philbrick has just arrived, and I wonder if you will swear him.

Senator O'CONOR. Do you swear that the testimony you shall give before the subcommittee of the Committee of the Judiciary of the United States Senate will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I do.

TESTIMONY OF HERBERT A. PHILBRICK

Senator O'CONOR. For the record, will you give your full name.

Mr. PHILBRICK. Herbert A. Philbrick.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Chambers, I think I interrupted you, really when you were giving some detailed explanation of the procedures, or of anything that you had to say in regard to employment by the U. N.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I am afraid that I won't be able to help you in that respect, Senator. I really don't know anything about it.

Senator O'CONOR. The reason I was asking you is that it did seem to me that there might very well be some dereliction on the part of some of the United States officials in regard, for example, to the Irving Kaplan case in the light of the revelations that have been made in the past. I was wondering whether there was any further information that you could give us in that regard.

Mr. CHAMBERS. Well, I know of no such dereliction, I have no such information.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, one of the difficulties that we have encountered is to find sources of evidence on people whose membership in the Communist organization is current. We have found that principally the only way of arriving at such conclusions would be from somebody who participated in the organization, somebody who was an ex-Communist, or somebody who had the experience such as Mr. Philbrick, who was an agent for the FBI. At the same time we have found that there have been three witnesses that I know of, three potential witnesses, who have broken with the Communist Party, in my opinion, having dealt with them and conversed with them at length, within the last 2 or 3 years. But it seems to me that they have not brought themselves around to the position where they will testify. One man who knows a great deal about the subject that we have been covering here says that if we call him he will refuse to answer on the grounds his answers will incriminate him. At the same time, he does know a great deal about it and is generally cooperative. It seems to be a phenomenon that we encounter continually, namely, that it takes quite a period of time for a man, once he has left the Communist Party, to comport himself in such a way as he will discuss the thing freely before the Senate committee.

I would like to get some testimony on that point because I think it goes to the difficulty that we have in establishing proof of these various things.

Senator O'Conor. It undoubtedly would be very pertinent and I think very timely to have that testimony.

Mr. Morris. I think some of our witnesses before this committee have said it took them 5 or 6 years, really, to make a break from the Communist organization. I would like to have some testimony on that score.

Mr. Chambers has another appointment, Senator. That is why I have been directing most of my questions to him, so he can get away early.

Mr. Chambers. Will you ask me specific questions?

Mr. Morris. How long did it take you to really break away completely from the Communist Party?

Mr. Chambers. I would think the better part of a year. I am speaking of the organizational break.

Mr. Morris. It took a year to break away?

Mr. Chambers. But you must bear in mind, it is extremely difficult to establish the point at which the break actually began, and that if any ex-Communist were able to go far enough back into the past, he would probably find small tell-tale traces of an incipient break of which, at the time, he was not conscious or barely conscious, and which he then put out of his mind if he was still active. So it is extremely difficult to state any definite period for that.

Mr. Morris. Now, at the end of that year, Mr. Chambers—you say it took you about a year——

Mr. Chambers. That is purely an arbitrary figure, I think.

Mr. Morris. Well, now, would you, if you can really look back to that period with a clear eye, would you then have testified before a Senate committee such as ours, about your associations in the Communist Party?

Mr. Chambers. After I broke?

Mr. Morris. Yes.

Senator O'Conor. And within that period of time.

Mr. Morris. That is right, at that period, at the end of 1 year.

Mr. Chambers. I am speaking of the period prior to my break. I think there is confusion here. I think you are speaking of the period after I broke. I was speaking of the period before I broke. After I broke with the Communist Party, as you know, it took me from April of 1938 to September 1939 to go to Mr. Adolph Berle, which is, I think, the answer to your question.

Senator WATKINS. Was one of the reasons why it takes a long time to make that break any fear of reprisal from the Communists because you are making the break?

Mr. CHAMBERS. No, I don't think fear of reprisal from the Communists enters in at all. An adjustment, very grave adjustment, was taking place.

Senator WATKINS. From your knowledge of the way the Communists work in this country, is there any great fear of physical reprisal upon the person of the former Communist, when he breaks away?

Mr. CHAMBERS. If the former Communist has broken from a Soviet apparatus, I think he is fully justified in fearing reprisals of the violent kind, depending of course on his function in that apparatus. But, in fact, for the ex-Communist to state his story openly, to tell his story openly, lessens the danger of reprisals.

One of the things that the party would like to prevent is the ex-Communist telling what he knows. Once he has told it, it scarcely becomes worth while to remove him.

Senator WATKINS. During your experience as a Communist, do you know of anyone who was the subject or object of reprisals, a physical reprisal by the party, who had broken from the party?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I had reason to suppose that Julian Steward Points did, a former member of the central committee.

Senator WATKINS. Do you have any evidence to support that?

Mr. CHAMBERS. No, I have no direct evidence.

Senator WATKINS. Did you ever hear it discussed in Communist circles?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I never heard it discussed in Communist circles. It took place not too long before my own break, I think. I have forgotten the break.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever have a conversation with General Krivitsky?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Yes, I have.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any evidence that he was done away with by the Soviet organization?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I have no direct evidence.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you think that is a possibility?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I believe that he was murdered.

Mr. MORRIS. When you had your talk with General Krivitsky, Mr. Chambers, did you discuss with him espionage apparatus in the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Probably, I don't remember in detail.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there anything about the conversation with General Krivitsky at that time that you can tell us for our record, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Well, in the first place, General Krivitsky and I had a number of conversations. You may have in mind the initial conversation which I described at some length before. In that conversation the thing that stands out in my mind is Krivitsky saying that in our time, informing is a duty. Krivitsky was, I believe, at that time or shortly thereafter cooperating with the British Government.

Mr. MORRIS. May I get back to this other point, Mr. Chambers, about the long delay.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, we have three people who have apparently clearly broken with the Communist Party but they are very, very much afraid of being put in the position where they have to be a witness. However, I would like to develop that for the record to show that in the first place it takes time for someone who is in the Communist Party to break away from the Communist Party, and then apparently there seems to be a long period where a person expresses an extremely great reluctance to give any testimony, and then the reluctance continues even after that. I think, Mr. Chairman, that having dealt with the witnesses from time to time, almost every witness who has been called here has been most reluctant to testify. I think that is a fact that should go into our record somewhere, that there is a strong reluctance to testify. One witness I remember, Mr. Kornfetter, stated that in his opinion it was a period of 4 to 5 years before he could ever bring himself around to the position where he would have given testimony before a Senate committee such as ours after he broke with the Communist Party. It is something along those lines, Mr. Chambers, that we would like to have possible further explanation.

Senator O'Conor. From your experience, would you be able to say that that is a correct statement of the situation?

Mr. Chambers. I think in general it is. You have to remember that a very strong human factor enters into these matters, I mean the fact of human relations. It is a personally destructive experience for the man who must testify, to testify against people with whom he has been close friends or has close associations. There are very few people who willingly do such a thing. As a rule, only some very powerful pressure, such as the pressure of history at various times, can bring them to do that. It seems to me that that is readily understandable. There are very few of us who would testify against any group of people with whom we have been closely associated, good people or bad people.

Mr. Morris. Could you develop that point at all for us, Miss Bentley?

Miss Bentley. I agree with Mr. Chambers that actually it is a bit difficult to say exactly when you did start the break. There were little things that first you rationalized, and it is a long process. In my case I think it was well over a year before I could bring myself to break and go to the FBI. It is not pleasant testifying. Every time you do it, you feel the same feeling all over again, whether these people are still Communists, and dangerous, that they were once friends of yours, and you worked with them, and you cannot get rid of that feeling. I think it is very understandable that the ex-Communist does not like to testify.

Senator Watkins. Is it because of a fear that they may have some personal vengeance brought upon them?

Miss Bentley. No; particularly when you work in Soviet intelligence. You have about reached the stage where you realize that for all you know you may be living on borrowed time. You accept that fact when you have done intelligence work and you don't worry about that. You know that there might be that chance, although probably what has become public, that is minimized. You know there is a chance of a great deal of mud being slung at you, but you accept that. That is a personal risk. But what you cannot accept is the fact of hurting someone else.

Senator WATKINS. In your own case you did not have any fear, then, of any reprisals being brought upon you by the Communists?

Miss BENTLEY. I did until these things became public; yes. You see, I worked under cover for the FBI for a period.

Mr. MORRIS. Miss Bentley, when you left the Communist organization and came over to our side of the fence, or left that particular world and came over to our world, did you have a feeling that you were deserting the winning side and coming over to the losing side?

Miss BENTLEY. Definitely.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you develop that for us, please?

Miss BENTLEY. Well, from what I had been able to see, the Communists were the strong ones. The forces of history seemed to be headed that direction. Whether I liked it or not, that seemed to be the kind of world that was coming into being, but I did not like that kind of a world. I decided that even though I was going to be on the losing side, I still was going to go back, and to the people that I thought were important. I might as well die fighting.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you have such an experience as that, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Yes; I had almost an identical experience. As you know, I have already said that I thought I was deserting the winning side for the losing side. As I look around me at this moment of history, I am not greatly heartened.

Mr. MORRIS. Was that based upon the fact, I will ask this to Miss Bentley, that some of the people you were dealing with were people who were high in power, and that they seemed to be going ahead and moving the Communist organization to even greater heights here in the United States.

Miss BENTLEY. Not completely. Yes; I did see the ease with which they could move in circles here, but it also tied in with the international picture. Those of us who worked for the Soviet underground had to keep track of international developments, and I could see that tying in very closely with a sweeping tide from abroad, and it began to look as though the first estimate the Communists had made about it being quite some time before communism could come in were entirely wrong, that it was coming in faster.

Mr. MORRIS. When you first broke with the Communist Party, you say for a while you worked with the FBI, Miss Bentley.

Miss BENTLEY. That is right; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. And then did you tell the story of your experience to the Federal grand jury?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes. That was a little better than 2 years after.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you ever have the attitude that you were disturbed that nothing was being done about the revelations that you had made?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes, I did. The jury seemed to drag on for about a year and nothing seemed to be happening.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chambers, did you attach any significance to the fact that Mr. Hiss, whom you knew and worked with for many years, and concerning whom you gave testimony early in 1949, that he continued to go up in Government, did you consider that as evidence of a condition in the United States Government at that time?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I can't answer that question in just those terms, for the reason that I didn't know how high Alger Hiss had gone in the Government at the time. But in general, as nothing was done about the information I had given Mr. Burley, I must say I developed very strong feelings about it.

Senator WATKINS. What were those feelings?

Mr. CHAMBERS. The feeling that there was no particular desire to rout out Communists, in fact, if anything, that there was a desire to act against those who might testify against Communists.

Senator WATKINS. Well, you did not think that Mr. Burley was guilty of that?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I understood that Mr. Burley was an anti-Communist and a very serious one. I have never had any reason to change my mind.

Senator SMITH. Did that feeling on your part continue, Mr. Chambers, as you just described in answer to Senator Watkins' question, that there appeared not to be a desire to route out the subversives in the Government?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Yes; it did.

Senator SMITH. Over an extended period of time?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. We have had considerable testimony before this committee, Mr. Chambers, that Frederick V. Field, who was the secretary of the American Council of the Institute of Pacific Relations from 1934 to 1940, and who remained active in the Institute of Pacific Relations and served on the board of trustees until 1947, we have had considerable testimony from people interested in the Institute of Pacific Relations that while Mr. Field may have been a Communist during that period of time, he comported himself in such a way as never to inject Communist Party activities into the work of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Based on your experience, do you think such a fact is possible, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I don't believe that it is possible.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you amplify on that?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Well, I would have to assume that one of the reasons Mr. Frederick Field was in the Institute of Pacific Relations was to use his position there for whatever purpose the party saw fit.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, if he were a full-fledged Communist, he would be there in order to do Communist work.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I would expect that, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Particularly if he devoted the major portion of his time to that project?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Especially in that case.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you comment on that, Miss Bentley?

Miss BENTLEY. I would say the same thing, that it would be quite impossible for somebody to be in that position and not be doing Communist Party work.

Senator SMITH. Would it be logical to assume that when the individual is not only giving a substantial portion of his time but also sizable financial support?

Miss BENTLEY. That is correct. If you are talking about Mr. Field, the added fact that he was a link between Earl Browder and the Communist Party cell of the far eastern field would certainly add to that conclusion. I happen to know that was correct.

Senator WATKINS. Is there not a period of time, however, before the conquered Communist really finds out the conspiracy? Couldn't there be a period when he did not know that the Communists had in mind the overthrow of this Government, for instance, by force and violence?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes; he could. It would depend entirely on whether he behaved rather actively as a Communist, if he was in, say, the semi-open party, that sort of thing. But in the case of Mr. Field, who was in pretty deep, I don't think you can draw that.

Senator WATKINS. Was he not a part of the open party?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes, and no. He had one foot underground and—he had one foot underground and one foot over the ground, so to speak. But he, I understand, had been a Communist for a good many years.

Senator WATKINS. As a matter of fact, he was even aiding the pickets, wasn't he, before the White House on one occasion?

Miss BENTLEY. He might have been, I don't know. But any one who was that close to Earl Browder, and had that assignment, certainly knew what was going on.

Senator WATKINS. You were not a member of the open party, were you?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes; I joined the open party originally.

Senator WATKINS. How long was it before you became a part of the underground?

Miss BENTLEY. Roughly about two and a half years.

Senator WATKINS. During that period before you became a part of the underground, did you know at that time of the objectives of the Communist Party?

Miss BENTLEY. I didn't. But the situation for me was entirely different. I was a member of a unit which is the lowest group of the party.

Senator WATKINS. A member of what?

Miss BENTLEY. A member of a unit which is the lowest group in the party?

Senator WATKINS. A lawless group?

Miss BENTLEY. No, the lowest group, the lowest in the party, mainly around Columbia University. In that case, there was no particular reason why I should have found out the inner secrets of the party. But a person who is around Communist Party headquarters associates with Earl Browder, and acts as his emissary, certainly he is in a position to find out the facts, and if he didn't then I would say that he is not quite bright.

Senator WATKINS. In other words, he wouldn't be very intelligent if he could not find out if he was a close associate of Earl Browder.

Miss BENTLEY. I would say so, definitely.

Senator WATKINS. I have happened to have known people in my own State, for instance, who thought they were Communists, and I doubt very much that they knew anything about the conspiracy that is being carried on by the Communists to bring about the overthrow of this Government.

Miss BENTLEY. I imagine today there are probably minor members of the Communist Party in the units who can still be fooled by the fact that they do not believe the Communist Party really believes in violence. They may rationalize and say, "Oh, yes; it would happen in Russia but it couldn't happen here." That could very well happen.

But they would have to be minor members of the party in groups which had no connection with the higher-ups in the party, very definitely.

Senator WATKINS. You do not consider Mr. Field a minor member of the party?

Miss BENTLEY. Definitely not.

Senator WATKINS. From his conduct, would you still believe that he is a Communist at the present time?

Miss BENTLEY. As far as I have been able to determine, it sounds to me as though he is.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Sourwine has a few questions that I think he probably wants to put to Mr. Chambers now inasmuch as Mr. Chambers is going to leave soon.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, there is one subject that I think we would like to have the opinion of all of these witnesses on, and more than their opinion we would like to have their statement of what they know as fact bearing on the situation. The situation I refer to is the position in which an undercover agent, an espionage agent, an underground agent, is and must remain with respect to any documentary evidence of his underground activity. I think I can phrase a question which I should like to have each one of the witnesses answer and then we can get a little more general on it.

Mr. Chambers, during the time that you were an underground agent, was there, to your knowledge, in existence documentary evidence of the fact that you were an underground agent?

Mr. CHAMBERS. No; I don't believe so.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, it was part of your job to see that there was no such evidence, was it not?

Mr. CHAMBERS. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Do you know enough of the procedures of the operation of the underground to be able to say whether there would be any likelihood of ever finding evidence of the underground activity of an underground agent while he or she continues to be such an agent?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I think as phrased the answer would have to be "Yes." But I believe that you mean whether there would be documentary evidence. I think it very improbable that there would be any documentary evidence.

Mr. SOURWINE. Will you expand on that a little bit, please?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I don't know that I can add any more to it, except to say that there are no formal articles of convention. So far as I know, no one signs any recruitment blanks. All underground agents of the kind we are talking about would automatically deny that they were underground agents or even members of the Communist Party. That is a part of the operation in any such operation, regardless of whether it is for the Communist Party, or specifically for the Soviet Government or Albanian Government or the Norwegian Government. It is part of the organizational pattern of intelligence work.

Mr. SOURWINE. Miss Bentley, while you were such an underground agent, was there in existence documentary evidence of the fact that you were such an agent?

Miss BENTLEY. No, except possibly in Moscow.

Mr. SOURWINE. Did you feel that it was your business to make sure that there was no such documentary evidence?

Miss BENTLEY. Definitely. I took every possible precaution.

Miss SOURWINE. Can you expand at all on the subject of whether there would be any likelihood of being able to get documentary evidence of the fact that an active underground agent is in fact such an agent?

Miss BENTLEY. You mean documentary evidence in the form of written evidence? I doubt it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Philbrick, while you were operating as an underground agent was there in existence, so far as you know, documentary evidence of that fact?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I don't believe there was any at all, sir. Of course, I operated in a dual capacity, underground agent for the Bureau, FBI, and supposedly for the Communist Party, too. So far as the Communist Party was concerned, in 1947, when I was ordered by the party to go into the real underground section of the party, I was also at the same time ordered to destroy any and all documentary evidence. I was ordered, for example, to destroy a party card if I held one and never to carry one again.

Senator SMITH. Was there any documentary evidence besides that that you were specifically ordered to destroy?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I forget what I had. There was some material around the house which the party knew I had, and they said get rid of it. Well, there were many factors that entered into it, too. One was, for example, that I was working for Communist Party headquarters in district 1, in Boston, doing some work for them, and I was still to continue to do some work for them. In order not to have any documentary evidence that Philbrick was a party member, I was given a party name, the name of Arthur Trowbridge, and if I ever had to send anything in the form of a document to the headquarters, it would go under the name of Arthur Trowbridge so there would be no evidence of Philbrick being identified with the party. I, along with the other members of that group were told, for example, never to go near the State headquarters of the party from that time on, and never to telephone the State headquarters even from the pay stations. There was a tremendous amount of this type of instruction, and all of it was specifically given to guarantee there would be absolutely no evidence that any counter-espionage agent could find.

Mr. SOURWINE. Was the same true with regard to your connection with the FBI? Was equal care taken to avoid the existence of any evidence that you were in fact working for the Bureau?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I would say so; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a question to Admiral Hillenkoetter.

Sir, from what you can speak of your knowledge of underground activities, what can you tell us of the likelihood that an active undercover agent could be proven to be such by documentary evidence?

Mr. HILLENKOETTER. Well, the only way you could ever prove he was an agent by documentary evidence is that he would be very stupid. He would certainly not be worthwhile having if he had any documentary evidence. The first thing would be to do away with all of the documentary evidence.

Mr. SOURWINE. I don't want to ask you to disclose any confidential information with regard to the activities of any Government agency, but I think perhaps you can tell the committee without any such disclosure, generally speaking, whether the CIA does or does not take care to avoid the very existence of documentary evidence with regard to underground agents and their identities.

Mr. HILLENKOETTER. I can't answer for that now, I am no longer there. But they certainly did when I was there.

Mr. SOURWINE. There was no documentation?

Mr. HILLENKOETTER. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, it is common practice in connection with all underground organizations to seek to avoid documentation, is it not?

Mr. HILLENKOETTER. It very definitely is.

Mr. SOURWINE. Names are used, psuedonyms are used, they are changed with some frequency. Sometimes procedures become quite devious, solely for the purpose of avoiding any documentation of the existence or the identity of agents, is that right?

Mr. HILLENKOETTER. That is correct, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, that is the point I wanted to inquire about particularly.

Senator O'CONOR (presiding). Any further questions?

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to ask Mr. Chambers a question of the existence of the documents that were used in the case of the trial of Mr. Hiss. Was that an extraordinary development, that such documents and therefore something that could be used as evidence at the trial were in existence at that time.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I don't understand the question.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it an extraordinary event, was it out of the ordinary course of things that you should have had those documents and that therefore those documents could have been evidence of a trial, in this case in the trial of Mr. Hiss?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Under proper organizational circumstances the documents would have been destroyed.

Mr. MORRIS. Would have been destroyed?

Mr. CHAMBERS. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. So in the ordinary course of things, the prosecution cannot look for the existence of such evidence in order to prove the relationship of someone's being a Communist agent?

Mr. CHAMBERS. The prosecution should always try to look for such evidence, I think, but it is very unlikely that they will find it.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, your having those so-called pumpkin papers was an extraordinary development.

Mr. CHAMBERS. Certainly, it was part of a special history.

Mr. MORRIS. When you left the Communist organization, did you take any documents with you, Miss Bentley?

Miss BENTLEY. No, like Mr. Chambers, I didn't.

Mr. NORRIS. Were there any documents in existence that you know of that could have been used to establish the fact that you were a Communist while you were a Communist?

Miss BENTLEY. Not that I know of. In the normal course of events, everything that I took in was automatically handed over to the Soviet superior within a matter of 24 to 48 hours. Nothing was left behind.

Mr. MORRIS. Some of the members of your espionage gave you reports that you turned over to Soviet officials, is that right?

Miss BENTLEY. That is correct; yes.

Mr. MORRIS. How many copies of those reports would be made?

Miss BENTLEY. You mean when I retyped some of them?

Mr. MORRIS. Well, without going into any names, if you have a man who is high in government, let us say, who gave you a report on certain information that the Communist organization wanted, what would you do with that report?

Miss BENTLEY. Well, that depended entirely—most of the documents went right straight through to the Russians.

Mr. MORRIS. When you say most of the documents, what form did they take?

Miss BENTLEY. I mean documents, I mean microfilms. I mean anything that was a carbon copy of the documents or the original documents.

Mr. MORRIS. Did you yourself make copies to keep on file?

Miss BENTLEY. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Was there a regulation covering that particular point?

Miss BENTLEY. Very definitely. I was supposed to have no material left around whatsoever. It was supposed to go right straight through.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, when you turned a copy of something over to the Soviet authorities, there was no other trace of that letter or document or paper or whatever it was in your organization?

Miss BENTLEY. That is correct. And they were so very fussy about this whole matter that when they sent me a typewritten sheet of instructions I had to read it and burn it in front of the person who gave it to me, because they didn't want me found with that in my handbag in case I got careless.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, can you think of any other such precautions taken by the organization that you worked for to destroy any evidence or any vestige of whatever evidence there was that could possibly be used by the opposition?

Miss BENTLEY. Well, with all the precautions we took—but it is all the sort of thing that any intelligent outfit, if it is any good, does engage in.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Philbrick, while you were in the Communist organization for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on what level were you able to observe the scope of Communist activities?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I don't quite understand the question, Mr. Morris.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, you operated in Boston, did you not, Mr. Philbrick?

Mr. PHILBRICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it possible for you to know all the Communists who operated in Boston?

Mr. PHILBRICK. Oh, no.

Mr. MORRIS. What was the scope of your being in a position to know who Communists were in your particular area?

Mr. PHILBRICK. Well, it varied from time to time, and the policy of the party was with me the same as with others who were recruited and brought into the party, so that we were started out on a low level. And I guess Miss Bentley has already mentioned that comrades in some of these initial cells would have very little information concerning the real picture of the Communist Party. That is very deliberately kept away from them. Only by slow degrees is the new comrade introduced to any real secrets of the Communist Party, and then it is done very cautiously. The Communist Party instructors and leaders make very sure or try to make very sure that the new comrade is completely dependable; that is, that he has absorbed everything up to a certain level—before he is advanced to the next level.

That means that over the period of years the picture changes, you see, and at various stages you are able to get glimpses of some section of the Communist Party organization.

But all of the time, the party tries to narrow the scope of your information to prevent any party members, any Communist Party members, since they don't trust each other, from knowing too much about the Communist Party as a whole.

Mr. MORRIS. And by the same token, of course, there were no documents around listing all the members of the Communist Party in Boston available to you?

Mr. PHILBRICK. So far as the rank and file Communist Party members, that is, open Communist Party members, were concerned, there would be card files and lists of names, lists of party names, usually at party headquarters, or sometimes at a secret headquarters of the Communist Party. Any names of any real importance, however, of Communist Party members connected with espionage or sabotage—those names would never appear at Communist Party headquarters.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Admiral Hillenkoetter, could you add anything to the point that was just developed by Mr. Philbrick in connection with your central intelligence experience?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. I think the effort would be to compartmentalize people as much as possible and to have them deal with as few as possible.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I ask a question along that line?

Admiral, during the time that you were head of the CIA, would you have been able personally to identify all of your agents?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. With regard to an agent whom you did know, and did know to be an agent, would you have been able to prove that he was an agent, other than by your own testimony?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. By no means; no, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. In normal course, would you say it was possible for a CIA agent to take instructions over a period of months from a superior who was actually his superior and yet be unable to show or to testify that he ever saw any evidence that the man was, in fact, an employee and his superior?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. It would be very easy; yes, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. As a matter of fact, that would be the natural course, wouldn't it?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. The normal thing to do; yes, indeed.

Mr. SOURWINE. These people are introduced one to another, and they accept the authority or take the instructions or perform the duties on the basis of the oral introductions; do they not?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. That is right; yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. They don't show credentials?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. No, sir.

Mr. SOURWINE. Or wear stripes on their sleeves or badges pinned to their vests?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. No.

Senator O'CONOR. Mr. Philbrick, you mentioned a minute ago that in Boston, while there may have been some records in respect to the open members, there was no documentation with respect to those engaged in espionage and sabotage. Might I ask whether those individuals who were so engaged, or were to engage if possible in sabotage and espionage, were known to the general membership of the party?

Mr. PHILBRICK. No; these members, who were mostly the professional group members, were not known to the general membership as Communist Party members.

In 1947, I myself was ordered to disassociate myself from the rank-and-file membership of the party.

Senator O'CONOR. For what purpose?

Mr. PHILBRICK. For the purpose of joining the Prof. 4 cell. And I was never to attend a cell meeting again of any of my former comrades, and I was not to associate in any way with them.

I remember that on the day that I got the instructions, it so happened that I had a cell meeting scheduled for that very evening, and in fact I was supposed to conduct the educational discussion in the cell meeting that evening.

So I told my friend, explained to him, that I should attend this final meeting, because it was too late to get a substitute to take over that night.

I remember I said, "Well, I will tell them tonight that I am dropping out." And my instructions were to not do anything like that at all, not to say anything to them but just to drop out.

That meant that so far as my former comrades were concerned, they had no idea as to what happened to Comrade Philbrick. He, for some reason which they were not at liberty to know, was simply not there any more.

And, of course, one thing a comrade learns very soon is not to ask questions. It is none of their business to know. Perhaps he has been found out to be a traitor or something. At any rate, it is just understood that he wasn't there, and that is all there was to it.

That meant that so far as the rank-and-file members, they had no idea as to the actual identity of the top-ranking members of the party.

Senator O'CONOR. So we are to understand that where there were extra precautions taken, the identity of the ones in that special group were not even known or to be known to those who even professed membership and were loyal members of the party?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is correct.

Mr. SOURWINE. May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

Senator O'CONOR. Yes, Mr. Sourwine.

Mr. SOURWINE. Admiral Hillenkoetter, if you were the head of an intelligence organization, and you walked into the office of one of your principal assistants and found him in close conversation with a man whom you had never seen before, discussing a subject which was highly restricted, what assumptions would you feel at liberty to make about that stranger?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. That he was working for us.

Mr. SOURWINE. Is that what you would immediately conclude?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. Certainly.

Mr. SOURWINE. Would any other possibility occur to you?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. You could not get any other possibility.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to develop from the witnesses here today the probative value of a communication between a senior in an organization directed to a junior, whether the organization would be the Communist organization or an organization operated by the United States Government.

We have had testimony that General Berzin, for instance, communicated to one of his assistants in Soviet military intelligence, the assistant being himself a person with the rank of a general. He passed on to him evidence about the identity of several people who were, according to General Berzin, members of their organization.

I wonder if I could ask you, Mr. Chambers: What probative value can we give to such a communication as that?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I would say, if General Berzin said so, it was true.

Mr. MORRIS. You mean if General Berzin told an assistant of his who himself was a general, you think we can attach great probative value to such a statement, if the statement was true, of course?

Mr. CHAMBERS. If I had been the assistant and General Berzin had made the statement to me, I would assume on the face of it that it was true.

Mr. MORRIS. In fact, isn't that very statement on the part of a superior general to a lower general, the real essence of the agency that we are trying to establish?

Mr. CHAMBERS. You mean that method of communication?

Mr. MORRIS. Communication. Namely, if General Berzin considers somebody to be his agent, isn't that almost the essence of the agency that we are talking about?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I am not quite sure I follow that.

Senator O'CONOR. Will you, Mr. Morris, rephrase the question?

Mr. MORRIS. The relationship that an individual bears to the Soviet organization is a state of mind that that person has toward the organization as exemplified by the superior in the organization, in this case, General Berzin. And if the individual is loyal to, in this case, General Berzin, and if General Berzin considers him loyal, isn't that really the essence of the relationship that exists between the individual and the Soviet organization?

Mr. CHAMBERS. If I follow, all Communists are under party discipline, and that discipline has been accepted by the individual party member at the time he joined the Communist Party, and has been intensified and has become more experienced and more conscious as his experience has deepened. Insofar as that is true, I think your statement is probably true.

There is also the question of decentralization, or, to put it another way, the personal relationship, rather than organizational relationship, the system in the apparatuses. That is, the chain of command comes from one individual to a lower individual to a still lower individual, until you get to the end of the chain.

Is that along the lines of what you are asking?

Senator O'CONOR. Will you just suspend for one second? I want to ask Miss Bentley if in that same situation, or out of her experience, there is anything that she could add.

Miss BENTLEY. Yes, I would say that was correct in the Soviet espionage, as I saw it. In other words, there were no credentials. There was nothing that you could actually put your hands on to prove it. But if a superior officer considered his inferior to be a member of the apparatus, and under discipline, and that person accepted the orders and carried them out, then very definitely that would be true.

Also, if, for example, Mr. A. has Mr. B. working under him, and Mr. B. should be shifted to another superior, it is done entirely on a personal basis, which is that either Mr. A. would introduce Mr. B. to the new contact or else would make arrangements whereby he would meet his new contact at a prearranged place.

Mr. MORRIS. Isn't it true that the only process by which anybody could arrive at the relationships vis-à-vis those three people would be admission on the part of the person who was supposed to be an agent, or testimony on the part of some of the others as to what they told him?

Miss BENTLEY. That is correct, testimony either by the agent himself or testimony by the superior officer.

Mr. MORRIS. And who was your superior in the Soviet organization, Miss Bentley?

Miss BENTLEY. I had several of them.

Mr. MORRIS. Who was your immediate superior?

Miss BENTLEY. My immediate superior, the last one I had, was Anatol Gromov, who was first secretary of the Soviet Embassy at that point.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, if Anatol Gromov told you in the course of your official duties in a serious way about a subject that was important to the Communist organization, that a particular agent was a Communist agent, what probative value would you give to that statement?

Miss BENTLEY. I would accept his statement completely.

Mr. MORRIS. In fact, that would be the highest proof you could possibly arrive at that such a person was a Communist agent; isn't that so?

Miss BENTLEY. For example, with the previous man, whom I knew as "Jack," who was my superior before Mr. Gromov, the question of who Mr. Hiss was came up. And I had spoken to Jack about Mr. Hiss, "Who was he?" and Jack came back and said, "That is all right. He is one of ours. Forget about it." I accepted that statement completely. That meant exactly what it said.

Mr. MORRIS. And in your own mind you know as a matter of fact that Hiss was a Communist agent?

Miss BENTLEY. Definitely. And I had been told by my superior office, "He is one of ours—lay off" or words to that effect, and I accepted that.

Mr. MORRIS. And at the same time you were not called to testify at the Hiss trial, were you?

Miss BENTLEY. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Why were you not called to testify at the Hiss trial?

Miss BENTLEY. I haven't the least idea.

Mr. MORRIS. Was it because the testimony at that time would have been technically considered hearsay evidence?

Miss BENTLEY. I am not a lawyer, Mr. Morris, but that might have been what you call second-hand or hearsay evidence. I don't know.

Senator O'CONOR. Miss Bentley, had you communicated to the FBI and other officers of this Government that information?

Miss BENTLEY. Yes; I had already told that to the FBI. I presume it was, as Mr. Morris says, hearsay evidence.

Mr. SOURWINE. I simply would like to ask this question. Mr. Chambers, in your opinion, which would be the most convincing statement with respect to the espionage activities of "X": "X's" statement that he was a Soviet agent, or the statement of the local head of the Soviet organization that "X" was one of his agents?

Mr. CHAMBERS. If those statements were made while both were Communists? It that your question?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERS. The statement of the superior would have greater probative force.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, suppose that you have the testimony of one, "B," known to have been a direct subordinate of the Communist chief, that his chief told him "X" was a Communist. Would that, in your mind, weight more than "X's" statement that he was in fact a Communist?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I am afraid I will have to ask you to say that again. I am a little slow.

Mr. SOURWINE. I don't know what your answer is going to be. I am not driving to a preconceived conclusion here.

Assuming that you have "X" and "X" says he is a Communist; assume also that "B" whom you know to be a principal subordinate of the head of the Communist Party, says that the head of the Communist Party told him "X" was a Communist: Which is the most convincing statement, "X's" own statement, or the statement made by the head of the party to his subordinate, "B"?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Well, I should say that I would be inclined to believe both of them if they both said so.

Mr. SOURWINE. Suppose they were in conflict on that point?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I think I would have to give greater credence to the superior, the ranking superior in the case.

Mr. SOURWINE. Now, Miss Bentley, I would like to ask you the same question.

Miss BENTLEY. Could you repeat it again?

Mr. SOURWINE. Yes.

Assume we have, on the one hand, the testimony of a man, "X," that he is a Communist.

We have, on the other hand, the testimony of one, "B," who is a principal subordinate of the chief Communist, who says that his superior told him that "X" was a Communist.

Which is the more convincing testimony, if you would weigh them in your mind?

Miss BENTLEY. Well, in general, I agree with Mr. Chambers that the testimony of the superior would be the more believable, probably.

Mr. SOURWINE. If there was a conflict, you would believe what the chief said, even as against the man himself?

Miss BENTLEY. I would tend to, but I think you would have to go into the situation a great deal deeper than that.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Philbrick, what would you say on that?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I would say in that instance the hearsay evidence would, in my mind, be stronger or nearer the fact than the direct statement.

Mr. SOURWINE. Admiral Hillenkoetter, would you express an opinion on that, sir?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. I think the same thing. You would believe the superior, I think.

Mr. SOURWINE. In other words, what you people are all saying is this, is it not: That a man himself might for any number of reasons lie about whether he was or was not a Communist, but the head of an espionage agency would not lie about such a matter to one of his principal subordinates? Is that what you have in mind? Is that the basis of your reasoning?

Mr. CHAMBERS. That is it.

Mr. SOURWINE. Miss Bentley?

Miss BENTLEY. That is right.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Philbrick?

Mr. PHILBRICK. Yes.

Mr. SOURWINE. Admiral?

Admiral HILLENKOETER. Yes.

Mr. MORRIS. In connection with the maintenance and the formation of an espionage organization, is the question of making a contact or making an introduction an important thing? Could you answer that question, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Yes. Inevitably.

Mr. MORRIS. The mere contact, the mere introduction, of somebody to somebody else under the proper auspices: That is an important function?

Mr. CHAMBERS. It is bound to be.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you develop that for us, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. Well, clearly, when you have an underground organization, that is to say, a secret organization, any new person put in touch with that apparatus raises a new problem. And they always constitute a danger. There is no reason to believe in most cases presumably that there is any danger. The fact that the introduction is being made implies that very careful consideration has been given to it in advance. In the nature of underground work, a good deal of secrecy usually surrounds such an introduction, for security reasons.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Mrs. Hede Massing, who is one of our witnesses, has just arrived, and I would like, because of the testimony she has previously given this committee—she has been sworn—to ask the same question of her.

Based on your experience, that is. What was your experience in the Communist organization, Mrs. Massing?

FURTHER TESTIMONY OF MRS. HEDE MASSING

Mrs. MASSING. Well, I was an agent. I was an Apparatschik. I belonged to a Russian Apparatus. I was originally a German party member. In fact, I have spent most of my life, until 1937, in the Communist movement.

Mr. MORRIS. About how long was that? Fifteen or twenty years?

Mrs. MASSING. Oh, more than that. I joined it when I was 17, and I actually did not join by taking out party membership, but as you probably know I worked under Gerhart Eisler, and then belonged to the movement by being his wife.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, during this period of time, what period of time was spent actually in the open Communist Party?

Mrs. MASSING. You see, I spent my life in the Communist Party without ever having been a party member. By mere coincidence, I took out party membership when I came back the first time from Russia, where I had lived for 2 years, not knowing that I was not to do that, not having been sort of briefed in time not to take out party membership.

Mr. MORRIS. So your party membership actually was a mistake.

Mrs. MASSING. Oh, completely. And I had to drop it right away, and it was very complicated.

Mr. MORRIS. So if anyone such as the Internal Security Subcommittee of the United States Senate had asked you if for any particular time except for the 2 weeks you were a member of the Communist Party, "Were you are have you ever been a Communist Party member," could you have given the answer that you were not?

Mrs. MASSING. Yes; I could. Of course I could.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, the point that we are developing at this particular juncture, Mrs. Massing, is the importance of a contact within the Communist Party organization. We have had extensive testimony about the nature of agency, a Communist agency or an agency for the United States Government.

We would like to know within the general framework of an agency the importance of a mere contact.

As I understood your testimony previously, you were essentially someone who made contacts for the Communist Party, were you not?

Mrs. MASSING. Exactly. Well, of course, there are various kinds of contacts one makes, and various intensities at which one works on such a contact. I do not quite know which one you want to elaborate.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, what did you do, for instance? What was your assignment?

Mrs. MASSING. Well, first of all I would come here and report on possible prospects to my Russian superior. I then would be ordered, advised, to work on such prospects. And then I would, after intensive working on such prospects, hand them over to a Russian, that I generally didn't know.

Senator O'CONOR. Mrs. Massing, may I ask you at that point: Were you under instruction to obtain any given number, or as many as possible, of prospects?

Mrs. MASSING. Of course, everything I did was under instruction. And I had no decision on the number. I would give a report, and I would be told, "There is the man to focus or concentrate on." It wasn't a question of getting a number. It was a question of getting important and useful people, even if they would not be of immediate use, if they would be of future use.

Senator O'CONOR. That is the very point I was coming to, whether or not you were given any specific instructions as to the kind of individuals or as to the position or their influential posts or anything of that nature.

Mrs. MASSING. Well, sir, you see, they had so many levels. Of course, first you go and sort of look it all over, and once when I explained to my superior that I could not possibly meet a stenographer in his office, I said, "Of course, that is not important," and he said: "Don't say that. It might be very important at a difficult time to have a stenographer at the right place." But, of course, my occupation was to concentrate on State Department officials, and in fact I concentrated on two State Department officials mostly.

Mr. MORRIS. How much time did you spend on those two people?

Mrs. MASSING. Many months.

Mr. MORRIS. On each one, or on both, combined?

Mrs. MASSING. Many months on Noel Field and a few months on Lawrence Duggan, who had been obviously previously very well prepared, not for working with me but in the Communist doctrine.

Senator O'CONOR. Mrs. Massing, so that we can keep clear the references, will you state who the two were on whom you were to concentrate?

Mrs. MASSING. Noel Field, who then was in the western section of the State Department, and who is now kidnaped with his whole family behind the iron curtain, and Lawrence Duggan.

Senator O'CONOR. Yes. And was there anyone else? That is what I wanted to get at.

Mrs. MASSING. Yes; there were others I tried to get, but they were not liked by the Russians, or it didn't work out, and so forth.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Massing was not here, Mr. Chairman, when you asked the question about the significance of meeting with a Soviet official, particularly a Soviet official attached to a foreign office.

Would you attribute any significance to an American meeting with such an official, particularly if the Russian came to the individual's home, in connection with security scrutinies?

Mrs. MASSING. Well, in my personal experience, no Russian official would have ever gone to any American official's home. That would have been completely taboo. Such meetings were done in great secrecy and with great preparation.

As Whittaker Chambers has beautifully described, we all had misgivings, for example, to represent our Russians, all of whom we didn't like, to our American sources; and we all found, and I think Betty Bentley found the same thing, that we did not need to worry. The Americans had already been prepared. And they were very pleased to be faced with a representative of this great country, Russia, the Soviet Union.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Philbrick, did you have any comment to make?

Senator O'CONOR. You indicated there was something.

Mr. PHILBRICK. Yes, on this very peculiar business of being in the Communist Party for many years and not being a party member, that is quite a gimmick.

And as Mrs. Massing told about it, I recall that when I was shifted from the subrosa section, semiunderground section, of the party, into the underground, the very words that were used were, "You are to drop out of the party."

And yet I was becoming more of a party member than I had ever been before.

But what it means is that the Russian bosses and the Communist Party realize that they have not only an underground organization but an illegal operation, and therefore they use this, it seems to me, to make it impossible or try to make it impossible to legally prove that any of these people are party members. They all carry no cards and they operate as though they are not legally party members, when actually of course, they are.

Senator O'CONOR. Miss Bentley, might I just, in order that we can understand the method of operation, ask this: Recalling as I do the testimony you gave us when you first came before the Senate committee in respect to William Remington, which I think was in 1947, you described the method of operation and the steps you took to obtain from Remington certain information and Government records.

Do you recall?

Miss BENTLEY. Not offhand, no.

Senator O'CONOR. You do recall some of the contacts you had with Remington?

Miss BENTLEY. Oh, yes.

Senator O'CONOR. And it was that information that you gave us then. My point was whether or not, at the time you were having the contacts with Remington, you were then a member of the underground, or whether you were in the open party.

Miss BENTLEY. No; I was definitely a member of the underground and had been since 1938. That was 4 years before that.

Mr. MORRIS. Admiral Hillenkoetter, I would like to ask you the question, If you continued now to be the head of the Central Intelligence Agency, and you had agents within the Communist Party, would you be allowed to make them available to a Senate committee for testifying about the organization that they had infiltrated on your behalf?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. Normally, no. We wouldn't make them available, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. You see, Mr. Chairman, the point here is that if a Senate committee addresses itself to this problem, there are really only two sources of evidence, if we have established the fact that there are no documents available.

Then we have to get the testimony of someone who was there in the conspiracy, namely, somebody who had been a participant in the conspiracy, either genuinely or acting, say, on behalf of the United States Government.

Now, I would like to ask a few questions of Admiral Hillenkoetter about the availability of such an agent.

The CIA, if it had a man well placed in the Communist organization—purely supposition—would not readily have that agent available for testimony before the committee?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. If they had such an agent, and he testified before the committee, he would be no good. He is gone then.

So certainly if he were doing good work and if there were an infiltration like that, you wouldn't want him to testify.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Mr. Philbrick, can you give any testimony on that point? You did ultimately testify, did you not?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. Will you tell us the circumstances surrounding your testimony?

Mr. PHILBRICK. Well, in 1949 the Justice Department or somebody—I don't know who—decided that I should be pulled out of my work for the Government inside the Communist Party to testify in the trial of the 11 comrades in 1949. And that, of course, meant that so far as the FBI was concerned my value was destroyed. I was no longer of any use to them. I could no longer get hold of any of the evidence that was available to me before.

Mr. MORRIS. So the fact of your exposure was something to offset the value of your testimony at the trial?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. And as far as you know, some superior of yours made the decision, and you did not participate in it in any way?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to take a little testimony on the possibility of a Communist being an objective scholar.

I wonder if you could give us any testimony along those lines, Miss Bentley; the possibility of someone who is a Communist being an objective scholar within an organization such as the Institute of Pacific Relations.

Miss BENTLEY. I don't see how it is possible for a Communist to be objective anyway, whether he is a scholar or anything else.

Mr. MORRIS. What do you mean by that?

Miss BENTLEY. I mean that a Communist or someone who is under Communist discipline does not do his own thinking. He must accept the party line. He does not make up his own mind. And therefore I fail to see how he could be objective even if he had the kind of mind which otherwise could do objective thinking.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you think a Communist could be an objective scholar, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. No.

Mr. MORRIS. Do you have any reason for that?

Mr. CHAMBERS. It is scarcely possible to accept a doctrine such as the Marxist theory and apply it and be objective in the ordinary acceptance of the word.

Mr. MORRIS. Admiral Hillenkoetter, can you give us any opinion on that score?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. Mine would be mostly hearsay, but if you are under strict discipline of a certain line of thinking, you can't be objective and follow that line of thinking.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Philbrick, could you answer that question?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I would say it would be impossible for a Communist Party member to be objective. I saw so many examples of it, such as—oh, I think it was in 1948, when in the party we were studying material concerning Tito. And we were studying booklets and pamphlets published by the Communist Party which built Tito up to a great hero. And then overnight, suddenly, Tito was a bum. Things had changed, according to Joe Stalin. And overnight here, in our own party cells, the peculiar minds of the comrades shifted immediately, and they all decided unanimously that Tito was no good any more.

There were many such instances which were amazing to watch, and it convinced me it was simply impossible for these people to be objective about almost anything.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Massing, can you contribute anything to that particular point?

Mrs. MASSING. Of course he cannot be objective if he is a party member. If he is a good actor, and these are his orders, he will certainly make every effort to appear objective and make the point of being objective, but he will not be.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, if you think it is advisable, I would like to put the following possibility to the witnesses here today and ask them to comment on the probative value of a situation such as the following:

If we have a man concerning whom several witnesses have given testimony that that particular person has been within the scope of their direct knowledge a member of the Communist Party, and we call such a person in, a man who was stated to have been a member of the Communist Party, and we ask him if he is or has been in the past a member of the Communist Party or at least ask him if he hasn't been in the past a member of the Communist Party, and then he refuses to answer, and then he indicates that he is going to refuse to answer any question concerning his membership in the Communist Party on the grounds that any answer he would give would tend to incriminate him. At the same time there is considerable evidence that the general tenor of his writing remains the same. His general list of associations remains the same. That is, from the time that he was identified to have been active in the Communist Party, right down to date.

What probative value do you think we can give to that testimony concerning his present membership in the Communist Party, Mr. Chambers?

Mr. CHAMBERS. I should find it very difficult to suppose that he was not still in the party.

Mr. MORRIS. Miss Bentley?

Miss BENTLEY. I would think so, too.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Philbrick?

Mr. PHILBRICK. What was the question again, please?

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Philbrick, the question is that we have a situation where a man has been identified by several witnesses to have been in the past sometime within the scope of their knowledge a member of the Communist Party. After that, we call the man in and ask him if he, in fact, had been, according to the testimony of the three people, a member of the Communist Party. And he refuses to answer whether or not he had been, on the grounds that his answer might incriminate him. By his subsequent course of deportment in response to questions, he refuses to answer any question that borders on his own association with the Communist Party.

At the same time there is considerable evidence that such a person keeps the same associations, the general tenor of his writing remains the same, and there is no interruption of his general line of thought.

To what extent do you think we can conclude that such a man is still a member of the Communist Party?

Mr. PHILBRICK. I think you could definitely conclude that he is still a member of the Communist Party. He might even go so far as to answer one question, and that would be to say that he is not now a member of the Communist Party.

And I base that statement upon instructions which we were given in 1948 in our cell by a courier by the name of "Pete," who was a security man inside of the party.

Mr. MORRIS. That is all you know about him, that he is "Pete"?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is all. And Pete instructed us at that time—now, the situation may have changed since—that we were to say, we were permitted to say and some party members were instructed to say, that we were not now members of the Communist Party.

Mr. MORRIS. In other words, he could have resigned the day before he came down to testify, could he not?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is right.

Well, he wouldn't have to resign; no. But he was to testify to that effect.

Mr. MORRIS. Well, do you think that course of conduct would be prompted by the fact that perhaps the inquiring agency had evidence of past membership but they had no evidence of present membership?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is right.

Mr. MORRIS. And therefore advice of that nature would be considered to be good advice under the circumstances?

Mr. PHILBRICK. That is true, yes.

Mr. MORRIS. Admiral Hillenkoetter?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. I think you must believe the man is still a member.

Mr. MORRIS. Could you give a reason for that other than the reasons that have been given, Admiral Hillenkoetter?

Admiral HILLENKOETTER. No; I think the reasons that have been given have been very adequate.

Mr. MORRIS. Mrs. Massing?

Mrs. MASSING. I agree with everything that has been said so far. You are instructed by a Communist Party member that if it is advisable to say that you are not now a member of the party you will say so, and if it is assumed that you don't know enough about the man you deny it completely.

You could never prove, for example, that I was a party member. And I was a party member. And if I had been asked when I was a Communist if I was a party member, I would have said "No; I wasn't."

Mr. MORRIS. You see, at that point, Mr. Chairman, we point out that there is no further source of evidence for all practical purposes about this man's present membership. It takes some period of time before an ex-Communist becomes an ex-Communist. He doesn't become one in a single day and then give testimony the same day about the agency of this particular person.

The only other possible source would be to have somebody in the intelligence agency acting on behalf of somebody in the Government who knows about his identity in the Communist organization.

So if those two things are unavailable, as I think the discussion showed today, we have to draw some kind of inferences as reasonable men about the continuation of a status once established, and we have to assume that such an agency is presumed to continue.

I have no more questions of these particular witnesses, Mr. Chairman.

Senator O'CONOR. Any further questions, Mr. Sourwine?

Mr. SOURWINE. No, sir.

Mr. MORRIS. I wanted to put some exhibits into the record and wanted to make some comment about the difficulty of serving certain people in connection with our hearing. I dont' think the whole thing will take more than 10 minutes.

Senator O'CONOR. There was a matter that I had to communicate with the floor on, so I thought we would be in recess for about 10 minutes, and then we will resume with what we have, if that is agreeable to you.

The committee will now be in recess until a quarter of 12.

(Short recess.)

Senator O'CONOR. The hearing will please be in order.

Mr. Morris, you indicated a desire to offer for the record certain documents or other data, and also to make some explanatory statement.

Will you proceed?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, Mr. Chairman. There were quite a few witnesses that we have made an effort to have testify before this committtee, and I think, if it is your wish, that the effort made by the staff to bring these witnesses here should properly be made part of the record; the difficulties that we encountered, the inaccessibility of these witnesses, are factors that should be taken into consideration if this committee is going to make a report on the series of hearings.

Now, we tried several times to reach Solomon Adler.

We consulted Mr. William Holland in the Institute of Pacific Relations. We checked with the Department of Justice. And we in addition having tried to subpena him. The best information apparently is that Mr. Solomon Adler is in England; he is at Cambridge University, and that seems to be the best evidence I can produce at this time as to his availability.

Senator O'CONOR. Now, Mr. Morris, it occurs to me that we might be able to follow better, and the record might be a little more intelligible, if you were to announce the name of the individual about whom the explanatory statement will be made and then proceed to give any detailed information.

Mr. MORRIS. The next name is Ellen Atkinson. Now, Ellen Atkinson we had an address for in Arlington, Va., and we made an effort to reach her, and we discovered that she was working in the United Nations in Rome. That is the extent of the effort we have made to reach Ellen Atkinson.

Senator O'CONOR. The next individual?

Mr. MORRIS. Charles Bidien. He was a writer for the institute. We endeavored to subpena him, and we discovered that he had been deported by the United States authorities out of the country, and he is now somewhere outside the continental limits of the United States, and we have a letter which has been introduced into the record giving his immigration status, namely, one of somebody who has been barred from the country.

In connection with Abraham Chapman, who has been a writer for the Institute of Pacific Relations, we have made extensive efforts to reach him. We have asked the Justice Department to assist us in finding him. We have had four different addresses. We have had several subpenas out, and all of them have been unavailing, and nobody apparently knows where Abraham Chapman is now. It may be that a public announcement would turn him up, but the Department of Justice—and I presume they got in touch with the FBI—were not able to find where Chapman is at the present time.

Senator WATKINS. I understand the committee still wants him here to testify.

Mr. MORRIS. I don't think so, Senator.

Senator WATKINS. What good is it if it becomes public and we find out where he is now, then, if you do not want him to testify?

Mr. MORRIS. I am just saying that the best efforts on the part of all the staff to find Mr. Chapman have been unavailing, and I want to say that we have tried to reach him through the Department of Justice and several times through the United States marshal's office.

Senator WATKINS. Well, I wondered, if you could get him, whether you would not still want him to testify.

Mr. MORRIS. There comes a point, Senator, where you feel that you can give up trying to reach him.

Senator WATKINS. Suppose he gets the word and turns up immediately? Would you want him then?

Mr. MORRIS. I don't know. We would have to consult with the chairman.

Senator WATKINS. I would think the committee would want to hear him.

If you had this search out for him now, and had not been able to get him, and he should show up immediately, I think he ought to be heard.

Mr. MORRIS. The next is Mr. Ch'ao Ting Chi. We have discovered that he is an official in the Chinese Communist Government, and we last heard that he was actively associated in an important position in the Chinese Communist Government, and we assumed that he would not be available as a witness, from that fact. And that, I might say, is true of Mr. Y. Y. Hsu, who was on the staff of the Institute of Pacific Relations, and it is also true of Mr. Chen Han-seng.

These three are now in Communist China and therefore are unavailable so far as this committee is concerned.

Mr. SOURWINE. Mr. Chairman, just so there can be no misunderstanding of the record and the colloquy between Mr. Morris and Senator Watkins, I would like to ask Mr. Morris:

The purpose of putting this list in the record is not to serve notice on these people that they can come out of hiding, if they are in hiding, that the committee is not to look for them any more; is it?

Mr. MORRIS. That is right. It is not an effort to reach them. It is a report on the efforts we have made to reach them.

Mr. SOURWINE. But nothing said here is to be taken as an indication that the committee has lost interest in these folks. If we can find them, the committee will certainly consider bringing them in here for testimony. Isn't that true?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes.

Senator WATKINS. That is all I had in mind. I thought from what you said about making this public that that might help to turn him up.

Mr. SOURWINE. It could.

Mr. MORRIS. Now, Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley is, by all our sources of information, including Mr. Holland of the Institute of Pacific Relations, presently the wife of Israel Epstein. We had information 2 months ago that both Mr. Epstein and his wife were being feted in Red China. So the last information we had on these two people was that they were in Red China. Again, we have had subpenas out. The marshal tried to find them. Early in the proceedings we discovered that they left the United States while an investigation was under way, and the immigration inspector has stated that all immigration stations in the country are on the lookout to avoid their entry into the country again. So I think we therefore can discontinue our efforts to get Epstein and his wife, Elsie Fairfax Cholmeley. The last reports were that they were in Communist China and were being feted for some of the efforts they had made toward the conquest of China by the Communists.

Talitha Gerlach was reported out of the country, as was Michael Greenberg, for whom the last address we have is Trinity College, Cambridge, England, and we also heard from Mr. Holland that he was now working in Switzerland.

Mr. Chew Hong, or Chew Tong—he is known by both names—was called for a corollary purpose, to establish the identity of the New China Daily News, which figured in the testimony of Mr. Lattimore and some of the other witnesses. Now, we tried to reach him, and apparently he has left the country. The marshal reported that he cannot be found anywhere.

And again, on all of these, we have asked the Department of Justice to help us.

Again, Chew Hong, from the best information we have, is also in Red China.

Now, Anthony Jenkinson we had an address for at 133 West Forty-fourth Street, New York. We got some information that he might be found through the Allied Labor News at 401 Broadway. A subpena was issued at both of those places, and the marshal reported that he could not be found. We do know that he is an Englishman, and then we have every reason to believe that he has left the United States and is now in England.

Hans Mueller, who was known as Asiaticus, to the best of our knowledge, has died. All of the Institute of Pacific Relations people, and Holland and Carter, have stated that their best information is that he was killed during the last war. We have made no other efforts to try to reach him. He is not an American citizen.

Fred Poland is a Canadian, and we made no effort to reach him, because he is a Canadian official.

Now, we tried to reach Hilda Austern Rae, and we subpenaed her on March 11, 1952, and we got a report from the marshal's office that she was in Geneva, Switzerland, at that time.

Ludwig Rajchman, whose name appeared in our testimony, is now associated with the Polish Communist delegation to the United Nations and presumably would not be a witness before this Committee.

Andrew Roth, according to our evidence, according to information received from Mr. Holland, was last discovered to be in London. We have further evidence that the French Government has banned Mr. Roth from turning up in Indochina, because of his hostility to the French Government, I suppose vis-à-vis their difficulty with the Communists in Indochina.

Agnes Smedley is deceased. According to all reports, she is dead.

Andrew Steiger, who has appeared in our hearings particularly in connection with having written a book for Mr. Wallace—we had an address for him at 49 Claremont Avenue, in New York City. William Holland gave us the same information. We had a subpena out quite some time trying to reach Mr. Steiger, and it was all unavailing.

The last we heard from Guenther Stein was that he was believed to be a correspondent for the Hindustani Times in Geneva. Mr. Holland confirmed this fact. Several times in the course of the hearings we had testimony to the effect that he had been deported from France for espionage activities, but he has not been found by the committee, and we are not going to call him.

Anna Louise Strong we tried to subpena. We had an address for her in Connecticut, and after we tried to subpena her we discovered she was traveling somewhere in the State of Washington and could not be reached.

Mary Van Kleeck we sent a subpena out for on May 4, 1952. The subpena was not served. The marshal told us that she was reported to be somewhere in California.

Nym Wales was formerly Mrs. Edgar Snow, and was subpenaed by the committee on two or three occasions by telephone. She pleaded illness, and she was unavailable to come before the committee.

Rose Yardumian, who was the secretary of the Washington branch of the IPR for a long while, apparently is married to an Englishman, Peter Townsend, and is living in London. We did have a report that within the last year she was in Communist China, and our evidence in the record does show that she was on the staff of a publication put out in Communist China, and that there is some doubt as to whether actually she is in England or in Red China, but the fact is that she is unavailable to the committee.

We have one more, Ella Winter. We had a subpena out for Miss Winter on February 4, 1952. The marshal was not able to serve it. And the report was that she was vacationing somewhere in Europe.

I think that is properly a report on the people that we have not been able to reach. And I think that all should be part of the official record, Mr. Chairman.

Senator O'Conor. Yes. Now, is there anything further?

(The material referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1345" and was read in full by Mr. Morris.)

Mr. Morris. Yes, we have some more documents we would like to put into the record, Mr. Chairman. It will take only about 10 minutes.

Senator O'Conor. Proceed.

Mr. Mandel. First, there was correspondence in regard to Government contracts for IPR publications. We have here correspondence with the Secretary of the Army, Mr. Frank Pace, and the replies, correspondence with the Secretary of the Navy, the Comptroller General of the United States, the Department of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Comptroller General again. All these deal with the question of contracts.

Mr. Morris. That is, contracts, Mr. Mandel, between the Institute of Pacific Relations and these various Government agencies for the publication and the acquisition of IPR pamphlets and material by the Government?

Mr. Mandel. That is correct.

Mr. Morris. Mr. Chairman, may these be received into the public record?

Senator O'Conor. They will be. And they will be marked as official exhibits.

(The correspondence referred to were marked "Exhibits Nos. 1346 A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N, and O" and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1346–A

SEPTEMBER 26, 1951.

Hon. FRANK PACE, Jr.,
Secretary of the Army, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In connection with an investigation of the Institute of Pacific Relations being conducted by the Internal Security Subcommittee, it is noted that Contract No. W28021 QM 14783 was made with Jersey City Quartermaster Depot for an indefinite number of pamphlets at a 20-percent discount.

Would you kindly give me the titles of the publications ordered in connection with the above contract with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–B

OCTOBER 4, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: The Secretary has requested me to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated September 26, 1951, in which you ask for the titles of the publications ordered in connection with Contract No. W28021QM 14785, between the Jersey City Quartermaster Depot and the Institute of Public Relations.

I find that this contract is a 1-year "open end" contract dated June 30, 1944, and that all the records concerning this contract are located elsewhere than in Washington.

These old records are now being searched, and I will write you further concerning this matter, as soon as that search is completed.

Sincerely yours,

F. SHACKELFORD, Department Counselor.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–C

OCTOBER 13, 1951.

Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Further reference is made to your letter of 26 September 1951 in which you ask for the titles of the publications ordered in connection with Contract No. W28021 QM 14783 between the Jersey City Quartermaster Depot and the Institute of Pacific Relations.

We have made a search of the available Army records concerning this contract which, as I informed you in my letter of October 4, 1951, was a 1 year "open end" contract dated 30 June 1944. Examination of the accounts of the disbursing officer servicing the finance office at which vouchers under the contract were paid reveals that during the period July 1944 to June 1945 the following publications were ordered under this contract:

Month of purchase and name of publication:

	Quantity
January 1945:
Japan Since 1931	1
Japan Emerges as a Modern State	1
Basis for Peace in the Far East	1
An Atlas of Far Eastern Politics	1
Our Far Eastern Record	1
Changing China	1
Wartime China	1
Modern Japan	1
Korea Looks Ahead	1
Our Job in the Pacific	1
March 1945: America's Far Eastern Policy	1
May 1945:
Modern Japan	1
Alaska Comes of Age	1
Speaking of India	1
Pacific Islands in War and Peace	1
China in Peace and Freedom	1
Korea for the Koreans	1
Asia's Captive Colonies	1
Our Far Eastern Record	1

Month of purchase and name of publication—Continued

	Quantity
May 1945—Continued
Knowing the Soviet Union	1
Filipinos and Their Country	1
Wartime China	1
Land of the Soviets	1
Changing China	1
Our Job in the Pacific	1
Gateway to Asia: SINKIANG	1
June 1945:
Land of the Soviets	62
Modern Japan	62
Peoples of the China Seas	62
Lands Down Under	62
Our Far Eastern Record	62
Security in the Pacific	1

If you desire any further information in this connection, please do not hesitate to call on me.

Sincerely yours,

F. SHACKELFORD, Department Counselor.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–D

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, October 17, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington 25, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: I have your letter of September 26, 1951, wherein you requested certain information relative to purchase contracts placed by the Navy Department for publications of the Institute of Pacific Relations.

The publications purchased from the Institute of Pacific Relations are listed below with the applicable contract numbers and titles:

N140 s—28522 A, dated 23 February 1944	Speaking of India.
N140 s—46000 A, dated 19 May 1944	Wartime China.
Requisition dated 25 April 1945:
Purchase order 69197 A, dated 7 May 1945	Know your Enemy Japan.
	Wartime China.
	Our Job in the Pacific.
	Speaking of India.
	Asia's Captive Colonies.
	Pacific Islands in War and Peace.
N140 s—72028 A, dated 20 June 1945	Spotlight on the Far East War on Japan.
N140 s—99790, dated 24 Mar. 1942	Know Your Enemy Japan.

Sincerely yours,

H. R. ASKINS,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–E

SEPTEMBER 26, 1951.

Hon. DAN A. KIMBALL,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In connection with an investigation of the Institute of Pacific Relations being conducted by the Internal Security Subcommittee, it is noted that the following contracts were made by the Navy with the Institute:

N140 s 28522 A: With Educational Services Section of Navy for 10,000 pamphlets at a total cost of $1,000. Feb. 23, 1944.

N140 s 46000 A: With Naval Training, 10,000 pamphlets at a total cost of $1,000. May 19, 1944.

Pur. Ord. 69197 A: With Naval Training for shipment all around the world, 180,000 pamphlets at a total cost of about $15,400. April 25, 1945.

N140 s 72028 A: With Naval Training, 30,000 pamphlets at a total cost of about $3,100. June 20, 1945.
N140 s 99790: With Navy for 100,000 pamphlets at a total cost of about $1,750. March 24, 1942.

Would you kindly give me the titles of the publications ordered in connection with the above contracts with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Secretary.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–F

SEPTEMBER 27, 1951.

Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COMPTROLLER GENERAL: In connection with an investigation of the Institute of Pacific Relations being conducted by the Internal Security Subcommittee, it is noted that the following government contracts were made with the Institute:

W28021 QM 14783: With Jersey City Quartermaster Depot, for indefinite number of pamphlets at a 20% discount.
N140 s 28522 A: With Educational Services Section of Navy for 10,000 pamphlets at a total cost of $1,000. Feb. 23, 1944.
N140 s 46000 A: With Naval Training, 10,000 pamphlets at a total cost of $1,000. May 19, 1944.
Pur. Ord. 69197 A: With Naval Training for shipment all around the world, 180,000 pamphlets at a total cost of about $15,400. April 25, 1945.
N140 s 72028 A: With Naval Training, 30,000 pamphlets at a total cost of about $3,100. June 20, 1945.
N140 s 99790: With Navy for 100,000 pamphlets at a total cost of about $1,750. March 24, 1942.

Would you kindly give me the titles of the publications ordered in connection with the above contracts with the Institute of Pacific Relations?

Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–G

SEPTEMBER 28, 1951.

Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COMPTROLLER GENERAL: Would you kindly consult your files for any record between 1940 and 1945, inclusive, showing a contract for government purchase of copies of two magazines:

1. CHINA TODAY, published monthly at 168 W. 23rd St., New York, N. Y.
2. AMERASIA, a fortnightly of America and Asia, published fortnightly by AMERASIA, 225 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

The contracts for the purchase of these publications by the government may have been made through the Liberal Press, 80 Fourth Ave., New York, N. Y.

We should like to have all data pertaining to these contracts.

Thank you very much for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Secretary.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–H

SEPTEMBER 28, 1951.

Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COMPTROLLER GENERAL: Further in connection with the investigation of the Institute of Pacific Relations being conducted by the Internal Security Subcommittee, it is noted that the following Government contracts were made with the Institute:

NOM–41776: 1/7/44, book
N–14055–15198A: 2/13/43, books on Alaska, Asia, Japan, China, etc.
W–1445 QM–2230: 7/29/43

Would you kindly give us the titles of the publications ordered in connection with the above contracts with the Institute of Pacific Relations, and also all data pertaining to these contracts?

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

EXHIBIT NO. 1346–I

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, October 2, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter dated September 28, 1951, requesting all data pertaining to a contract for Government purchase of two magazines, China Today and Amerasia, between 1940 and 1945. The matter will be given prompt consideration and I shall be pleased to advise you relative thereto at a later date.

Sincerely yours,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

EXHIBIT NO. 1346–J

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, October 2, 1951.

Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your communications dated September 27 and 28, 1951, requesting titles of publications ordered and all data pertaining to various contracts with the Institute of Pacifis Relations.

The matter will be given prompt consideration and I shall be pleased to advise you relative thereto at a later date.

Sincerely yours,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

EXHIBIT NO. 1346–K

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, October 24, 1951.

Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your letter dated September 28, 1951, acknowledged October 2, 1951, requesting all data pertaining to contracts of record in this office for the period 1940 to 1945, inclusive, for Government purchase of copies of two magazines, China Today and Amerasia, which you state may have been made through the Liberal Press, 80 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

In accordance with your request, you are informed that a careful check of the records of this office does not reveal any contracts entered into for the purchase of such magazines through the Liberal Press or from any other source, for the period 1940 to 1945, inclusive.

Sincerely yours,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–L

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, November 26, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your letters dated September 27 and 28, 1951, acknowledged October 2, 1951, furnishing a list of Government contracts entered into with the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations and requesting the titles of the publications and the number thereof ordered under said contracts.

In accordance with your request there is submitted herewith a report compiled from the records of this Office showing the number of copies ordered under said contracts, with the exception of contract No. W–28–021–QM–14783, and the titles of the publications, which are identified with the specific contract involved. with respect to contract No. W–28–021–QM–14783, I have to advise that said contract covered not only the publications ordered by the Department of the Army, but, also, provided that the contract "may be utilized by any Government bureau, instrumentality or agency desiring to participate in same," and this Office has no centralized record of the titles of the publications and the number thereof ordered under the contract.

I trust that the otherwise available information contained in the enclosure will serve the purpose of your inquiry.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK H. WEITZEL,
Acting Comptroller General of the United States.

Enclosure.

Contract number	Number of copies	Title of publication
N140s–99790	100,000	KNOW YOUR ENEMY: JAPAN.
W–1445–QM–2230	118	FAR EASTERN RECORD.
	118	KNOW YOUR ENEMY.
	118	CHINA AMERICA'S ALLY.
	118	MEET THE ANZAS.
	118	ASIA'S CAPTIVE COLONIES.
N140s–15198A	1,000	ALASKA COMES OF AGE.
	500	CHANGING CHINA.
	500	LAND OF THE SOVIETS.
	500	PEOPLES OF THE CHINA SEAS.
	500	MODERN JAPAN.
NOm–41776	1	BIBLIOGRAPHY OF PACIFIC AREA MAPS.
N140s–28522A	10,000	SPEAKING OF INDIA.
N140s–46000A	10,000	WARTIME CHINA.
N140s–69197A	40,000	KNOW YOUR ENEMY: JAPAN.
	40,000	WARTIME CHINA.
	40,000	OUR JOB IN THE PACIFIC.
	20,000	SPEAKING OF INDIA.
	20,000	ASIA'S CAPTIVE COLONIES.
	19,955	PACIFIC ISLANDS IN WAR & PEACE.
N140s–72028A	30,000	WAR ON JAPAN.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–M

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, November 30, 1951.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Supplementing Office letter of November 26, 1951, furnishing, in response to your letters of September 27 and 28, 1951, the titles of publications and the number thereof ordered under certain Government contracts made with the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, there is submitted herewith another list showing the titles of the publications and the number of copies ordered and paid for by the Department of the Army only, under contract No. W–28–021–QM–14783, for the period July 1, 1944, through August 31, 1945.

Sincerely yours,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

Enclosure.

Contract number	Number of copies	Title of publication
W–28–021–QM–14783	1	AMERICA'S FAR EASTERN POLICY.
	1	SECURITY IN THE PACIFIC.
	1	GATEWAY TO ASIA.
	63	LAND OF THE SOVIETS.
	65	MODERN JAPAN.
	62	PEOPLES OF THE CHINA SEAS.
	62	LANDS DOWN UNDER.
	64	OUR FAR EASTERN RECORD.
	1	ALASKA COMES OF AGE.
	1	SPEAKING OF INDIA.
	1	PACIFIC ISLANDS IN WAR & PEACE.
	1	CHINA IN PEACE & FREEDOM.
	1	KOREA FOR THE KOREANS.
	2	ASIA'S CAPTIVE COLONIES.
	1	KNOWING THE SOVIET UNION.
	1	FILIPINOS AND THEIR COUNTRY.
	2	WARTIME CHINA.
	3	CHANGING CHINA.
	2	OUR JOB IN THE PACIFIC.
	1	JAPAN SINCE 1931.
	1	JAPAN EMERGENCE AS A MODERN STATE.
	1	BASIS FOR PEACE IN THE FAR EAST.
	2	KOREA LOOKS AHEAD.
	1	AN ATLAS OF FAR EASTERN POLITICS.
	1	THE FAR EAST: A SYLLABUS.
	1	MEET THE ANZACS.
	1	KNOW YOUR ENEMY: JAPAN.
	1	TWENTIETH CENTURY INDIA.
	1	SMALL INDUSTRIES OF JAPAN.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–N

APRIL 8, 1952.

Hon. ROBERT A. LOVETT,
Secretary of Defense, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I understand that some time about 1945 Andrew Roth, an American writer, was refused clearance for a visit to Japan by General MacArthur's intelligence officers. Would you please let me have the official record on this, with the reasons for lack of clearance?

Kindest personal regards and all best wishes,

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN, Chairman.

EXHIBIT No. 1346–O

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY,
OFFICE OF THE DEPARTMENT COUNSELOR,
Washington, 13 May 1952.

Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: As the Secretary of Defense advised you, your letter of April 8th concerning the denial of clearance for Andrew Roth to visit Japan was forwarded to the Army for reply.

I am pleased to be able to give you the information that actually Mr. Roth was denied clearance to Japan in 1949, rather than 1945 as reported in your letter. This denial was made by the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers who was responsible for the security of the area under his authority, and within whose jurisdiction the decision lay. You will understand, I am sure, that under established national policy it is not possible for the Department of the Army to release the sources or the nature of the information on which General MacArthur's decision was based.

I hope that if there is any further help I can give you, you will not hesitate to call on me.

Sincerely yours,

F. SHACKELFORD, Department Counselor.

Mr. MANDEL. Next we have a letter from the Deputy Under Secretary of State, Mr. Carlisle H. Humelsine, dated May 14, 1952, relative to money paid to Owen Lattimore for services.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Senator Ferguson requested that information be made part of our record, and it is now available.

Senator O'CONOR. All right. It may be included.

(The correspondence referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 1347," and is as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1347

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 14, 1952.

The Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee for Department of State,
Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: Your letter of May 3, 1952, to the Secretary of the Treasury requesting to be advised of the amount of money that was paid to Owen Lattimore by the United States Government in 1945 has been referred to this Department for further reply, as stated in that Department's acknowledgment of May 7 to you.

The records available to this Department indicate that Owen Lattimore was paid the sum of $4,063.13 for services rendered to the United States Government during the calendar year 1945. This covers his service with the Office of War Information, and with the Japanese Reparations Mission, which was appointed by the President.

Sincerely yours,

CARLISLE H. HUMELSINE,
Deputy Under Secretary.

Mr. MANDEL. Next we have a letter from Senator Cain, submitting a translation of a review of Owen Lattimore's book, the Situation in Asia, the translation being taken from a Soviet publication, Novy Mir, for November 1950.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, may that go into the record?

Senator O'CONOR. Yes.

(The correspondence and enclosure referred to were marked "Exhibit No. 1348," and are as follows:)

EXHIBIT No. 1348

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
May 19, 1952.

Honorable PAT MCCARRAN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to you with reference to the hearings of the Internal Security Subcommittee on the Institute of Pacific Relations, with special reference to Owen Lattimore.

Because of the important role that Lattimore and his writings have played in the pro-Communist orientation of the Far Eastern policy of the State Department, and the official attitude of the Soviet government toward his utterances, I believe they represent an important criterion for evaluating his adherence to the Communist Party line.

In making a study of American Far Eastern policy, I discovered a significant article on Owen Lattimore in the Soviet publication Novy Mir (the New World) of November 1950. The article discusses Lattimore's book, the Situation in Asia, and shows very clearly how valuable to the Soviet Union was the published philosophy of Owen Lattimore.

I am sending you this article because I believe it to be an integral part of your hearings and reports on the Institute of Pacific Relations, and you may find it desirable to make it a part of your record.

With best personal regards, I am

Most cordially,

HARRY P. CAIN.

HPC/dmb.
Enclosure.

THE LIBERATION STRUGGLE OF THE PEOPLES OF ASIA AND THE PLANS OF THE IMPERIALISTS

